After the death of her father (Charles Charles), an old trapper, Jennie Cox (June Elvidge) accepts the offer of Professor Rolfe (Frank Andrews) to come to the city. He finds her a position as typist but owing to the jealousy of another girl she soon is discharged. Her predicament becomes serious when Rolfe dies suddenly of heart disease. Down to her last three dollars, she decides to obey the law of self preservation and eat a square meal. She selects the Claridge to dine in and starts with a cocktail Here she renews her acquaintance with Billy West (John Bowers) whom she met in the mountains. Billy has just obtained a legal separation from his wife, Cora (Eloise Clement), so with a charming show of unconventionality, he invites Jennie to be his housekeeper and entertain his guests. She accepts. The guests turn out to be poker fiends, one in particular, Walker (Frank Norcross) being so fiendish that he is crooked. One night he plucks twelve thousand in I. O. U.'s from Billy and in triumph tells Cora of it afterwards. Cora, informing Walker that he has trimmed her former husband, demands the papers and, with a great softening of the heart returns them to the bewildered Billy. She also plays Cupid. Walker had messed up the romance of Billy and Jennie pretty badly and the loose ends lie in Cora's hands. She has the satisfaction of tieing the knot that unites her one-time mate with his new love.

"A Neighbor's Keyhole"

(Fox-Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS appears to be one of the most elaborate and extravagant comedies that Henry Lehrman has ever produced for the Fox program. Its special effects include a hurricane and a violent rainstorm which continues throughout the two reels. The wild chasing which goes on through wind and rain contains a number of extremely clever gags which bring hearty response. There is no let-up in stunts and comical business. They present a veritable parade of wild comedy, the like of which has seldom been seen. The two reels must have cost a sum equal to that expended on the average five-reel feature, perhaps more.

The cast which includes Winnifred Westover and Billie Ritchie enters into the spirit of the thing with a vengeance, but it is to the man who directed it that the greatest credit must go. To introduce a succession of funny, ridiculous and marvelous incidents as if they were commonplace occurrences is the secret of the success of this type of comedy. The man who put this one on ranks high in his art.

Two of the Wolfville Series

(Vitagraph-General Film—Two Reels Each)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

TWO of the Alfred Henry Lewis Wolfville tales as adapted and produced by Vitagraph were shown by the General Film Company for review last week. These were "The Clients of Aaron Green" and "Cynthiana." Neither one of the two possesses a great amount of plot interest, their bids for response lying in the various eccentric characters introduced and the peculiar dialogue with which the author filled his stories. While the first one is a trifle tedious, the second presents an entertaining yarn, rather wandering and inconclusive, but having the advantage of a good "boob" character played excellently by Jack Dill.

"The Clients of Aaron Green" has to do with the experiences of an ambitious lawyer in Wolfville. Wolfville's only law is the rope and it resents the intrusion of the long-winded Aaron Green. The boys prefer the limb of any handy tree to settle their arguments. After giving the natives a few samples of his power of oratory three cattle rustlers are caught and while Aaron is defending them, some of the cowboys sneak out and finish them off in old-fashioned style. So afterwards Aaron departs. Bob Burns, Sindey Hayes, William Lester and Texas Allen are included in the cast.

"Cynthiana" relates of a fiery young lady who comes to Wolfville and opens a Votes for Women saloon. One gentleman who flirts with her is obliged to dance to the tune of her six-shooter. But Oscar, the tenderfoot, proposes marriage. Oscar meets the same fate until Cynthiana thinks better of it and decides that he wouldn't make such a bad husband after all. Besides Jack Dill, Patrictia Palmer, George Holt, Texas Allen, William Lester and Hattie Buskirk are in the cast.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Live Triangle Items

Names collected this week at the Triangle studio, Culver City, show that the company is entitled to a service flag containing forty-nine stars to indicate the number of men who have left to join the colors. This is slightly more than ten per cent. of the number of people employed at the studio, including men, women and children. The list includes Lloyd Bacon, William Franey, George Hall, Ray Jackson, Lee Roland and William Lipe, all actors; Harry Edwards, director; Charles M. Parker, vice-president; a number of assistant directors, company clerks, and men from every other department of the studio. This is the largest quota of any West Coast studio, and an organization is being formed at the producing plant to insure that every absentee shall have every comfort within the means of those at the studio.

One of the famous Red Saunders stories by Henry Wallace Phillips will serve as the next vehicle for the Triangle cowboy star, Roy Stewart. The subject has been given the working title of "The Fly God," and Director Cliff Smith has as the leading woman, Claire Anderson. Walter Perry, Aaron Edwards, and the cowboys, together with Edward Peil, will make up the cast. Peil will have a very difficult role to play in this story, that of impersonating a cultured man who, because of a malady, has become a weakling.

"Flapjack" is the name given a two-reel comedy by Frank Condon which is to have a western atmosphere. William Beaudine is directing this, and has as his principals George Hernandez, Josie Sedgwick, Charles Dorian, Will Jeffries, and others.

The lives of a number of Triangle players were endangered this week when a team of mustangs from the ranch ran away during the making of a scene.

With Pathe Players

No official notification, it is said this week, has been received relative to the several Pathe companies producing at Universal City. The three headed by Bryant Washburn, Bessie Love and Frank Keenan, still have their headquarters at the Paralta Studios. Washburn, under the direction of Director William Worthington and Raymond B. West, has filmed a farce comedy which it is declared will make even a greater name for Washburn than "Skinner's Dress Suit." The story was contributed by Mildred Considine, and Washburn has as his lead, Mildred Davis, a Philadelphia girl who sprang into prominence in two pictures, the first of which was when she played in support of Viola Dana in "Weaver o' Dreams."

Robert Thornby is making the final scenes for "Caroline of the Corners," from the Rose Endicott story prepared for the screen by Frank Beresford. The company is back at the studio after ten days at Bear Lake.

The Frank Keenan Company is busy with an early day western laid in California, adapted from a well known play. Maude George is the lead opposite Mr. Keenan, and Ernest Ward, the director, is playing an important character part. In addition to these, Dick LaRino, Mignon Anderson, Charles Gunn, Joseph Dowling and Wadsworth Harris are in the cast. The continuity was written by Jack Cunningham.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

While the work of rebuilding the Lasky studios is progressing, there are three units at work on new subjects at the Famous Players-Lasky Hollywood plant.

Donald Crisp has just made the final scenes for "Less Than Kin," with Wallace Reid and Ann Little, and Robert Vignolia has Clara Kimball Young's next subject completed. It is titled "The Claw."

C. B. De Mille is still at work on "We Can't Have Everything," and the Pickford Company, under the direction of William D. Taylor, is working on "Captain Kidd, Jr." Donald McLain is playing opposite Miss Pickford in this subject, and Marcia Manon and Spottiswoode Aitken are in the cast.

The new Fairbanks story has not been titled, but the preliminary scenes for this have been begun.

Director James Young has a company headed by Vivian Martin finished, which as yet is unnamed, at the Morosco studio, and Walter Edwards is in charge of filming the next Constance Talmadge picture in which Harrison Ford is the leading man.

The Lasky Home Guards are preparing to give a dance at the studio on the evening of May 25 to raise funds to send presents and necessities to former members of the Lasky organization who are now members of the Liberty Army.

The second Clara Kimball Young Company is still at work on "The Hushed Hour," being produced by Harry Garson. This has a particularly big cast, which includes such well known screen notables as Blanche Sweet, Wyndham Standing, Wilfred Lucas, Gloria Hope, Mary Anderson and Milton Sills.

Vitagraph News Bits

Director J. A. Howe has returned with the Vitagraph Big V Comedy Company to the Vitagraph studio, Hollywood. This company has been cruising up and down the Pacific coast for ten days and some particularly funny incidents were transferred to film featuring the sea experiences of Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock, the featured players in Mr. Howe's company.

A fund of $50 for Red Cross relief work was raised at an informal entertainment staged in the social salon of the Steamer Queen. Numbers were contributed by the screen favorites and vaudeville stars among the passengers. The amount was turned over to the Red Cross headquarters by Purser L. J. Coughlin.

The horses used by Director William Duncan and others of the Vitagraph studio were given a holiday on Friday, May 3, and turned into the hills back of the Vitagraph studio by way of celebration. The event celebrated was Red Star day and since the proceeds of that day were to benefit the war horses, the Vitagraph felt that the horses used in their various companies were entitled to a holiday.

The building of eight new dressing rooms has been completed at the Vitagraph Hollywood studios. These are for the women of the various Vitagraph companies and the new dressing room tier is by way of a second story addition to dressing-room lane. The men's dressing-rooms are also to be added to, so a second story is in the building right now and this will provide the men's dressing-quarters with the necessary additional rooms.

A large reservoir, surrounded by cliffs, has been built on the Vitagraph lot for Larry Semon's Big V Comedy Company. Horses and men will go over the top of these cliffs and a bridge built from one side of the reservoir to the other furnishes additional cause for thrills in the Semon comedy.

Universal Newsettes

A majority of the producing units at Universal City will within a few days begin work on new subjects, and the happen so of all starring new subjects at one time is making the technical department decidedly busy.

Elmer Clifton this week filmed the last scenes for "The Eagle" which has Monroe Salisbury supported by Edna Earle and a big cast, and is next to film "The Rustler of Wind River," an adaptation from the novel by J. W. Ogden.

The Mary Widdimar novel "Why Not?" has been adapted for a photoplay in which Carmel Meyers will be featured under the direction of Elsie Jane Wilson; and Tod Browning is to begin the direction of a new Ella Hall subject adapted from the Ethel M. Kelly story, "Turn About Eleanor."

An original story of the mock melodrama type has been written for Franklyn Farnum by F. McFrew Willis, which is at present known as "Hitting the High Spots." Eileen Percy is to continue as Farnum's leading woman, and Douglas Gerrard will be the director. This plot is based upon a mistaken identity situation in which Farnum is charged with being a bomb thrower.

Little Zoe Rae, who was loaned to the Essanay Company at Chicago several weeks ago by the Universal, has returned and is to be featured in a subject as yet unnamed written by Elliot Clawson and to be directed by Rupert Julian. Ruth Clifford will also have a featured role in this Southern story, and Lucretia Harris will also take an important part. Kenneth Harlan is the leading man.

Half of the enclosed 400-foot stage, which is 100 feet wide, was required this week for the interior of a New York Chinese restaurant setting used in scenes for "Discipline of Genevra," filmed by Director Allen Holubar and featuring Dorothy Phillips, supported by William Stowell, Lon Chaney, George Fawcett, Clarissa Selwyn and others.

Paralta Paragraphs

Following a complete reorganization of the various Paralta corporations during the past week, production work was renewed at the studios, which in the future will bear the name of Brunton. Robert Brunton, who has been manager of production at Paralta since the studios were opened, with Jesse D. Hampton, who has been identified with the Ince organization, as business manager for the past year, has purchased the Paralta studios and formed the Robert Brunton Company. All production work of Paralta Plays, as well as the making of all prints, will be done in the future at Brunton studios where the general offices of the Paralta Plays, Inc., will be. The New York offices are to be closed with the exception of maintenance of a publicity bureau in connection with the Hodkinson Productions releasing organization.

Prior to the departure of Robert Kane, who returned to the army after a ten days' furlough; Carl Anderson, former president, who, with Nat I. Brown, retiring treasurer, went East, no statement was made by any of them regarding their intentions in the immediate future. Brown, it is understood, will shortly answer the draft call. A greater portion of the stock in Paralta Plays, Inc.; Paralta Studios, Inc., and other corporations organized for the making of J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, Henry Walthal and Louise Glaum subjects, were sold to Herman Katz, who, with his attorney, Jacob H. Corn, has been at the coast for the past three weeks, and to John E. DeWolf, Messrs. Katz and DeWolf were the original financiers of the Paralta enterprises, and they have interested considerable other additional finance in the corporations.

From the studio it is announced J. Warren Kerrigan will play in additional subjects for the Hodkinson releases. Negotiations for this work by Mr. Kerrigan are now being carried on by J. D. Jampton. Plans now made provide that Kerrigan shall next work in a story titled "Toby," adapted by Thomas Geraghty from the novel of the same name by Credo Harris. Lois Wilson is to be Kerrigan's leading woman, and Raymond B. West will direct the making of the production.

Here and There

"The Vamp," the Enid Bennett story, has been completed by Jerome Storm, and this actress is now working in an unnamed story written by R. Cecil Smith in which there will be a cast of Melbourne McDowell, Billy Elmer, Virginia Southern, J. P. Lockney and others directed by Victor Schertzinger.

The Yorke-Metro Company has moved to the Gordon Street studio where they resumed production this week following a stay of more than a week in the Sierra Madre Mountains where the final scenes were made for "Lend Me Your Name." This subject being out of the way, it is said by Fred J. Balshofer, the company will next make an adaptation from the Henry Kitchell Webster novel, "A King in Khaki." Fred J. Balshofer, with William J. Bowman, will direct this subject.

The Lois Weber staff will, in a few days, complete the filming of "The Forbidden Box," at least, that is the temporary title of an original story by E. V. Durling, Los Angeles representative of the Morning Telegraph. Mildred Harris, as in previous Lois Weber Productions, is featured in this photoplay. Fred Goodwins is the leading man, and others appearing in prominent parts are Priscilla Dean, Kate Toncray and also Henry Woodward.

The Alaskan waters story, "Shark Monroe," has been completed by Wm. S. Hart, and while his writing staff is preparing his next story, he has been devoting most of his time of the past week to preparations for a military ball to be given Saturday evening, May 11, at the Coronado Hotel, San Diego, for the Willian S. Hart Two-Gun Regiment officers, numbering more than 200. At this ball Mr. Hart will have as his guests practically all of the dramatic critics of Los Angeles papers, as well as representatives of the trade journals.

Announcement is made this week that I. W. Keerl, vice-president of the Corona Cinema Company and well known in financial circles of Los Angeles, has been appointed secretary of Sherman Productions, Inc., and will devote all his time to the business of this company.

About New Pictures

"As the Sun Went Down" is an adaptation by George D. Baker of his own drama of that name. E. Mason Hopper is directing it for Metro.

Director Oscar Apfel is having his troubles at present trying to get satisfactory Chinese actors to play supporting parts in "Mandarin's Gold," starring Kitty Gordon. Chinatown in New York has been thoroughly canvassed with appreciable results.

Anna Q. Nilson, who played opposite Bert Lytell in "The Trail to Yesterday," is again his leading woman in "No Man's Land." Others in the cast are Eugene Pallette, Charles Arling, Edward Alexander and Molly McConnell.

In "Kidder & Ko," the five-reel Pathe Play released June 16, Bryant Washburn has a part that is suited to him and which is not unlike the Skinner role with which he leaped to popularity with the fans.

Harry Millarde, who has staged all of June Caprice's recent pictures, is the director of "Blue Eyed Mary," and Frances Crowley wrote the scenario. June Caprice is the star in this Fox film.

If the Marquis of Queensbury had seen "The Battle Royal," the Paramount-Mack Sennett release of May 20, he would have had good reason for writing his famous set of rules which have governed the etiquette of the padded ring for many years.

John Fairbanks, business manager of his brother's film company appears in a scene of "Say Young Fellow," a new Artcraft release. It was all done in the spirit of fun, prompted by Douglas.

Director William P. S. Earle is finishing "The Blood of the Trevtors" at the World Studios. Miss Barbara Castleton plays the lead and little Madge Evans, John Bowers and a large company are supporting her.

A convalescent ward in a home turned temporarily into an English hospital has been perfectly simulated in "Missing," Commodore Blackton's new Paramount offering, from the novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward.

Screen Classics, Inc., has obtained through the foreign agents of the Belgian dramatist, Henri Kistemaecker, the motion picture rights for that writer's play, "L'Occident," for the use of Nazimova.

Bryant Washburn has just finished "Kidder & Ko," which will be released by Pathe soon.

Hobart Henley, under whose supervision "The Face in the Dark," Mae Marsh's previous success, was made, is also director of "All Woman," a new Marsh feature.

Madge Kennedy's existence in "The Fair Pretender," her latest Goldwyn production, is said to be just one scrap after another.

An Absolutely Fireproof Projector

THE third important point taken up at the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was the request on the part of the National Fire Protection Association that the Society prepare specifications for an absolutely fireproof projector. It was understood that by this was meant a projector which would operate using inflammable film made according to the professional standard dimensions.

The reason for this request was in order that the Fire Protection Association might recommend, if possible, projectors made according to these specifications not only for theatre use but also for school, church, home and other semi-public gatherings without the necessity of using a fireproof booth.

At the present time the leading projection machine manufacturers are putting out projectors which differ from one another in the application of several basic principles. These have become talking points in the sale of their machines. Whether those would have to be changed or not in the working out of a new device would depend upon the fireproof specifications laid down.

When the request for these specifications was first made known some one asked, " But who will make this fireproof projector? " This, of course, does not enter into the question, as there may be as many projectors put on the market as there are manufacturers, providing each embodies in their particular product the principles incorporated in the specifications, some of which are, for example:

An enclosed head.

A gear ratio which would not allow a film to run at less than a certain speed and still have the fire shutter remain open.

A take up of not less than a certain pulling power, etc.

Whether these points would be incorporated or not in the specifications makes absolutely no difference, but they can be used to illustrate the fact that the specifications would be general and not specific in any way.

In what shape the mechanism enclosure is made makes no difference, as long as it is fireproof. One company might make it of a square design, another round, another long and narrow, etc.

One manufacturer might employ the star and cam movement for the intermittent, while another might use a movement equally efficient but of a different design entirely, but as long as they accomplished the desired result and were satisfactory to the Association according to the specifications, they would be passed by the body.

This same condition applies to all the various requirements in the specifications which may be laid down by the Society in making its recommendations.

These specifications are exactly in line with the aims of the Society, as we understand them, for they will mean greater standardization in that mechanism which is the foundation of the entire industry.

Will the machine manufacturers join in this movement with unselfish motives? I believe they will to a man, for they all know the great good which will come to all of them in future years as well as recognizing the absolute necessity of this step for the good of the industry. It does not mean throwing away what they have developed, although in some models it may mean certain changes which are bound to come anyway.

The fact of the matter is that if they do not do it now they will be forced to it later anyway, or lose a market which is ready and waiting for the motion picture. The present unhealthy classification of the picture among those much to be pitied hazardous and unsafe forms of occupation and amusements is wrong. We must copy after the automobile manufacturers, who have certain general standards of manufacture, but who still stick to their own designs and sell individual machines.

This is only one of the difficult standardization problems which has come up to this Society and which will continue to come up. Meeting them squarely spells progress and prosperity to all, film producers as well as machine and equipment manufacturers. All should be interested; it means bread and butter. Let those who hang off for fear of disclosing secrets come in and see whether they cannot co-operate in some way and help develop the industry as it should be developed.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Fort Wayne A. C. to D. C. Compensarcs for 2 Arcs in Series Used Alternately

[Editor's Note—The following instructions regarding the operation and maintenance of motor-generator sets were compiled by the Fort Wayne Works of the General Electric Co., and apply especially to the Fort Wayne motor-generator sets or Compensarcs. The information should, however, prove valuable to users of all kinds of motor-generator outfits, as the necessary precautions for the successful use of such apparatus are very clearly set forth.]

The A. C. to D. C. Compensarc is what is commonly known as a motor-generator set, that is, two machines, a generator and a motor, coupled together and mounted on a common base.

The sets are shipped completely assembled and require only proper installation, filling of the bearings with oil and proper connection to the supply and lamp circuits before putting into service. It should be understood that these compensarcs are special machines for use only on picture projection arcs and cannot be used for ordinary constant voltage purposes.

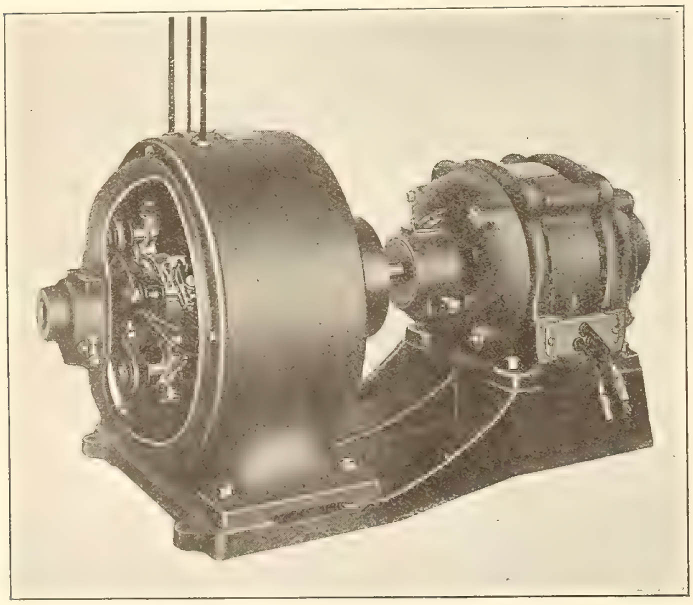

Fig. 1—Fort Wayne Series Type Compensarc

The complete equipment consists of the A. C. to D. C. compensarc proper, two short-circuiting switches, one for each picture machine, and the panel on which is mounted the instruments and field control rheostat. All single-phase outfits are equipped with proper starter; for the larger multi-phase outfits a starting compensator is furnished.

Installation

The A. C. to D. C. Compensarc should be installed in a clean, dry, well ventilated location and, if possible, near to the lamps which it is to operate. Oftentimes a small room adjoining the projection-room is provided for the Compensarc, but in some cases where such arrangement cannot be made the machine is installed in the basement of the theatre. Inaccessible locations should be avoided, as such locations will result in the machines being neglected, allowed to become dirty and perhaps damaged.

It is not necessary to provide foundations for these Compensarcs but the floor on which they are placed should be firm and free from vibration.

The machines are shipped clamped to a pair of wooden skids which form a foundation for the boxing. The machine should, if possible, be left attached to these skids until it has been conveyed to the location which it is to finally occupy. It is preferable that all wiring should be done before the boxing is removed from the machine, as the boxing will be effective in keeping the machine clean.

As soon as the machine is unboxed the name plate should be inspected to see that the volts, cycles, and phases marked on the name plate of the motor agree with those of the circuit on which the machine is to be used. The name of the generator marking also indicates the volts and amperes which the generator is designed to deliver, and this rating should agree with that specified in the order. It should be remembered that the direct current arc for motion picture projection requires less current than the alternating current arc, 25 to 35 amperes at 55 volts being usual for the direct current arc corresponding to 40 to 60 amperes at 35 volts for the alternating current arc.

The A. C. to D. C. Compensarc should be run only on circuits where the variation of either frequency or voltage from normal does not exceed 5 per cent. Where both frequency and voltage vary, the sum of the variation must not exceed 8 per cent.

If for any reason the generator or motor must be taken from the base in order to install the Compensarc, great care must be exercised that the machines are properly lined up to give a uniform air gap when the Compensarc is reassembled. If this is not done trouble will occur due to the set being out of line. Dowel-pins are provided on the generator end. To remove these, hold the squared head of the pin with a wrench and tighten up the nut which will pull out the pin. Be careful that any liners found under the feet are carefully replaced in their proper place. Should the coupling be taken apart it must be assembled carefully, making sure that the halves fit properly.

Wiring Diagrams

Diagram Fig. 3 shows the external connections for the 35-ampere two-lamp series outfit, and Fig. 4 shows the external connections for the 50- and 70-ampere two-lamp series outfit, using only a switch between the line and the motor end of the machine on the two-phase and three-phase circuits. The use of a double-throw switch, having one side fused for running and the other unfused for starting, is generally acceptable to the power companies for motors of 5 horse-power and smaller. If the power companies or other local conditions require a starting compensator, the motor end of the two- and three-phase Compensarc should be connected to the line in accordance with the diagrams, Fig. 5 and Fig. 6, respectively.

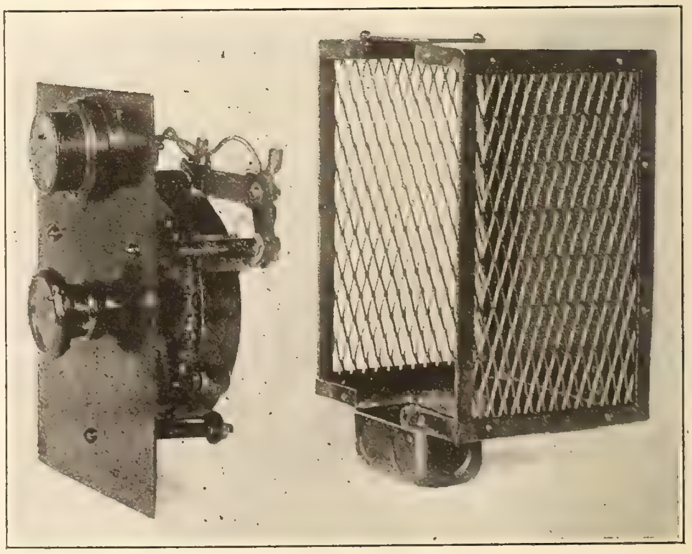

Fig. 2—Control Panel

The wiring should be of sufficient size so that the line drop from the machine to the lamp will not exceed one volt, or two per cent. of the voltage when the machine is delivering full-load current to the lamp. If too small a wire is used the lamp will be robbed of some of its voltage and give poor light.

Fuses

The lamp side of these machines does not require fuses as the generators are so constructed that they will protect themselves against overload current when the arcs are short circuited.

The motor side of the various machines should be fused as follows:

			Two 35-ampere Lamps Alternately	Two 50-ampere Lamps Alternately	Two 70-ampere Lamps Alternately

Be sure that the oil wells are clean and filled. These machines have overflow gauges with hinged caps. The oil wells should be filled through the overflow gauges rather than through the hinged covers in the bearings. This method will prevent waste and annoyance from overfilling of the oil reservoirs.

Pour in enough oil to show in these gauges. The thin oil furnished for the moving picture machines, sewing machine oil, and similar light oil, are not heavy enough; it is better to purchase a can of "light dynamo oil" and keep it for the Compensarc.

See that the armature turns freely in the bearings, and that the machine is level.

Make sure that all connections are tight and agree with the diagram of connections for the outfit supplied.

When starting up see that the armature starts to rotate in the direction marked on the coupling. The direction of rotation of two-phase motors can be reversed by interchanging two line leads of the same phase. In the case of single- and three-phase motors it is only necessary to interchange any two line leads of the motor.

Immediately after starting, see that the oil rings revolve freely and carry the oil up to the shaft. Always keep the oil at the proper level in the well, that is, nearly to the lip of the overflow gauge.

OPERATION

Starting the Compensarc

In starting up the A. C. to D. C. Compensarc have the switches at the lamps open. If a single-phase outfit, close the main switch and move the starting arm on the starting box from the "off" position to the split segment which will introduce the necessary starting coils to cause the armature to start to rotate. When the armature has attained nearly full speed, the starting arm should be moved quickly over to the last segment where it is held by a latch controlled by a relay magnet. If the voltage fails, the relay magnet will release the latch allowing the starting arm to automatically return to the "off" position stopping the motor.

The arm of the starting box should never be left in starting position longer than one minute, usually much less time will suffice.

When the power companies do not require the use of starting compensators in connection with the two- and three-phase outfits they should be equipped with double-throw starting switches which have only one side fused. When starting up, the switch should be closed to the unfused side. When the speed of the armature is up to normal the switch should be quickly changed to the running side (fused side).

To start up an A. C. to D. C. be pulled over into the running position where it is held by a lever engaging with the low-voltage release mechanism.

Never, in any case, should the motor be started by "touching," that is, by throwing the starting arm into the starting position and quickly pulling it out a number of times. Such plan of "touching" does not make the rush of current at starting less, but on the contrary it produces a number of successive rushes in place of the one which it has been attempted to avoid and what is often a more serious matter, causes the contact fingers to be so badly burned that it is necessary to replace them.

To stop the machine open the main switch. The compensator arm should automatically return to the "off" position on the opening of the main switch. If it does not, throw it over to the "off" position by hand.

Starting First Lamp

When the speed of the machines is up to normal and the starting box or switch is in running position and the rheostat handle set as marked by the white arrow, short circuit the one lamp by means of its short-circuiting switch. Then close the lamp switch and bring the carbons together so that they barely touch; then separate them about 1/16 of an inch, gradually increasing the separation as carbons heat up until the proper length of arc is reached. The D. C. arc should be from 5/16 to 3/8 of an inch long, or about twice as long as an A. C. arc. Adjust the generator field rheostat until the proper amount of current is flowing.

If the carbons are held together too long, the machine voltage will be automatically reduced to zero, so that the arc will not have sufficient voltage and will, therefore, break when the carbons are separated. Should this occur, keep the carbons apart about 10 seconds until the machine voltage can automatically build up again; then strike the arc as directed above.

The switchboard panel, having instruments mounted on it along with the field rheostat, is very useful, and the proper current can at all times be accurately maintained. As the machine warms up, the handle of the rheostat may have to be moved one or two buttons from the mark to maintain the desired voltage and current. If the circuits are all connected as shown in the diagram the polarity should be as indicated, the upper carbon being positive. Should the upper carbon be negative and the instrument on the panel read backward, the trouble must be corrected. See that all connections are made as indicated on the diagram. The polarity must come correct if the connections are made in accordance with the diagram of connections and the armature of the set rotates in the direction marked on the coupling.

Starting the Second Lamp

To start the second lamp bring the carbons together to close the circuit; close the lamp switch and open the short-circuiting switch. This puts the two lamps in series, the current from the first lamp flowing through the second lamp. The arc at the second lamp is adjusted in the regular manner while both lamps are burning.

When ready to change over from one lamp to the other bring the carbons of the first lamp together and close its short-circuiting switch, continuing the projection on the second lamp.

It has been found in practice that the following scheme gives the most satisfactory results. A minute or two before the end of a reel of film is reached bring the carbons of the second lamp together, close its line switch and open its short-circuiting switch. The current for the first lamp flowing through the carbons of the second lamp causes the tips of the carbons of the second lamp to heat up to a white heat at the tips without actually drawing an arc. Since the tips of the carbons are heated up by this scheme a normal arc is easily and quickly secured when it is time to change over to the second lamp.

Care must be taken that the two lamps are not both burning any longer than is necessary, as the Compensarc is not intended to carry both lamps continuously. The ammeter on the panel will show the current flowing through the arc when either one or both lamps are burning; the voltage is automatically increased by the machine to compensate for the increased drop due to the second lamp and the current is held practically constant.

The Camera

Stereoscopic Cinematography

THE production of motion pictures in natural colors may be now considered as a fairly well solved problem, in view of the developments of the last two years, but according to recent reports and published items the inventors are again turning their energies toward the consummation of motion pictures in relief, or in other words they are endeavoring to endow the projected screen-image with that appearance of solidarity which is the property of photographs viewed in the stereoscope.

As is the case with color photography, the production of stereoscopic pictures that exhibit true relief, or plasticity, is governed by definite optical laws which must be complied with if correct results are to be attained, and while these scientific requirements are perhaps well understood, it is difficult to apply them to cinematographic procedure and still maintain a method free from complication and added encumbrances in the line of special taking, projecting and viewing apparatus.

Although some abortive attempts have been made to produce the stereo effect in motion pictures by monocular, i. e., one lens, methods, we believe that it is appreciated by all intelligent experimenters upon the subject that the effect of binocular vision must be imitated in the practice of stereoscopic cinematography, and that successful stereoscopic effects, showing very pronounced relief, only result from the combination of two series of photographs showing slightly different aspects of the subject reproduced. To secure the requisite stereoscopic records in the most direct manner requires a double camera and twice the amount of negative film which would be used in securing an ordinary record of the same action, but this added complication in taking could be readily tolerated were it possible to combine the two sets of records in a satisfactory manner upon a single film strip, which would be capable of being projected in the ordinary way so as to create the stereo effect without requiring the use of any form of viewing apparatus by the spectator.

Until recently no accurate and satisfactory method has been devised whereby the requisite pairs of stereoscopic records could be combined upon a single film strip, and in the only public demonstration of stereo cinematography which we recall, the relief effect, such as it was, could only be conveyed to the spectator through the use of a viewing device or analyser. The method referred to was the well known anaglyph of DuHauron applied to the cinematographic process. In the production of anaglyphs two sets of negatives are made at the proper inter-lens separation, and two positive films are prepared from the stereoscopic records thus secured. The positives, corresponding to the right-eye and the left-eye aspects of the subject photographed, are dyed red and green respectively, and the superimposed positives are then viewed, when projected, through a pair of spectacles provided with a red glass for the right eye and a green glass for the left eye, the viewing glasses or filters, being complementary to one another in hue and characterized by good sharp spectral cut-outs. The action of the viewing-filters is to present to each eye its proper component of the combined stereoscopic transparency, and to prevent either eye from seeing the component intended solely for its neighbor. This latter requirement, i. e., that each eye should only see its corresponding picture, is of fundamental importance, but it appears to have not been taken into consideration by various experimenters and patentees, who specify that sets of stereoscopic pictures when superimposed on the film, or on the projection screen, will appear to the spectator as possessing correct relief. It is painful to contemplate just what would be the effect secured by some of these recently described and patented methods, whereby it is proposed to exhibit superimposed sets of dissimilar images with no means provided the spectator whereby each of his eyes will only see the picture corresponding to its natural viewpoint. The effect of viewing a projected motion picture consisting of superimposed images of dissimilar orientation is brain-racking indeed, as we can affirm from experience, but this fact has apparently not been perceived as yet by some inventors.

In the previous work upon the anaglyphic, or so-called two-color, method of stereo cinematography the two film strips required have been placed in contact and run together through a projector of the usual type, the result being very poor definition in the screen pictures and considerable unsteadiness and lack of register, due to the inability of the projecting machine to accurately handle the double thickness of film. It is encouraging to note, however, that great improvements are now possible in the practice of this method, through the use of double-coated film, special printing machines and coloring processes. As a result of the experimental work upon color cinematography printing machines have been devised by several workers whereby satisfactory and in some instances perfect register is secured between sets of images printed on both sides of a double-emulsion film, and the problem of applying different colors to the two sides of such stock has also been satisfactorily solved. Here, then, we perceive the possibility of producing a film strip which satisfies the requirements of stereoscopic projection, and which can be projected on a machine of conventional type, without the addition of special attachments. In order that one may see the pictures in relief, an analyser or pair of viewing-filters, is, however, still required, and this requirement remains as a drawback to the commercial utility of the scheme.

Not only are special means required for viewing anaglyphic projections, in order to secure the stereo effect, but every other scientifically correct method of stereo cinematography that has been proposed to date requires the use of some special viewing device or ocular whereby the dissimilar stereoscopic photos are caused to combine, thus creating the relief effect in the brain of the spectator. Until the necessity of using analysers or viewing oculars can be eliminated, no process of stereo cinematography will be a feasible proposition commercially, and it is difficult to see how the viewing apparatus can be dispensed with, in view of the previously outlined requirements of binocular vision and the stereoscopic process.

The Harvey M. P. Exposure Meter

WE have just received from Mr. G. L. Harvey, 105 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., a sample of his latest creation, the Harvey M. P. Exposure Meter, a device that tells the cinematographer the proper stop to use in the lens when photographing a scene under given conditions of light and camera manipulation.

All photographic readers are well acquainted with the No. 2 Harvey meter for regular or still photography, because the usefulness and correctness of the Harvey meter has won for it a considerable degree of popularity. The regulation No. 2 Harvey meter is a very simple device to operate, but the new M. P. meter is even simpler to use, because one factor which requires consideration in still photography, i. e., the sensitiveness of the negative material, can be ignored in calculating cinematographic exposures; the film speed being practically a constant and its value having been considered in calibrating the meter. According to Mr. Harvey's written and published statements his meter calibration is based on camera exposures made in all parts of the world, and under all possible conditions of lighting, shutter speed, etc.

In calibrating the slide which shows the shutter exposures on the Harvey M. P. Meter, Mr. Harvey has adopted an ingenious artifice which enables him to do away with tabulating the shutter speeds in fractions of a second. Instead the various angular openings of the shutter are shown in the form of symbols which show various segments of a disc and are representative of the rotating cine camera shutter in various phases of adjustment. For the convenience of amateurs the exposures (in fractions of a second) corresponding to various angular openings of the shutter disc, are given on the margin of the shutter speed scale, where they may be consulted by withdrawing the scale from the body of the meter.

Three cine cameras were used in obtaining the average shutter speeds under various adjustments and modes of manipulation, and Mr. Harvey states that upwards of 10 different cameras were employed in working out the complete data which is embodied in the M. P. Meter.

Checking the exposures designated for various conditions of illumination of the subject, etc., as given by the M. P. Meter, we find them to accord well with experience. Following his usual principle, Mr. Harvey has made all of the exposures a little in excess of the least possible exposure necessary to record the subject under the conditions imposed, but this is of great value to the novice and results in a high percentage of successful pictures on the part of users of the Harvey meter, because an excellent negative may be developed from a plate or film which has received a somewhat generous exposure, whereas no amount of development or after-treatment can endow a negative with shadow details which have not been recorded at the time of exposure.

Simplex Loans Machine to Red Cross Operators' School

THE Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York City, has loaned a Simplex Projector to the American Red Cross for its picture machine operators' school recently organized by Dr. John C. Farres, director of trade reconstruction for crippled soldiers.

The school will occupy the whole of the top floor of the Red Cross building at 211 Fourth avenue, New York City, and the instruction will be in the charge of James R. Cameron of the International Operating School, 1931 Broadway, New York City. He will be assisted by C. W. Johnson, chief operator of the Fox circuit of theatres, who has pledged his services in this patriotic work for three nights a week.

The period of instruction will cover six weeks, based upon the expectation that the men taking up the course will devote three hours a day to the work in the school. Upon the successful completion of the course by its soldier students, the operators' school division of the Red Cross institute will obtain licenses for the men, who will be put to work by the management of the Fox circuit in its theatres.

Mr. Cameron is now negotiating with other large motion picture interests and expects to be able to announce shortly that arrangements have been made for the employment of the graduates in practically all other big circuits of picture houses.

The Simplex projector will remain at the service of the American Red Cross as long as that organization deems it necessary to keep the operators' school open.

Some Timely Comment on Versions of "The Star Spangled Banner"

ACCORDING to a special communication from Washington, dated April 17, Representative McFadden (Pennsylvania) introduced a resolution to make "The Star Spangled Banner" the national American anthem.

Up to the present time, the song has been regarded as our national anthem by common consent and custom, but it never has been made so by legislation.

Under the title of "The Star Spangled Banner Corruptions," an editorial writer in Musical America recently expressed himself as follows:

"With all that has been said about performing the 'Star Spangled Banner' this season, it remained for W. J. Henderson to speak some salutary truths on the existing situation. His article in a recent Sunday edition of the Sun was timely. It would have been even more so five months earlier. The critic pointed out that Messrs. Sousa, Sonneck, and Damrosch devised an official version of the national anthem which the Government sanctioned and indorsed. Also that this version, far from being patriotically accepted by the leading symphony orchestras, is disregarded in favor of others, some of them vulgarized. The most flagrant example of this debasement is to be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House when a Frenchman or an Italian conducts.

"Now, if the Government has approved a certain version of the anthem it is that version and no other which should be used throughout the length and breadth of the land. As the matter stands we have heard it only from the New York Symphony Orchestra, at concerts given by Arnold Volpe and from the Oratorio Society. Mr. Damrosch is the leader of the first and last named organizations. The 'official' version differs from the familiar ones only in a few essentials of rhythm and some trifling details of harmonization. But these rhythmic differences give it a breadth and a dignity foreign to the others. They confused for a time folks who wanted to sing the anthem and knew only the ordinary version, which suffers from tawdry corruptions. But patrons of the Symphony Society quickly accustomed themselves to it and the playing of the hymn under Mr. Damrosch became a pleasure to listen to, instead of a wearisome matter of indispensable routine. But, by the same token, only Mr. Damrosch's audiences could sing the authorized 'Star Spangled Banner' without stumbling. The Philharmonic opened every program with the anthem and did it right well, but still clung to the old form. The Boston Symphony, playing it practically under compulsion, gave it with a listlessness that shocked even well balanced folks. But the fact that a standardized version existed was flatly ignored.

"The Metropolitan Opera House makes great ado over the patriotism, but to judge by its performances of the 'Star Spangled Banner' it has small reason to do so. One hears the song played with more elevation and dignity in some of the moving picture houses. It is here made to sound crass, blatant, vociferous. The high B flat, screeched by a trumpet at the end, is a piece of vulgarism that nothing can condone. This wretched bit of trumpery used to prevail in times of peace. Conceited singers in an audience would take advantage of it to attract attention, and the end generally aroused laughter and special applause for the person who sang the note. The same thing occurred repeatedly at the Metropolitan this season. The whole proceeding took on a character altogether at variance with a truly patriotic and uplifting ceremonial.

"If we need unity of effort in this war, we need it in the rendering of our anthem no less than in everything else. The Government puts forth that anthem in a prescribed shape. Is it not solemnly incumbent upon every American organization and individual to discard spurious forms and corrupt variants so as to make the hymn what we intend it—a sacred symbol?

" Old Hartwell's Cub "

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"OLD HARTWELL'S CUB" develops nothing approaching interesting drama. Situations have been carelessly thrown in by the author, Mable Richards, with nothing left for George E. Jenks, the continuity writer to do but shuffle them up and throw them in the hat again. Director Thomas N. Heffron has opened with a scene of a village blacksmith that promises much in the way of interest to follow but the weakness in the plot material as provided by the script, handicapped him from the start. William Desmond is entitled to more substantial material in the way of a story.

In spite of the frail working script that Mr. Heffron was given from which to construct a dramatic piece for the screen, he has done wonders in the final result. His exterior scenes, presenting a small town and its scandal mongers, are true-to-life and registered on the screen with all faithfulness. The character portrayal of Mr. Desmond and that of Percy Challenger and Walt Whitman are examples of fine bits of artistic work.

Revealing, as it does, the love of a son for his old father who is a victim of drink, there was offered numerous opportunities for an equal number of human touches.

In addition to those mentioned the cast includes Mary Warren, who has the feminine lead; Eugene Burr, Dorothy Hagar, Graham Pette and William J. Ellingford.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bill Hartwell (William Desmond) is devoted to only one person, his father, Tom Hartwell (Percy Challenger), a faltering old man, who has fallen a victim of drink. The populace of Matherville rise in indignation against the manner in which Bill's father conducts himself, and lock the old man in the village jail. Bill learns of this, and promptly breaks down the jail door and releases his father.

Rev. David Lane (Walt Whitman), the village pastor, is a broadminded old soul, and defends Tom's action in defending his father. He invites Tom to the parish house for dinner, to talk over the matter. Here Tom meets the pastor's daughter, Mary (Mary Warren), for the first time on speaking terms. Inwardly he loves Mary at first sight.

Edward Jones (Eugene Burr), a book salesman, convinces Mary's father that he should purchase a few treatises on theology. He strikes up an acquaintance with Mary during his visits, and when Mary announces that she has the funds collected by the church society to reroof the church, Jones devises ways and means to acquire said funds. He persuades her to give him the money to invest for him, and then persuades her to marry him. He does not tell her of the wife he has in Chico, Ariz., whither he departs on their marriage day after first taking a good beating from Bill who has learned the truth.

Bill's father dies, and he leaves Matherville bound for Chico. Here he meets Jones and Mary, who has gone there to ascertain the truth about her husband. Bill is accused of horse-stealing, but is saved by the intervention of Mary and Jones' first wife. They return to Matherville to settle down.

SOMETHING akin to the old saw-mill climax is used to wind up the thirteenth episode of this serial entitled " Enemy Aliens." After Haynes Waldon is told that his presence is obnoxious in the vicinity of the Waldon residence he disguises himself and secures employment in the Waldon works. His object is to steal a precious formula for which he is offered a large sum of money by a German spy. Pearl and Harvey succeed in capturing the spy while Haynes is at work. Later Haynes lures Pearl to his place of employment, where she finds the Hooded Terror awaiting her. He knocks her unconscious after a great struggle and throws her on a slowly moving escalator at the end of which is a series of sharp teeth. Just as she nears them Harvey rushes to the rescue.

" The Mating of Marcella "

(Paramount-Ince—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

JOSEPH FRANKLIN POLAND'S "The Mating of Marcella" casts Dorothy Dalton in a society role which she handles as capably as the artificiality of it will permit. Mr. Poland's plot, it must be confessed, is builded upon a premise that smacks more of the basic situation of a musical comedy than of serious drama. However, this portion of the story is registered with good effect. It is the seemingly forced virtue of the heroine, Marcella, a bit of characterization perhaps injected to meet the goody-goody moral code of censor boards, that transforms the drama into an unlikely conflict of conscience-stricken characters. It is when Marcella, after finding herself in love with Underwood and realizing that circumstances have paved the way for their happy marriage, suddenly decides that Underwood's place is at the side of his impossible wife that the false note becomes apparent. Granted that Marcella might have entertained scruples against divorce, her previous conduct in situations from which another woman would have resigned seems to stamp her as a very inconsistent lady. So it is not Miss Dalton's fault that at times her work fails to convince.

The five reels contain a number of pretentious settings and include a view of a hotel garden that is a rare delight to the eye. Supporting the star appear Thurston Hall as hero, Juanita Hansen whose blonde beauty makes her the identical type for the frivolous wife, and William Conklin. R. William Neill, the director, has handled his subject tastefully. The sensational thrill in the last reel when all the undesirable characters are disposed of when an express train hits their automobile amidships is cleverly executed, being timed to the minute. The photographic work is up to the high standard always maintained in Ince pictures.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marcella (Dorothy Dalton), modiste's model, is constantly worried over the long illness of her father, Duranzo (Spottiswoode Aitken). Late one evening while delivering a gown to Lois Underwood (Juanita Hansen), in an emergency she runs into an opportunity to gain a thousand dollars. Mrs. Underwood, formerly a show girl, languishes under the marital "yoke" and entertains no love for her husband, Robert (Thurston Hall) or her young son (Buster Irving). But she doesn't like the idea of giving up the time to live in Reno long enough to establish her residence there and then sue for divorce. Count Louis (William Conklin), one of her admirers, suggests that she employ Marcella to take her place. And Marcella accepts the offer, believing she is helping Lois in procuring a fortune. While at a fashionable hotel in Reno she meets her supposed husband who has come west with his son. Explanations are in order. The little boy is taken seriously ill and Marcella nurses him back to health, the while gaining the love and respect of his father. She, however, refuses his proposition that she stay on and establish Mrs. Underwood's residence. She implores him to patch up his quarrel with his wife. She returns to her father. Lois, having failed to get her divorce, adopts the plan put before her by Jack Porter (Donald MacDonald), another suitor and announces her intention of starting suit for divorce, naming Marcella as co-respondent. Her activities are, however, cut short, for Count Louis, jealous of Porter, disguises himself as Lois' chauffeur and drives her, his rival and himself to destruction beneath the wheels of an engine. Then Marcella goes to the man she loves.

RATHER short on anything approaching a connected story, " The City Slicker," Harold Lloyd's latest comedy, has a wealth of good business. The action takes place in a country hotel and Lloyd is imported to spruce it up a bit. Snubs Pollard is present in the cast and as usual puts his stuff over in good style. Bebe Daniels provides the girl interest in full measure.

Central Park Theatre Big Success

CENTRAL PARK THEATRE, Chicago, is just closing its seventh month of successful business. Opened as one of the handsomest houses in the country, it has lived up to its splendid physical character in the policies that have been followed by the management. The house is owned by Balaban and Katz and is located on West Twelfth street at Central Park avenue.

Central Park cost in the neighborhood of $400,000 to build and it represents Chicago's greatest achievement in the amusement world. The theatre was designed by C. W. and George L. Rapp who have made the plans for many of the finest houses in the middle West. The owners gave direction in advance that nothing should be spared in expense in building and equipping the house, so that it stands out today as representing the best that can be secured.

The exterior of the building is handsome, four stories in height with towers on either side. From these towers searchlights are flashed and the whole front is kept covered with flags with bright lights playing on them at night. There is a splendid lobby which gives ample space for the excellent work of Alexander Frank, who is especially engaged for this form of artistic exploitation.

The interior decorations are in ivory and neutral tones receptive of color effects. Lighting is one of the big features of the Central Park as difused colors may be thrown over almost every part of the theatre. Every floor has a promenade beautifully furnished off of which open smoking rooms for the men and parlors for the women.

One of the features of the theatre is the children's playground in the basement. Here mothers may leave the little ones under competent care while they enjoy the pictures. Politeness and effi-

Let Us Know When It is Ready and We Will Tell You the Data We Want

WE are anxious to print pictures and descriptions of the "Worth While Theatres" in this department—especially the new houses. However, with the present delays that are encountered in the shipment of building materials, it is impossible for us to keep any accurate account of the days for future openings and we invite managers to send in photographs of such new houses, both interior and exterior views together with description and we will then send a blank for the additional data that we need.

Established houses which have not been pictured in the NEWS are invited to share these columns. This matter is intended not only to give an account of the better houses, no matter the size, but also to give hints which may prove of value in future construction and equipment.

In sending photos be sure to enclose them in cardboard to prevent breakage.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

ciency of all the employes is one of the main features of the house.

Special music scores are written for each production at the Central Park. There is an orchestra of sixteen pieces and one of the finest Bartolas ever made.

The theatre seats 2,600, seats being furnished by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield. Simplex machines are used for a throw of 132 feet to a Rembusch Gold Fibre screen. The Rialto lighting system is employed.

The theatre occupies a ground space of 100 by 167 feet and includes a front lobby 45 by 25 feet and a grand lobby 45 by 30.

Six shows are given daily, three in the afternoon and three in the evening, running on the average of 7,000 feet. Paramount, Select and open bookings are used, the admission being fifteen cents in the afternoon and twenty at night, with the war tax additional.

Waco to Have a Unique Theatre

WORK will be started within a few days at Waco, Texas, on one of the most unique motion picture houses in the country, to be erected at the corner of Fifth and Franklin streets by the Waco Arcade and Amusement Company. The entire building will occupy a ground space 165 by 204 feet, but the theatre itself takes up only about a sixth of the total space. Around the street sides of the building is to be a series of sixteen stores and there is to be an entrance to the arcade from each street. The theatre is to be in the center of the building and will have a seating capacity of 800. According to the plans that have been drawn, the screen is to be in one corner, an arrangement that has not proved successful in most houses because the spectators at either side of the house look upon the screen at a most disconcerting angle. The building, which is one story in height, will also contain a large swimming pool.

ARIZONA

Phil Pecharich, owner of the Coliseum theatre, at Jerome, is erecting a new theatre there, and has offered a prize of a Liberty Bond and an annual pass to the school child suggesting the most appropriate name. Architect T. L. Hoffman is in charge of the construction work, which has already been commenced, and July 1 has been set for the opening date.

CALIFORNIA

Walter E. Brown, lessee of the Auditorium theatre in Gardena, is making many improvements in the house and hopes soon to have one of the most comfortable little movie houses in Southern California. The walls of the theatre are being tinted in soft tones with a panel effect and the management plans to install a number of new seats at an early date.

COLORADO

M. J. Hedke is building a new theatre at Okis.

GEORGIA

Charles E. Sanders reports that his new Circle theatre, Cordele, will be ready for opening May 20. The amount invested is $10,000 and the Heard Grocery Company is also identified with the venture.

ILLINOIS

P. L. Dattlebaun of Chicago is negotiating for the purchase of the Galloway property at Ottawa for the purpose of erecting a motion picture theatre on the site. Twenty-five thousand dollars is the amount of capital it is proposed to invest in the structure.

Organization was completed at a meeting of shareholders, held recently, of a company to conduct a modern picture show in Murphysboro. The show will be launched in a remodeled building at Walnut and Ninth street. The date of the opening depends on time for improvements and the necessary booking of contracts. A manager, very probably a local business man, will be named within a few days. The organization is: P. W. Griffith, president; Jake Hammer, vice-president; John A. Foehr, secretary; Carl Williams, treasurer. Board of directors: P. W. Griffith, Carl Williams, Percy Wightman, Ben Habermehl, David P. Cox, John Hagenlocher, Bud Kimmel, Jake Hammer, John A. Foehr.

Leonard O. Waters, Y. M. C. A. secretary of the merchant marine is authority for the announcement that a mammoth outdoor motion picture theatre will shortly be erected at Camp Meade, Boston.

The new Codman Square theatre, Boston, was opened to capacity business last week. The owners of the theatre are Patrick H. Bowen and E. A. O'Donnell, and the Codman Square Theatre Company is the lessee. Harry E. Jones, an experienced theatre man, is manager of the house. The house has a seating capacity of 2,000.

The theatre building being erected at Upham's Corner, Boston, for the Upham's Corner Theatre Company is fast approaching completion. McCahey & O'Connor of 218 Main street, Cambrige, are the contractors, and Funk and Wilcox, 120 Boylston street, are the architects who have charge for the owners.

MAINE

A new casino at Willard beach, Portland, is to be erected this summer by a company organized by Manager James Greeley. Inside the casino there will be a large dance hall and a screen and stage for motion pictures.

MICHIGAN

George Brookins is erecting a second motion picture theatre at Hillsdale, finding the capacity of his present house entirely inadequate to accommodate the trade.

NEW YORK

Louis Abramson of Brooklyn has the general contract for a two-story brick theatre, 50x140, to be erected for the Blinderman & Cohen Amusement Company at 80 and 82 Clinton street and 97 to 103 Attorney street, from plans by Lorenzo F. J. Weiher. The cost will be about $70,000.

OHIO

The Weller theatre, Lancaster, was formally opened a week ago under the management of Arthur Morley.

Cincinnati's Sixth street motion picture colony will have an addition in the near future. The site of the old Type Founders Company, East Sixth street and St. Clair alley, will be the location of a house seating 2,500 persons. Emmett S. Sorg, representing Detroit and New York City capitalists, is negotiating for the theatre, which, with the land, will represent an investment of about $200,000.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Olympic Motion Picture theatre, Pittsburgh, after having been closed down since the middle of February, was opened a few days ago to capacity business. The Olympic now extends from Fifth avenue direct to Diamond street, 12 doors offering commodious avenues of departure from the building. A scientific lighting system has been installed that eliminates the familiar "shadows" found on many motion picture screens. The screen is high and slightly concave. The English style of seating, without balconies, has been followed. The decorations, in gigantic panels, are handworked throughout by the decorating firm of C. Casanova. The foyer also was worked on the plans of Casanova.

The first Liberty theatre to be erected for the use of the men in the army camps located in and near to Washington has been made possible through the generosity of Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury of this city and Philadelphia. It will be located in Potomac Park and will be constructed by the men of the Fiftieth United States Infantry.

WASHINGTON

The new motion picture theatre now in course of construction at Ninth and Market streets, Tacoma, for John S. Baker and H. T. Moore, contains a number of structural features entirely new in the Northwest, according to R. J. Borhek, who is doing the engineering work on the building. Due to the shortage of structural steel, reinforced concrete is being used extensively to give the needed strength to girders and supports of the new structure. The main girder carrying the rear wall and the sidewalk on Market street is of reinforced concrete which will have a safe load of 101.5 tons on a thirty-foot span, according to Borhek. The breaking load of this girder is 405 tons, or the weights of two standard mountain locomotives, which is considerably more than the girder will ever be called upon to bear. On the Ninth street side the floors of the building are suspended from the under side of similar reinforced girders. Suspension of the floors in this way marks a new structural feat in this section of the country. The reinforced concrete cantilevered balcony also is the first of its kind in the Northwest. The terra cotta at the entrance which is just across Court D from the Tacoma theatre entrance is carried on circular concrete girders. The lack of reinforced rods of sufficient length and size alone prevented the roof trusses from being builded of concrete. Work on the new amusement house is progressing rapidly. The entrance will be circular in form and will be faced with terra cotta. This material also will be used to trim the stores along the Ninth street side of the building. The brick walls of the theatre proper will be faced with white plaster.

The new Rialto theatre is Seattle's newest contender for photoplay patronage. This beautiful new theatre is on First avenue between Columbia and Cherry streets. Joseph Danz is the owner and manager.

WEST VIRGINIA

Frank Moore, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Clarksburg, is erecting a new playhouse there to cost in the neighborhood of $150,000.

"A GAME WITH FATE"

Convicted by the Hand of a Dead Man—

He had committed no crime. But he had gambled with Destiny—and lost. The one man who could have saved him from paying the penalty of a capital crime was dead. An implacable enemy he had left evidence that—false though it was—no human mind could doubt. And there was seemingly no escape from the bitter legacy of hate.

Through numerous twistings and turnings, this amazing drama is led away from the conventional threads of the usual mystery story. To the very last fade-out, its tense heart-pulls and surprise climaxes will grip your interest.

Big, manly Harry Morey appears in a powerful role for which his distinctive screen personality eminently fits him. And in his support are seen such real favorites as stately Betty Blythe, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Percy Standing and Stanley Walpole.

TRIANGLE

That Hot Weather Bogie

EVERY wise exhibitor should anticipate the hot summer season. Now is the time to make plans that will assure good business during the coming warm weather.

The wise exhibitor realizes that he must compete with amusement parks, lake and ocean resorts and with all open air amusements for the next few months. He should also realize, however, that people do not stay by their " firesides " in the summer and that, although competition is stronger, yet the opportunity for business is much greater.

Exhibitors who provide a cool and comfortable theatre, good music, courteous attendants and most important of all, good pictures, should have no trouble in making money during the summer.

TRIANGLE exhibitors have a decided advantage during the summer season. They are assured of a consistent program of high quality productions that is bound to please their patrons; a program that has won its way into the hearts and judgment of thousands of exhibitors from Maine to California; a program whose lure can be pitted successfully against the lure of the outdoors and bring old and young to the box office of any well conducted theatre.

No matter what pictures you have been showing, no matter what the trade mark, stars or producers—to exhibitors not showing TRIANGLE productions we address this question, "Why not anticipate your summer business by making a contract now for TRIANGLE service? "

We realize that in inviting you to run TRIANGLE pictures during the unfavorable season of the year, we are subjecting our pictures to the most rigid and exacting test which any service can sustain. TRIANGLE gladly extends this challenge, knowing that TRIANGLE pictures are bound to make good.

There's a TRIANGLE Exchange near you that is waiting to hear from YOU.

Old Films Under New Titles

They're Using You for a Catspaw

When you book old pictures under new titles you know what you are paying for. When you advertise old pictures to your patrons under new titles you lay yourself open to an imputation of fraud, for they don't know what they are to see until you have taken their money.

The men who sell the faked titles don't care a damn what your patrons think of you. The fact that they have virtually made a swindler of you doesn't hurt them any because you went into the dishonest deal with your eyes open.

The big point, so far as you are concerned is—are you going to allow these men to make a dupe of you for their own selfish ends?

If you want to run re-issues—all right. They are entirely legitimate. But don't be foolish enough to cheat with false titles the people whose dimes and nickels buy your bread and butter.

THE VALUE OF A SUPREME COMMAND

WILSON HAILS UNITY OF COMMAND

In Cable to General Foch, Declares It Most Hopeful Augury of Success

WASHINGTON, March 30—President Wilson today cabled General Foch, upon his appointment, as Supreme Commander of the Allied forces, as follows:

"May I not convey to you my sincere congratulations on your new authority? Such unity of command is a most hopeful augury of ultimate success."

Just as President Wilson and the Allies welcomed a "Supreme Command," so responsible exhibitors today all over the country are supporting the Hodkinson Co-Partnership Plan, as the ONE FORCE in the motion picture field, organized to co-ordinate the interests of exhibitor and producer.

"Little Talks with Foreign Buyers"—No. 13

By

Paul H. Cromelin
President

A Special Opportunity—"THE VICTIM"

INTER-OCEAN has been selected to distribute in all foreign markets a feature play of such unique dramatic appeal that a trial showing has already resulted in several sales. To see "The Victim" is to want to exploit it. The effect of it on the spectator is simply tremendous. It is a "repeat" picture. Even the veteran buyer—the "wise" film man—wants a second look. It is just punch! punch! PUNCH! The priestly hero, in facing the electric chair, risks all for a principle—and we all of us care for that sort of chap. The picture is an absolute succession of thrills. There has never been a melodrama like it! And it challenges solution up to the last few feet of the sizzling finish. Can be worked as a "special," with Church endorsement, or just as a rattling good theatre thriller.

MEN is the newest FOURSQUARE PICTURE

A Declaration of Faith

FOURSQUARE PICTURES believes that advertising space in trade publications has just one function—to give to exhibitors the strongest points of a new picture, so that they can cash on them at the box-offices. No exhibitor likes to be told that a picture is the greatest ever. What he is interested in is precisely what kind of a picture it happens to be. He wants to be informed of the vital selling points that will help him exploit the picture he has booked, for the two specific purposes of pleasing his patrons, and making as much money as is possible.

Vital Points for the Exhibitor on the Picture, MEN

The Main Theme

Two sisters form the pivotal point around which the story of "Men" revolves. The younger—who has been adopted when she was a baby—is being reared in the home of wealthy New Yorkers. She doesn't know that she has a sister, who is living in humble surroundings.

The Punch in the Picture

Now then—what would a girl do who sees the man she adores, and who has compromised her, being unwittingly taken away from her by her own sister? Would she permit this sister to marry this man, without an effort to stop the wedding ceremony? Picture the climax of such a situation!

A Cast of Distinguished Players

Charlotte Walker, one of the stars of the legitimate stage, has an effective role in "Men." The part of the elder sister is interpreted by Anna Lehr, in which she does exceptional work. Gertrude McCoy is the younger sister, and Robert Cain has the leading masculine character.

Settings Like Those in New York Homes of Wealth

In "Men" each set is a faithful reproduction of some room in the home of exclusive New Yorkers. There is a great hallway, treated exactly as that of one of the millionaires whose name is nation-wide. The same is true of the ball-room, of the library, the boudoir of the daughter of the house. These settings are really a feature.

All the Critics Praise "MEN"

Incidentally, the following excerpts from critical reviews reflect the unanimous opinion that "Men" is a good picture:

(Motion Picture News)

"Men" is a clean drama for screen presentation. It represents an offering which both small-town and big-town exhibitors can book and cash a good percentage at the box-office.

(Wid's)

The pleasing personalties of the players, the direction and the fine atmosphere make "Men" hold nicely. It registers as good entertainment and will please the great "80 per cent" patronage.

(Dramatic Mirror)

"Men" is a picture of distinct merit, both in its acting and artistic production. It has a story of wide appeal splendidly presented.

(Moving Picture World)

"Men" is well constructed and finely acted, and the production is in keeping with the demands of the story. All the drama in the play is the result of honest love or dishonest passion.

(Exhibitor's Trade Review)

"Men" is a first-class feature picture. It is the sort of film that ought to go well in all classes of theaters, for it has a universal appeal. The Bacon-Backer people have set a high mark.

(Morning Telegraph)

The first release of the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation satisfies with a good story, superior players and pleasing backgrounds. "Men" is marked by fine suspense and quick action.

Getting Down to Bed-Rock

Educational Films Corporation of America

May 24, 1918.

Mr. William A. Johnston, Editor,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I have just read your editorial in which you take the stand, in the exhibitor's behalf, that the producer should back up his picture with all the advertising the exhibitor needs to sell it successfully to his public.

We agree with you thoroughly; and you will be interested to know that we have already planned our new advertising and selling campaign along these very lines.

We believe that trade paper advertising pages can and should be used—not simply to impress the exhibitor with a lot of adjectives, not simply to sell him a picture through hurrah and promises—but to give him the practical assistance he needs to put the picture over.

In other words, we are going to buy trade paper space for the exhibitor—or for us both—not merely for ourselves, and make every dollar of it count in our mutual interest.

In buying this space I am also avoiding waste. I have taken pains, myself, to find out what papers the exhibitor uses. That is why MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be used prominently in my campaign.

Secondly, we are going to equip our exchanges and gear up our salesmen to the same point, so that they too, like the trade paper copy, will be able to give advertising service with every picture that is booked.

You were good enough once to tell me that we had given the word "Educational" a new meaning and that we had caused "Scenics" to become features. This being true, and we know that it is, we realize that our feature scenics should be exploited by the exhibitor with all the advertising aids he gives to any feature. That is why we have made our plans through trade papers, exchanges and salesmen to give him just this sort of service with our backing.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

E. W. HAMMONS,
Vice-President and General Manager.

Professor Raymond Ditmars, however, promises an absolutely realistic picture of "Wild Babies" in the short "Living Book of Nature" film at the .... next .... The picture begins with the evolution of the tiny tadpole into the frog. Next the baby porcupines are shown, sticking out their infant bristles, yet guarded just as jealously by Mamma as if they were spineless infants. Next the aoudad teaches its young to climb. This playful animal lives among the rocks, and the sole ambition of the mothers is to make their children mountaineers. Back At You--Wid!

Dear Wid:

Rather a stiff bit of advertising—on Wid's service—you handed us last week.

Of course, we thought you'd hand more bouquets to the "NEWS."

However it's all right. You've tackled a stiff proposition and we like your courage. Nor will we try and shoot holes in it. You'll get shot at enough.

Our subject is trade papers.

You say they're cluttered up with press-agent bunk.

That's a matter of editing, Wid. Your charge is too sweeping.

But, if you don't mind I'd like to lay that matter over till next time and take up another before it gets cold.

In the meantime slam us—as hard as you fairly can—on any "bunk" you find in our last issue, giving us due credit for the many pages we create and write, ourselves.

You say that exhibitors complain because the manufacturer buys so much space in so called trade papers which he, the exhibitor, never sees.

True—at least 90% true!

Most manufacturers are unquestionably at fault here—on two counts.

They pick poor mediums (never seen by the exhibitor). This is inexcusable waste.

Secondly, they don't get full value out of the good mediums, because they don't put selling copy in their advertising pages.

Your own Sunday issue, which carries producer advertising, is just as much at fault here as any trade paper. Isn't this true?

Do these advertisements in your paper do the exhibitors much good?

Advertising pages in trade papers should be bought for the exhibitor.

They should be used to carry the exploitation aids which the exhibitor wants always at hand to put the picture over—such as selling ideas and phrases, press matter, newspaper ads, window cards and window dressing ideas, lobby display suggestions, etc.

Put an exploitation department in every exchange—with a man ready to work shoulder to shoulder with the exhibitor; and then put the exploitation material, most of it, in the trade paper (plan books and press sheets are lost and thrown away) and THE EXHIBITOR WILL HAVE SERVICE.

This selling copy should be concentrated in one paper—one and only one.

It should go in the paper that gives editorially the same sort of service—the most and best. Because that is the one paper the exhibitor works with each current week and files for future reference.

It's easy enough to find out which of the papers this one paper is.

There's no waste in concentration—not a cent. The exhibitor would yell in approval.

And in closing I think you'll admit this, Wid.

Several trade papers are talking service today.

The NEWS began giving it a year ago—never less than fifteen pages of practical showmanship service every week in a single department. I wish we had material for and could afford a hundred more such pages.

When you go over our last issue for press-agent "bunk" count up and give us credit for our service pages.

Sincerely yours,

W A Johnston

MOTION Picture News, now issued in New York on Tuesday of each week, beginning with the third week in June will become a Friday publication.

The last issue to appear on a Tuesday will be out in New York on Tuesday, June 11th and bearing the date of June 22nd. Ten days will then intervene before the next News—which will be issued on Friday, June 21st, and bearing the date of June 29th.

Motion Picture News, issued on Friday, will bring to our readers reviews of all the productions of the current week—while heretofore time has been lost through the necessity of waiting until the following Tuesday.

Motion Picture News, issued on Friday, will reach the majority of its readers through the mails early in the week—giving advertisers the advantage of consideration during what is comparatively slack time for the exhibitor.

The change is a speeding-up process—plans in view for every department aim at giving you on Friday of every week all the service and news which you have heretofore received the following Tuesday. To an editorial policy which has always read "Let each copy of Motion Picture News be brighter and of more Service than the last"—we have added—

When Is a Star?

It is interesting to read between the lines of our exhibitors' box office reports.

There's much more there than the individual record of the picture's box office experience.

One lesson that stands out above all others is the importance of the vehicle.

One phrase is constantly recurrent in the exhibitors comments.

It is: "another picture like this and so-and-so (the star) is gone."

And equally prominent is the statement: "another picture like this and so-and-so (the star) will come back."

Apparently it takes but a few fine pictures to make a star—shall we say, even three or four?

And apparently a very few bad pictures—three or four—will start a star down a swift toboggan.

The advertising of the screen is very swift and very broad. It makes and unmakes with equal and certain rapidity.

In some instances, such as the succession fo bad vehicles, it almost seems as if the producer were deliberately pulling the star down—in an effort, possibly, to pull down the star's salary.

At any rate it is as simple and certain as daylight that the vehicle comes first; the vehicle puts the star up or down in fairly short order; the star—any star—is dependent upon the vehicle.

One reason the very big stars are consistently held up is that the producer concentrates his best resources upon these stars—his best stories and his best direction.

No one denies the importance of the star; we do not. The public worships personality; the star is a large part of that great attraction—heart interest.

But the star is not all.

The first effort in production for the past year and more, has been to get the star.

Very good.

But we need not be surprised, some day, to see production start and center around the power that makes stars—namely the director and the story.

Pictures Come First

Product is the basis of this business.

True of any business.

And a simple truth; but one often lost full sight of in an enthusiastic effort to lower rental costs, and correct other economic burdens.

Cooperative movements, as we have pointed out before, will get nowhere without product. They will go just so far in fact as their product will let them.

The box-office today calls for product.

Exhibitors high and low want pictures.

That's the first consideration.

The big theatre today has so heavy an investment, that its responsibilities are grave. It has the seats and a potential public. The two must be joined—with pictures the public wants.

That is the prime consideration. It outweighs any other. That's why these exhibitors are looking at the future with serious eyes. They want to be assured of product.

That's why they have a warm sympathy today with those producers, who, under heavy risks and industrial handicaps are making every effort to elevate production, to keep it clean and fine, and to give the picture house enough of these highclass pictures to please the greater and better motion picture public.

That's why exhibitors today are taking an interest in cooperative movements, even taking a gamble with them. They are looking and hoping for an assured supply of product.

Product is the basis.

Of course it isn't all.

Fifty-Fifty

There's another lesson in the box-office reports.

It's simply the old lesson that a box-office success is fifty per cent show and fifty per cent exploitation.

That is caused sometimes by local conditions—competition, weather, etc.

But generally it's caused by that force which laughs at competition and weather—namely the proper exploitation of the picture.

And again, we state, that the time is coming when the worth while producer, after his picture is made, will bend to it and give just as much showmanship to putting over the picture as he puts into it.

And he will use the worth while trade paper to give the merchandizing effect to the exhibitor.

But that era, of course, calls for fewer and better pictures—product made so well that it can be exploited and not made in such a rush that there's no time to get out all the showmanship aids which its proper exploitation demands.

Minding One's Own Business

Harry Sherman, in an article in this issue, advises exhibitors to stick to their own business.

Most exhibitors, we believe, will agree with him. We have talked with several who are studying better presentation and better advertising and new theatre construction so deeply that they have no time to look out in other directions. They are strikingly successful exhibitors, all of them.

Nor have they any inclination to look beyond their engrossing tasks—except Mr. Sherman, and you can't blame them, they are looking for the right product, for better exploitation methods, for better and less expensive distribution.

They've got to have product. They've got to put that product over.

It is unwise and it should be unnecessary for exhibitors to assume production risks. The sensible ones don't want to.

But it is also up to the producer to help them stick to their exhibiting business by giving them what they must have to work with.

The First Run House

THE first run houses are of much consequence in this industry.

Their bookings make other bookings. The high rentals they pay are highly necessary to the producer. The special exploitation they give their pictures—often at considerable advertising expense—get a standard and ideas for later run houses.

Hence the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

And hence another new marketing idea, in connection with Haworth pictures which is very interestingly set forth in this issue.

Slamming the Film Salesman

THE film salesman is coming in for heavy criticism these days. And if the curb method of solicitation going on in front of 729 7th Avenue is any criterion the criticism can't be heavy enough.

We have heard fish mongers at work in Soho Square, London, and viewed the operations of street carnival men. These gentry are mild and ethical by comparison.

We do know of good film salesmen, however, men who actually know the pictures they are selling and who are honestly and ably interested in seeing that the exhibitor who books them, resells them successfully to the public.

The query arises, too; how much is the New York head office to blame for the bad methods of film salesmanship?

Author—Director—Actor

JOE FARNHAM, in his flashing "Harpoon" pays a fitting tribute to Mitchell Lewis, of "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sign Invisible."

"An actor and a man!" says Mr. Farnham.

Fine! We once had the pleasure of referring similarly on this page to Mr. Lewis and his splendid characterization of 'Poleon Doret in "The Barrier."

But there's this to be said.

Rex Beach, author of "The Barrier," conceived a splendid character in 'Poleon Doret and Edgar Lewis put him faithfully on the screen. For this creation and this picturization of a man, Mitchell Lewis, actor, will undoubtedly give much credit for his 'Poleon Doret.

In "The Manxman" there was another fine actor who took the part of "Pete." But it was Hall Caine, author, and George Loane Tucker, director, who had much to do with "Pete's" fine characterization.

There's a trinity here—author—director—actor—which cannot be divided by individual praise.

What Makes Padding?

HERE'S an original argument why pictures should be padded. It was given by an exchange representative to a member of our Exhibitors' Advisory Board who cheerfully forwards the thought to us.

Pictures must be padded so that the late run house may get film of feature length, such is the mutilation they get from the machines and vandals in the earlier run houses.

In other words if they don't set out too long they'll end too short.

"Now," says the first run exhibitor, "I know why I have to run 2000 feet of excess baggage."

Later run houses tell us in all seriousness that there's something in the argument—strange as it sounds.

Strange enough certainly are the conditions that make it possible for the excuse that padding is necessary to assure final length.

Wasting the Picture's Possibilities

NOW that we are getting into special production—special even as to the short scenic films—exploitation looms larger than ever as a factor in film success.

We are making shows these days.

And shows always demanded exploitation.

Augustus Thomas' "Witching Hour" was a box-office failure until good publicity suddenly jammed the doors. It was thought then the author's name would put it over; it didn't.

"The Lion and The Mouse" which made over a million dollars dragged along after its opening until clever exploitation caught the public eye.

And so of any worth-while picture today.

A selling idea for the first run houses, a full line of advertising aids for the later run will double its gross receipts.

The other way wastes shamefully a good picture's possibilities.

The Screen and the News

THE Stoll Picture theatre, London, England, is screening for its audience the latest War telegrams as they come over the tape.

This innovation, in the opinion of The Cinema may have far reaching consequences, as "an encroachment upon what has been regarded as the domain of the evening paper."

There's a thought here for the prominent American picture houses—and possibly for a new screen news agency—and still a bigger thought anent the ever widening scope and influence of the motion picture.

The Woolly Taste

AGAIN we draw attention to the picture shopping public and their rush today to the comedies where light, happy entertainment is being retailed.

One big reason why Chaplin's "A Dog's Life" is breaking all records today—is just this reason.

Arbuckle's "Moonshine" at the New York Rialto recently got more praise from the New York daily critics than the dramas on all the photoplay bills.

Says the New York Sun: "It removes the woolly taste of screen emotions."

W A Johnston

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

"HAVE YOU A LITTLE KAISER PICTURE ON YOUR SHELVES?"

WE would be rash indeed to attempt an interpretation of Provost Marshal Crowder's latest "useful work or useful fighting" rule as applied to motion pictures. We are led to believe, in fact, that the Provost Marshal does not intend to go into the interpreting business himself.

The attitude would seem to be that the less explaining done now the less re-explaining needed after July 1st. The more men now in the doubtful class driven into sure-fire, draft-proof jobs, the fewer puzzling individual cases for local boards to decide.

At any rate, this would seem to be the interpretation to put on the futility resulting from MOTION PICTURE NEWS' efforts to secure a stabilizing statement from Washington regarding the motion picture's status.

Got a few interesting earsful from Harry Rapf the other day. "The business is suffering from 'waritis,'" he says. "It's like the old Broadway show days—a few men have scored with war pictures and everybody else is breaking his neck to join the tail-end of the parade. About the time all the producers' and buyers' bankrolls are spent they'll wake up to the fact that exhibitors have learned that 'too much of war is enough.'"

ANY wailing we might have been tempted to indulge in at the first news that a new exchange system was about to be established is tempered by the fact that William L. Sherry is the man behind the move.

Brother Sherry is not the man to make mistakes.

As we said not many weeks ago in this column, he has been looking on the picture game through the Sherry eyes for many years now, and the record books will show that he has enjoyed pretty clear vision.

So that if the Sherry foresight now prompts a circuit of exchanges for the handling of independent productions we may rest assured that Mr. Sherry has some plans up his sleeve that will put over a circuit of exchanges.

For Sherry has the habit of carrying through anything he starts. And habits are difficult to break.

Arthur James gave us a private advance glance on a poster sketch for "To Hell With the Kaiser," last week. And listen, boys—we don't know what the picture will be like, but there's a six-sheet coming that will cause more talk and free advertising than you could get with a lobby display of parrots trained to shout "To Hell With the Kaiser."

Which reminds us that in line with some recent so-called service aids Arthur volunteers the suggestion to advertise "Blue Jeans" by painting your house like a pair of overalls.

WELL, we guess William Fox didn't put it over with a bang!

If Mr. Fox doesn't look out he will be drafted, along with his able lieutenant, Winfield Sheehan, to devote full time to Liberty Loan drives and charity work.

There certainly isn't another industry as fortunate as the motion picture in having such a whirlwind of energy to make records for it. It's too bad that in the present case the Red Cross did not see its way to make William Fox chairman of a National Motion Picture Committee, instead of confining his efforts to Greater New York.

Not saying that the rest of the country didn't have energetic workers in the motion picture ranks—but with William Fox at the head of a National Committee the industry would have received country-wide publicity for its work that would come in mighty handy in these parlous times of essential and non-essential industries.

At a recent convention of city editors Jerome Beatty made a speech that ought to fix Paramount-Artcraft up for life in the way of publicity. Just after one speaker had declared that so long as he advertised he didn't have to worry about the class of his publicity matter, Jerry arose to confess that he hated the business office.

The captains of the desks cheered till the rafters rung!

"My company never takes its advertising and publicity in the same door," Jerry added, "we take our advertising to the business office, our publicity to the editor."

And the Knights of the Eye-shades wept with joy.

WE are going to bunch up in this paragraph a few hints about some of the interesting things in this issue that you must be sure not to miss. We know how it is—you may be called into the projection room the next minute, but check off for future reading:

First, the exclusive story on the sales plan adopted for Hayakawa pictures. It's something brand new, and you sure want to be up-to-date. It's on page 3389.

Then two semi-features by Harry Sherman and John Semler. Sherman's frank confessions regarding his own experiences lend strength to his moral "Exhibitors, Stay in Your Own Back Yard." Johnny Semler recounts experiences with film salesmen and fillum salesmen on the same page.

For pepper, read Frank Rembusch's scorching reply, on page 3387, to the suggestion that the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L. should get together and "live happily ever after."

For something to give you thought, turn to page 3446 and find almost two pages needed for the "Independent Field Ticker" this week, a record of territorial sales which shows that the State Rights market isn't entirely dead, by any means.

And for Service—gosh, how popular that word has become—turn to page 3404.

And page 3405. And 3406. And 3407. And 3408. And 3409. And 3410. And 3411. And 3412. And 3413. And 3414. And 3415. And 3416. And 3417. And 3418. And 3419. And 3449.

While on the subject of Service—you can't get away from it nowadays—W. A. J.'s gospel of merchandising advertising seems to have been welcomed. Yeardsley broke the ice last week for First National; Educational did likewise, and this week Pierre V. R. Key has a Foursquare ad that "sez something." While Fred Warren's Goldwyn copy has always been selling talk.

And while giving credit don't forget that the Service Supplement pioneer was Paul Lazarus with his "Over the Top" section in MOTION PICTURE NEWS*, some months ago.*

AS "all is not gold that glitters," so all that comes from the press agent is not bunk. Exhibitors will be interested to read in this issue that Pathe will have two features on Broadway simultaneously in Rothapfel houses, that Fox plans to re-issue in up-to-date editions his "Big Six Classics," that Ralph Ince, Herbert Lubin and A. H. Sawyer have joined hands, and, oh, there's lots happening.

And for future announcements of interest wait for the next season programs of Famous Players-Lasky and Goldwyn. Rumor has it that there will be more pictures than ever.

Letters from a Self-Made Exhibitor to His Son

Number Four

This is the concluding letter of a series which has proven of great interest. Cuthbert is "getting out from under," not because of the many reverses that attend upon the exhibiting business, but because the call of Uncle Sam proved stronger than the desire for financial gain.

DEAR CUTHBERT—I have just read your last letter with what our best little authors describe as "mixed emotions." Because I happen to be one of those fathers foolish enough to be reasonably proud of my one contribution to the continuation of the human species, I naturally dislike having you enlist to go to possible mutilation or death.

On the other hand, I certainly would not enjoy hearing my grandchildren trying to explain to their friends why their father failed to go "over there" and do his bit. I have carefully refrained from talking to you on this vital topic because I wanted you to decide for yourself. You just escaped the draft age by a matter of months, and it would have been a sore disappointment to me had you stood pat on that account.

I rejoice in your patriotism, and only wish that I might go with you. As you know, I served through the late unpleasantness with Spain, but I feel that that was only a sort of comic opera war as compared to the great upheaval through which the world is now passing. What I CAN and WILL do is this: for every German you ease along to his Satanic Majesty I will contribute a thousand dollars to the Red Cross and buy you a thousand dollar Liberty Loan Bond, and I hope you earn a million.

Before your letter came I had been reading over some of your past correspondence and I had drafted a letter to you along rather strong lines. Even though you are going Hun-hunting, I think it would be well for you to ponder over some of the things incorporated in that letter, and I am quoting them below.

"I must take issue with you on some of the things you say about the show business and your opposition. You opine that you are in a low-brow business because your opposition (whom you term an illiterate), with an inferior house, is getting more business than you are. The answer is simple: he is a showman, you are NOT. Showmanship is a profession just like any other, and you will find that the average good showman is born, not made. It is instinctive with him to do the right thing. It is this same instinct which has lured him into the business.

"You haven't that instinct and you ought to realize it by now. You don't know how to get 'em coming and keep 'em coming. So far as the low-brow part of it is concerned you must remember that I am 'one of them,' and you were practically born in the shadow of the theatre. I think my desire to keep you out of the game has borne fruit in that it has left you temperamentally unfitted for it.

"You wrote me a short time ago that your competitor showed his lack of hossense by doubling your bid of fifty dollars for a well advertised production, and then a day or so later you wail to high Heaven because you find that the picture netted him something over two-fifty. You simply couldn't see a hundred dollars in that feature, but he could and he got it. Net result, a nice profit for him and an awful kink in your receipts, which is just as good as an added hundred to him. Every time he nicks you that way he kicks you one jump nearer the scrap heap.

"There is one principle which is fundamental in the show business: Quit thinking so much about your opposition. There is only one way to succeed in this game, and that is to forget all about the other fellow and start new with the determination to make yourself the better showman. The only way you can do that is to talk, eat and sleep your business and learn from the boys who have developed themselves into 99 per cent. showmen. If you will spend more time reading the better trade journals and less time buried in the latest best smeller you'll find that there are more things in the show business than you ever suspected.

"Every issue of the trade journals carries the personal experiences of many veterans in the game, and you can pick up enough live tips to pack your house for a month. After all, there isn't much of anything to the show business except knowing what the public wants, giving it to 'em at the right admission and BUYING IT AT THE RIGHT PRICE. But to do those three things successfully you have got to burn the midnight oil freely; be something of a clairvoyant; understand the difference between the 'we want' and 'we will take' of the fillum salesman; and last, but by no means least, know how to put on a good show in a clean, well ordered house. Apparently your low-brow opposition knows how to do these things and you don't. If you feel that you must keep a sharp eye on him, by all means learn how to be a showman while you are watching him. He seems to be able to teach you.

"Your entire letter reads like a funeral march done into words which, in itself, is darned bad dope. If you talk and act like a funeral, you can't hardly blame your friends and patrons for deciding that you are a dead one. Remember that wheeze about the guy worth while who can always conjure up a grin when Dame Fortune is landing hardest on his solar plexus? Anyone can grin while learning over to rake in a big wrangdoodle jackpot, but it takes a real man to smile joyously over the fact that his opponent's ace full is better than his king full.

"If it makes you feel any better, I am willing to agree with you that we are all headed for the demnition bowwows, but I feel about the same on this point as I do over the statement of one of our pessimistic old scientists who insists that our coal supply will only last another thousand years. I believe that a better and cheaper substitute for coal will be discovered or invented, and I believe also that a better and greater industry is being moulded out of what you elect to believe is hopeless chaos.

Calamity howlers have been predicting the early and complete extermination of the film business ever since the continuous use of a reel of comedy to chase the seathounds out to make room for newer money. But we seem to be bumping along, and ALWAYS on the upgrade. Ten years ago we ranked as an industry just above the potato parer manufacturers and just below the One-Minute-Corn-Cure Co. Today we are conceded to be the fourth largest industry in the world, and the first three are working nights to keep ahead of us.

"Every day sees some new and beautiful theatre dedi-

"Let's hope you do better, son, at canning the Kaiser than you did running a theatre. We're all back of you."

cated to the motion picture art (and today we can say 'art' without a deprecatory smirk or scornful leer), and we have our Rothapfels and Roths who conceive and erect theatres which for sheer artistry make the average legitimate house look lke a selling plater.

And just tuck this thought away for future reference: for every high-class house that comes into being there are at least three funerals for the type of theatres (?) whose passing is a signal for general rejoicing throughout the industry. There are few mourners; they are literally "unwept, unhonored and unsung." The day of the country store and the ballyhoo is also passing, as is the type of house which fostered such abominations and in place of these we have such productions as "Hearts of the World," "The Bluebird" and "My Four Years in Germany."

All of the above was included in a letter which I was about to mail you when your letter of yesterday arrived. Because it is good, sound business I am shooting it on to you.

I know a really high grade executive who always says to those who inquire his business: "It's a rotten game to be in, but I get the money, and I should worry. When it blows up I'll go back to my regular line." It is this type of pussyfooter who is responsible for a lot of our hard going. If you want to know something of the influence and generosity of the best artists and executives in the film business ask the officials who have engineered the Liberty Loan sales what they think of us. Their response might open your eyes.

I certainly will be glad to take the theatre off your hands, more than glad, in fact, as I own your "opposition," which I purchased two weeks after you bought in.

All of the naughty things that you have written me about your competitor have been engineered by "dear old Dad," as the former owner is now on my pay roll. I wanted to give you a good run for your money and I have had a lot of fun doing it.

I am sending up a manager today to take on your theatre and we will look for you home for a day or so. Your mother will cry over you and pet you and I'll laugh with you and abuse you and then we'll just reconcile ourselves to the same sacrifices as are being made in a million other homes. God bless you and make you a good Hun-hitter.

Affectionately,
DAD.

FABLES OF AN INDUSTRY'S GOOD NAME

No. III—The Exhibitor

When Prohibition arrived Mike Muggs had to Shut Down his branch of that great National Institution, the Cafe Billiards. He was Stuck with the Right, Title and Interest to the Shanty and the Ground it stood upon. The Right and Title didn't Worry Him, but he had to do Something to meet the Interest.

It wasn't good enough for a Junk Shop, so he decided to put in Motion Pictures.

He visited the Metropolis and returned with a Projector, a Screen and an Op.

The Projector was a Good Bet in its Time, but the Candy Butcher who used to Crank it by hand had been Drafted since then.

The Screen was all right as long as the Vamp's Mug kept on the Clean Spots.

And the Operator meant well. But he was simply Born Tired, and Couldn't Help It.

Mike decided that it was foolish to pay Good Money for pictures when he could Wait a While and get the same ones for Seven Fifty and Paper Free. The only difference being that the Images had worn off.

He installed the Automatic Piano that used to play for the Boys on Pay Nights in the Speak Easy. Then he hid the Joint behind ten ones, two threes, two sixes, a banner, a twenty-four sheet, and three lobby stands—and waited for the Public to find it.

Today Mike will tell you all about the Exhibiting End. He can talk you Deaf, Dumb and Blind about the extortions of the Fillum Trust and the Wiles of Fillum Salesmen.

Most of all he blames the Guy who Opened Up across the Alley. This Dub wasn't even an American, but a Foreigner with an Unpronounceable Moniker. He showed First Runs only, had the Swell Dames over from the Opera to Sing, and was the Burg's biggest advertiser.

He has a Flock of houses now.

"If it hadn't been for this Runt," says Mike, "I'd have had a Gold Mine in my Back Yard. Weren't the Public crazy about Pictures?"

Yes, Mike. But not quite That crazy.

JACK NATTEFORD.

"Mind Your Own Business" : By H. A. Sherman

I HAVE noticed a great deal of late, in all the trade papers, that certain manufacturers and others have been trying very hard, especially so in the past six months, to interest exhibitors in their business. In my opinion this is one of the gravest mistakes the industry is making. The manufacturer and distributor should let the exhibitor remain an exhibitor — otherwise the latter cannot give his entire time and thought to his own business.

The exhibitor should not attempt to produce pictures; he should not neglect his own business and enter a field which is foreign to him. It is not his end of the game and therefore he does not belong in it. The exhibitor must not think just because he rents pictures that he is capable of making them or producing them. He might if he gave up his theatre and devoted all his time to the study of producing pictures.

I know of several exhibitors (particularly in the West), who aspire to become producers, and most every time I pick up a trade paper I read that some one of these fellows is on his way to New York, or is returning from the East, where he has gone for the purpose of looking after the producing end of his pictures. While he is in New York or headed in some other direction what is happening to his business? Is it progressing with the same speed? Are his employes taking the same interest while he is away that they do when he is at home? Are the many little details which do not seem important to his employes, but which are of the utmost importance in the maintaining of system being attended to and looked after with the same careful attention as he would give them himself? No; of course not! A man cannot run his business and run some other business at the same time. It is utterly impossible and though it has been tried in the past and will undoubtedly be attempted again in the future, those who have tried it and those who will attempt it again will never rank among the big successes in the industry.

The proprietor of a large department store is perfectly satisfied to use all of his efforts towards disposing of the goods he has purchased from the manufacturer. He does not attempt to manufacture the goods he sells because he knows it is not his business. His business is to take the material he buys from the manufacturer, exhibit it in the most attractive way to prospective customers and present the goods in such a way that the customer will become a constant purchaser and steady patron. He is satisfied to devote all of his time to selling the goods to the public and finds that it requires all of his time to do this properly. If he endeavored to manufacture the goods he sells he would soon discover a very noticeable decline in his business. That is true of the exhibitor; for it takes all of his time to exhibit the pictures he books properly so that he may please his audience.

Exhibitors, stay in your own business. Do not go into partnership with a producer. The minute you do this you will not be able to keep your own business running at it should be run. It will be threatened with failure and you and your business will suffer. If you feel that you are able to produce pictures which the public will want, pictures which will find a ready market, then give up your theatre and become a manufacturer. If you think you would make a better exhibitor than a manufacturer, then confine all of your efforts to the exhibition of pictures, but under no consideration try to do both.

The reputed success of certain producers has had the effect of influencing certain exhibitors to enter the manufacturing end of the industry, but either they must stick to their theatres or give up their aspirations to become producers. They cannot be successful exhibitors and manufacturers at the same time. I thought this was possible once. I had a chain of theatres throughout the Northwest, and became interested in the exhibiting end of the business. I believed I could do both, but soon found my mistake and so sold my theatres and gave all my time and attention to the exchange end of it. Later, I became interested in the producing end of the business and liked that so well that I immediately went out of the exchange end of it, to give my entire time and attention to the producing end of the business.

Run your theatre and run it well, Mr. Exhibitor, and when you have done that you will have accomplished all that is necessary. You will find that to do that it will require all of your efforts and time, and if attended to properly you will not have time to do anything else — but remember, you cannot do both with justice. If you attempt it you may find you will fail in both. Then you won't have any business—so if my advice has been worth anything, I repeat: "Stay in your own business."

Truth Sells Pictures : : : By John W. Semler

WITH a great deal of interest, and even relish, I read John C. Green's article, "Is a Salesman a Pirate?" The chief comment I have to make on friend John's story is that he did not make it strong enough. The term, "pirate," is too mild. "Business wreckers" would be a better cognomen, and this goes for the majority of the present-day so-called film salesmen. If they would stop to ponder it seems they would realize it is easy to be truthful about their wares—and truth makes business and holds it.

Who is to blame? Judging from personal contact I should say that the trouble lies in the home office. Several months ago I had occasion to make a trip through the Middle West, and came in contact with a number of traveling salesmen who represented some of our biggest companies. In one city a theatre extended me the courtesy of its office, and it gave me every opportunity of sizing up present-day selling methods. During the ten days that I remained in that city some twenty representatives paid their respects to the owners of that theatre, who, by the way, have a chain of four and use eight features a week besides shorts.

The first day, three representatives came in, and judging from their line of talk one would get the impression that they had held a rehearsal the night before. Every word uttered was identical with the conversation handed out by the whole trio. Their chief linguistic gems were "Greatest pictures ever made," "Will clean up the town," "Greatest line of paper ever put out" and a lot of other chatter along that line. When asked if they had seen the subjects they were talking about all of them admitted that they HAD NOT. One fellow, who came in the next day, did not even know what pictures he had to sell for the coming month, and the company he represented turns out one every week. Of all the boobs, he was the star performer. This was the theatre man's experience all the way down the line.

Then came an exception. In came a fellow who was all to the good. He was full of pep and business, and he knew what he had to sell. That boy knew every frame of pictures backward, and before he got through he had the John Henry of that string of theatres for everything he had.

Can you tell me why manufacturers send out men on the road without schooling them in the products that they are supposed to sell? Are they ashamed of the pictures they make that they do not let the salesmen see them or do they think it is a waste of time? From observation would say that the class of men that I have come in contact with it would be a waste of time to show them the goods. They would not know what they were all about.

The general impression that I have received is that they still believe in the old paper flash to get the exhibitor's signature, still believing that the exhibitor is in the same class of the days where a picture was a picture and nothing else. Some day they may wake up and inject a little intelligence into the selling force, and pay the salesman a decent wage—that is a real salesman.

You seldom see a commercial house send out a man who has not been schooled in the line of merchandise he is selling. They look upon the salesman as the backbone of the business. Why cannot the film manufacturers take the same stand? A few do and are successful, but the majority wonder why they get so many cancellations. I see it daily in my wanderings, and have taken the liberty of mentioning the cause to several sales managers, and the best I get is that it is none of my business and I guess that they are right. But I hope to see the day that the men who put up the coin will wake up and put regular men in the field who know the picture business, plus a knowledge of showmanship. Then they will get the profits that they are entitled to and the exhibitor will get his share.

Money Flows Into Red Cross Coffers

Big Ball at the Astor Brings Week's Activities to Glorious Close—William Fox Committee Estimates Event Brought Over Sixty Thousand Dollars

THE Red Cross Ball of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team held last Saturday night at the Hotel Astor, New York, brought the first seven days of the Red Cross drive in the city to a glorious close. Although the exact total realized had not been compiled even by Monday morning, word received from the headquarters of the William Fox committee would indicate that the receipts well exceeded the $60,000 mark. Of this a large percentage was taken at the door, while the thousand and one ways of raising money in the ball room each was productive of a substantial quota.

It is predicted that when the final returns of the entire week's drive have been received, the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team will be credited with at least $2,000,000 in subscriptions.

Festivities got under way at ten o'clock when the doors were officially opened.

Stars in Abundance

Shortly after eleven the various stars of screen and stage began to arrive. There were at least twenty-four actresses attired as Red Cross nurses who sold guest badges at the door for whatever sum offered. Others sold flowers, candy, cigarettes and even matches. One of the features of the evening was the auctioning off of the Kaiser's cup, which had done service for the Red Cross drive all through the week. The night before $20,000 had been raised on it at the fights in Madison Square Garden. It was put on auction in the middle of the Grand Ball Room, and the three times it was sold brought in a sum between $10,000 and $15,000. Florenz Ziegfeld was one of the buyers. The bidding taking place between the box holders was spirited and brought forth rounds of applause from the spectators.

The actresses' popularity contest, the results of which were chalked up on a large blackboard, was watched with unusual interest. Many of the candidates solicited votes for themselves. Each vote brought a dollar. There was considerable commotion when the figures after Billie Burke's name took a long leap from four hundred up to fourteen thousand. William A. Brady, upon investigation, discovered that Florenz Ziegfeld had been busy with his check book, and immediately thereafter Alice Brady jumped from the low hundreds into four figures. When it was all over Miss Burke, Miss Brady, Marilynn Miller and Alma Hanlon were leading.

The majority of the goods sold at the ball were donated to William Fox and his committee. The flowers, candies, cigars and cigarettes were gifts, and many of the wines sold in the grill were donated to the cause. The ball was well attended by those of the theatrical and motion picture professions, besides those who came to gaze at the aggregation of stars present. These people had the opportunity of dancing with the flower girls and the cigarettes girls for a tax of one dollar. None of the opportunities was overlooked.

New York's one o'clock closing law was waived for Saturday night. Those whose pocketbooks withstood the concentrated attacks of the evening learned that this hour means absolutely nothing to the Red Cross. When the music at last stopped, the clock was ticking off the minutes to five.

"A SPADE A SPADE"

Call It That and You Help the Exchange Man Says One of Them

IN a letter to P. S. Harrison regarding "Exhibitor to Exhibitor Reviews," L. E. Kennedy, Los Angeles branch manager for Pathe, says:

"I believe both the exhibitor and exchange man will appreciate the nature of your reviews in getting away from the stilted style of smoothing over the weaknesses and praising to the skies any good quality the picture may have. I know, as an exchange man, I prefer calling a spade a spade if brains are used in judging a picture for the class of audience it is designed to be presented to.

"You may rest assured that you have the best wishes of the Los Angeles house of Pathe."

Other Features Also

The big ball at the Astor, however, was but one of the many events throughout the week that brought the money pouring into the coffers of the American Red Cross, credited to the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, of which William Fox was the head.

Although complete returns are lacking at this time, it is known that the industry surpassed itself, under the watchful guidance of Mr. Fox, in this big drive, and that for once will be given full credit for the great assistance it is lending the nation in the war.

So confident was Mr. Fox that the body of hustlers of which he was the leader would come under the wire first in the matter of subscriptions, that he confided to MOTION PICTURE NEWS his belief; adding that "If you hear an ambulance clanging next Tuesday, and at the same time you learn definitely that Team No. 7 has not the biggest total, then you may be sure I am dead inside that ambulance. And let me remind you that my health never was more robust nor my mind more lucid than while I am making this statement."

In close succession, the benefits given last week in behalf of the fund, were huge successes. The opening benefit was staged at the Hippodrome on Thursday, May 23, with the "Cheer Up" company augmented by several Broadway stars. On Friday a great patriotic concert at Madison Square Garden was followed by a boxing carnival, to which tickets were sold fast and at high prices. On Saturday, as recounted above, fashion held sway at the Astor in what was termed the gala event of the week. On Sunday a dramatic, musical and vaudeville benefit at the Century drew a packed house. Monday night an operatic concert was scheduled for the Metropolitan, with Caruso heading the long list of stars who appeared.

Coast Also Active

The East was not alone in its earnest endeavors to corral all the money in the world for the Red Cross. On the West Coast things were up and doing, with the many stars who are actively engaged there in the midst of the "doings."

William Duncan, director-star of Vitagraph serials, went into the drive with all the energy and spirit with which he is possessed. All during the week he divided his time between the production of "A Fight for Millions" and speech-making for the fund.

Because of his very effective work in the last Liberty Loan drive, when he led the Vitagraph western studio contingent to the biggest sales night at the Liberty Tank in Los Angeles, he was among the first motion picture stars on the coast enlisted for the Red Cross campaign. He is making addresses and personal appearances at theatres each night and his eloquence is credited with harvesting thousands of dollars for the fund.

Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marshalled the forces of his organization in co-operation with the drive of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team for contributions to the Second Red Cross Fund. A meeting was held in the executive offices last week at which the four hundred employees were assembled, and Mr. Zukor made an impassioned plea for funds to further the commendable work now being performed by the Red Cross in the war zone. He concluded his oration with the statement that he would personally give $5,000 to head the list of employees of the home office. Arthur S. Friend, Treasurer of the company, made an eloquent appeal.

Marguerite Clark, recuperating from her strenuous efforts in the last Liberty Loan Drive, addressing four hundred thousand people on her tour around the country, followed Mr. Zukor with an address along similar lines, and donated $1,000 to the fund.

Universal Pays Footage Tax

Company Claims Records Show That 15-Cent Tribute from Exhibitors Is Not Sufficient to Reimburse Producers

THE sum of $45,600, the amount of footage tax due for the period ending December 12, 1917, has been sent by check by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to the United States Government in accordance with the mandate of the War Revenue measure passed last Fall.

That this figure does not in any way represent collections for the future is demonstrated by the statement made at the offices of the Universal Company that the production at Universal City during the ten weeks represented by the payment was the smallest in footage for a long period. For a time during the ten weeks prior to December 12 the company's big producing centre on the West Coast—Universal City—was being used by but three or four companies as against sixteen or seventeen when production is proceeding at the usual rate. Some of the units of the Universal service were discontinued temporarily during the ten weeks, which was the cause of the drop in the number of companies and also the reason for the less-than-average footage.

As production at Universal was speeded up shortly before the first of the year the next footage tax to be paid by Universal for the period following December 12 will show a large increase and will be an equitable figure upon which to base the amount the company will have to pay annually as a result of the war tax. The two-reel Western and railroad dramas scheduled for release by Universal beginning June 10 together with other units will bring the production of the big company back to normal. When the tax law was passed the distributing companies were practically deputized by the United States Government to collect the footage tax from the exhibitors who in turn were told that they might collect it from the motion picture patrons.

After an investigation by Price, Waterhouse & Company, the expert accountants, they reported that the equitable figure to collect from the exhibitors in order to take care of the footage tax would be fifteen cents a reel. This figure was arrived at after the accountants had made an investigation of the records of all the larger companies in the production field. As a result of the report by Price, Waterhouse & Company, the exhibitors were notified that they would be expected to pay fifteeen cents a reel tax.

However, the records of the Universal company are said to show that this fifteen cents a reel tax required from the exhibitors does not take care of the footage tax demanded by the Government. Notwithstanding this the Universal Company announces that it purposes to stand on the original figure and will not request the exhibitors to pay more unless the difference between the payment by the exhibitors and the sum demanded by the government is so great as to make an increase in the reel tax absolutely necessary.

"Cleopatra" Opens Run at Chicago

Following the victory that the William Fox forces scored over Major Funkhouser, the Chicago censor, in the fight for the right to present "Cleopatra" in the form in which it has been shown practically throughout the United States, the Theda Bara production began an indefinite engagement at the Colonial theatre, Chicago, May 27, says an announcement from the Fox offices. The Fox corporation also states that the picture is now in the third week of its run at the Victoria theatre, Philadelphia, scoring a big success.

"Mr. Fox's opening of the photodrama in Chicago," the statement continues, "is more than a personal triumph. It signalizes an important decision in which the entire trade and industry will rejoice, because every gain of this kind by a producer is slowly undermining the autocratic power that is being exercised in Chicago.

"After Major Funkhouser had had the picture screened for him he ordered excessive eliminations, to which, of course, we were not willing to agree. We would not acquiesce, without protest and contest, in letting one man's views be the determining and almost the sole factor in the decision as to what a million other persons should or should not see.

"We objected so strenuously that Mr. Funkhouser was instructed to issue a white, or general permit for 'Cleopatra.'"

Metro Pictures Filed at Reference Library

Under the supervision of Librarian D. W. Hyde a bulletin of screen productions of civic and educational value, to be sent broadcast over the country, is being prepared by the Municipal Reference Library, New York City, and already descriptions and synopses of super-features of Screen Classics, Inc., and Metro All-Star Series productions have been placed on file at the library.

The bulletin, published periodically, will be used for reference by communities and organizations wishing to utilize high-grade pictures in their work of town betterment, health campaigns, and patriotic propaganda. The library plans to use constructively, for the nation's benefit, the widespread interest in motion pictures. Metro has hastened to co-operate with the new idea, in line with its policy of placing its facilities at the service of the nation wherever possible, and believing that fitness to be listed in the Library's bulletin will soon be recognized by all screen companies as an honor eagerly to be sought.

The productions filed include "My Own United States," "The Slacker," "Draft 258," "Lest We Forget," "The Battalion of Death," and others, as well as the Drew comedies, "Help Wanted," "The Patriot," "Gas Logic," "The High Cost of Living" and "Hist! Spies!"

Barker and Giblyn Now Goldwyn Directors

News has reached the Goldwyn offices in New York that Samuel Goldfish, while in Los Angeles recently, engaged Reginald Barker, one of the best known directors in the profession, to take charge of Geraldine Farrar's Goldwyn productions.

Mr. Barker's Goldwyn advent is the result of what might be termed selective attraction. For a long time Mr. Goldfish has had his eye on Mr. Barker's work, and for many months Mr. Barker is said to have been watching Goldwyn. His engagement to direct Miss Farrar follows the natural conclusion of Goldwyn that few directors are Mr. Barker's equal, none his superiors, and his own conclusion that Goldwyn is in the forefront of the industry's producing organizations.

Goldwyn also announces the acquisition to its directorial forces at Fort Lee of Charles Giblyn, one of the most successful products of the Thomas H. Ince-Triangle school. Mr. Giblyn's first work will be on a production starring a personality about whom Goldwyn is making considerable of a mystery. Even the title is secret.

Monte Katterjohn Leaves Paralta

Monte M. Katterjohn has resigned his position as author and scenarioist at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles. While with Paralta Mr. Katterjohn wrote "Carmen of the Klondike," the successful Alaskan production which was purchased by the States Rights Distrubutors, Inc., as well as "Madam Who?" and "Within the Cup," starring Bessie Barriscale. Mr. Katterjohn is also the author of "An Alien Enemy," which introduces Louise Glaum as a Paralta star, and which has proven a success on account of its timeliness and its powerful story.

Mr. Katterjohn has received offers from four producing organizations in Los Angeles, but has not yet chosen his future affiliation.

"Cannot Affiliate"—Rembusch

National Secretary of A. E. A. Declares Candidacy of Horstmann for League Presidency Is Only Ochs Camouflage

"THE election of Hortsmann would be an Ochs election under a different name, Horstmann is at present identified with Ochs in the United Theatres proposition at Boston. That's enough for us. We refuse to be camouflaged."

That was the way Frank Rembusch, National Secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association, dismissed the idea of a possible reconciliation between that body and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America when seen by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS at Chicago the other day.

The purpose of Mr. Rembusch's flying visit to Chicago was to confer with the convention committee of A. E. A. It was decided to postpone the plans for holding the American Exhibitors' Association convention there in June until after the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held its sessions at Boston. Mr. Rembusch stated that the A. E. A. convention would probably be held during the latter part of August.

In a statement sent to MOTION PICTURE NEWS from Indianapolis, Mr. Rembusch says:

I want to inform you of the activities of the A. E. A.

We had meetings in Minneapolis and Chicago last week and decided many things. We agreed that under no circumstances would the M. P. E. L. and the American Exhibitors' Association amalgamate.

Why should we amalgamate? For what purpose? To what benefit?

Mr. Ochs has been president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for two years. His administration has been one of selfish promotion throughout. First he creates a trade journal in which he browbeats all who differ with him. Lately he is attempting to control both the exhibitor and producer with a plan that is much worse than the advance deposit system. He proposes to increase the juggling of film and outdo the craziest methods that have ever been put out by producers.

There has been some talk of a double meeting in Boston. We have never received any proposition of any kind from Ochs for holding a double convention. What could we expect at Boston, judging from our Chicago experience last summer? Let us not forget that Mr. Ochs in order to continue in office last July discarded all the precedents and traditions of the league. He used the most undemocratic and un-American methods to further his purposes. Exhibitors were not allowed to hear the proceedings of the convention and it has been the rule of the league to welcome any and all exhibitors to conventions whether members or not. Delegates were allowed to pay dues and per capita at the Hotel Morrison, but were not given badges so they could enter the convention and the hall. When they came to the hall they were kept out by Chicago police stationed at the door. They allowed only Ochs' delegates to enter with badges on.

Ochs insulted every exhibitor who was opposed to him, and in his acceptance speech said, "We will get them babies." He has not gotten us yet and we do not intend to play into his hands. These things are still facts just as strong as last summer. Does any well thinking man believe that we should go to Boston under such circumstances?

We believe that the same Ochs that used the police to keep exhibitors' delegates from entering the convention hall will not welcome any exhibitor except those that are in his personal schemes.

I not only speak the opinion of myself, but I voice the opinion of the directors when I say that we will never affiliate with any organization which is in the hands of Mr. Ochs.

WE HAVE BEGUN TO BELIEVE THAT TWO ORGANIZATIONS ARE BETTER THAN ONE.

There are sufficient motion picture exhibitors to have two national bodies. The American Exhibitors' Association has been most liberal in all its dealings with all branches of the industry. We are growing day by day.

We have gone to expense to create our organization. If there is to be an amalgamation we invite the exhibitors to amalgamate with us and come into an organization of real exhibitors.

We are an organization free from any entangling alliances. We are an organization that will insist on every member answering the question, "What theatre do you own?" We have an organization that will not allow a packed convention of hirelings who have no theatre to outvote exhibitors. We have an organization in which every member works for "EXHIBITOR FIRST."

The league has been used by Ochs for his own selfish purposes.

In Ochs' administration we have had the most undesirable condition in the history of the film market.

We trust that the American Exhibitors' Association will have the undivided support of your journal and give us as much publicity as you can to further our interests.

Funkhouser is Suspended, Charges to Be Filed

A news dispatch from Chicago under date of May 25 says:

"Acting Chief of Police Alcock to-day suspended Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, Second Deputy Superintendent of Police, and two of his aids, declaring that for some time he has been unable to get co-operation from the Major and his division.

"Major Funkhouser has been the centre of a fight for the last five years. His war on vice and improper motion pictures has made him a nationally known character and has brought him many enemies.

"William H. Luthardt, secretary to the Police Chief, was made Acting Second Deputy. He will remain here until the Civil Service Commission hears the charges against Funkhouser. The Acting Chief said he would file charges against the Major, and some of his aids within a few days.

"It was understood that Major Thompson sanctioned the suspension of the Major. The Acting Chief took up the case with him before issuing the order of suspension."

Funkhouser has been especially conspicuous during the past few weeks through his action in censoring "My Four Years in Germany" and "Hearts of the World," from the latter of which he cut out numerous German atrocity features. Some months ago he raised a row over the Mary Pickford picture, "The Little American." His activities in cutting these and other patriotic pictures have drawn the accusation that he is pro-German in his sympathies. Other acts of censorship have brought him prominently into the limelight lately, only a few weeks ago William Fox obtaining an injunction against his alleged mutilation of Theda Bara's "Cleopatra."

During the past few days the storm clouds have been gathering over Funkhouser, the Judiciary Committee of the City Council having recommended by a vote of 11 to 5 the passage of a resolution, introduced by Alderman Maypole, aimed to put an end to the Funkhouser absolutism, leaving the judgment and decision on films up to the majority opinion of a board and providing that writs on appeals taken into court from rulings by the board shall be lodged straight against the Chief of Police.

Takes Issue With Burlingham

Paul H. Cromelin, President of Inter-Ocean, Doubts That Germany Can Ever Monopolize World's Film Markets

FREDERICK BURLINGHAM, who, upon his recent return to the United States from Switzerland, warned American producers and distributors through the columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that Germany was preparing to control the world's film market at the close of the war, finds at least one leading American exporter of films who takes issue with some of his statements. This is Paul H. Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, considered among the leading American experts on international film conditions.

"I have no doubt that the German Film Trust that Mr. Burlingham tells the NEWS about has been actually formed," says President Cromelin. "But I really doubt that it will become the world menace its projectors expect it to be."

"I absolutely agree with Mr. Burlingham that the Germans would like to control the international film business if for no other purpose than propaganda use. The NEWS has time and again published stories calling the attention of America to the development of films-for-propaganda-use by Germany, and if our officials have not heeded the same, it is not for the want of sufficient publicity on the part of our trade press.

"But how can Germany monopolize the international film market by mere willingness to conduct its film business at a loss? Even if theatres were willing to show certain makes of pictures because they were cheap, that does not mean that the public will patronize these houses. I am sure that in this country exhibitors can get films that 'are given away,' so to speak, and yet they pass them up to pay big prices for the films they actually use. And the publics of all countries are the final judges of the films and they will not support theatres that do not show the best, regardless of price. If Mr. Burlingham would fully realize this, he would not take his fears nearly as seriously as he does.

"Then as to keeping American film out of the lands of the Central Empires and Allies, it is simply not to be done the way Mr. Burlingham believes the Germans have decided to go about it. When peace comes the publics of the Central Empires, too, will only go to see the films that most entertain them. But the German post-war scheme is, according to Mr. Burlingham, to pay excessive prices, if need be, for the best American-made films and then to simply 'charge the item against expense' and never show these superior films in their countries. He forgets that American manufacturers have lots of business foresight, and that none of them, no matter what the cash consideration, would sign a contract that allowed his pictures to be shelved in any particular country surely the makers of the real desirable pictures, would not. Such manufacturers insist that the purchasers of their product give the same adequate exploitation, and for this and other reasons I fail to see how the German Government can go through on its film scheme."

"Two-Gun" Ball a Real Event

Society, Film Folk and Officers of "Two-Gun" Regiment Dance as Bill Hart's Guests at Hotel Coronado

THE most pretentious military ball in the annals of California or West Coast society was given at Hotel Coronado, near San Diego, on the evening of May 11, by William S. Hart. The event was in honor of the officers of the 159th regiment who have styled themselves "William S. Hart's Two-Gun Men." It might here be mentioned that the officers have even gone farther than this and have secured a special permission from the War Department which provides that each officer may carry two guns instead of one.

To add lustre to the event, Mr. Hart took with him as his guests a party of forty friends, more than thirty of whom were prominent young women of the West Coast film colony. The party went to San Diego in a special car on Saturday afternoon, and were Mr. Hart's guests until they arrived back in Los Angeles late Sunday.

The ball was a brilliant affair, participated in by many of the prominent people of Coronado and San Diego, as well as the officers and the party from the Los Angeles film colony. There were more than five hundred couples and the music was furnished by the regimental band of the 159th Infantry. The grand march, which began at nine o'clock, was led by Colonel Leonard M. Farrell and Kathrine MacDonald, and Mr. Hart and Mrs. Farrell. There were fourteen dances, and for each patriotic music was played. The first was to President Wilson, number two to the Army and Navy, the third to the Allies, the fourth to General Pershing, and so on until the fourteenth which was "To Our Mothers." Supper was served to the officers and guests at midnight.

Among the film people who were guests of Mr. Hart were Bessie Love, Ann Little, Kathrine MacDonald, Mary MacLaren, Rhea Mitchell, Margaret Thompson, Olga Grey, Gonda Durand, Gretchen Lederer, Edna Earle, Miriam McDonald, Maude George, Virginia Nightingale, Jessie Way, Eleanor Way, Lucille Young, Charlotte Wood, Bessie Learn, Madeline Fairchild, and others. Included also in the party were Mr. and Mrs. Sam Rork, Grace Mosman, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Price, Lambert Hillyer, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Jessen, Nell Kemper, Mabel Condon, Captain and Mrs. Easton, and E. H. Allen. Miss Mary Allen Hart, sister of William S. Hart, was chaperone of the party. George Bellman, photoplay editor of the Seattle Times, was Mr. Hart's guest, Mr. Bellman making the trip from Seattle to San Diego for the special purpose of attending this ball.

Toledo Exhibitors Form Association

The motion picture exhibitors of Toledo, Ohio, have organized themselves into a body, called the Toledo Amusement Association. This is strictly a business association and is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce of that city. Almost all of the exhibitors have already joined, and the few remaining are expected to be in, before the second meeting of the organization is called.

At the first meeting, held recently, the following officers were elected: J. Pearlstein, Keith's theatre, president; Manager McClellan, of the National theatre, vice-president; Manager Beck, of the Lyric theatre, secretary; Manager Klink, of the Hippodrome, treasurer. The Board of Directors is made up of Manager Gerstle, of Loew's Valentine theatre; A. Horowitz, owner of the Colonial, and C. K. Friedman, attorney.

These officers have been elected for a term of one year. Meetings are to be held semi-monthly.

Petrova Starts on Long Tour June 1

The final scenes for Madame Olga Petrova's picture, "Patience Sparhawk," adapted from Gertrude Atherton's novel, have been made under the direction of Ralph Ince, and Madame Petrova is now laying her plans for the commencement of her country-wide tour in the interests of War Savings Stamps, on Saturday, June 1. Complete advance arrangements for the trip were made some time ago by Herbert Lubin and Bert Ennis.

Beulah Livingstone, personal representative of the screen star, left New York on Thursday for the purpose of conferring with Frank A. Vanderlip and William H. McAdoo, regarding the co-operation which the United States Government will give Madame Petrova during her nation-wide campaign.

Samuel Goldfish Returns from the Coast

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, who has been in California for some time investigating various phases of the studio situation with a view to establishing the corporation's production activities permanently on the West Coast, left Los Angeles May 18 on his way East, via San Francisco. An interesting statement regarding studio plans is expected on his arrival in New York, probably some time this week.

Pathe-United Affiliation Denied by Brunet

Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, states that there is no truth in a published report that Pathe is affiliated with or behind United Picture Theatres of America.

"Pathe has no connection of any sort whatever with the United concern," said Mr. Brunet.

Radical Sales Plan Backs Hayakawa

Reports to NEWS Uncover New "Exhibitor-Star Co-operation" Declared to Be "Fool Proof Sales Plan"—Hints That Future May Link Other Stars in Scope

RECENT announcements that Hayakawa productions would be booked under a special agreement with the Mutual Corporation have been followed by reports to MOTION PICTURE NEWS from various sections of the country, indicating that back of the published story is a co-operative booking plan on an extensive scale. So carefully worked out are the details of the new scheme that there is every promise that its eventual operation is intended to include other stars and producing organizations.

In some of its features the new sales proposal resembles many of the proposed co-operative plans under discussion for the past few months, though in its entirety the scheme back of the Hayakawa productions is radically new.

Hawkins Declines to Talk

F. J. Hawkins, vice-president of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, the Hayakawa organization, is credited with being the creator of the latest step towards producer and exhibitor co-operation. Attempts to secure a full outline of the future plans of the Haworth Corporation from Mr. Hawkins at the offices of the Mutual Corporation met with the following statement:

"The only publicity we want now," he declares, "is publicity regarding the productions on which we are working with Sessue Hayakawa as the star. The booking plans and our methods of operation are something on which we have been working quietly and deliberately for over a year. They have never needed publicity at any stage of their formation and until the practical results are ready to speak for themselves I would prefer to say nothing."

From exhibitors who have become interested in the new movement, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has gathered information regarding the complete workings of the Hawkins plan that may be given as an authoritative outline.

The co-operative features of the new plan start with the star and the producing organization. By interesting the star in the formation of his own company, it is planned to make headline attractions at a moderate cost, the eventual return to the star being dependent entirely on his or her ability as a box-office drawing card.

Then comes the exhibitor's share in the co-operation. Between thirty and forty first run exhibitors throughout the country are being interested in the workings of the Hawkins system. These men contract for one week previous showings on the six Hayakawa productions to be released during the year. Upon the receipt of the prints on each subject each of these thirty or forty men is obligated and pays for his proportionate share in the cost of production.

Following the week's pre-view showing at his house, the contracting exhibitor turns the prints over to the local Mutual exchange. Until the picture has earned in rentals the difference between the contracting exhibitor's present weekly rentals on a Hayakawa subject and the money he has paid as his share of production cost, the contracting exhibitor receives from Mutual a proportion of the earnings on the picture.

McCORMACK, OF THE CIRCLE

The Name Means Enough —Now Read the Letter

"I LIKE Harrison's 'Exhibitor to Exhibitor Reviews.' His analysis of values of each angle of a photoplay is excellent and I am of the opinion that it is this type of criticism that is going to result in benefits for every branch of the industry.

"If a story is poor there is nothing gained for the producer by camouflaging behind a screen of adjectives and enthusiasm for the photography. The sooner producers can get the truth of what is wanted the sooner will some of the burdens that hang around the neck of photoplay production and exhibition be eliminated. And, by the way, this burden is not the expensive star or the costly production—it is the unproductive players and the uninteresting picture that is putting gray hairs into the 'infant industry.'" —S. Barret McCormick, Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.

This arrangement continues until the picture has earned for the exhibitor his complete investment in the production. From that time on the share of earnings formerly going to the exhibitor is split on an even basis between the producing organization and the exhibitor.

Removes Many Objections, He Says

One exhibitor outlining the new plan of co-operation to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, declared: "I have heard and read a lot about so-called co-operative schemes, but this is the first one that I could call 'fool-proof.'

"In the first place, I won't have to put up any money until I have a picture—a picture with a known star and a known standard. I am not working blindly, as I know from my present books what a week's run of that star would cost me now, and I can see that my share of production cost only amounts to a few hundred dollars more than my actual rental charge on productions of equal merit.

"Since I am interested in the financial success of the picture in my territory I am going to go to it with all my forces to put the picture over—which helps the other exhibitors booking it. And then, I don't have to go into the exchange business. Another point in my favor.

"The possibilities are enormous, as other producing units can be added at any time.

"And the pictures will go over because they have first the backing of a big exhibitor who will go the limit on exploitation, and after that they are handled by a complete and efficient distributing organization, and mutually we are going to be sure that each producing unit has a star of recognized box-office value."

Capitalists Behind Plan

While the backers have been working unusually quietly on the new co-operative plan, Los Angeles correspondence to MOTION PICTURE NEWS declares that California and Chicago capital is behind the scheme. These reports from the coast also hint that there are other stars in the studio colony watching with interest the operation of the plan in connection with the first Hayakawa production.

It is known that Hawkins, during the past two years, has quietly covered practically every corner in the country in studying distribution and exhibiting conditions. For many months the organization has been ready in Los Angeles to start at the word. Recently the distribution arrangement with Mutual was agreed upon and now the final rounding up of partner-exhibitors is under way.

Rothacker Work Praised by Chicago Critic

In reviewing "Tarzan of the Apes," for the Chicago Evening Post, Oma Moody Lawrence bestowed the following praise on the work of the Rothacker Laboratories, which made the prints for the production:

"Photographically the production is unusually attractive. The tints and tones add immeasurably to the beauty of the film and there is one lovely bit, where Tarzan starts a fire, that appears to have been hand-colored with great care. It is rather interesting to know, too, that the laboratory work was done here in Chicago, at the Rothacker studio."

How About "Counterfeiting"

J. D. Williams Scores Practice of Revamping Old Films—Suggests Commission to Devise Plan to Put a Stop to It

J. D. WILLIAMS, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, wants a halt called on the practice of revamping and reissuing well-known films which have already been shown. His views are expressed in the following statement:

The practice that has lately come into vogue of reissuing well-known films of the past under new titles is the most sinister move that has been developed within the film industry for many years.

And unless the men of this country who have raised the business of catering to the regular patrons of the motion picture theatres to its present high plane immediately express their disapproval of such questionable methods the matter is likely to produce results of far-reaching evil, and permanently damage the prestige of a business that can ill-afford to sacrifice its hard-earned reputation for a few tarnished dollars.

The people who are now digging up the successes of four and five years ago from the graveyard of the past and trying to animate them with new life under new names are guilty of barefaced fraud and are trying to get away with tactics that would not be tolerated for an instant in any other industry or profession that I can call to mind.

Suppose, for instance, that after Jack London's great story, "The Sea Wolf," had temporarily exhausted its popularity in its original $1.35 edition, do you imagine that Macmillan and Company would even consider the idea of getting out a cheap edition under the title, say, of "The Blond Beast," with new chapter headings to fool the unwary into the supposition that it was a brand new novel from London's pen?

Doesn't sound very probable, does it?

Yet that is exactly what these grave-diggers in the film field are doing when they reissue pictures that have already served their full duty from the standpoint of both entertainment and money-making.

They offer the alibi that the exhibitor books the stuff with his eyes open, and that if the man who runs the theatre is willing to take a chance on fooling his patrons into the belief that they are going to see one of their favorite stars in a new production, why they will print up all the old material in the storehouse and ship it out under new labels so long as the office thesaurus of words and phrases will supply them with new titles.

This is passing the buck with a vengeance, and if I am not greatly mistaken will turn out to be a boomerang-throwing act that will sooner or later knock the parties who evolved the scheme into the discard, along with the gentry who used to fake labels on well-known articles of merchandise and misbrand cattle on the open range.

Any theatre manager who once gets the reputation of luring the crowds into his house under false pretenses is going to find himself without any crowds to lure before he has pulled the stunt more than two or three times.

And without the co-operation of the ultimate consumer where is the money going to come from to keep the film industry in a live, progressive state, anyway?

Reissues that are put out frankly as reissues are not objectionable in any sense. There is no reason why acknowledged screen classics should not live as long as literary or musical classics.

But when titles are deliberately changed, and "new prints from original negatives" are gotten out under a camouflage of "up-to-date sub-titles," re-written press books and newly designed posters and advertising accessories, the scheme degenerates into a deliberate effort to mislead.

"The old title is given as well as the new one in the trade paper advertising," say the apologists of the men who are trying to float the proposition.

So it is—in the advertising pages of the trade papers—but NOT ON THE ADVERTISING MATERIAL AND THE LITHOGRAPHIC STANDS THAT ARE BEING PUT OUT TO ATTRACT THE PUBLIC AT LARGE.

I hereby call for a commission of seven of the leading producers and distributors of motion pictures—to be selected by the editors of the "Moving Picture World," MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the "Exhibitors' Trade Review"—to meet at the earliest convenient date that can be agreed upon and decide upon the proper action to be taken to stamp out this despicable form of counterfeiting.

Dolls' Comedians in These General Comedies

General Film Company promises for early June an innovation in screen comedies in a series of one-reel subjects to be known as the Cinema Doll Comedies. As is indicated by the name, the players in these novelty films are composed entirely of dolls, which have been cleverly and patiently manipulated by capable and experienced directors in the making of unique comedy effects. The pictures are the product of the Emerald Motion Picture Company of Chicago. The titles and distribution plans will be announced shortly by General Film.

Captain Warwick, who has a notable list of stage and screen successes to his credit, notable among the latter being "The Man of the Hour," "The Argyle Case" and "The Mad Lover,' did his last work for the screen shortly before leaving for France, in "The Accidental Honeymoon," which was recently released in New York by Harry Rapf.

Effects of "Work or Fight" Rule in Doubt

Washington, D. C., Monday

(Special Correspondence to Motion Picture News)

ATTEMPTS to secure a specific statement regarding the effects of the new "work or fight" ruling on the motion picture industry from the office of Provost Marshal Crowder have so far met with little success. "It will be a matter for the local board to determine whether a man's employment is useful or not," is as far as those in authority about the Provost Marshal's office would go.

It was gathered from the questioning that the Washington attitude concerning camera men, studio assistants, operators, salesmen, etc., will be a matter of individual exemption as to usefulness rather than one of the usefulness of the occupation as a whole.

Under this practice, even with the liberal attitude taken towards the motion picture by Secretary of War Baker, it seems certain that the industry is to suffer a severe blow in the ranks of its film salesmen, and such studio assistants as local boards will decide can be replaced by men outside the draft limit.

Ushers, door attendants, and such assistants about theatres are, of course, specifically placed in the Provost Marshal's list of "useless occupations."

fact that William Fox has given so much of his time and energy to the cause, that his most youthful stars, Jane and Katherine Lee, should also "jump in" and help. They were very active—far beyond their years—in the various drives, and did excellent work for the Red Cross. In addition, through strenuous work, they completed a finely spirited picture that is described in the Fox press sheets as "showing how two petticoat patriots lend a hand to Uncle Sam."

The photoplay was written and staged by Kenean Buel, who has had charge of all of the starlets' vehicles. Mr. Fox selected the title, "Doing Their Bit," for the subject, which is of the comedy-drama type.

With the completion of the production, Jane and Katherine did further noble work by accepting an invitation to be a conspicuous part of the entertainment arranged by Private Irving Berlin for his colleagues at Camp Upton. The children were not only by far the youngest persons present—on either side of the footlights on the Yaphank stage—but they were also the only motion picture stars there.

Theatre managers, exhibitors and other stars also did creditable work, and at least one chapter of the history of the war will devote itself to the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team and the Red Cross Second War Fund.

S. Rankin Drew a Prisoner in Germany

Reports from abroad are taken to indicate in the absence of any authoritative report, that S. Rankin Drew, well known as a screen star and director with Vitagraph and Metro, is now a prisoner in German hands.

Mr. Drew, son of Sidney Drew, joined the French ambulance service well over a year ago, but was not long "over there" before his desire for more action brought him into the aviation forces. When last seen his aeroplane appeared to be making a forced landing in German territory.

"OTHERS WILL LEARN"

This Exhibitor Knows the Author of "Exhibitor Reviews," and Says Others Will Soon

FROM Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, lessee and manager of the Opera House, San Bernardino, California, comes the following letter:

"Congratulations on having Mr. P. S. Harrison on your staff. Personally I know of no one whose judgment of a picture is so accurate. I am sure that it is a satisfaction to his many friends here on the West Coast to know they can rely upon your publication for unbiased reviews on pictures. Others besides his personal friends will soon learn that they can also do so.

"I am very glad to have the News on my desk."

Exchange Books Films to Big Store

A new avenue of film trade has been discovered in Montreal by a well known film exchange in that city, and is being exploited very successfully. It is the department stores. Goodwin's Limited, one of the largest department stores in Canada, has booked one reel each day to be shown at noon hour to the employes and patrons of the big store. While the idea is not new on this continent, it is probably the first time that it has been tried out in Canada. It is said that other Canadian stores are watching the developments with respect to showing film to employes and patrons, and that the idea may be adopted very soon by other department stores throughout this country.

Coast Organizes for War Service

Fully two thousand persons associated with the motion picture industry assembled at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, Sunday afternoon, and organized a Motion Picture War Service Association, the action being part of the national movement to unite the industry to help win the war. The association will finance the construction and maintenance of a $185,000 hospital, with a thousand beds, for the use of the Government during the war, the hospital afterward to revert to the association for charitable purposes.

The association is to be governed by a Board of Directors of twenty-five members. D. W. Griffith was chosen president of the Board, and Cecil B. De Mille, Lois Weber, Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart were named vice-presidents. The treasurer is Mack Sennett, and the secretary, S. E. V. Taylor. Other members of the Board elected are: Marguerite Clark, Maurice Tourneur, Lee Ochs, J. Gordon Edwards, G. W. Bitzer, W. F. Alder and William D. Taylor.

Among those who spoke, urging all present to do their patriotic duty, were Jesse L. Lasky, D. W. Griffith, Lois Weber, Mary Pickford, Cecil B. De Mille and Charlie Chaplin. Membership cards autographed by various stars were auctioned by Charlie Murray and the following purchases were recorded: Dustin Farnum, $2,500; Mary Pickford, $2,500; Charlie Chaplin, $2,600; Mack Sennett, $2,400; D. W. Griffith, $2,500; Sessue Hayakawa, $2,000; Phillips Smalley, $2,000; Henry McRae, $1,000; George Melford, $2,000; Douglas Fairbanks, $2,500; Fannie Ward, $2,500; Frank Keenan, $2,000; Harry Sherman, $2,750; Lois Weber, $2,000, and Mae Murray, $1,500. Additional memberships at $1 and upward brought the total to nearly $40,000.

Several wires received indicate that exchanges and exhibitors are ready to co-operate enthusiastically. Already five hundred exhibitors have pledged their help.

Picture Temple to Honor Muybridge?

The suggestion offered by Maurice Tourneur that the pioneer investigator into the secrets of motion photography, Edward Muybridge, be fittingly honored for his accomplishments along these lines, has met with such approval by representative men in the picture industry, that Director Tourneur suggests further that a motion picture temple be erected in honor of the one who did more for the perfection of motion photography than any other man.

"I believe that we should erect a building—a screen temple—to Muybridge," said Mr. Tourneur. "Perhaps we should make it even broader in scope, a sort of movie hall of fame. Here we could pay our tribute to Muybridge, Edison, Eastman and the other men whose investigations have been milestone in the progress of films.

"I am not in favor of a bare empty building of marble and stone. Let us keep here a selected number of the representative pictures of each year. Honor of this kind to the best pictures would encourage artistic advance as nothing else could. Here, too, we could keep the scenarios of these selected pictures.

"Where should this hall of fame be located?" Mr. Tourneur repeated. "I can think of no better place than the University of Pennsylvania, the one college that had the farsightedness to see the vast possibilities of Muybridge's discoveries. We have 17,000 motion picture theatres in America today, and fifteen million fans attending them daily. I suggest a contribution of one cent from each purchaser of screen theatre tickets for a period of three days. No one could feel the pinch of giving from one to three cents. This little tax of a penny should rightly be called during the month of May, since it was on May 18, 1878, that Muybridge's first successful race horse pictures were taken at the Leland Stanford race track at Oakland, Cal."

Uses Bare Truth in His Advertising

One of the most successful small-town exhibitors in Ontario is Manager L. Crume of the Princess theatre, Sault Ste. Marie. He is an ardent advertiser. He ran "The Price of a Good Time" a short time ago, and made liberal use of printers' ink to put it over. At the bottom of his advertisements he announced "We do not recommend this picture for small children. For those over 16 years of age there has never been a greater or more pointed lesson. But it is not a child's performance."

The Soo people have acquired the habit of placing much confidence in Exhibitor Crume's advertisements, which works out splendidly for the theatre.

Al Hall to Join Navy

Al Hall, who has just finished a Fox picture in which he played the juvenile lead with the Lee youngsters, states that he expects to do one more picture before joining the navy.

"99 PER CENT CORRECT"

That's the Average Cohn, of the Spokane Liberty, Gives the "Exhibitor Reviews"

WE asked Samuel W. B. Cohn, of the well known Liberty theatre, Spokane, Washington, to give us his opinion of the P. S. Harrison "Exhibitor to Exhibitor Reviews." The answer came back quickly and so good that we just have to publish it:

"Permit me to use the muchly abused word 'fearless' in describing the attitude taken in this department. Right or wrong, the reviews are conspicuous for their frankness and sincerity and in my personal opinion the criticisms are 99 per cent correct. This is not flattery—I owe you nothing. It's an appreciation of a difficult task well handled."

Season's Prospects Bright for Foursquare

Reports received from the various Foursquare exchanges promise business of the most satisfactory order for June and July, according to Sales Manager P. V. R. Key. "Communications that are coming in direct from the managers are most encouraging," said Mr. Key. "In less than a year's time, the exhibitors appear gratified with the class of product Foursquare has to offer and with its service. Jerome Abrams, who is now visiting exchanges on his way to the Pacific Coast, finds exhibitors' attitude toward the organization to be most cordial. Mr. Abrams will visit most of the offices between Cleveland and the Far West in the course of the next few weeks."

Select to Release "Cecilia of the Pink Roses"

Announcement was made on Saturday that the latest Julius Steger production, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" would be distributed through the Select organization.

Marion Davies, the Broadway stage beauty, is the star in this offering, which has strong publicity backing of the Hearst newspapers.

Export Company Sell Rights to 87 Metros

Export and Import Film Company, Inc., announces the sale of 87 Metro features for the territory of Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile to Max Glucksmann. The Export and Import Film Company, Inc., have now placed the Metro productions for practically the entire world.

Flynn Serial to Show in All Cantonments

William J. Flynn's story of Germany spies in America, "The Eagle's Eye," produced by Wharton Bors, and distributed by the Foursquare Pictures, will be told in motion pictures to the thousands of soldiers and sailors in the twenty-five army cantonments throughout the country, according to the stipulations of a contract signed recently by the New York Exchange, Foursquare Pictures and the Community Motion Picture Bureau, of which Mrs. Foster is the active executive head. Five-hundred days of booking is called for by the contract.

"Mrs. Foster is doing genuinely constructive work in behalf of the young men of the land," said P. V. R. Key, of Foursquare, "and in selecting 'The Eagle's Eye,' she feels that the patriotism of the fighting men will be rightly stimulated.

"Mr. Wildberg, Foursquare's treasurer, has completed a distribution plan so simple that no difficulties are anticipated in the deliveries of the large quantity of film required for simultaneous presentation in the numerous camp theatres.

"A contract has also been signed with the Community Bureau for the showing in the army cantonments of 'The Cast-Off,' the six-reel feature controlled by George Backer, which is being released through Foursquare."

Quebec Business Climbs Back to Normal

I. Soskin, general sales manager for the Famous Players in Canada, arrived back at his desk in the Toronto office a few days ago, after spending the past two or three months in Montreal and the Maritime provinces. Mr. Soskin said that business in Quebec was improving, and that several of the big down-town houses in the city of Montreal had no reason to complain of poor business.

"A number of these houses," declared Mr. Soskin, "are complaining of poor business, and putting up a plaintive gurgle, in order to get a reduction in their film rental. I went as far as to 'clock' a number of the houses in Montreal, who were complaining about dull business, in an effort to arrive at a basis of understanding. I discovered that their business, instead of warranting a deduction in their film rental, was just the reverse, and in future they will pay more for their film."

Mitchell Leaves Toronto for New York Theatre

Griffith Mitchell, who for the past year has been manager of the Regent theatre, Toronto, is leaving in a week for White Plains, N. Y., where he will become manager of the Strand theatre in that city. This theatre is one of a string of four theatres owned by K. T. Marvin.

Mr. Mitchell, while at the Regent, made many warm personal friends who will be sorry to learn of his departure, but glad to know that he has taken another advancement in the amusement field. His successor at the Regent in Toronto has not yet been announced.

Sherry Plans Independent Exchanges

Distributor Will Maintain Headquarters in Godfrey Building and Establish Branches in Principal Centres Throughout Country—Keeney Films Initial Releases

FOLLOWING the announcement last week in MOTION PICTURE NEWS that a combination had been effected between Frank A. Keeney and William L. Sherry, whereby the latter is to distribute all of the Keeney pictures, it was made known this week that Mr. Sherry is planning an independent distributing corporation, with offices in all the principal cities of the country and Canada.

These plans, it is said, are so well under way that the formation of the organization has already begun, and will be carried forward to early realization. All the exchanges established will be under the supervision of the New York offices, which will be located in the Godfrey Building, New York. The Keeney pictures, it is understood, will be the stepping stones upon which the distribution will be built up.

Elaborate Offices

From the information that has been given out about the new organization, it appears that the name under which the corporation will be known is the William L. Sherry Service. Mr. Sherry, when seen last week by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, stated that he has leased half of the twelfth floor of the Godfrey Building, at Seventh avenue and Forty-ninth street, New York, and that the work of outfitting the offices was going forward immediately. It is expected that the staff will move in this week, and no time will be lost in getting down to a systematic working basis, with the Keeney films as the foundation. In the New York offices will also be located the New York exchange, it is understood.

In furnishing the suite it is said that a special effort will be made to combine comfort with convenience and all that is modern in present day distribution. "Style" is a word that will not be forgotten when the furnishings are arranged, it is said.

Farrar Feature Included

Beginning with the Frank A. Keeney productions, which are understood to be the prime reason for the formation of the new organization, the William L. Sherry Service will distribute throughout the United States and Canada features of merit which have been produced by manufacturers of recognized standing within the motion picture industry. Only the highest grade of motion picture will be able to find its way through the new channel of distribution, it is asserted.

Following this principle, it is expected that "Joan, the Woman," which has already won favor throughout the country, with Geraldine Farrar as the star, will also be sent out, later, by the Sherry Service. Mr. Sherry is the owner of this feature production, which has been classed with the best of its kind among the recent releases. Using this as a standard, it is claimed the motion picture exhibitor can look for some really worth while products to show his audiences.

Calvert Film First

The first of the Keeney pictures to be released will be "A Romance of the Underworld," starring Catherine Calvert. The second will be "Marriage" and the third, a picture tentatively titled "Out of the Night." Miss Calvert also will be starred in these two.

N. J. Sennott, who has been with Mr. Sherry in the William L. Sherry Features Film Company and in Paramount and Famous Players-Lasky, will be general manager of the William L. Sherry Service. The general salesman will be Daniel J. Savage, recently manager of First National's Buffalo exchange. Howard Brink, formerly general salesman for the same exchange, will be in charge of one of the Sherry exchanges. Mr. Sherry will also have with him, A. C. Novotny, formerly auditor of the New York exchange of Famous Players-Lasky, and Frank A. Lappan, well known to Long Island and upstate exhibitors. All of these men have been at one time or other intimately associated with Mr. Sherry in the film business and this association has bred reciprocal confidence and esteem among them. Therefore the new enterprise starts with a fraternal feeling of co-operation which alone spells success.

Surprised the Trade

It was only about a month ago that Mr. Sherry severed his official connection with Paramount. Knowing of his ability for large enterprises, the film world was curious to know what he was going to do. It was scarcely expected that he would attempt anything so big as an independent distributing organization, with its own exchanges all through the United States and Canada. The affiliation with a producer like Frank A. Keeney should be a large factor in establishing a new enterprise on a thoroughly substantial basis.

Mr. Sennott left New York last Thursday to open up exchanges in the Eastern section of the country. Mr. Savage left here last Monday to perform a similar work in the territory from Chicago to the Coast.

Mr. Sherry says that the organization will be ready to do business by June 15.

A LESSON WELL LEARNED

This Exhibitor Will Pay More Attention to Harrison Reviews in the Future

JAMES SAMS, vice-president and general manager of the Raymond Amusement Company, Ocean Park, Cal., says a doubly strong word for the Harrison reviews:

"I am sure that the 'Exhibitor to Exhibitor Reviews' are a big help to all exhibitors. In one instance I can only say that I wish we had taken his advice and that was when we ran 'The Blue Bird.'

"Harrison cautioned the exhibitor, in fact he really pleaded with him, to keep all slapstick comedy off the bill with this particular picture. We disregarded this advice and can now tell you that in the future we are going to pay more attention to his reports, for our patrons certainly let us know that they did not want slapstick with pictures like 'The Blue Bird.'

"Every exhibitor should be able to profit from these reports, as they are written in the good, plain old style way of talking and he is not playing any favorites."

Distinguished Audience to See Goldwyn Play

"Joan of Plattsburgh," Goldwyn's patriotic production starring Mabel Normand, will be presented to an invited audience at the Knickerbocker theatre, Washington, D. C., on Tuesday, June 4, under the auspices of the Children's Year Campaign Association. Among the guests will be Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and ladies of the Cabinet, and it is possible that the President also will be present.

In connection with the presentation of the picture Miss Normand will make a personal appearance as part of a program of patriotic numbers especially arranged to give the production an appropriate setting as the story of the unswerving faith of the nation's women in time of war.

The performance will be staged under the personal direction of Harry M. Crandall, owner of the theatre, and Arthur Robb, his manager. One of the Cabinet officers — probably Secretary Wilson, of the Department of the Interior — will begin the afternoon's program with a short address.

Grossman Returns from California

Harry Grossman has returned to New York after spending a week in California negotiating for a studio and making arrangements for the release of the products of the new producing organization with which he is now associated. The new concern's first public announcement is expected soon. Mr. Grossman will shortly return to Los Angeles, where he will act as business manager of the company's studio.

The Reader has His Say

An Exchange Man Tells "Anarchist" a Few Pertinent Facts in an Attempted Conversion

[Ed. Note: We are sorry that special limitations have made it necessary to omit the introduction to the following letter from an exchange man. In his opening the exchange man expresses his admiration for "Anarchist's" ability to make the English language lie down, roll over and jump through a couple of hoops—but with ability of the same sort he expresses his sorrow that "Anarchist" did not offer some constructive thoughts to balance his destructiveness. Then he goes on as follows:]

Now, let me try to explain my idea of the why of the house organ.

It is a plain fact that no exhibitor would be content to be supplied with film only.

Don't forget that, Mr. Anarchist. Publicity stuff—from slides to studio chatter, from specimen ads to lobby display—publicity stuff of all sorts is supplied to meet an eager and constant exhibitor demand.

The producer who gives the exhibitor the most effective exploitation material has the pleasure of seeing his pictures played with profit by the theatre men; and theatre men pay good rentals for productions that yield a profit.

And so the benefit is mutual. The exhibitors clamor for advertising material—new, original, effective. They write to each other for suggestions as to how certain productions may best be "put over." They read trade journals avidly to learn how this or that picture is being handled in other parts of the country.

And the producers rack their brains and wrench their bankrolls in the effort to improve their exhibitor service. To-day distributors are actually putting more earnestness into the effort to sell the exhibitors' patrons than into their efforts to sell the exhibitors.

Posters cost more to-day than ever before. Ordinary red and yellow daubs will not be accepted by modern theatre men. And so genuine artists are employed to design the ones, the threes, the sixes and the twenty-fours; and poster lithography has advanced to a remarkably high point of excellence.

Branch offices of distributing companies are alert to hear from some clever exhibitor what methods he has used successfully, because salesmen and branch managers can disseminate that information in a helpful way among other exhibitors who have booked or are about to book the productions in question.

Here is to be found the origin of the house organ. It is born of a desire on the part of the distributor to be helpful and not alone to puff his own wares. Because in being helpful the distributor has found the one surest way to increase his profits.

If "Anarchist" or any other individual can tell the producers how they can give exhibitors more efficient aid than they are now rendering, he will be able to earn something more substantial than thanks.

And I'll add to that statement the surmise that if the big majority of this country's exhibitors were not a whole lot more appreciative of and grateful for the assistance and co-operation of the distributors through their exchanges, than "Anarchist" represents himself to be, it wouldn't take those said distributors twenty-four hours to abolish the whole complicated, costly and cumbersome system of posters and publicity material.

To be frank with "Anarchist" and really give the devil his due, there is an awful lot of bushwa in amusement publicity. There is so disgustingly much of this that one is tempted to doubt the intelligence of show people as a class. (Take a look at the inside back cover of "Variety," any issue!)

But why pick on the house organ? Take your daily newspaper and look over the display advertising columns. Read the ads in the Saturday Evening Post. Analyze advertising generally. You'll find just as large a percentage of inane fulsomeness as ever found its slimy way into a film house organ.

To-day exhibitors and exchange men are trying earnestly to bring about closer understanding, better fellowship and mutual confidence. In this worthy cause, the humble house organ is a powerful factor. It acquaints the exhibitor with the opinions and activities of other exhibitors; it is a clearing house for new thoughts and original ideas; it is an ideal channel of information from producer to exhibitor as to future plans and undertakings.

For these reasons the house organ should be encouraged, not attacked. It should be read by exhibitors, unless they have reached that stage of self-superiority where their cerebral structure has become ossified and their minds are closed to the possibility of learning something new.

And if any exhibitor has fault to find with the subject matter contained in the house organ, he should give the publisher the benefit of his conclusions rather than seek through the trade journals an outlet for the display of verbal pyrotechnics.

Change your name, Mr. Anarchist. You write too well to go in for destructiveness. Take off your yellow glasses. Give credit to your fellows in this big, ponderous, slow-moving industry of the films, for sincerity of purpose. Use your originality to help, not hinder. We are all imperfect workers striving toward a goal. If I muff a rivet, don't give me the horse-laugh—take off your coat and help. Give me credit for trying. Remake your sneer into a smile—a tolerant smile, if you will, but nevertheless, a smile.

Now that's off my chest! And I'm not a publicity writer, but an exchange manager. And the organization I am with has no house organ (although I'd like to see one established).

EXCHANGE MANAGER.

May Bring Traducers of Chaplin to Court

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit this week stated that the announcement in the current issue of a Los Angeles film magazine, to the effect that Charlie Chaplin had circulated petitions among women's clubs throughout the country in an endeavor to gain exemption from military service, will probably be brought to the attention of the courts.

Chaplin, as well as his associates and attorneys, considers the article malicious and exploited for the purpose of placing him in a false and unpatriotic light with the public. Chaplin and John Jasper, studio manager, declared the entire story to be untrue, the latter stating that it is the result of his refusal to buy advertising space in the magazine in question.

Jasper declares that the owner and advertising manager of the magazine, which represents itself to be "the official organ of the Western film industry," recently endeavored to secure a page of advertising in the interest of the Liberty Loan campaign in Los Angeles, offering the space for "half" the "usual rate."

Ten of the biggest companies in the film industry are said to have failed to agree with the representatives of the magazine regarding the value of such advertising, the Chaplin concern included. This resulted, it is stated, in the publishing of a page in the magazine bearing the name of each studio that failed to advertise, together with a statement that the page had been "donated" for the studios in question.

Berst Succeeds Smith in Film Division

J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres of America, has been appointed Manager of Distribution under Charles Hart, Director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. Mr. Berst succeeds G. A. Smith, formerly of Pathe, who has entered active army service.

Rudolph Leaves to Consult with Garson

W. H. RUDOLPH, personal representative and publicity director for Harry I. Garson, left New York last week for a business conference with Mr. Garson, who is now on the Coast supervising his special productions, starring Blanche Sweet. Under his management Clara Kimball Young is also appearing. Miss Young has completed recently, a screen version of Cynthia Stockley's novel, "The Claw," which is announced for release soon. Last week she began work on a screen version of Francois Curel's "The Savage Woman."

Miss Sweet's first picture under the management of Mr. Garson is titled "The Hushed Hour," and has just been completed. She is supported in this production by Harry Northrup, Wilfred Lucas, Milton Sills, Mary Anderson and Rosemary Theby. Mr. Rudolph announced before leaving for the Coast that Mr. Garson had purchased the rights of "Told in the Hills," by Mary Ellis Ryan. The sum paid for the right to this work is said to be around $15,000. Blanche Sweet and House Peters are co-starred.

Mr. Rudolph will consult with Mr. Garson as to the marketing policy of "The Hushed Hour." He announced that the picture would, in all probability, be offered to independent buyers.

Jewel Discounts Story of Gerard Suit

Officials of Jewel Productions, Inc., declare that they have not been officially advised of any suit against them contemplated by James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, over "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

The only knowledge possessed by Jewel executives of the proposed suit, they state, is that gained from the trade paper stories announcing that the ground for the suit will be the impersonation of Mr. Gerard in "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" and the fact that is is "characterized in the Jewel picture as Joseph W. Girard."

In commenting upon the matter one of the Jewel executives said: "We do not believe that Mr. Gerard authorized the publication of any story to the effect that he anticipates bringing suit on the ground that he was impersonated in 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin' without his knowledge or consent."

"Pershing's Crusaders" Attracts Many

The official war film, "Pershing's Crusaders," presented under the auspices of the United States Government and released by the Committee on Public Information, is now being shown twice daily at the Lyric theatre, New York, and is attracting the patronage and winning the admiration of thousands of red-blooded Americans. The local presentation is directed by the Liberty Film Committee, composed of prominent society people, and the proceeds will be devoted to the Allied charities.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Blackton?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

J. STUART BLACKTON hasn't been at all "clubby." In the language of the street "he slipped one over on us."

We had anticipated an easy task telling you what kind of a fellow J. Stuart is. For we would have been able to cover at least half of this page with witty — more or less — allusions to Flatbush and the other half with our landlubberly remarks on Commodores and yachting clubs—and Gravesend Bay.

Next to golf, with which we have experimented, we know of no subject so pregnant with possibilities as yachting — of which we know nothing. Unless it is Gravesend Bay!

But — as we said before — Mr. Blackton fooled us. Mr. Blackton packed his trunks and those of his producing company and moved to California some long months ago.

And now — why we can't understand our own rashness in daring to mention Flatbush on the same sheet of white paper. For J. Stuart Blackton has discovered California; he has Christopher Columbused it; he has fallen in love with it; he won't mention anything else in the letters he writes back East — he is out-nativing any native son who ever lived.

We gather, from all we hear, that Mr. Blackton, who has been making pictures almost since there was a picture, wonders how he ever made pictures anywhere but California.

All of which is typical of the J. Stuart Blackton that we know. He is an enthusiast — whole-souled in the thing of the moment with that enthusiasm of temperament natural to the artist.

For Mr. Blackton, while most successful as a business-man, is an artist first. His leanings are artistic, his joy more in the creation, shaping and staging of a production than the tallying of the profits. Incidentally, of course, this works into a pretty good formula for making profitable productions.

Mr. Blackton's bubbling enthusiasm probably comes as the result of a long residence in Oyster Bay — within the atmospheric influence of Theodore Roosevelt.

That same influence, you will remember, Mr. Blackton credited with inspiring "The Battle Cry of Peace" — the first, and first by many moons, of the screen's contributions on a spectacular scale to patriotic propaganda.

And, by the way, we don't believe that Mr. Blackton has ever received the full measure of credit due him for his foresight — his showman's feeling of the public pulse — in the staging of that same "Battle Cry of Peace." However, the production shows on the company's books over one million dollars in gross rentals.

Some day some one will reckon the value of that production in helping to create an American psychology that welcomed the gospel of preparedness, and, when the shadow of war did touch us, performed the miracle of the centuries in its acceptance of conscription.

We know of nothing more calculated to make J. Stuart Blackton mad than the news account in one of our recent issues, which told how Germany is using his "Womanhood" — with completely reversed titles—as part of its own militaristic propaganda. We have it on good authority that he is going to smash back at the Huns with another "Battle Cry" of greater magnitude than any of his previous accomplishments.

He makes a dandy presiding officer — for either business or pleasure gatherings. We watched—and admired him—at the Board of Trade meetings; his handling of the banquet to President Wilson proves the latter point.

He is a patron of sport. His contributions to motor-boating were in large part responsible for the present popularity of that sport. He divides his present enthusiasm over California with admiration for Theodore Roosevelt and Sir Gilbert Parker.

Pathe Features Show Broadway

Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket" Opens at Rialto, Following Well Planned Advertising Campaign—Keenan at Rivoli

PATHE last week took its place with other foremost producers whose product has been exhibited at the leading Broadway motion picture theatres, when two Pathe plays were booked, for the Rialto and Rivoli, respectively, for presentation the week of May 26. They are: Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket," at the Rialto, and Frank Keenan in "More Trouble" at the Rivoli. This marks the first time that Pathe has figured, an announcement says, as "the party of the first part" in such a deal.

In advance of the showing, big paper was put up on "The Yellow Ticket," and the Rialto management distributed two-color folders to all patrons the week previous to the opening. "More Trouble" was scheduled for release in July, but Pathe was willing to give it a pre-release showing at the Rivoli.

"The Yellow Ticket" is the photoplay version of A. H. Woods' stage play of the same name by Michael Morton, in which Florence Reed, John Mason and John Barrymore played an engagement at the Eltinge theatre several seasons ago.

In the picture, scenarioized by Tom Cushing, and produced for Pathe by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of William Parke, the big cast includes in addition to Miss Ward as Anna Mirrel, Warner Oland as Baron Andrey, Milton Sills as Julian Rolfe, Armand Kalisz, Leon Bary, Anna Lehr, Helene Chadwick, Nicholas Dunaew and J. H. Gilmour.

"More Trouble" is said to be something entirely new, not only for Frank Keenan, but for the screen—a comedy-drama, almost a farce-comedy, in which there is not a single comedy character in which every person is excruciatingly serious, and in which the events that throw them together, following in rapid succession, create one laughable situation after another.

It was produced for Pathe at the Paralta Studio in California, under the direction of Ernest C. Warde, son of Frederick Warde, the Shakespearean actor, the scenario having been written by Ouida Bergere from a magazine story by Edgar Franklin, which Mr. Keenan himself happened to pick up one day.

In the picture Mr. Keenan is the father of a young man who returns home after graduation at college, who neither smokes nor drinks, and who is taken into partnership by his doting parent. Immediately thereupon the trouble begins, and father learns (or thinks he learns) things about his Y. M. C. A. son that would put the highest roller in the Wicked City to shame. The situations pile one on top of the other, trouble coming in at every door and window and steadfastly refusing to be ousted.

The entire Fox Circuit of theatres has booked "The Yellow Ticket" following the presentation at the Rialto.

The picture has been booked for the entire Turner & Dahnken Circuit, including one week's first run at the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, and the Goddard theatre, Sacramento.

In Seattle, "The Yellow Ticket" will play the Orpheum theatre first run at a record price. It has been booked at the Cincinnati Strand theatre first run one week and for first big presentations in Columbus and Louisville. The Circle theatre, Indianapolis, will play "The Yellow Ticket" one week; the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, the same. Other first run bookings include the Clinton Square, Albany, four days; the Grand, Pittsfield, Mass., three days; Majestic, Columbus, four days; Adams, Louisville, four days; the Strand, Youngstown, four days; Rialto, Lincoln, Neb., Goodwin, Newark, seven days; Strand, Allentown, Pa., four days; Colonial, Easton, Pa., four days.

California U. Offers a Scenario Course

Scenario writing and photoplay technique have become a regular part of the curriculum of the Extension Division of the University of California, this marking the second notable instance in which high academic recognition has been given to the youngest of the literary arts. Columbia is the other university now offering scenario writing through its extension work.

The University of California course is being given in San Francisco to a registration so long that it has become necessary to divide the class into two sections. The instruction is being conducted by Earle Snell, a scenario editor and writer, who has been recently associated with Beatriz Michelena. The Tivoli theatre in San Francisco is being used as a class room for the morning section.

Among the topics that are being considered from a thoroughly practical viewpoint are "A Comparison and Contrast of Stage and Screen," "Classification of Photoplays," "Continuity," "Background," "Elapse Time," "A Contemporaneous Development of the Various Threads of the Story Toward a Common Climax," "The Photoplay Episode," "The Elements of a Dramatic Situation," "The Preparation of a Marketable Synopsis," "Adaptations," "Subtitles and Inserts," etc.

Davis-Triangle Suit Is Discontinued

The executors of the estate of Richard Harding Davis have failed in their suit for an injunction against the exhibition of "The Americano" by Triangle.

The suit was based on the claim that the novel, "The White Mice," was copyrighted and that the Triangle Film Corporation, Triangle Distributing Corporation, and others, were infringing the copyright by the exhibition of this picture. The Triangle Film Corporation by its counsel, Walter N. Seligsberg, applied to the court to dismiss the case on the ground that the copyright was invalid. As a result the plaintiffs applied for a leave to discontinue the case, and this leave was granted.

Special Film Fills War Chest for Rochester

To help the campaign in Rochester for the War Chest, a fund from which all war causes and local charities are to be met for the next year, a special moving picture was made under the guidance of T. W. and L. D. Wharton, the well-known producers of Ithaca, N. Y., and with King Baggott, Marguerite Snow and Bessie Wharton in the leading parts. The picture had additional interest for Rochester folk because in several scenes Rochester boys in khaki took part.

Levi Bacon and Lou Tree, of the Wharton studios, were the cameramen. The picture was shown at all of the downtown theatres. No money was made from the film, the rentals from the theatres barely meeting the expenses of the production, it is said.

The picture shows what could happen if any of the organizations working for the welfare or comfort of the boys "over there" should have to cease activities through lack of funds. The fate of wounded soldiers in case the Red Cross was handicapped, the diversions the soldiers would have to seek if denied the Y. M. C. A., the discomforts which would follow the withdrawal of the Salvation Army from the war field, and all the other activities that would suffer if the generosity of Americans at home should wane, are worked out in vivid scenes.

The photoplay was made in response to a request from the committees in charge of the War Chest fund. A picture which was made by the Whartons especially for the Red Cross drive last fall is given credit for part of the $1,000,000 total which was raised in Rochester.

Cohen Believes Co-operation Day Near

That the day of co-operation between the manufacturer and the exhibitor is at hand is the firm conviction of Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate. His reasons for this conviction were set forth in a recent interview.

In this interview Mr. S. Cohen, who is also President of the New York State League, said:

"Co-operation between the manufacturer and the exhibitor is proving a bigger success than any of us—optimistic as we were—had dreamed of. We launched this plan after reviewing Harry Rapf's two brilliant productions, Florence Reed in 'The Struggle Everlasting' and Captain Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein in 'The Accidental Honeymoon.' We arranged the co-operative booking plan with Exhibitors in New York, and our initial efforts are now a matter of history."

Scouts to Honor Virginia Pearson

Rumor has it that Virginia Pearson is to be associate head of the Boy Scouts division being organized in Italy, in recognition of her material aid in the recent liberty bond drive. Miss Pearson was responsible for the sale of six million dollars' worth of bonds.

CONVENTION NOTICE

No Representation of Organizations at Boston in July Unless Per Capita Tax Is Paid to Treasurer

IN a supplementary call to the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, President Lee A. Ochs reminded all State and local organizations that the by-laws of that body provide that no such organizations shall have representation in or be allowed to participate in the deliberations of the annual convention, to be held this year in Boston from July 13 to 20, unless the per capita tax of the organization shall have been paid to the national treasurer.

Mr. Ochs also called a meeting of the national executive committee of the league to be held at the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston three days prior to the opening of the convention, in accordance with the by-laws of the league.

As it had been erroneously stated that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers would hold its annual meeting simultaneously with the league convention and the exposition, and as the currency of this report might create embarrassment and expense to many in the industry, special attention is called to the fact that the Society will not hold its meeting at that date.

World Announces Winners in Sales Contest

Sales Manager Felix F. Feist, of World Pictures, has announced the prize winners in the recent contest for salesmen in booking the two-reel film, "Over Here." The first prize, a silk American flag, was won by Barnett Lyon, of the Salt Lake City branch, while the second, a tooled set of President Woodrow Wilson's "History of the American People," went to F. B. Bernardo, of the Seattle office.

The contest excited great interest and rivalry among the various exchanges.

Pro-Germans Fight "The Kaiser" in Cuba

Jewel Productions, Inc., reports that "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," will be presented in Havana, Cuba, only after a spirited fight against pro-Germanism. A sign advertising the coming attraction, which was erected in front of a Havana theatre, by B. Lichtig, branch manager for Universal, which is handling "The Kaiser" on the island, was officially ordered down a few minutes after it was first illuminated.

Raver Takes Impartial View

Puts His Oar Into Crane-Beatty Debate and Shows Where Both Are Right—Adaptation at Fault

"I AM glad," said Harry Raver last week to a representative of Motion Picture News, "that Dr. Frank Crane wrote that editorial called 'To Movie Men,' because it drew fire from various sources and offers opportunity for discussion.

"Jerome Beatty, in answering Dr. Crane's assertion that the writing of the story is entrusted to 'the barber,' seeks to defend the industry from what he considers an attack, and due credit should be given him for at least contributing a list of prominent authors and dramatists whose BOOKS and PLAYS have been devoted to the picture. It is quite possible, however, that Mr. Beatty, along with other critics of Dr. Crane, has not fully grasped the full meaning of the much discussed and condemned editorial. It is no longer a secret that the best in literature has found its way to the screen. Even Dr. Crane knows this to be a fact, as his favorable comments on several past productions will testify. But of the picture which aroused his ire, he wrote as he saw it, the story AS IT WAS DONE FOR THE SCREEN. He was not calling our most distinguished novelists and playwrights hard names—that is plain — but he did refer to the quality of the ADAPTATION, to the gentleman or lady employed by the week to change time, place and action so as to accommodate the screen.

"Anyone familiar with this line of work knows that the play or novel rarely ever supplies sufficient material for more than two or three thousand feet. This is frequently thinned out by the introduction of superfluous movement, dogs, cats, birds, mice and waterfalls in an effort to fill the spectator's eye for an hour-and-a-half, whether pleasantly or not, depending upon the skill of the continuity writer.

"We cannot, therefore, dismiss the subject of Dr. Crane's editorial by the publication of Mr. Beatty's reply, as the latter fails to cover the essential objection of the former. Dr. Crane attacked the story as he found it, while Beatty defends only the original author of a book or play who furnished only the printed or spoken word and had no hand in developing the photoplay.

"If Augustus Thomas should decide to make a stage version of Bret Harte's 'M'liss,' he would be compelled to add much from his own mind and use that kind of skill necessary to make a story register on the stage. Furthermore, it would not be billed a play by Bret Harte, but by Augustus Thomas, from the story of Harte. The dramatist there, as in writing a photoplay, would simply use the foundation of an old story for an entirely new one. Should Dr. Crane dislike the drama, his criticism would apply to the playwright and not to the author of the book. And so I believe he criticised the story of the picture which made him mad clean through.

"When we consider that our famous photoplaywrights may be numbered by the fingers of one hand, as compared with the vast number of noted authors whose writings are selling for screen purposes at prices as high as $30,000 per story, does it not seem strange we have given so little thought to photoplay craftsmanship. Fifty dollars a reel is the common price paid for writing an adaptation. Perhaps, a thousand dollars would be an average high figure for the screen development of a book or play, and upon this adaptation depends the success or failure of the picture. Compare these figures with sums paid for books or plays, before they are given screen treatment, and we begin to realize there is something wrong in our system of compensation."

N. E. Ohio Exhibitors to Be Served by Motor

Motion picture films will be delivered in the Northeastern section of Ohio by motor truck, if the plans that are now being worked out by J. R. Johnson, manager of the Cleveland Vitagraph exchange, and chairman of the committee on transportation of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, proves feasible.

"It is impossible for us to continue as we are doing now," Johnson said. "Something has to be done to remedy present transportation conditions, and the only relief that I see, is the motor truck service. I am working with the Truck Transportation Committee of the Chamber of Commerce at the present time, laying out routes, and determining upon the most practical method of handling the films with the least expenditure, and we expect to have a plan ready for the Board's consideration within a week or two."

Cleveland Film Club Is Now a Reality

The Cleveland Film Club has shed its mantle of myth, and is now an actual fact. At a meeting held last week, Walter Lusk, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio, was elected chairman. Mr. Lusk's duties will be to arrange a series of summer outings and social functions for the entertainment of all the members of the motion picture industry who care to join the organization. "We have nothing definite to announce at this time, by way of a program," Mr. Lusk said, "but we expect to start a succession of picnics early in June."

Sunshine in Camp

Harry Sunshine, well known among exhibitors in the metropolitan district through his activities as head of the poster and advertising accessory department of the First National Exchange, Inc., at 509 Fifth avenue, New York, recently resigned his position to become a member of the National Army and is now located at Camp McClellan, Anniston, Ala. Sunshine was given a farewell dinner by Sales Manager Carey Wilson and his associates and was presented with a wrist-watch and other tokens of esteem.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

"Missing"

"A Corker," Says Harrison of the Latest Blackton-Paramount Offering

(Blackton-Paramount—June 2)

OCCASIONALLY I feel like agreeing with the producers on the superlatives used to praise a picture. This is one instance. "Missing" is a corking good picture. I honestly believe it is the best one released by Mr. Blackton on the Paramount program. There is heart appeal in every inch of it, and it will win the sympathy of every picturegoer.

The story is timely and depicts one of the incidents that are so common in this world conflict. It has been written by Mrs. Humphry Ward, and tells of a young lieutenant in the British army who married a young girl during his three weeks' leave of absence. He returns to the trenches but is soon reported as missing. The wife is heartbroken. A year later she promises to marry a young nobleman.

About the same time word was received from France that a young man who resembled her husband was in the hospital. He had lost his memory from shell shock and she was requested to go and identify him. Her sister, however, who favored the match between the wealthy nobleman and the young widow, intercepted the message, went to France herself and although recognizing him, told the authorities that there was not the slightest resemblance between the patient and the husband of her sister.

In one of his clear moments the young lieutenant was able to give the name and address of his wife. She was called by a telegram which this time was delivered to her personally. She went to France but her husband did not recognize her. She, however, helped him recover his memory by singing a favorite song often sung by them both during their brief honeymoon. Their happiness now was without bounds.

This picture is not gruesome, it has very little actual war in it and is a fine subject to use for patriotic appeal. It will please any audience. James Young also worked on the production.

"Baree, the Son of Kazan"

Considerable Suspense and Plenty of Beautiful Scenery in Tale of the North Woods

(Vitagraph—May 27. Director David Smith)

DRAMATICALLY this is one of the best produced Vitagraph subjects released for some time. There is some action and suspense in it. It is a story of the Canadian Northwest exclusively photographed out doors. The scenes taken in the spring as well as those taken in winter while the snow was on the ground are very beautiful and will be admired by picturegoers, as most everybody loves outdoor scenes. Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman are the stars.

The theme is based on the novel by James Oliver Curwood and is very interesting. Its introduction is rather novel. It shows Baree, a puppy half wolf and half dog, being fed by its mother, the wolf. He is shown later grown, hunting for game and is caught in a trap. The heroine rescues him from the hands of the villain who was beating him and the dog becomes attached to her. Later this dog takes a very important part in the story, and certainly will win your admiration by his intelligence. In fact there are several dogs used, varying in age from one to five years old, to take the part of Baree.

The picture shows some incidents that might prove somewhat strong for the tenderhearted. The scene where Nepeese, the heroine, jumps from the high cliff into the river to escape from the villain who was pursuing her with bestial intentions, will cause a little agony until it is shown later on that she was not killed. Also the fight in the tent between the faithful dog and the villain in which the latter is killed might be taken as a little too strong by some people.

The outdoor scenes have been taken in the Truckee pass, California, and the director has taken full advantage of the wealth of beautiful scenery to give the picture a very realistic atmosphere. The cameraman also deserves his share of the credit.

"Smashing Through"

Herbert Rawlinson in a Thrill and Pep Melodrama

(Universal Special Attraction—June 17. Director Elmer Clifton)

THIS attraction has been produced on the serial story principle with hardly any heart interest but plenty of "pep," some sensational stunts, such as riding an automobile on railroad tracks and having the train overtake it and lift it bodily on the cowcatcher, riding a motorcycle at break-neck speed and taking a good fall, and considerable shooting.

It is a mining story written by Walter Woods. It tells of Jack Mason, who owns a mine with a paying lode but was kept in ignorance of the fact through the false reports of Ralph Brandon, a mining engineer, who was working in connection with a band of claim jumpers, their chief being Earl Foster. Holly Brandon, sister of Ralph Brandon, meets young Mason and they fall in love. Later they decided to marry but her mother objected as Foster threatened her he would put Brandon, her stepson, in jail for making false statements unless she consented to give Holly to him as a wife. Holly and Foster were married but, unknown to both, by a false minister. When Mason found it out he gives Foster the chase of his life and overtakes him. In the fight that ensued Foster is killed and Holly and Mason are married.

This picture is clean and will prove a good attraction to audiences that enjoy the sensational.

Screen time 59 minutes.

"All Woman"

Human Interest Touches Abound in Mae Marsh's Latest Goldwyn

(Goldwyn—June 2. Directed by Hobart Henley)

THIS is about the best feature Miss Marsh has ever been seen in. The story is very interesting and is full of little human touches that will appeal strongly to the emotions. It will surely cause a sympathetic tear now and then to trickle down the cheeks of most of your patrons.

The story tells of a working girl who is bequeathed half the ownership of a hotel. In taking possession she discovers that the other heir is conducting a disreputable saloon under the terms of a lease. She eventually manages to break the lease, clean out the place and conduct a reputable hotel. She thus wins the love of a man who sympathized with her and backed her in her efforts.

This picture is clean and will please almost everybody. The women especially will approve of the Carrie Nation methods Miss Marsh used in cleaning out the saloon.

(Metro—May 13)

THIS is a light comedy drama that contains several human touches, culminating in a fairly strong dramatic ending.

The story tells of a minister who ventured into a rough Southern town. When he found that mild persuasion was useless he used sterner methods—his fists—thus in a short time transforming the rough element of the town into good law abiding citizens, in the end winning the belle of the town as a wife.

Some of the barroom scenes could have been left out without injury to the story. Mr. Bushman makes a very comical minister and Miss Bayne a fine belle.

It is a clean entertainment fit to show to any audience.

CLEAR, CRISP BOX OFFICE APPRAISALS

"The Yellow Ticket," with Fannie Ward

(Pathe—June 2. Directed by William Parke)

THE tragic element in this offering stands far above the sensational, and if you can get by with the former you certainly can do so with the latter, owing to the fact that the photoplay has been based on a great stage success.

The picture itself is very interesting from beginning to end. To be frank, I haven't seen one lately that has held my attention so completely. The human element in it is very pronounced, and will help much in smoothing over points that might be considered objectionable by some of your patrons.

No doubt a number of you are familiar with the story which is based on the stage play presented very successfully not very long ago by A. H. Woods. It depicts the conditions of rapine and murder that existed in Russia during the pre-revolutionary period, especially against the Jews. It tells of Anna Mirrel (Fannie Ward), a young Jewish girl, who was called to St. Petersburg by her dying father. He was attacked by a mob during an anti-Jewish uprising and almost beaten to death when rescued by Marya Varenka, a Christian freedom loving girl, and nursed back to life. Marya's little sister Sonia had jumped from the window and killed herself when Baron Andrey (Warner Oland), head of the Ocrana, had attacked her. Marya, resolved on revenge, prepared a bomb, but was herself killed by its premature explosion.

Anna assumed Marya's name and passport in order to travel unmolested. She was engaged to teach Russian to Julian Rolph (Milton Sills), an American correspondent. He falls in love with her. Baron Andrey recognized her, and enticed her to his rooms with false promises of protection from the police, attacks her but she killed him with her hat pin in self defence. She was arrested and about to be condemned when Julian Rolph intervened and threatened exposures of the corrupt Russian system with subsequent international complications. Thus he secures her pardon with the understanding that they at once leave for America.

Marya Varenka is one character you will not forget even after the picture is over. It is regrettable that her career was cut short for I know you will feel she was entitled to the revenge she sought for her sister's death.

This picture ought to prove a success to those of you who can play it without any come-back from your patrons.

"The Winning of Beatrice"

May Allison Should Put Over an Ordinary Vehicle

(Metro—May 20. Directed by Harry L. Franklin)

YOU may boost May Allison to the limit. She deserves it as she has a winsome personality. You will be able to get by with this picture due to this fact, helped by what little heart appeal there is in it. The story is not the kind that would stand much analyzing. It is a strong melodrama with two murders and a death. Some of the details of the murders shown add to the dramatic but not to the entertaining values.

There are some comedy touches in it that are very welcome as a relief but are only in spots and not enough to offset the gruesome points.

"High Stakes"

Wholesome Entertainment in This Triangle Presenting J. Barney Sherry

(Triangle—May 26. Directed by Arthur Hoyt)

THIS is a very interesting detective drama containing plenty of action, suspense and heart appeal, that will offer your patrons wholesome entertainment.

The story has been written by Andrew Soutar and tells of wealthy Ralph Stanning (J. Barney Sherry), a master cracksman for mere pleasure, who was puzzling Scotland Yard detectives with his clever burglaries. He had stolen the "Southern Cross" from a vault in the Kensington Museum which he later returned. The police inspector had suspected him but could get no evidence by which to arrest him although he laid a clever trap for him. Later he married a woman whom he rescued after she attempted to end her life by drowning. He was blessed with a son whom he loved dearly. At a ball which he was invited to attend, he stole a necklace. The inspector suspected him and attempted to get the evidence by trying to play on his fatherly love. He again failed, as the necklace which he handed the inspector was found to be of paste, the real one having already been sent to the owner.

The subtitle "There is no place in this world for a woman who erred" is altogether unnecessary and it would have been much better if it had been substituted with one conveying the old-fashioned idea of "There seems to be no place in this world for a woman who is poor but honest." Then we could have Stanning marry a clean woman instead, and avoid the slight "coloring" which although not bad enough to make it objectionable to even the most careful of you, still the charge would help add more heart appeal and keep the picture in good taste.

Mr. Sherry's work is very refreshing and is put over in fine style. Regarding the supporting cast, barring Harvey Clark, who has a slight tendency to overact, it is good. This picture will appeal to all audiences, high and low-brow alike.

"Three Bad Men"

Harry Carey Seen in a Snappy Western Drama

(Universal Special Attraction—July 1. Directed by Jack Ford)

YOU will have to scour the horizon for a long time before you find another Western picture as good as this one.

The story has been written by E. B. Lewis and it contains genuine thrills and lots of good clean comedy that will get many hearty laughs. There is just enough shooting in it to make it look Western.

The action is swift throughout. It seems that Director Jack Ford hasn't much time for the "Wait a minute" players as everybody works hard in this picture.

The photography is simply marvelous. Several of the camera shots are so unusually pretty that they will create no little comment.

There are also some beautiful light effects that are made so much more effective by timing them to the second.

This picture will please any audience. You can safely play it even if your patrons don't care much about the Western stuff. Screen time 76 minutes.

"Restitution"

A Biblical Hodge-Podge Whose Aim Is Not Quite Clear

(Produced by the Mena Film Co., State Rights)

THIS is a conglomeration of myth, religion, fiction and nonsense, mostly the latter. The chief impression you get is that it has been conceived mainly for the purpose of religious propaganda work, not based on any of the existing religious denominations or beliefs but just simply to save the wicked world and reconstitute mankind.

The first half of the subject is based on the book of Genesis. It shows how Adam was made, then Eve, then how Satan tempted Eve to eat the forbidden fruit, until they were evicted from the Garden of Eden. It then shows Abraham and Sarah and several other incidents from biblical history. It shows the birth, life and crucifixion of Christ. The other half touches a little on the history of the present war. It also shows a spirit calling Abraham from the grave, which rejuvenates him and then sends him into the world in the form of a Don Quixote to save sinners. He goes forth calling himself the earthly representative of Christ and performs miracles.

To be frank, the first half of the picture, dealing with biblical history has been produced very intelligently and in proper atmosphere. The director has shown some very good horse sense as far as the dramatic part of it is concerned. The second part, however, is altogether illogical and incoherent. It jumps from one idea to another without any concrete object in view.

The cast is good, Vincent Chester deserving special mention.

This picture would be a good medium to spread new Christian doctrines but has no place in a picture house.

Screen time, 1 hour 10 minutes.

"Prunella"

Marguerite Clark Goes Back to the Winthrop Ames Days

(Paramount—May 27. Directed by Maurice Tourneur)

ALTHOUGH not exactly a fairy tale—being rather a phantasie—still, from an exhibitor's angle, "Prunella" actually belongs to that class.

The idea of the theme is more or less based on French pantomime, and tells of the elopement of Pierrot and Prunella, a girl reared in strict environment. They marry, but Pierrot deserts her. Years later, heartbroken, they meet in the garden of the old home and reunited live in happiness once again.

Director Maurice Tourneur has produced this picture in a very artistic atmosphere. The first three reels are rather slow and dry, the last two, however, hold your interest very well as they contain much pathos. Especially pathetic is the scene of their reunion in the fountain of love.

The picture on the whole will appeal to women and children and is hardly calculated to please the male sex except those that possess artistic temperament.

"The Interloper"

"Keep Your Eye on World Films," Says Harrison After This Showing

(World—June 3. Directed by Oscar Apfel)

THIS is the first picture made since the new administration of the World Film Corporation. It is about the best World I have seen for a long time. If the releases to follow show the same marked improvement, those of you who hold a contract for this service can be considered lucky.

The story tells of a Southern girl who had married a widower. His family, including himself, were constantly telling her of the dead wife and how much a model woman she was. She discovers however that the dead woman wasn't such an angel after all, but destroys the evidence rather than show it to her husband and thus bring him much unhappiness.

The picture is clean and on the whole entertaining. Kitty Gordon is in the stellar role.

"A Doll's House"

Elsie Ferguson Appealing in Screen Edition of Ibsen

(Artcraft—June 2. Directed by Maurice Tourneur.)

DRAMATICALLY this is a very well produced photoplay containing much heart appeal. Based on the classic by Henrik Ibsen, there may be some doubt as to its entertainment value for the present generation of picture patrons.

The picture is clean but somewhat sad, and it would be well if you balanced your bill with some good slapstick comedy.

"Old Wives for New," with an All-star Cast

David Graham Phillips' Sensational Story Given a Typical De Mille Production

(De Mille-Artcraft—May 20)

BASED on the novel by David Graham Phillips, "Old Wives for New," deals with a couple that married too young. In later years the wife grows fat and lazy while the husband retains all the vigor of his youth. While on a hunting trip he meets a young lady and falls in love. He asks his wife for a divorce in order to marry her, but she refuses him.

On a trip to New York where he meets an old friend, who invites him to a wine supper at which the principal attraction is pretty women. His friend is shot and killed by one of the women guests out of jealousy because he tries to make love to another. Next morning the newspapers announce that circumstantial evidence points to the girl he loves.

In order to save her good name from scandal he takes one of the wine supper women guests to Europe, with the supposition that she will be considered the guilty one. The girl he loves also takes a boat to Europe to prevent her name from being connected with a scandal she had no part in. They meet in Venice, Italy, and after explanations, are married, his first wife having already secured a divorce.

The story is partly suggestive. It shows the life of high class "kept" women. This one feature will prove somewhat objectionable to some of you. Nevertheless, this picture is very artistic and the action at no time becomes vulgar.

The cast is excellent and includes such artists as Theodore Roberts, Florence Vidor, Tully Marshal, Helen Jerome Eddy and Elliot Dexter. The direction is superior, the photography, the best that could be desired, while some of the interior settings are very beautiful. The Venetian night scenes are like a dream and deserve special mention.

Barring the touch of suggestiveness this picture is a masterpiece. It will not leave a bad taste to the spectator.

NOTE: Though the synopsis reads that (Elliot Dexter) took a trip to Canada and met with an accident, this was changed after the picture was finished to a trip to Venice minus the accident.

"The Street of Seven Stars"

Doris Kenyon Seen in the Mary Roberts Rinehart Story

(De Luxe Pictures, Inc.—State Rights. Directed by John B. O'Brien.)

THIS is a clean entertainment and contains numerous situations full of heart appeal. The scenario has been based on the story by Mary Roberts Rinehart, the well-known author, whose writings are loved by the American public. Several of her works, among which are "K" and the "Sub-Deb" series, have been picturized successfully and have made a hit with picture goers. The reputation of the author combined with the quality of the photoplay offers a good foundation for your publicity campaign.

The character of the story is a trifle sad, nevertheless it will appeal to all classes especially the educated.

The De Luxe Pictures, Inc., has been founded with the idea of producing clean pictures, so it deserves your encouragement and support. Book this picture if you have any open dates.

Washington Lacks the Spirit

One Newspaper Shows Willingness to Co-operate While Another Appears Antagonistic and Few Houses Advertise

WASHINGTON is a peculiar city in many ways. The capital of the nation, the great proportion of its population is more or less directly engaged in government work. There is no commercial life in the sense that it is known in other cities where the prosperity is dependent on manufacturing, natural resources, shipping or wholesale trade.

Naturally the newspapers are affected by this situation. The greater part of the "local" news is really national news. The papers are to a greater or less extent semi-official organs for the recording of Government activities. A considerable portion of this matter would appear to be rather dry reading for those who are not particularly interested because of their personal relations to the various subjects.

For that reason one would think that the Washington newspapers would welcome the opportunity to add such a department as photoplay news that would interest the women and the younger folk who now find rather less of interest in the Washington papers than do people anywhere else. Yet with two exceptions the newspapers do not appear to care to co-operate with the motion picture houses and one of them appears hostile to the motion picture.

The last census gives Washington a population of 353,378, but with the mass of war work there are probably twice that number living in the capital city now and the shifting population is enormous. All of these people require amusement and the greater portion of them are seeking amusement that is inexpensive and informal. In other words, the motion picture theatre is the ideal amusement and we believe that today there would probably be a greater per cent of people in Washington interested in reading motion picture news and gossip—if they had the chance—than in any other city in the country.

There are four newspapers in Washington:

Herald, morning and Sunday.
Post, morning and Sunday.
Star, afternoon and Sunday.
Times, afternoon and Sunday afternoon.

There are sixty theatres in Washington. Two people control the bulk of the larger houses. Tom Moore operates the Strand, Garden and Plaza, all downtown houses, and is soon to open the Rialto, while he has started to work on the Arcadia. The Crandall Amusement Company has Crandall's and the Casino downtown, and the Metropolitan, soon to open, with the Knickerbocker, Savoy, Apollo, Avenue Grand and the American, residential section houses. Besides these the downtown houses are Loew's Columbia, the Virginia, Maryland, Empress, Masonic Auditorium, Leader and Hippodrome. Marcus Loew is also building the Palace theatre. Other high-class neighborhood houses include the Lyric, Home, Circle, Washington, Liberty and Truxton.

It is natural that the Moore and the Crandall theatres should exert a strong influence, but apparently they have not been able to swing the newspapers into full co-operation, with the exceptions already noted. The Moore and Crandall houses occupy more space than all of the other advertising theatres and their business ought to be well worth while for the newspapers, especially one with the sense of value of motion picture matter from the circulation standpoint.

Yet until recently there was a feeling of distinct antagonism on the part of all the newspapers except one toward motion pictures. It is even related that the papers would accept big advertising and then deny the advertiser the same criticisms or notices that was accorded the legitimate theatre. There wasn't even the essence of fair play. It is related that Tom Moore got tired of this sort of a thing and that he withdrew his advertising. The majority of the papers took the attitude that he has been asking for something for nothing. They failed to see why the motion picture house should get the same sort of co-operation that went to the legitimate; they were apparently blind to the public interest in the photo play. When the advertising solicitors came around to find out what was the matter Tom Moore told them. If he could not get the same attention for his photoplays that the legitimate houses were accorded, the matter could drop. Most of the newspapers saw the light.

Now before we go any further: Wherever newspapers are known, so is the Washington Post. It is one of the highest class publications in the country, and it is not surprising to find a publication that leads in other things is the most intelligent coworker with the motion picture houses. Its department is well edited throughout and we only wish that it might give more space to news of the players and of the pictures and strive to excite more interest of the fans.

The "gent" (and we use this word because it will greatly jar his feelings) who edits the amusement section of the Star evidently thinks that the motion picture is to be merely tolerated, yet "Film Features," the daily directory of the motion picture houses, is one of the best circulation holders of the newspaper.

The Post and the Star were long in the field alone. Then came their two rivals, the Herald and the Times. The latter was formerly a Munsey paper, and is now directed by Arthur Brisbane of the Hearst forces.

There are a few peculiarities to be noted before undertaking the examination of what the newspapers are doing. The Post has hard and fast typographical rules. It will not permit the heavy use of black ink, solid backgrounds and heavy designs. So the theatres are handicapped in making their displays, and if they seem to be behind other cities in their displays it should be charged to the fact that they center their attention on the Post advertising and that they are limited there in what they can do. The Times has an iron-clad rule that theatrical special stories will not be used. The Herald is showing a genuine wish to co-operate, but evidently the greater number of the theatres have not as yet regarded it as valuable a medium as some others.

If we were in the position of the Washington theatres, we would encourage a paper that showed this spirit, even if we knew that the pulling power was not quite so great. It is a splendid tonic for a poor newspaper situation.

The Post combines its theatrical and motion picture matter under a single department and, although the bulk of this matter is generally devoted to the legitimate, the dramatic editor of the Post is intelligently friendly to the photoplay. In the layouts the scenes from the films are given the same prominence as those from the spoken drama. There are reading notices for each of the theatres, but there is an entire absence of any motion picture news.

Besides the Moore and Crandall houses there are displays from the Howard, Loew's Columbia and Masonic Auditorium.

We have mentioned the handicaps of advertising in the Post. The Moore theatres overcome this to a certain extent by using distinctive borders, clear type and as little reading matter as possible. The Crandall houses adopt the weekly style of advertising, that of playing up each separate bill with equal prominence. We have gone on record many times as saying that we do not believe that this is good advertising and that the theatre is making a mistake that does not sell its TODAY show first. The plan followed by the Crandall houses in the Post not only invites the patron to decide what theatre he will visit, but what day he will make that visit.

There appears in the Post each Monday a review of the feature films at the leading houses and these are given the same promi-

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

S. L. ROTHAPFEL is back on the job again at the Rialto and Rivoli. He has been away for more than three weeks doing some creative work for the U. S. Marines, of which he is a lieutenant. And he got some of the greatest—but though that is going to have a lot to with the Rialto and Rivoli some other week it is no part of the present account.

"Because "the boys," as he calls his assistants, has planned the two shows for this week, Mr. Rothapfel did not want to jump in and make changes, for he always believes in putting his chiefs on their responsibility, but that doesn't keep him from jumping in and raising both Cain and Abel when things go wrong. And he was very much on the job Sunday. One of the reasons that the Rialto and Rivoli are always right up to snuff is that Rothapfel cannot be quiescent as long as the least little thing goes awry. It makes him work harder than it does any of the subordinates.

Rialto overture this week is "Sicilian Vespers," with the lighting of course giving the evening effect, and then follows an interesting scenic from Beacon Films, "Winter Scenes in France," which includes some excellent shots and which brought applause from the audience. Then with the lights all red Greek Evans sings "Six Full Fathoms Deep."

Rialto Animated starts off with short and punchy subjects and takes up momentum as it goes along, and there is action every minute. It opens with Hearst-Pathe scenes of the training camp for chaplains at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., with the music "Panama Exposition" march and this continues through Gaumont pictures of Bennie Leonard training sailors for bayonet work at Mare Island. It gets a big hand. Gaumont supplies pictures of babies of the Cabinet members being weighed at Washington and interlaced in this are pictures of the baby weighing campaign at Chicago, from Universal, and for both of these the music is "Whispering Willows."

Hearst-Pathe follows with some interesting pictures showing U. S. engineers throwing a pontoon bridge across the Potomac in thirty-seven minutes and here the music is "There's a Million Heroes." And then the punch starts in. Universal presents pictures of Gelegian soldiers from the Russian front reaching San Francisco, the Blue Devils honoring them and presentation of colors by Mayor Ralph "La Barabaconne" is played once through with great effect, and then turns into "Entrance of the Guard," though even with the big orchestra it can scarcely be heard over the cheering. Hearst-Pathe follows with pictures on the Picardy battle-front, a dramatically arranged feature that will bring any audience to its feet. First we are shown the British in the fighting and then "up from the south" come the French. We see the trains pulling in with them and their equipment and the orchestra blares forth "Sombre et Meuse." There are other pictures showing how the aviators are aiding the infantrymen and here a battle agitato is used, and further scenes show the Germans in their wantonness of burning villages and then the big guns of the Allies in reply. Bugle calls are used here with excellent effect and then there flash on the screen the Americans that have come to their aid. Of course the audience literally goes wild and "Dixie" helps along the enthusiasm that lasts until after the curtains have dropped again.

There is a specially arranged orchestral prelude for "The Yellow Ticket." After a few bars from the orchestra the curtains over the side panels part showing at one side the New York harbor lighted in blue, and at the other a scene in a synagogue, lighted in red. Of course the effect is the persecution of the Jews in Russia on the one side and the gateway of freedom on the other. From behind the stage a chant is sung by Harry Pollard and at the end the curtains at the sides fall and the feature starts.

With the lights gold the orchestra strives to bring back cheerfulness with selections from "The Three Twins," and then comes a Fox Sunshine comedy, "Wild Women and Tame Lions," filled with animal chase stuff.

Six different musical selections are used during the comedy, "Oh Lady, Lady," "Toot, Toot," "Just You Watch My Step," "The Kaiser Does the Goose Step," "Step with Pep," "Isme," and "Electric Galop." There's plenty of action for you, all of it good stuff for chase pictures.

But it remains for the Rivoli to show the REAL bill this week, for there is a human appeal all the way through it, and the brighter side of life. With the lights all in gold, the overture is selections from "I Pagliacci" with the number so well played that not only, when we heard it, did the audience applaud wildly, but cries of "brava" came from the balcony.

First of the "Mexico Today" pictures made by George D. Wright and released by Educational Films. These introductory ones show scenes in the capital city, many of them unusual and including a panorama view from the Statue of Independence. There are four musical numbers used during this reel, starting with "Pan Americana" and running through "Intermezzo Goescas" and "Mexican Tango" into "Granada." It brought much applause.

Miss Jeanne Gordon is then heard singing "O Divine Redeemer." With the house dark except for the blue center dome, the organ plays a brief prelude and then as chimes are heard the stage curtains part showing the singer robed as a nun kneeling on a pedestal before the altar with the church windows lighted in blue at either side. Behind her is the effect of a great moon and the only light on the singer is a red spot on her face. The falling curtains take in the last notes.

There's bing-bang all the way through the Animated, some of the pictures being similar to those shown at the Rialto, though coming from different sources. It opens with Gaumont pictures of the Belgian fighters arriving, first showing American troops in parade and then the Belgians together with close-ups of these veterans covered with medals. "Spirit of Independence" is the appropriate and stirring musical number. Hearst-Pathe shows the Annapolis cadets winning a boat race over Columbia to "Before the Mast," and then comes Gaumont scenes from the military horse show at Camp Devens, Mass., with the orchestra playing "Mock Morris," and this continues through Gaumont pictures of testing pigeons in Washington for military use, a splendid shot of thousands of birds taking the wing at once, and, from the same source, dogs of war at San Francisco. There is a clever comedy touch in this with a sub-title "The Sausage." A pair of dachshunds surrounded by soldiers sharpening their knives gets a big laugh from the audiences.

Now comes another touch of comedy with the most wonderful pictures of trained seals that have ever been shown. These are from the Universal Screen Magazine and "Violets" is the musical selection. Gaumont's version of the bridge building at Washington follows to the tune of "Uncle Tom." Universal presents a view of Schwab at the ship launching at Shooter's Island, N. Y., and "Our Jackies" is played, continuing through Universal pictures of the tank Britannia worming for War Savings.

Now there comes a striking touch, the combination of several pictures. First there is a Gaumont shot of Resnati, the Italian aviator who was recently killed on Long Island, and then follows one from Hearst-Pathe of Lufberry, the American hero. Organ music is used, but counterpointed on the trumpets through it is "Taps." Universal shows French airships chasing the Germans and finally one of the Hun aeroplanes brought down intact and then pictures of German air prisoners. "Alhambra March," another stirring composition, is used here and continues through Universal pictures showing the fighting on the Picardy front, until there is flashed on the screen the title "We Have Come, Lafayette," and as the marching Americans come into view the orchestra turns into "Hands Across the Sea" and the audience goes wild—we thought that it had broken records for enthusiasm until there came on the screen another title, "The Gateway of Freedom," first the Statue of Liberty in the distance and finally in a close-up. Men stood up and yelled at the top of their voices; it was a remarkable scene on Sunday evening.

Then comes the feature, one filled with hearty, human laughter. It has been rarely that we have ever seen an audience enjoy a picture as much, and there was genuine regret when it was over. It afforded am-

This Week at the Strand

WHEN we saw the Strand show at the first full presentation Sunday evening the overture was played in the middle of the bill. It is Lizst's "Les Preludes" and was rendered with the storm effect which has been used at the Strand once before.

For the opening number there is an especially arranged patriotic picture in commemoration of Memorial Day. It is "The Story of Old Glory," and through cartoon effects shows the original thirteen colonies and the various flags of the colonial days, the adoption of the first Continental flag which was to have a star and a stripe for each state. But the stripes became too numerous and had to be reduced to the original thirteen. Through the cartoon the various states are shown added to the union as the waving flags change. Finally there is the flag as it is today, and the orchestra begins "The Star Spangled Banner," and then the curtains part showing the scene that also has been described once before, that of the British fleet bombarding Fort McHenry with the national emblem still waving in the background.

Strand Topical opens with Hearst-Pathe pictures of the Columbia-Annapolis boat race, and then includes pictures of the chaplains training at Camp Zachary Taylor and the bridge building feat at Washington. Paramount-Bray furnishes some interesting pictures of the Liberty Hospital, built in sections, so that it may be rapidly set up on the battle-field. Then comes a Hearst-Pathe cartoon on the Red Cross, showing a nurse holding one end of the stretcher, and then Uncle Sam taking up the other end. Literary Digest selections of "Topics of the Day" bring hearty applause of laughter with each editorial paragraph, and then comes the big Hearst-Pathe picture of the Picardy battle-front. First there are the British and then the French coming up, and then follows a shot of Lufberry, pictures of one of the German airships captures and of German air prisoners, and then the German guns firing and the big cannon of the Allies answering. There is another striking flash of soldiers coming out of the valley of death, and as they are joined by the Americans the orchestra plays "Over There." The Topical closes with flashes of Foch and Wilson.

A number rather novel for a motion picture house is presented with Bob Bakker, in person, telling how he captured wild animals. There is a graphic film accompanying this, the first chapter showing his experiences with a mountain lion.

Madge Kennedy is clever in "The Fair Pretender," which is almost a straight comedy and keeps the audience laughing throughout, so that no other comedy is needed to round out the bill.

Then comes Miss Betty Brown singing "Ah, Love but a Day" and "At Dawning."

"A Jungle Joy Ride," another one of the clever Outing-Chester pictures, ends the bill. This one takes us to Patamona, and there are interesting pictures of the natives, the process of making tapioca flour, a shot of the Patamonan Rockefeller—a wonderful resemblance to John D.—close-ups of parrots in the jungle and finally some of the most exciting scenes of shooting the rapids. There are many unique shots photographed from the boat plunging down the stream.

California Woman Exhibitor Uses Clean Cut Methods in Her Exploitation

MRS. ANNA M. DWIGHT, manager of the Laughlin theatre, Long Beach, Cal., is one woman exhibitor whose hobby is clean cut exploitation of the picture she shows.

An instance of Mrs. Dwight's enterprise is the success she achieved with the big Goldwyn special, "For the Freedom of the World." Two weeks before the screening date Mrs. Dwight, by clever advertising, made all Long Beach know that one of the greatest screen attractions of the year was to be presented at the Laughlin. With "teaser" ads and such apt catchlines as "Hun Savagery, Glorified Soldiery, A Wife's Devotion" shown in "For the Freedom of the World" and "Buy Liberty Bonds, Conserve Food and Buy War Stamps for the Freedom of the World,"

Besides assuring herself of four days' capacity business, Mrs. Dwight's stirring advertisements aided not a little in the recent Liberty Loan and Thrift Stamp drives, which were in full swing at the time she played "For the Freedom of the World."

A brilliant lobby display at the Laughlin marked the four-day run of "For the Freedom of the World." The lobby was bedecked in the country's colors and in front of the large stand showing a three-sheet of one of the big scenes was a beautiful white horse, on which was mounted a youth garbed as Uncle Sam. Also in the lobby were signs bearing the catchlines Mrs. Dwight used to such good effect in her newspaper and billboard advertising.

The Laughlin, seating 1,600 persons, played to capacity audiences at sixteen performances of "For the Freedom of the World."

ple opportunity for the use of a great deal of popular music and this had no small share in making it so appealing to the audiences.

With the lights gold there is more of a happy tone added to the bill with selections from "It Happened in Nordland," and then comes the Katzenjammer Kids in "Swat the Fly." We'd hate to say that any picture is the funniest thing that we have ever seen, but we're mighty tempted to break the rule right here. In its actions and its titles there is riotous fun every minute, from the time of the sub-title, "The Birth of a Nuisance." The close-ups of the fly, its shooting-the-chute on a spoon in a bowl of milk, the chase of it by Mrs. K., and then a bee which marks a place on "Der Inspector" before he inserts the stinger are just a few of the heaviest laugh producers. The trap drummer and the jazzing members of the orchestra have their chance with a series of imitations and effects. It's a scream all the way through.

"Quality Remains Long After Quantity"

ONE of the new members the Advisory Board comes to the front this week with a most careful analysis of what is the matter with pictures today and he hits the nail on the head when he declares that what the public wants is quality and that the recollection of mere quantity does not remain long with the patron.

While the Service Department of the NEWS is not seeking to inject its own opinions into the discussion, it cannot resist the temptation to repeat a comment that was heard at a New York house from an out of town exhibitor. "It's a great picture," he commented, "after you have analyzed it and probably all of it was necessary, but there was so much of it before the punch came that my patrons would stay away from my theatre for a couple of weeks after seeing this."

Mr. Landau, in his comment printed below, declares that the public is willing to pay more for quality, and that is not a mere theory with him for he has prived this in the way that he has built up his house. Taking it as a five-cent admission place it is now getting three times that amount, with the war tax in addition, and he ascribes the success that has been scored there strictly to the quality of the presentations. He selects each one of his pictures for its appeal to his audiences and he never considers the length in making his decision.

Mr. Soriero does not want to go back to three-reel pictures. That is not the question as brought before the Advisory Board, but it is rather a question of whether the picture should be made in three reels is the story justified no more and whether it would be worth as much to the exhibitor. Mr. Soriero wants five reelers, but good ones.

LEO A. LANDAU, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, declares that the public remembers quality long after quantity has been forgotten. He never considers the length of a picture itself in estimating the value of it from the attendance, but he does always consider its appeal to the public. Mr. Landau has a direct view of the appeal of pictures and there is pep in every line of his statement:

My experiences are that the recollection of quality remains long after quantity has been forgotten.

As a matter of fact, there is yet to come to my attention a single comment as to how long or short a show is.

We have had film come into our theatre less than 5,000 feet in length and on seven reels, so that the producer could advertise that he had a "seven-reeler," and I have had men high in the councils of large companies tell me that it made the picture "go better."

When I asked him if he did not realize that the exhibitor could only be fooled once, he had nothing to say.

On the other hand, while we are generally acquainted with our picture before public showing, we just recently played a film before release date and did not receive it until after the Sunday announcement had been made, advertising a schedule, as we always do, when in comes the picture, 6,500 feet in length, throwing out our entire schedule and program.

In this particular instance it is one of the best pictures that we have seen for a long time and was not padded.

However, we should have been given the footage long before.

After all is said and done, experience is the best teacher.

The organization, of which I am but a limb, has taken a 5-cent theatre in this city and raised the admission, first to 10 cents and then to 15 cents, plus the 2-cent war tax, and is doing as good business at any theatre in Milwaukee, WITH THE SHORTEST PROGRAM OF ANY OF THEM.

This is not said with boastfulness, because, while our show is the shortest, it is not inferior in QUALITY, and that is the thing that the public has found out. Therefore we have a right to expect to hold our own.

We are getting 17 cents, and getting it with a large 10-cent theatre directly across the street from us, with the biggest 10-cent sign in the state of Wisconsin, over the sidewalk.

The day has come when people expect to pay more for quality than they did before. They pay twice as much for bread, milk and meat, and when anyone offers them a commodity at the old price, they naturally become suspicious of the quality. Nor can any exhibitor make the public believe that everybody is a highwayman but himself.

Women, as well as men, nowadays, have a business mind that figures out that anything that is cheap cannot be good. That the things which are sold with legitimate profit are cheapest in the long run, and they exercise that discretion in going to picture shows, too.

This does not mean that you can get 15 cents without, however, giving 15 cents worth of show, because you can't. And you shouldn't try.

Our show is varied in length, according to the subjects. We seldom show more than the feature and a news reel, sometimes even a half news reel and at times, though not always, we have a comedy. But we always have a 15-piece orchestra of the best musicians in the city and we have that orchestra the year round. We do not reduce our price in summer, therefore we do not change the quality of our entertainment — on the contrary we give even a little better, because there is more to attract people away from the indoors in the summer than at other times of the year, consequently we feel that our show ought to increase instead of decrease in quality.

As mentioned above, we know of no single experience where the length of a feature has been dwelt upon, therefore the length of a picture is of little interest to us, in considering the value of it in dollars and cents. However, we expect interest holding quality from beginning to end and stories that are PROBABLE — not only POSSIBLE but PROBABLE.

The worst criticism that a picture can possibly have is " It never could have turned out that way," " That doesn't stand to reason," " He would never do that," or " She would never say that."

And the public does not care to see people in pictures dressed in any other clothes than those worn today, the kind that Human Beings wear at the present day.

The exhibitor knows what people want and the desire of the public is the same in one section of the country as another — but when the producer makes a picture first and consults the wishes of the exhibitor afterwards, it is then too late.

If ever a large producing company places at the head of its output an exhibitor, who has had his pulse on public opinion and knows what is wanted, and gives that exhibitor complete control of the selection of stories, casts, direction department, etc., it will come nearer to producing 100 per cent. productions than in any other way.

That does not mean to show him the picture, however, after it has been made, and ask him what he thinks of it. Then it is too late.

Just one more thing, and then I am through, because one thing suggests another when dictating, and the danger of taking too much space is great: The TITLE.

Patrons have a right to expect what they are told about a picture, and they are told, first of all, in the title.

Some of the titles nowadays might as well be Chinese for the lead that they give — others express a thought entirely contrary to the story. However, the exhibitor must not expect too much — TY COBB is the best batter in the world, but he does not bat .1000 by any means — everything cannot be perfect.

Be that as it may, the exhibitor who combines SERVICE, MUSIC, COMFORT, TRUTHFUL ADVERTISING with QUALITY will get the public into the habit of coming to his theatre, a habit which people form and they themselves can't tell why — and the length of a picture or the length of his show will never cut any figure.

Everything cannot be accomplished at once — it takes time and effort—but we all know that the constant, ever falling little drop of water will eventually eat its way through a sturdy rock. So there you are.

A FEW MORE

Other Names Are Added to the Advisory Board of the Service Bureau

THERE has not been, in the entire history of motion pictures, a movement that has attracted so much attention as the appointment of the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau and the contributions that it has made on vital topics.

Following a wait of several weeks after the original announcement, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has invited several other leading exhibitors to become members of this board. These men, as were the others already announced, have been asked to serve because of the splendid accomplishments to their credit.

These are the new members that may be announced this week:

Leo A. Landau, Manager Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee.

Charles C. Perry, Manager Strand Theatre, Milwaukee.

M. Marcus, Until Recently Manager Colonial Theatre, Columbus, O., and Now Manager of the Grand Theatre, Pittsburg.

A few other names will appear in later issues of the NEWS.

In the meantime, you may count on it that the Advisory Board will keep right up to date and that it will continue to reflect the best thought of the exhibitors' side of the industry.

It is the livest body of men that has ever gathered together for the benefit of the whole industry. They are a part of you, exhibitors, and they are working for you and they are bringing a greater impress upon all of the other elements of the industry than any single movement has ever been able to accomplish.

THOMAS D. SORIERO, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and the Lowell theatre, Lowell, believes that a star will draw as well in a three-reel picture as in a longer one, but he does not believe that the exhibitor can afford to pay the same price for it. Conditions are slightly different in Boston, where it is the fashion for exhibitors to run a double feature bill. Mr. Soriero finds that his people demand the longer pictures.

I am glad to note, that the Advisory Board, to which I have given considerable thought, is prompting discussion, and from the tone of your letter and the questions you wish me to answer, I should imagine that the manufacturer is sitting up and taking notice.

You make the inquiry that if Charlie Chaplin can pack a theatre with a two or three-reel picture, why cannot Douglas Fairbanks and other stars do the same thing, and whether the public would stand for shorter features. The answer, in part, is that at this time, the public has been educated to long features. If you remember there was first the one-reel picture, and then the two, until now gradually it has come to mean five, six and seven and eight-reel features. If the public had not been taught what the five-reel pictures mean, the exhibitor could probably get away with the three-reel pictures. It now understands the difference between a three and a five-reel feature, but that is not the question.

There is no reason in the world why Douglas Fairbanks or any other great star could not have his pictures made in three reels and be the same drawing card. But the question to the exhibitor is the price. If the exhibitor has to pay the same price for a three-reel picture that he had to pay for a five-reeler, he would of course want the five-reeler, for he would otherwise have to go out and get additional reels to make up an afternoon's or an evening's entertainment at an additional expense.

When a star like Charlie Chaplin is put forward on a bill, the exhibitor builds his show around Chaplin. In other words, if he is playing a big star, he will go out and get another big feature with a good plot and story without a prominent star at a lower price, so his film bill would not stagger him for the week, but rather would balance with other weeks. So when a patron of the theatre goes to see Chaplin, he not only sees a star, but he sees a fine show as well, and goes away perfectly satisfied. But I wish to emphasize again that the public does not want to go back to the three-reel picture.

The stars themselves, such for instance, as Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin, would perhaps prefer appearing in three-reel pictures, for in that way they would play in more houses than at present. Then they would not only be more popular, but would be in greater demand than they are while playing only a few of the bigger theatres of each territory, in five-reel subjects. Naturally these three-reel features must be released at a price that would fit the pocketbooks of the smaller as well as the larger exhibitor, and in the end, the profits for the manufacturer would be larger.

From my personal experience, I think that if the manufacturer makes three-reel features with the prominent stars, he still has to make five and six-reel features with a good plot in order to satisfy the tastes of the public for long features, and keep the cost of the films within the limits of his pocketbook. I am strongly convinced that the public wants five-reel pictures or longer if they can get them.

Your Idea and Ours

LET the pictures tell the story—or rather let them give enough of a hint of it to bring the people to your theatre. Advertising of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has always avoided the use of a large amount of reading matter. Mrs. Joseph Grossman, who arranges the displays, always knows the strong points of the picture before she starts in to exploit it. She believes in bringing out the most striking thing that the picture justifies. And to do this, without any possible chance of having a patron say that something is advertised that is not warranted by the production, she generally uses a large cut, showing a scene from the picture.

Paramount-Sennett Comedy — "BATTLE ROYAL"

We consider this specimen on "The Doctor and the Woman" one of the best examples of curiosity-arousing displays that we have ever seen. The picture itself carries the whole punch and only the essentials are stated, the title, the star, the fact that it is made from Mary Roberts Rhinehart's novel, and the announcement of the accompanying comedy. This is an advertisement that will pull people in and leave no disappointments from overstated promises.

Don't quit; or your patrons will, too.

HERE are two examples from two weekly papers in small Maine cities on "The Kaiser" and they furnish a most apt comparison in how to advertise and how to gum up your space.

Rumford has a population of 5,427. The Majestic theatre—hunt around the display until you find the name hidden away in the lower right hand corner—uses a half page and also uses enough reading matter to have carried on a full campaign. There is no excuse in the world for the phrase used that the treatment by the Germans will "unfit them for maternity," referring to the French women captives. There is plenty of good stuff to exploit in "The Kaiser" without resorting to the sordid and sensational. The cuts are worse than buried. The man who wrote this display broke his record by taking a half page space and then he thought that it was up to him to fill the space—and he did—completely.

In contrast to this is the page display of Brunswick, with a population one hundred and thirty-six less than Rumford. While the typing is not as good as it might have been in a city where there were more faces of type available, it is a mighty good advertisement. We would have left more space around the cuts and would have avoided the effect of trying to fill up every mortise. One thing about "The Kaiser" is that it seems to justify almost any sort of display as long as the real display is there.

ONE of the very difficult things to accomplish in advertising is the use of different faces or varieties of type without producing a confusing effect. Here is one of the best examples of artistic advertising that we have seen in a long time and it is the work of Theo. L. Hays, of the New Garrick theatre, St. Paul. Note that all of the matter, except the name of the theatre and the lettered-in matter on the cut, is in italic. By using this face instead of the Roman the contrast between the engraved portion and the type portion is avoided for the reason that the eye associates the lettered matter with the description of the film and then turns to the handset matter, with the feeling that it is to cover another angle of the same subject. And it does, for this italic matter tells the story of the picture. If this matter had been devoted to descriptive adjectives we would have said that it was a confusing display, but Mr. Hays has well selected the matter that he wanted to say and his type arrangements have set the various things by themselves in a much more pleasing manner than if he had tried confusing box effects.

counted on the newspaper to give him a fair amount of space for the story.

Here is one of the exceptions. Strand theatre, New Orleans, has taken a page of space on "My Four Years in Germany" and a fraction more than half of this has been used in the display. The reading matter is carried in sensible style and cuts are without the usual advertising labels. We rather suspect that the Strand got the regular commercial rate on this advertising and that the management believed it better to buy its own space and use it as it pleased rather than pay the amusement rate and depend on the photoplay editor for cooperation. We consider this a good piece of constructive advertising. It is another case of merchandizing the picture.

Advertising is the yeast that makes the patronage rise.

A COUPLE of weeks ago we made the statement that Louisville, Ky., was one of the poorest advertising towns in the country so far as motion pictures are concerned. In a way it's a tribute to this department in showing the way that it is read, but we've been hearing from Louisville ever since.

This general comment was based on the regular motion picture advertising which appeared in the Sunday issues. In the specific instance we commented on the fact that one of the biggest houses should use the generous amount of two inches two columns on such a production as "The Kaiser." In the mass of newspapers that are sent to us each week, we naturally turn to the motion picture departments and throw the rest in a yawning basket. Therefore we did not know that the Louisville papers have two different advertising rates, one for amusements and the other for straight commercial advertising and that the theatres therefore carry small space in the higher priced amusement advertising, just to get the notices and cuts and then splurge on the commercial rate. And so we are correcting the impression, and we'll tell you more about Louisville in a few weeks when we take up that city in the course of the articles that lead this department.

However, we cannot wait to make the correction that really excellent display work is done by the Strand theatre in the regular motion picture advertising. This is either straight line work or, sometimes, a combination of line and half tone. This advertisement on "The Soul of Buddha" occupied 4½ inches double column and comes near being a perfect example of simplicity in convincing display.

Service begins with a capital and ends in capital.

IF we didn't know the South mighty well we would be stumped with this advertisement which occupied a full page in one of the Montgomery, Ala., papers the Tuesday before "Lest We Forget" was to be shown at the Empire theatre.

The first question that comes to one's mind in looking at this is, why did not the theatre use a cut and impress the story still more on the reader. Here is the psychology of this sort of advertising: It is mighty seldom that a theatre in a city the size of Montgomery in the South uses a page advertisement. That, of itself, attracts attention. But here the Empire saw an opportunity to bring a lot of new patrons to the theatre and it purposely avoided anything that might look like sensationalism in the advertisement. Only the essential facts of the production are given.

It's worth wrinkling up your brow a little if you can always send your patrons away smiling.

HERE is a really remarkable use of black and white and half tone effects. Before we commend this we want to warn prospective followers of this advertising that the effect is extremely hard to get without a messy appearance. There must be a fine sense of values used, and the half tones must not run into the black without a slight margin of white space. And another thing—if your newspaper doesn't do good printing, you had better give it up before you start.

This display of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., occupied a space twelve inches deep across four columns, and therefore was the dominating thing in the page on account of size alone. Added to that it has distinction and artistic merit. Note that only the title, the name of the theatre and the name of the author are used in the lettering and then the brief descriptive matter about the picture is set in the mortise.

THIS page from the Pittsburgh Press shows some excellent coupling up by Paramount-Artcraft with the local theatres. The center of the display is based on the Bill Hart pictures and the remainder of the space is taken by various theatres that regularly show productions of this company. However, it looks very much like the Liberty theatre was given the best of the deal, and that the arrangement of its advertisement practically results in the center cut being a part of its own display.

How Others Are Presenting Their Pictures

IN this issue there appear more accounts of the methods of presenting big pictures than were ever printed in one issue of a motion picture periodical. They cover the entire country and every one of these is worth reading.

Especial attention is being devoted to the presentation of these, short and long and most of them illustrated. Whether you are showing these specific pictures or not, these stories will broaden your ideas and give you new energy in putting on your presentations.

Every exhibitor wants to get the most out of his features and to make his theatre as attractive as possible and the Motion Picture News offers here a field for the record of what theatre managers everywhere are doing.

You are invited and urged to send in your account. Send pictures where possible, but even where you may think that your presentation is not so good as that of some of the larger theatres, do not hesitate to write us. This is your department, for and of you.

"Lest We Forget" Scores a Big Hit With Appearance of Miss Jolivet In Milwaukee

STRAND THEATRE, Milwaukee, is making a big success these days with week runs. Manager Charles C. Perry is advertising these extensively and he is convinced that most any of the better pictures can be put over for a run of that length not only in Milwaukee, but even in smaller cities. He declares that the word of mouth advertising which is obtained has the effect of showing a steady increase in business during the latter part of the week.

"Lest We Forget," the big Metro special, was one of the recent features which went for a week to record business. Manager Perry was able to arrange for bringing Miss Rita Jolivet, the star, to Milwaukee for four days. She spoke at the afternoon and evening presentations and in three collections she raised more than $600 for the French Orphan Guard and the fatherless children of France.

There were two purposes in bringing Miss Jolivet to Milwaukee. One of these was that her presence was considered an excellent prelude to the Red Cross drive and the other was to challenge the statements of newspapers which had been criticising the loyalty of the city. During the engagement of the picture the lobby of the Strand was decorated with life preservers and a model of the Lusitania draped in Allied flags. The stage effects represented, on one side the moonlit sea and on the other a model of the ill-fated ship just off the coast.

In spite of the bad weather "Lest We Forget" opened to immense audiences and the patronage grew during the week. Mr. Perry reports that he was more than pleased with the picture itself and the business that it drew. It confirms his belief in longer runs for big pictures.

Special Drop Adds Punch to "Unbeliever"

"The Unbeliever" was put over with big effect by Manager A. J. Moeller, of the Franklin theatre, Saginaw, Mich., through the use of a special drop which was painted to represent the front of a first line trench and the devastated area of "No Man's Land," this being masked with a growth of brush and tree stumps.

The curtain went up on a dark house, using a very slow curtain. The drop, having been opaqued, showed gray in the background. When the curtain was about half way up a bugle call in the distance sounded "Assembly" and then came the noise of crackling of the underbrush under the feet of marching soldiers. Then the blue lights were used on dimmers gradually coming up to a full blue, giving the effect as the gray blue of the morning just before dawn, and then the red lights were worked in to give the dawning effect and finally the white lights were employed bringing the sunrise effect.

Then came the "Reveille" on the bugle, and the patter of feet of the soldiers hurrying to the gathering point, with the day growing brighter and the curtain coming slowly down as the orchestra went into the strains of "Over There." It made a splendid hit and Manager Moeller is planning to use some other stage effects with big pictures.

Cleveland Bookstore Aids "My Four Years"

"My Four Years in Germany" opened at the Euclid Avenue Opera House, last Sunday, for an indeterminate engagement. "The picture will remain at the Opera House no less than four weeks," Mr. E. Mandelbaum, president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio, said, "and, judging from the great demand for seats, it is likely to remain twice that long."

One of the most striking things in connection with the showing of the Gerard film in Cleveland, was the co-operation rendered by The Burrows Bros. Co., who devoted an entire window to the display of "My Four Years in Germany." In addition to which, they gave prominence to a huge poster picture, in which the Kaiser is shown excoriating one of his admirals for permitting the English fleet to get out to the sea.

Wichita Theatre Scores Hit with Patriotic Settings

PALACE THEATER, Wichita, Kan., has just begun to pay especial attention to stage settings and effects and they have already proven such a success that they are adding to the popularity of this most successful house. They have been staged by Stanley Chambers, the manager, and P. Hans Flath, musical director.

An original and striking use has been made of the American flag and the national anthem. Instead of the stereotyped use of the flag thrown on the screen the Palace has erected a flag pole on one side of the screen, far enough away not to obstruct the view of the pictures and from this flies a silk flag, four by six feet, which is kept in motion by electric fans. As the curtain rises a bugle call is sounded and the lights gradually dim out with a spot being thrown on the emblem. A moment later the words of "The Star Spangled Banner" are thrown on the screen and the audience quickly take up the singing of the words.

During the last Liberty Loan there was a splendid arrangement made and exhibitors will do well to clip this account and preserve it for the next drive because it can be done in almost every theatre and will make a big hit. The Palace made out of Compo board a large Liberty bell, modeled on the lines of that used by the Government in its propaganda, but this was given a practical clapper. It was placed on the side of the stage opposite the flag and in full view of the audience. For this the "Liberty Bell" song was thrown on the screen and during the final chorus a nine-year-old girl, in a Colonial boy's costume, came out on the stag and apparently rang the bell, while huge chimes back of the stage, played the melody accompanied by the organ. At the same time spot lights were thrown on both the bell and the flag.

Music is one of the big features of the Palace and Mr. Flath, who has been musical conductor in some of the biggest productions on the speaking stage, gives his personal attention to preparing the scores for the pictures shown at the Palace and for the special numbers.

Spectacular Prologue Adds Big Punch to "Over the Top" Presentation in Spokane

By Sam W. B. Cohn

Manager Liberty Theatre, Spokane

A TIMELY subject well handled and featuring a popular hero of all Americans makes Vitagraph's most spectacular feature, "Over the Top," a box-office attraction as well as a very timely program. We feel, here at the Liberty, that the production has given us two-fold profit, from a monetary and sentimental viewpoint. During the week's run of the picture here in Spokane, we made a satisfactory profit and at the same time stimulated interest in recruiting for our regular army and for our National Guard. Also, we aroused a greater patriotism in the folks hereabouts—so we believe.

In presenting "Over the Top," we had the assistance of a detail of men from the local United States Army recruiting office, and from the local company of the Washington National Guard. Eight men from each group, with an officer in charge, appeared at every performance during the seven days, in a spectacular prologue. At the beginning of the exhibition, three minutes before the first reel was presented, the house was entirely darkened. For thirty seconds the audience sat in suspense—then out of the stillness a bugle call was sounded—the charge. Then there was another thirty seconds in which the patrons waited in expectation, and of a sudden the air was rent by a volley of rifle shots which issued from the stage proper. The flash of the rifles lighted up the auditorium and before the smoke of the volley lifted the house lights were gradually turned on, while the Star Spangled Banner was played on our mammoth Hope-Jones Wurlitzer organ. A slide bearing the words of the National anthem was flashed on the screen with an invitation for the audience to join in.

With the soldiers, who were partly concealed by means of a sand bag barricade which was strung along the apron of the stage, standing at attention, with the entire audience on their feet singing with a sincerity which could not be doubted and with patriotic slides being flashed on the screen all the while, the sight was indeed an impressive one.

IN VITAGRAPH'S MARVELOUS PHOTOPLAY OF EMPEY'S WORLD FAMOUS BOOK

Here Is Your Chance to Get Into The Fight Yourself

All of us can't go to the firing line, but the marvel of motion pictures makes it possible for all of us to be with our boys in spirit and to share their thrills and fights with them.

Empey's "Over the Top" is being read by the millions because it is the most human document ever written by a fighting man. How much greater even is your opportunity to see the living, breathing pages of this greatest of all trench stories brought into action by the wonder of the motion picture camera.

Come on, all loyal Americans—here is your chance—get into the fight with Empey himself!

The Greatest Production in the History of Motion Pictures

Vitagraph has spared nothing in making "Over the Top" the tremendous production the subject so richly deserves.

Lois Meredith, James Morrison and a host of other screen favorites make up an all-star cast in support of the "Fighting Sergeant." Every modern innovation in motion picture making, vast numbers of actors and actresses, many hundreds of trained American soldiers and ex-stars—all have been assembled by Vitagraph for the making of "Over the Top."

As a photo production alone, "Over the Top" is a supreme achievement, but in addition it is one of the most thrilling, intensely dramatic, deeply human stories ever screened.

I failed to mention that an officer of the army made a recruiting speech just preceding this spectacle. By this talk the enthusiasm was well started so that when the title "Over the Top" appeared on the curtain, the audience was in a receptive mood, and the applause was deafening.

In advertising the production I used all three of our local daily newspapers, six window displays in good locations, the billboards with several choice twenty-four-sheet stands, ten days' advance slides and announcements, etc.

Essay on "Faith" Features Thrift Stamp Day

Manager Louis De Hoff, of the New theatre, Baltimore, had a special thrift stamp day in connection with the presentation of Mae Marsh in "The Face in the Dark." A special program was issued for this occasion and in it was featured a foreword on "Faith," which read:

> Faith is one of the beautiful things in life. The Kaiser has no faith. Even a trusted soldier dare not approach near him. And because he has no faith nor trust in life, his nation has become black and sordid. Everything he touches becomes rank and foul. He has cast faith aside, and has tried to obtain by stealth and trickery the fertile fields and rich treasures of others. But this has only served to make Faith a stronger tie to bind in closer harmony the civilized nations of the earth.
> Remember that your Faith today should be primarily in the Government of the United States, her Allies, and in the huge armies we now have in the fighting fields of France. But back up your Faith with your dollars—for dollars are only good for one single thing to-day—to win the war! Every 25-cent piece counts in backing up your Faith in your Government! Thrift Stamps sell for a quarter. Get some today.

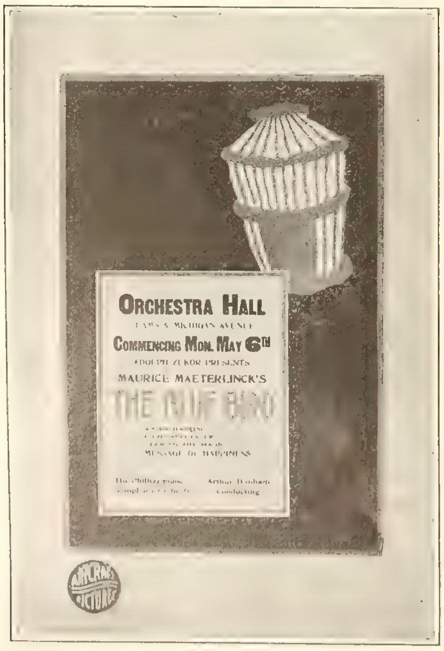
Stage setting of Orchestra Hall for motion pictures, showing symphony orchestra

Artistic and Financial Triumph Scored By "Blue Bird" Presentation in Chicago

CHICAGO has just seen "The Blue Bird," and it pleased so thoroughly that it ran for two weeks as the opening offering at Orchestra Hall, under the management of Famous Players-Lasky. W. L. Hill, publicity manager for the Chicago exchange, is directing the destinies of Orchestra Hall.

It is the policy at that theatre to run each picture only for a week and this will be followed during the summer season, but so great was the demand to see "The Blue Bird" that the engagement had to be extended. The gains in box office receipts over the first day tell the story of the success of the production. They were: Second day, 90 per cent; third, 130 per cent; fourth, 180 per cent; fifth, 240 per cent, and sixth, 705 per cent.



This artistic one-sheet in colors was posted in all the Chicago "L" stations

When Mr. Hill began to study the presentation methods of this picture he was convinced that intelligence of the highest order, coupled with a marvelous artistic taste, was reflected in this picture, and that no ordinary plans of showmanship were suitable. Many exhibitors fail to appreciate that a picture of this type is metaphysical and that it cannot be treated as many other pictures. Here was a production that Mr. Hill knew to demand of the exhibitor the same artistic touch in the presentation that was evidenced in its creation. With that realization there was the most careful attention given the production.

Given an Artistic Appeal

The result was that if it was determined to make an appeal to the most thoughtful element in the city and to attract the attention of this class the exploitation has to be artistic, both inside and outside the theatre. Orchestra Hall is in itself a beautiful theatre and the screen was especially arranged for the summer with the artistic setting that is shown in the accompanying photograph. But the atmosphere had to be carried throughout the whole presentation. Now as to the sort of material used.

Ervine Metzl, a noted artist, was engaged to design two art panels, which were used on either side of the lobby. These, one of which is reproduced, showed the boy and the girl of the story, the color effects being particularly striking, while the lettering was confined strictly to the name of the author and the title. In addition to this a unique display panel of scenes from the production was placed in the foyer. This was really a shadow box, the pictures being printed on a silk tissue and illuminated with colored lights, all the lighting being in complete harmony with the pictures. This sort of work by the La Salle studios is something new in the way of lobby exploitation and will attract the greatest attention on high-class productions. The same artistic idea was carried through one sheet lithographs in colors, also designed by Mr. Metzl, were placed in all of the elevated stations and in various sections of the city. In addition to this there was the dignified newspaper exploitation.

The next thing was to arrange the program in artistic keeping. Orchestra Hall has a Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Dunham, in addition to the huge organ, and, of course, music was made one of the principal features of the bill. Now note the way that the fairy-like atmosphere was kept through the program. The overture was "Oberon," and then followed a Burton Holmes, "On the Beach at Waikiki," and then the special news weekly taken from Paramount-Bray, and the various news weeklies, and after that came the orchestra prelude to the picture, "Dance des Sylphes," then the feature itself, and finally an organ solo.

Club Women Are Attracted

Now, before the opening of the engagement copies of this program, artistically printed, were mailed to all the members of the Chicago Board of Education, the presidents of all the women's clubs in Cook and adjoining counties, together with all the public school teachers in Chicago and in the Chicago and Northwestern Universities. In addition, at the regular bi-monthly meeting of the Juvenile Players' Club, consisting of prominent Chicago clubwomen and their children, there was a forty-five minute address delivered on "The Blue Bird," and a few days later the combined art classes of the Chicago high schools heard an address by Mr. Metzl on the artistic value of the production. In brief, there was every effort made to put the production before all of the bodies possible and the result was that the picture had a vast pre-exploitation before the engagement opened and the effect was cumulative, because it created the greatest amount of word of mouth advertising.

Distinguished Gathering

On the opening night was a distinguished attendance, boxes being occupied by the British, Belgian, French and Japanese consuls and by many army officers and their friends. Prominent clubwomen occupied other boxes. Although the weather was exceptionally bad on the opening night, the attendance and the reception of the production was little short of wonderful. There were many handsome floral decorations received and these added still further to the artistic tone of the theatre. As has been said, the music by the orchestra of thirty pieces was one of the features of the presentation, and in addition to that there was a chorus of female voices introduced that lent still further charm to the picture. Three full presentations of the picture were given daily, with the exception of Sunday, for the Sunday Evening Club continued to occupy Orchestra Hall for its meetings during May.

Unquestionably the method of the presentation of "The Blue Bird," together with the merits of the production itself, made hundreds of new friends for the photoplay as a whole in Chicago. As has been said, the appeal at the start was not made to motion picture patrons as a class, but to the most artistic elements of the city. With this as a neucleus the general public flocked to the picture, which was given extensive space in the Chicago papers, and which is said to have attracted more attention than any production of the screen in the mid-west metropolis.

"Prunella" Is Next

It is estimated that "The Blue Bird" could have run a month to packed houses, but the use of Orchestra Hall had been promised for the official government picture, "Pershing's Crusaders," for two weeks. At the expiration of that time Famous Players-Paramount resumed charge, offering Marguerite Clark in "Prunella," another special presentation. The same class of program will continue during the summer months, with changes of bill each Monday. The Symphony orchestra will remain a feature of the program, which will be something on the order of that already cited for "The Blue Bird." The same artistic plans will be carried out through the summer.

Mr. Hill is one of the most successful of exploitation experts and Chicago film folk are expecting him to establish a new record at Orchestra Hall this summer.

Fordart Films Issues Plan Book on "Berlin Via America"

Fordart Films has issued a comprehensive plan book in connection with the feature production of "Berlin Via America." It includes a series of press notices, five two- and single-column cuts, specimens of one- and two-column electrotypes, together with a reproduction of the poster matter and a music cue.

Rochester Theatre Delights Audiences by Making Burlesque Film

ONE of the best business-getters of the season in Rochester, N. Y., was a moving picture production in which local amateurs had nearly all of the principal parts and which was shown at the Family theatre under the title of "The Adventures of Molly." The characters were picked from patrons of the Family, who applied for parts in the production and who gave most promise of talent, and many of the scenes were taken on the stage of the theatre in full view of the audiences.

Frequently the camera was turned on the audiences, and they were thus incorporated into the picture, so that many persons were able to recognize themselves when the picture was shown. The novelty of taking a moving picture on the stage of the theatre served as a powerful attraction for the week, in which the picture was in the making, but the next week the interest was even keener when the completed photoplay was shown as part of each performance.

The picture was in the nature of a burlesque on the modern melodramatic type of photoplay, in which vampires, villains, kidnappers and policemen always figure, and there were many laughs in watching the amateur players go through the somewhat hectic scenes. There was little attempt at serious acting, with the result that none took it seriously and found more fun in watching the wild acting efforts of the amateurs in familiar local scenes than they would have in a production that pretended to be a finished piece of work.

In another way the amateur photoplay was turned to good advertising purposes. Many of the scenes were taken on downtown streets with crowds looking on, and the novelty of seeing a cameraman grinding away on a kidnapping scuffle or a street brawl made folks talk and ask questions. One the biggest scenes, in which two thugs were supposed to grab a pretty girl as she left a jewelry store and bear her away in a taxicab, was filmed in the noon rush hour in the busiest part of the city, and all of the local newspapers carried a prominent news item about it.

The whole plan was evolved by Manager A. A. Fenyvessy and his son, John H. W. Fenyvessy.

Orleans Theatre Gets Quick Red Cross Pictures

Last week we made reference to the fact that the Rialto theatre was probably the only one in the country that had a reproduction of the Red Cross parade on the next day. That is true so far as the New York parade is concerned, but thanks to the enterprise of the Diamond Film Company, it does not apply to New Orleans.

The Louisiana city had an immense parade on Saturday, May 18, and the next day the pictures were shown at the Diamond theatre, operated by the president of the film company.

nence as the new attractions at the legitimate houses. No one could ask for a fairer deal. With the exception of two inches for the Moore theatres, and three-quarters of an inch for the Columbia, the Post carries no motion picture advertising during the week.

The Herald devotes all of the first page of its Sunday department to the legitimate, even going so far as to give a column to "Promised Attractions." Motion pictures are given reading notices along with the other attractions. Under the heading, "Filmland Features," we find a single motion picture story on the second page. That's the end of it. The Moore theatres, Columbia and Howard, are the only theatres that advertise here.

Although it carries somewhat more advertising than any of the other papers, the Star shows all the way through its handling that it doesn't care a little bit for motion pictures. They are given the smallest place in the layout, and even the names of the photoplay houses are printed in smaller type at the heading of the reading notices than are those for the legitimate theatres.

Yet the total of the advertising of the picture-play theatres is twice that of the legitimate. Here Crandall advertises all of his houses, the Moore houses display their full week's bill, the Leader is represented by six inches double column, and the Columbia by four and one-half inches double, while the Howard uses small space.

We have already referred to "Film Features" which we indicate on the first of the two pages from the Star. This embraces announcements of twenty-five houses and appear every day in the Star. The price of this is twenty cents an agate line and not less than three lines are accepted. The theatres that use display space also take additional advertising here for its directory value. This has become quite a feature of the Star because it affords a quick reference guide, but it is strictly a commercial proposition and the Star gives the theatres nothing but the space that they buy.

The Times also carries one of these directories, which has somewhat less theatres represented.

The Times splits its main advertising between Saturday and Sunday afternoons. The Crandall houses are represented on Saturday, and the Moore theatres and Columbia on Sunday. Practically all of the space is given here to the legitimate attraction, even going into those coming during the following week.

Briefly, our search through the various Washington papers for a full week shows an absolute absence of NEWS. There is nothing that will interest the motion picture enthusiast unless he wants to go into the reading notices. The one commendable thing is the reviews that appear in the "Post" and "Herald" on Monday.

There isn't a single one of the Washington papers that couldn't greatly improve the Sunday issues by devoting several columns to this general news. Washington is just now very "dry." Up to this summer it was a very tightly closed town on Sundays, but this year baseball is being permitted. Of course all the Government offices are closed on Sundays and so that day is a general holiday. The people have time to read the papers, and there would be more of them read if they were a little brighter with this class of matter. Washington newspapers spend a great deal on features, but they are overlooking an opportunity on one feature really worth while which they could have for little more than the white paper it would occupy. There is a great opportunity for a photoplay department in Washington, and we feel sure that it will be a great feature of the paper that starts it. The Washington Times did have such a page, but when the photoplay editor who was responsible for it left the paper it was allowed to die.

We believe that antagonism on the part of "high brows" is largely responsible for this state of affairs. We have already excepted the Post from this class, and we are told that the only paper on which this feeling still exists is the Star, yet it seems that this paper would recognize the interest in pictures from the attention that is given its "Film Feature" directory. This has grown greatly in the past year and we believe that if there were a fuller measure of co-operation it would grow still further.

So much for what the newspapers are doing. Frankly, it is not enough to encourage the theatres to rush in to spend their money, but in Washington, like all other cities, we believe that the houses that are failing to advertise are hurting themselves.

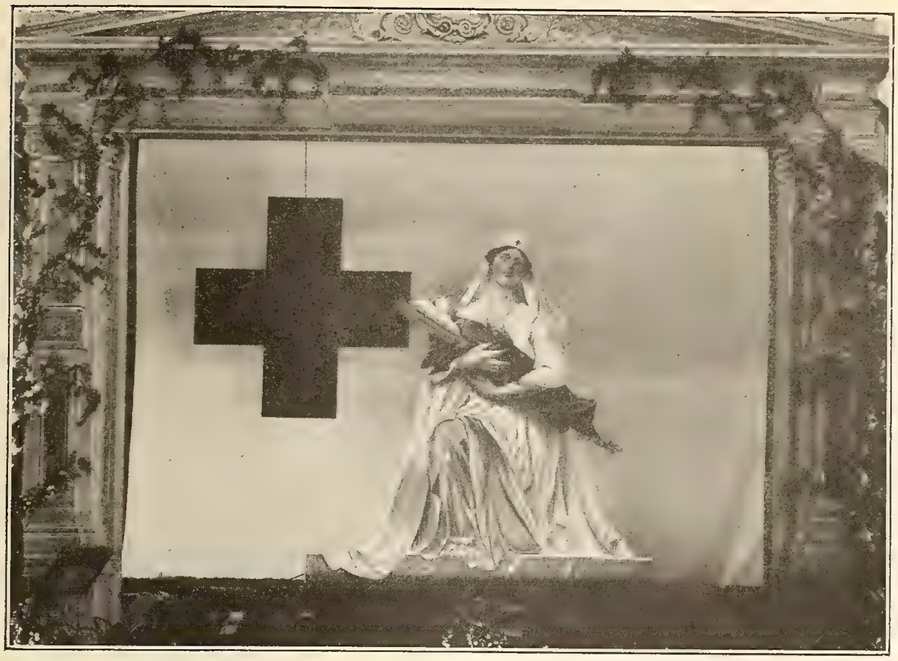
It's not an encouraging situation. Washington newspapers ought to lead the way. As a whole they are not doing as much for pictures as are the newspapers of New York and Chicago, and there's quite a difference between these two cities and Washington, though at least a portion of the Washington press, seems to take itself mighty seriously. There is a lot of room for the get-together spirit, but the newspapers know what to do and they ought to set the example by doing it. Because of the antagonism that at least did exist the overture ought to come from that side.

Woman Exhibitor Stages Big Prologue for "Revelation"

MISS FLOSSIE JONES, who is rapidly making a name for herself as manager of the Colonial theatre, Waukesha, Wis., broke all records for her theatre with the presentation of "Revelation."

Added interest was given the production through a prologue that was staged by Miss Jones, using local talent. This faded immediately into the picture and proved a great sensation in Waukesha. Any presentation of this sort, where local talent can be utilized, is certain to draw new attention.

Miss Jones is showing that it pays to think in running a theatre and she promises to show the male exhibitors of the country some original efforts in the future.



Special setting at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, for the Red Cross Drive. It is a reproduction of the poster; "The Greatest Mother in the World." When the velvet curtain was first opened it showed the figure of the woman alone and the illuimnated cross was then lowered into position. A special musical; accompaniment arranged by Harold B. Franklin made it a stirring appeal.

Goldwyn Cites Harold Franklin as One of Nation's Leaders in Exploiting Pictures

GOLDWYN PICTURES believes that one of the most important things that producing and distributing companies can do is to stimulate advertising of pictures and that one of the best ways to do this is by citing the work of leading managers. An official of Goldwyn who recently returned from a tour of the country has been writing this series of articles which have been appearing in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

This week he selects as his "text" Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and one of the members of the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. This Goldwyn official declares that Mr. Franklin deserves to rank among the leading ten exhibitors of the country, and since we know him personally and know his work we agree with the estimate that Goldwyn has given. Then Goldwyn goes on to say:

"Mr. Franklin is the unhampered employe of a Big Boss named Mike Shea—amusement man and magnate of widespread theatrical and amusement interests and a fortune with which almost anyone would be quite content. Like most big men, Mike Shea works long hours, watches the details of his many interests and loves his job. And he has followed the wise precedent of leaders in other businesses and professions by surrounding himself with able, fighting, imaginative lieutenants.

"Mike Shea's lieutenant and manager of the big Hippodrome, Buffalo, is Harold B. Franklin, who, when you take his measure, would be listed as about thirty-two or three years old at top; a young man who lives and dreams 'show business' and gives everything that is in him to his 'house.'

"Franklin passed his novitiate as manager of a theatre in an outlying district of Detroit. His enterprise soon won him advancement, and for two years he was solely responsible for the success attained by one of Detroit's largest downtown theatres. Later Franklin answered a call from the Lyric theatre, Buffalo, at that time one of the city's most prosperous vaudeville and picture houses. It was his splendid achievements at the Lyric that prompted Mr. Shea to obtain his services for his mammoth playhouse.

Noted for His Settings

"Readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS know him best perhaps through the frequent reproductions of distinctive stage sets that have found imitators all over the country and by hearsay that he understands showmanship, publicity exploitation and newspaper advertising. These things that have made him talked about in the industry at large have likewise made him known to virtually everyone in Buffalo and an influence for good in his community. Stimulated by the liberal support of his chief, Mr. Shea, he is able to give the Hippodrome presentations of pictures a standard of excellence not exceeded anywhere else in America.

"Mr. Franklin has solved the problem of the proper co-ordination of his feature picture, his musical program, his lighting effects, his theatre's internal atmosphere and the curiosity values of his newspaper and outdoor exploitation.

Believes in Advertising

"A great believer in paid advertising in newspapers, Franklin does not ask the dailies to shoulder a burden alone. He knows that his basic product, the amusement he has to sell to the public, must be sound, must be clean, entertaining and challenging. Of course, this is what any and every manager is supposed to do—but there are thousands who do not, haphazard men who assemble haphazard shows and foist them off upon their public via the newspapers and the billboards.

"'If I have a strong, well-balanced show, that is the time I call upon the big siege guns of paid newspaper advertising and publicity,' says Franklin. 'And I lay off to a minimum on a show that does not come up to our own expectations. I know that if I sell a poor show or just an average show I am doing Mr. Shea harm for his big institution. I would be destroying confidence and injuring our standing. The people of Buffalo know that when we say we have a good show at the Hippodrome it IS a good show. Naturally, we try to do this every week.

Urges Honest Exploitation

"'I think that one of the greatest errors showmen make is the misuse of newspapers. They are the great mediums for instant communication with the public, and the exhibitor who promotes bad shows knowingly through his local papers is doing himself harm. The boomerang always comes back.

"'At the Hippodrome, having brought the public inside our institution, we take pride in what we give them. We think we have found visual relief for our audiences in our frequent resort to most unusual stage sets—sets created for the purpose of inducing relaxation, for relieving tension and strain; sets lighted so as to be visible and effective. These sets, during recent months, have done much to strengthen the patriotic feelings of the time—sets for War Thrift stamps; sets for the birthday weeks of our nation's founders and preservers; sets for the Liberty Loan campaigns.'

"Mr. Franklin has just evolved a new plan for the presentation of screen comedies and will introduce it with Goldwyn's 'Smiling Bill,' Parsons Capitol Comedies, and with the occasional farce comedies or melodramatic comedies in which Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand are seen—for the Hippodrome is the first run home of Goldwyn Pictures in Buffalo.

Contagion of Laughter

"'Laughter is contagious,' explains Franklin. 'If you see a man, woman or child begin to smile or laugh heartily you yourself relax. Unless you are an exceptional human being, your own inclination is to laugh or smile, for most of us react alike from the same causes. The creative sources of humor and mirth are about the same in all social levels. But how can you see whether someone near you is going to laugh in darkened motion picture theatres? The answer is, lighten your house a bit when a comedy is being run; use a three-quarter light; maybe more light than that—get as much light as you can without hurting your screen values. Immediately everyone will be able to see others nearby and people will no longer keep laughs exclusively to themselves. They will share their amusement with others.'"

"The Firebrand," Story of Revolution-Torn Russia

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

The trials and tribulations of the people of revolution-torn Russia are vividly portrayed in "The Firebrand," in which Virginia Pearson comes to the ——— theatre on ———. How Russia was brought to ruin by her traitors—how Germany worked on the grafting ways of Russian agents—is clearly depicted. It is a play that breeds patriotism, making every American feel that he must do something to end the devilish methods of the Kaiser. The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and the direction of the production was placed in the capable hands of Edmund Lawrence. In Miss Pearson's supporting cast are Victor Sutherland, Herbert Evans, Carleton Macy, Jane Courtney and Willard Cooley. In addition there are hundreds of soldiers and revolutionists and the scenes are beautifully made. In the play Miss Pearson is the Princess Natalya, niece of Prince Andrei Rostoff, who wants her to marry his son, Boris. But the princess has been reading the stories of Julian Ross, an American writer with Russian family connections. Ross is one of the leaders of the Revolution and is captured and thrown into prison. The princess visits the prison camp and it happens that a rock falls and places her in great danger, from which she is rescued by Ross. She promises to help him and accordingly gives him a passport made out in the name of a servant of her uncle's household. He goes to Petrograd and there continues his work for the Revolution. Treachery on the part of the Royalists who are in league with the Kaiser causes the slaughter of a regiment of Russian troops, among whom is the princess' brother. Ross subsequently learns that Prince Andrei is the arch traitor and again using the servant's passport he goes back and kills the prince. This act arouses the hatred of Princess Natalya who forthwith plans to kill the prince. This act arouses the hatred of Princess Natalya who forthwith plans to kill him. She shoots him, but fortunately Ross is wounded only slightly. He then shows the princess proof that the prince, her uncle, had brought about her brother's death. She forgives him and together they slip away to Petrograd where they are married and both work for the revolutionists.

Dorothy Dalton in a Society Drama, "The Mating of Marcella"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

There are few motion picture stars who have a more enthusiastic following than Dorothy Dalton, and this fact will doubtless be demonstrated here on ——— when Miss Dalton appears at the ——— theatre in "The Mating of Marcella," a powerful domestic drama by Joseph Franklin Poland. Miss Dalton has done splendid work in this, her newest picture for Paramount, done under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and the excellence of her portrayal of the exacting title role has not only served to increase her popularity but has added materially to her reputation as one of the most charming and talented motion picture stars in the country. Mr. Poland, the author, has a long string of successes to his credit but "The Mating of Marcella" outshines them all. The plot is developed with clearness and strength while the characterizations are all that could be desired. R. William Neill, who directed the star in "Love Me" and "Tyrant Fear," had charge of the production under Mr. Ince's supervision—which speaks volumes for its artistic excellence. Thurston Hall plays the leading role opposite Miss Dalton, and Juanita Hansen, a strikingly beautiful blonde, has an important role. Others in the cast are Spottiswoode Aitken, William Conklin, Milton Ross, Donald MacDonald and Buster Irving. In this picture Miss Dalton is a modiste's model, the daughter of a musician whose prolonged illness causes her much anxiety. To obtain money to pay physicians' bills she consents to impersonate the frivolous wife of a rich man for six months, in order that the wife may establish a legal residence in Nevada and obtain a divorce to marry a "Count." The husband falls in love with her. Through the revenge of a discarded admirer of the wife when she was a showgirl, they are made free to marry when this man, disguised as a chauffeur, drives his automobile into a lake and drowns the wife, her new sweetheart and himself.

Edith Storey in Romantic Drama by Two Popular Writers of Fiction—Metro

(Mero Five-Reel Production)

To all lovers of romance—hear ye, hear ye, hear ye—that on the ——— of ——— at the ——— theatre, Edith Storey, Metro star, will take you into the heart of Africa with a party of clever actors and actresses and interpret for you C. N. and A. M. Williamson's cleverly written story, "The Demon." It isn't one of the cut-and-dried stories of the fairy princess falling in love with the poor boy from the country, although there is a little princess concerned and around this little princess there is woven a web of mystery which has been so cleverly thought out by the authors and reproduced on the screen by George D. Baker, that the one who leaves the ——— theatre after witnessing Miss Storey's performance, without having enjoyed every minute of the time spent therein, will have been given the best run for their money, the management is capable of giving. Without a doubt, this Metro offering is a worthwhile drama. It has dramatic substance backed by the genius of two of our best contemporary authors who have to their credit more than a score of the "best sellers."

Miss Storey is supported by Lewis Cody, whose screen work has been highly praised by our best critics: Charles Gerard, Virginia Chester, Molly McConnell, Laura Winston, Fred Malatesta, Frank Deshon, Alice Knowland and Ann Shaefer.

Baby Marie Osborne, Child Star, in "A Daughter of the West"

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Pathe will present on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— "A Daughter of the West," a five-part melodrama in which Baby Marie Osborne is featured. This six-year-old tot is unique among child actresses in that she has repeatedly demonstrated that she is capable of sustaining a five-reel story like a veteran of the screen. Not alone to her attractive baby face does she owe her wonderful success, for she possesses a really astonishing talent. Her simplicity is charming and there is a refreshing wholesomeness characteristic of every one of her pictures. While the child interest is maintained throughout the story of "A Daughter of the West," the tiny heroine wears the regulation cowgirl costume and takes part in many thrilling scenes. The strong melodramatic story shows June the daughter of a mismated couple. The mother goes to the seashore with the child and there neglects her and falls in love with a social parasite. The father, a virile Western type of man, learns of the flirtation, hurries to the seashore, defeats the masher in a lively fight and takes the child away, leaving the mother with her new friend, at her request. The father later goes to Hell's Gulch and is elected sheriff of the county, which is being terrorized by "Rawhide Pete's" gang of desperadoes. The child and her little colored friend—who has appeared in all of Baby Marie's recent pictures—are instrumental in rescuing a whole party from being robbed by the bandits. The father starts out to clean up the town and make it a safe place to live in. In the meantime the child's mother dies and her erstwhile lover, coming to Hell's Gulch, buys the most notorious dance hall in the place. In company with "Rawhide Pete's" gang he defies the sheriff and his posse and a big battle follows. "Rawhide Pete," wounded, is escaping when the child lures him into the town jail and locks him up. The dive-keeper and former masher escapes but is later found by the sheriff in a cabin where he is being cared for by the child's governess, whom the father loves. At the request of the governess the sheriff spares the rascal's life, but when the latter's true character is revealed to her she turns to the sheriff with her love. There are wedding bells.

David Graham Phillips' Most Popular Novel "Old Wives for New"—De Mille Creation

(Artcraft Six-Reel Production)

David Graham Phillips was one of our best novelists. Among his most popular works is "Old Wives for New." Jennie MacPherson was commissioned by Paramount-Artcraft to make a screen version of this work for creation on the screen by Cecil B. De Mille, director general of Paramount-Artcraft. The result is a most entertaining screen drama with Elliott Dexter, Sylvia Ashton, Wanda Hawley, Florence Vidor, Theodore Roberts, Helen Jerome Eddy, Marcia Manon, Julia Faye, J. Parks-Jones, Edna Mae Cooper, Gustav Seyffertitz, Tully Marshall, Lillian Leighton and Maym Kelso interpreting the principal roles. The pick of Artcraft's screen artists are seen in this offering. Elliott Dexter is considered by critics to be one of the best leading men appearing on the screen today. Theodore Roberts has been seen in innumerable characterizations for years back. He was equally prominent on the speaking stage before taking up picture work. The remainder of the cast is made up of the best support that is afforded. Many of you have read Mr. Phillips's novel of the same title. It offers a theme that is of vital interest to the public in reference to relationship in the home. It takes a new angle of the eternal triangle problem, shows in its shortcomings the error of a wife neglecting her personal appearance.

"Old Wives for New" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ———week.

Baby Marie Osborne in a Western Melodrama, "A Daughter of the West"

(Pathe Five-Reel Release)

You have never seen Baby Marie Osborne in a fiery Western melodrama, have you? The little Pathe star takes the reins of the Western "meller" in her hands, and drives through five reels with all the bravado and determination of a Bill Hart. For the first time in her screen career she will be seen portraying one of the principle roles in a Western picture, titled "A Daughter of the West," produced by the Diando Film Corporation for release on the Pathe program, under the direction of William Bertram. Marie has supporting her Frank Whitson, Marion Warren, Leota Lorraine, J. W. Foster and William Quinn. June divides honors in many of the comedy scenes with a little "pickininny," and if you don't get a good hearty laugh from the scenes in which these two appear, there is something wrong with her laugh storage. Combined with the comedy is a real, old-fashioned Western drama. The picture offers Baby Marie in an entirely different atmosphere and an entirely different role. She meets every expectation and lives up to the confidence placed in her by Director Bertram.

Baby Marie Osborne, Pathe clever little girl actress, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "A Daughter of the West."

"Midnight Madness," Produced by Rupert Julian, Who Directed "The Kaiser"

(Universal Five-Reel Production)

Many of you have seen "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." You all pronounced it a "knock-out." It was. That point is generally conceded. You will remember that Rupert Julian portrayed the "Kaiser," and directed the production. You will also remember that Elliott J. Clawson collaborated with Mr. Julian on the story and scenario. These two capable workers in the motion picture field, have gotten together and turned out another since the creation of the "Kaiser." "Midnight Madness" is the title. The story was written by Mr. Clawson, and produced under the personal direction of Mr. Julian. Kenneth Harlan, Universal's star juvenile, and Ruth Clifford, who has been seen in many successful Bluebird productions, have the featured role. In the supporting cast are seen Harry Van Meter, Harry M. Holden, Louis Willoughby and Miss Harris. It is in five reels. In theme it is as unlike Mr. Julian's production of the "Kaiser" as daylight is unlike drakness. But it's a corking good picture, and the management of the ——— theater wants every one of his patrons to take advantage of the opportunity afforded them to see Mr. Julian's latest screen creation. In announcing the subject matter of the story, let it suffice to say that it is a mystery story of the first water. It's a corker. See it.

Louise Glaum Your Favorite Exponent of Emotional Acting in "Shackled"—Paralta

(Paralta Play—Six Reels)

Your favorite exponent of dramatic art on the screen, Louise Glaum will appear in "Shackled," a Paralta play, ——— of ——— week. In her portrayal of the part of a beautiful young girl who has been deceived by the glare of finery and riches, Miss Glaum creates a dramatic study before the camera that is deserving the consideration of every patron of the ——— theatre. Although caught in the web of a moral leper. Lola Dexter, portrayed by Miss Glaum, demonstrates that there is redemption. She frees herself from the bonds, and goes out into the world and by her clean, upright living, demands the respect of those who would condemn her. "Shackled" teaches a lesson that all will be the better for having learned. The weakness of some, the determination of others, and, lastly, the "never-say-die" spirit that prompts the strong of heart to seek redemption and demand respect when victor. Miss Glaum never disappoints her audience. Whether she portrays the vampire of the underworld, the girl of the West or the unfortunate who has been led astray by the desire for riches and pretty clothes—one can always expect a performance of true dramatic exposition.

In her late picture she is supported by W. Lawson Butt, Charles West, Roberta Wilson, Jack Gilbert and Roy Laidlaw. "Shackled" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Mme. Olga Petrova in Play by Middleton, "Tempered Steel"—Theatrical Story

(First National Release)

Madame Olga Petrova, Ralph Ince and George Middleton—some combination—what. George Middleton started the ball rolling with a rattling good story—remember the "Polly With a Past." If you have been to New York this season you probably dropped over to the Belasco where it is now playing to crowded houses. Madame Petrova is featured in Mr. Middleton's creation, and Ralph Ince was in charge of direction. All this serves to introduce "Tempered Steel," which will hold the boards at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. In the supporting cast with Madame Petrova are seen J. Herbert Frank, Thomas Holding, William Carlton, Mrs. Walton, Edith Hinckle, E. J. Radcliffe and Matilda Brundage. "Tempered Steel" is the latest work of Madame Petrova before the camera. It is distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and presents one of this distributing company's best. This marks the fourth appearance of the star on her calendar of eight release for the current year. The story opens in the South, and then switches to the heart of New York's theatrical district. Madame Petrova has the role of a beautiful Southern girl struggling for recognition against her enemies. A story of New York's theatrical life always proves interesting because in the lives of those struggling to reach the top of success on the stage, is developed the human tragedies that try the nerve of those fighting, sometimes against hope.

"A Game with Fate," Great Vehicle for Harry Morey

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

The management of the ——— theatre announces as its attraction for ——— "A Game With Fate," a Vitagraph production in which Harry Morey is starred. Morey is one of the most popular actors before the motion picture-going public and his popularity has been well earned. In "A Game With Fate" he has one of the greatest roles of his career, and this is said with full recognition of his wonderful work as Joe Garson in "Within the Law." Associated with him is Betty Blythe, who makes her first appearance as a Vitagraph leading woman. Miss Blythe has already attracted much attention by her fine performances as Madame Arnot in "Over the Top," with Arthur Guy Empey, and in "The Business of Life," with Alice Joyce. Besides, she is one of the beauties of the screen. The danger of reliance upon circumstantial evidence in criminal cases forms the basis of the story of "A Game With Fate," which was written especially for Mr. Morey by Tom Terriss. According to the tale, Henry Dawson, a wealthy young broker and clubman, disappears while a guest at a garden party at the home of Elaine Huntington. He is last seen entering the car of Robert Harwell, who is in love with Elaine. Investigation by detectives shows that Dawson and Harwell had quarreled the day of the party over money matters, and the latter, offering no defense and denying nothing, is tried for the murder and sentenced to the death chair. Hardly needless to say, he is not guilty, but the wonderfully clever twist given the story whereby this fact is definitely proved makes this quite unique among detective dramas. The work of the splendid cast, which includes Denton Vane, Percy Standing and Robert Gaillard, among others, adds much to the enjoyment of the picture.

Harry Morey, in this great detective play, comes to the ——— on ———.

Marguerite Clark in "Prunella," Version of Her Stage Success

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

It is seldom that one sees an actress on the screen portraying a role in which she has previously achieved success on the stage, yet that is what winsome Marguerite Clark does in "Prunella," the Paramount picture which comes to the screen of the ——— theatre on ———. While Miss Clark made her greatest stage hit in this charming story of love in a Dutch garden by Granville Barker and Lawrence Housman, yet it is the unanimous opinion that in the screen version she excells her previous effort. This is doubtless due in part to the faultless direction of Maurice Tourneur, the celebrated producer of picture plays, who made screen history with "The Blue Bird," "Barbary Sheep," "Rose of the World" and other masterpieces. The screen version has been taken bodily from the play and many features that were impossible of production on the stage, such as the details of the glorious old garden where dwelt Prunella and her three aunts, have been incorporated. Prunella, the child heroine, lives with her queer spinster aunts, Prim, Privacy and Prude. A troupe of vagabond players comes to town and Prunella, moved to curiosity, takes just one peep over the garden hedge. A Pierrot, swinging along the road, leaps the hedge to make violent love to the pretty child and late that night comes with a ladder and steals her away while the aunts slumber peacefully on. The scene shifts back to the old garden three years later. There is only one of the old aunts there now and she is waiting to give up the keys to a rich stranger. Her surprise when she discovers it is Pierrot himself, returned saddened and wiser to await Prunella's return to her old home, is as great as that of the audience when Prunella, too, comes back to the old garden, and "all's well that ends well."

"De Luxe Annie," a Crook Play That Is Different

(Select Seven-Reel Production)

Patrons of the ——— theatre will be given an opportunity on ——— of seeing a crook play that is different, so to speak, when Norma Talmadge will be presented on the ——— screen by Joseph M. Schenck in "De Luxe Annie," a picturization of the splendid stage success by Edward Clark, which enjoyed tremendous popularity on Broadway during the past winter. Scammon Lockwood wrote the original story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post as a two-part serial. The story has a thrilling plot but an unexpected psychological twist makes it even more engrossing. In the photoplay, which was adapted by Paul West and directed by Roland West, Miss Talmadge has achieved the triumph of her career, and that is saying much. Moreover, she is ably assisted by a fine cast which includes Eugene O'Brien, Frank Mills, Edwards Davis and others. The story involves the efforts of Walter Kendal, a lawyer, and his friend, Dr. Niblo, a criminologist, to capture a couple of clever swindlers. Jimmy Fitzpatrick and Mrs. Archer. They trail the pair to Jimmy's house and Julie Kendal, fearful for her husband's safety, follows them. A fight ensues in which Julie is badly hurt by Jimmy, and recovering consciousness she wanders off into the night. Her nature is changed, her memory of the past being a blank. A long time later Jimmy runs across her in Chicago and the two become pals, Julie developing into a clever crook known as "De Luxe Annie." Back in New York they are located by Kendal through a detective and Kendal proceeds to make love to his own wife, who does not recognize him. Many thrilling adventures follow but all is straightened out when "Annie" submits to an operation and her old self is restored.

Curwood's "Baree, Son of Kazan," Inspiring Story of Land of Eternal Snow

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

The camera has caught the beautiful scenic effects registered in Bear Valley of the Rocky Mountain region and with it has recorded in detail one of James Oliver Curwood's most human stories, "Baree, Son of Kazan." It was a Vitagraph camera man who did the shooting of these scenes with David Smith directing. Two of Vitagraph's most popular players, Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, are seen interpreting the stellar roles. In reality the hero of the play is a dog, whose intelligence is almost human. The story in its construction and the character with which it deals, reminds one of a Jack London brand of human-interest stories. There is none of the spectacular in it but it has what is always acceptable as entertainment whether between the covers of a book or reflected on the screen in animated motion, human interest. And as a background for its action which takes place in the snow covered mountains of the Great Valley region in the Rockies, it presents some of the most beautiful, inspiring scenic effects ever registered by the camera. Its cooling effect will be more in evidence than the electric fan—miles of snow, the fur garments of the inhabitants in the land of eternal snow—in short, everything that goes to inspire cool surroundings. Regardless of the height of the mercury in the thermometer, you will leave the ——— theatre refreshed. It is Vitagraph's best feature and James Oliver Curwood's best story.

The Brightest Ray of Sunshine on the Screen—June Caprice, "Blue-Eyed Mary"

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

William Fox has the exponent of the vampire lady in the person of Theda Bara. Going to the other extreme he has in the person of June Caprice, the exponent of the "sunshine girl." This little radiator of sunshine comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest work before the camera, "Blue Eyed Mary," and in her portrayal of the featured role she upholds her reputation as the Fox "Sunshine Girl." The executives of one of our largest corporations lay down as the cardinal rule for their employes to follow—"The girl with the smile wins." Miss Caprice follows this axiom in her latest work and is rewarded a hundred fold. With her smile she brings together her father and his parents from whom he had been estranged for years because he had married against their wishes. The power of a smile to bring about happiness and goodness in this world is convincingly set forth in this Fox picture running in five reels. Dull moments are conspicuous because of their absence in "Blue Eyed Mary. Little Miss Caprice smiles her way to a complete victory and all will accord her that honor after witnessing her performance. Supporting her in this production are Helen Tracy, Blanche Hines, Bernard Randall, Thomas Fallon, Jack McLean Florence Ashbrooke and Henry Fallam. Harry Millarde directed.

"Old Hartwell's Cub," Story of a Son's Devotion to His Father

(Triangle Fve-Reel Production)

"Old Hartwell's Cub," the Triangle photoplay which comes to the ——— theatre on ———, reveals the love of a son for his aged father who has become a victim of drink. Here is heart-interest aplenty and William Desmond, who plays the "cub," and Percy Challenger, who portrays the old man, make the most of the splendid opportunities offered them by the author, Mable Richards. Mary Warren has the feminine lead, playing opposite Mr. Desmond, and other important roles are in the hands of Walt Whitman, Eugene Burr, Dorothy Hagar, Graham Pette and William J. Ellingford. The devotion of Bill Hartwell to his drunken old father avails little with the populace of Matherville, who are indignant over the way old Tom conducts himself, but Bill has at least one friend, Rev. David Lane. At the latter's house he meets the pastor's daughter and promptly falls in love with her. But a rival—a maried one—deceives her into accepting him, and not until his deceit is uncovered by Bill, long after the marriage, does Mary Kane finally reach the haven of true love and devotion. The whole makes a pretty story which is certain to please ——— patrons.

Live News from the Producers

Fox to Issue "Big Six" Series

Theda Bara's "A Fool There Was," First of Series of Bara and William Farnum Pictures, Re-edited and Revised

BEGINNING in June, the Fox Film Corporation will issue a number of the best known Theda Bara and William Farnum productions, in re-edited and revised form. The first of these issues will be "A Fool There Was," Miss Bara's famous vampire production, and the pictures, which Mr. Fox has termed "The Big Six of 1918," will be issued in the following order: "A Fool There Was," "The Bondman," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Plunderer," "The Two Orphans" and "A Soldier's Oath."

"As is apparent from the list," says a Fox statement, "the Bara and Farnum dramas are alternated. We have not yet decided definitely just when the first of these Bara super-productions is to go out, but the date depends largely upon the time when the new matter for their exploitation is finished.

"We are not only having them completely revised by Miss Hettie Gray Baker, the editor of our productions, but we are preparing entirely new lithographs, new lobby displays, new slides, new cuts, new mats and new press matter.

"Our branch offices are going to conduct a vigorous campaign on 'The Big Six,' and, incidentally, we plan to make that slogan known well throughout the film world. Their efforts will be backed up by the home office by extensive advertising and publicity.

"We desire to call the attention of exhibitors everywhere to the fact that each of the six photoplays, in its 1918 version, is to be released in five reels. This should make them even snappier and brighter and faster-moving than in their original form.

Theda Bara, in "A Fool There Was," William Fox Production

"'A Fool There Was' has been selected as the initial issue. We have in this photoplay what is, without question, one of the most widely publicized films that has been produced. It should attract greater attention than ever because of the many notable plays Miss Bara has had since.

"Our most radical departure will probably be made in the 1918 version of 'The Bondman,' Hall Caine's wonderful story, in which William Farnum stars. This picture, originally in six reels, is to be issued now in five, and it is exceptionally powerful because the action has been crowded into smaller footage."

New Players Engaged by World Pictures

TWO players of prominence have recently become affiliated with World Pictures. One is Warner Oland, one of the most versatile of screen "heavies," and the other is Margaret McWade, a member of one of America's best known theatrical families and herself an actress of proved ability.

Mr. Oland is of Swedish parentage and has had a long experience on the stage, playing with Viola Allen and Sothern and Marlowe in Shakespearian roles, with Alla Nazimova in "The Master Builder" and "A Doll's House" and with Helen Ware in "The Price."

In the camera world he was associated with Theda Bara, John Mason and Fanny Ward and appeared with Irene Castle in the serial "Patria" and then with Pearl White in "The Fatal Ring." His first appearance in World Pictures will be in the principal Chinese role in "Mandarin's Gold," featuring Kitty Gordon and directed by Oscar Apfel.

Miss McWade, who is at present appearing in "Blood of the Trevors," in which Barbara Castleton is starred, has played leads on the speaking stage with Robert Edeson, Rose Stahl, Helen Ware, Elsie Ferguson and others of prominence. Her first appearance on the stage was made at the age of six months in "Rip Van Winkle."

Miss McWade's father was a contemporary of Booth, Forrest and Barrett.

Essanay Makes Series of Marionette Pictures

Essanay has nearly completed a series of ten pictures which it claims are the most unique ever produced. The chief characters are Mugsy, Mose and Mike, marionettes, although in some of the pictures human characters take minor parts. The dolls are fourteen inches high and act before the camera just as human beings act. They run the gamut of facial expressions, depicting fright, grief, joy, anger, terror, jealousy, hate, love or any other emotion.

Director Howard S. Moss and Charles B. Bennes have spent months in the production of these pictures. The making of the many dolls, to get the various facial expressions, also entails long tedious work. This is said to be the first time in doll pictures in which the dolls have been able to show a change of countenance.

Among the first releases will be "Cracked Ice," "Ups and Downs," "All Balled Up," "Drafted," "Angels Food" and "Their Jonah Day." The pictures run five hundred feet each.

Betty Blythe Is Featured with Morey

"A Game with Fate," starring Harry Morey and Betty Blythe and scheduled as the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon release for the week of June 3, marks Miss Blythe's first appearance as a Vitagraph leading woman, although she has already attracted attention by her performances in "Over the Top," with Sergeant Empey, "The Business of Life," with Alice Joyce, and other Vitagraph features.

The play, which was written specially for Mr. Morey by Tom Terriss, is an exposition of the dangers of circumstancial evidence in criminal cases and is said to offer the star the most satisfactory role he has had since his portrayal of Joe Garson in "Within the Law." Paul Scardon directed, and the cast includes, among others, Percy Standing, Denton Vane and Robert Gaillard.

McLaughlin Starts on One with Desmond

Director J. W. McLaughlin, the title of whose offering, "The Mossback" has been changed to "The Man Who Woke Up," a Triangle June 2 release, has started work on a new picture that will serve as a vehicle for William Desmond. The story opens in the East and then jumps to the Canadian Northwest where Desmond is shown as an officer of the Northwest mounted police. Maude Wayne will be seen as Desmond's leading woman.

Jean Hersholt, Clara Horton, Jack Curtis, Zenaida Williams and Edward Piel Are Among the Featured Players in Triangle's "The Servant in the House," which Has Been Completed

Plan Strong Exploitation for Petrova Play

In order that those exhibitors who will present "Tempered Steel," the fourth special starring vehicle in which Madam Petrova is shortly to be seen, may exploit this feature on the widest possible scale, arrangements have been completed between the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the Petrova Picture Company, whereby both organizations will join their publicity forces in a concentrated effort to accomplish this end. "Tempered Steel" was written specially for the Polish artiste by George Middleton, author of the stage success now current on Broadway, "Polly With a Past." It was personally directed by Ralph Ince, one of the foremost American producers in the film world, and a specially engaged cast appears in support of Madame Petrova throughout the screen play. This cast is headed by J. Herbert Frank, and includes E. J. Radcliffe, Thomas Holding, Edith Hinckle, Matilda Brundage, and several other players whose personalities are known to the motion picture public.

Patriotic Serial Enjoying Renewed Popularity

Reports from General Film Company exchanges indicate that the patriotic serial "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" is on its second wave of popularity. Bookings on this single-reel, twelve-episode production featuring Jane Vance and William Sorelle have again jumped in number, it is said, in spite of the first-run completion of the releases. This renewed popularity of the picture is ascribed by General Film to the many patriotic activities of the country at this time, including the intensified participation of our troops in the battles on the western front, the Third Liberty Loan drive and the second Red Cross War Fund drive at home. Although not a war picture, "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" is an appropriate war time subject through dealing with the enemy spy evil as combatted in the United States by staunch Americans.

"Servant in the House" Filmed

H. O. Davis Completes Big Production with Members of Triangle Stock Company in Cast—Play Takes Evening

H. O. DAVIS has completed at Culver City, Cal., the screen version of Charles Rann Kennedy's celebrated drama of religious revolution, "The Servant in the House." The picture, like the stage play, occupies a full evening. But the photoplay, it is asserted, has gone much farther than the play ever could—farther than the play even dared.

The story of "The Servant in the House" is fairly familiar—the overthrow of the stiff and hypocritical traditions of a rich church, symbolizing the decay of religion from spirituality into temporal power. The vicar of this church has a brother, who, as a typical "drain man" of an English city, has sacrificed everything, including even the life of his wife and his own happiness, to secure the young cleric's advancement. But to no purpose, for the breach widens between them, and presently they are strangers. Years pass, and the clergyman, having married the sister of the Pharisaic Bishop of Lancashire, rich and corrupt, has a fashionable and established church. But presently the odor of an ancient sewer—apparently—pollutes the air and drives the parishioners from service. A drain man, merely summoned professionally, turns out to be the humble and long-lost brother, while a mysterious East Indian servant in the vicar's home—a figure almost Christ-like in directness, force, and spirituality—in fact, he is the Christ-symbol of the play—welds the conflicting elements, reunites the brothers in the common cause of humanity, when the discovery is made that the corruption is a broken tomb of dead priests, and drives out the shallow conceit and temporarily powerful Bishop of Lancashire, as Jesus drove the devils into the swine, and the swine into the sea.

In the stage play these things were suggested and talked about. In the screen play only the philosophy and the religious elements are left to words, although these words involve the use of three hundred and forty-four insert titles.

Jack Curtis as the Drain Man, Harvey Clark as the Bishop of Lancashire, Jean Hersholt as the Bishop of Benares, Edward Piel as the Vicar, Zenaide Williams as the Vicar's wife, Claire Anderson as the wife of the Drain Man, and Clara Horton as his daughter, are the principals in the cast, every member of which is associated with the new Triangle stock company of the Triangle Film Corporation, of which H. O. Davis is vice-president and general manager.

Special Sunday Permit for Gerard Film

A unique tribute has been paid to the patriotic value of "My Four Years in Germany" by the city of New Bedford, Mass.

For some time the law against Sunday showings has been strictly enforced in the New England town, but after the Mayor and the members of the City Council had witnessed a screening of the Gerard picture they issued a special permit for its exhibition at Gordon's Olympia on any and all forthcoming Sundays that the management of the theatre might desire to show it.

Katharine MacDonald New Lead with Ray

Katharine MacDonald is to be seen in support of Charles Ray, the Ince star, in his new Paramount picture, "His Own Home Town," Miss MacDonald is declared to be one of the most beautiful women on the screen today and is said to possess as well a fund of talent and the ability to impress by her personal charm.

The story of "His Own Home Town" is by Larry Evans and is said to offer the star a typical Charles Ray reel.

Theda Bara, William Farnum and Jewel Carmen, All William Fox Stars

Pretentious Play for Jewel Carmen

As a starring subject for Jewel Carmen, the Fox Film Corporation now has in course of production at the Fox Hollywood studios a picture based upon Gouverneur Morris' dissection of metropolitan life and character, "You Can't Get Away With It." Incidentally, this production marks the initial work of Robert Thornby as a member of the William Fox directorial forces.

A Fox statement says that this production not only will be by far the most pretentious Miss Carmen has ever appeared in but will be one of the most costly photodramas the company has ever released as a Special Feature.

Director Thornby has been busy during the past few days casting for the subject and supervising the erection of the first "sets." The names of the members of Miss Carmen's supporting cast will be announced shortly.

Several of the leading film corporations are said to have been in a spirited competition for the motion picture rights of "You Can't Get Away With It" and the Fox organization—especially the scenario department—is delighted at having made the purchase. The story is not only the work of one of America's most distinguished and widely read authors, but is said to have the further advantage of being admirably suited to the screen.

"Too often," the statement declares, "the producer spends thousands of dollars in acquiring a famous story and does not discover until it is too late that it doesn't lend itself well to picturization. We are extremely pleased, therefore, at obtaining a story of which we are sure in advance."

Dramas are now being produced in the West by a staff of five Fox directors. These men are J. Gordon Edwards, Frank Lloyd, Edward J. LeSaint, Lynn Reynolds and Mr. Thornby. In addition, there are a number of Sunshine Comedy makers under the supervision of Henry Lehrman, at the big Hollywood plant.

Laemmle Would Curb Waste in Prints and Postage

President Carl Laemmle, of Universal, during his trip to Universal City, has discovered that the local postmaster is keeping close check on postage waste. Mr. Laemmle has written the New York office telling of his experience and suggesting that postage waste be guarded against just as carefully in New York as on the West Coast. In his letter, Mr. Laemmle said:

"The other day we were called down (and very properly, too), because in sending out a letter we had used a special delivery stamp when a 3-cent stamp would have taken the letter to its destination just as quickly if we had only stopped to figure that way. We deserved the rebuke.

"There is still another chance for a tremendous saving in the whole picture business, but we cannot effect it unless we get the co-operation of our customers. I refer to the silly custom of booking pictures according to age.

"Every company in the business is put to an extra and unnecessary expense every year because exhibitors still cling to the old-fashioned notion that the age of a picture has something to do with its value. As a result of this insistence on the part of the exhibitors, all companies use many more positive prints than they should, simply in order to cover the country more quickly. These extra prints are pure waste.

No Casualties—Yet

"Three Hundred Thirteen" is the number that designates the picture on which Al. Christie is now at work at the Christie comedy plant. To date there have been no casualties reported by him in his cast.

General Film to Handle "Zeppelin L-21"

General Film Company announces that it has taken over the distribution of "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" through its thirty exchanges throughout the United States and Canada. After all preparations had been made to distribute the feature on a State Right basis, the plans of the Interstate Film Company were changed in order to secure a wider distribution.

Special one-sheet and three-sheet posters are now being prepared by General Film Company, and slides and other advertising material will be immediately available for this exceptional "punch" film.

"The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" is a condensed and connected story of great war adventures, the climax of which is the victory of Great Britain's anti-aircraft defenses against the colossal Hun dirigible which had bombed the east coast of England and the environs of London. Presented in two-reel form, the picture necessarily is one of action clear through. Its heroes are anonymous except for Lieut. W. L. Robinson, the British aviator whose intrepid attack on the Zeppelin brought it down ablaze to fall among the ruins its bombs had caused. This enemy disaster is already current history from the newspaper accounts of the Zeppelin L-21's fate, and the filmed account is expected by General to be a great drawing card at all theatres where it is shown.

Ella Hall's Farewell as Bluebird Star

In "Woman Against Woman," the Bluebird release for June 10, both Priscilla Dean and Ella Hall are to be seen in prominent roles. It will be Miss Hall's final appearance as a Bluebird star.

Miss Dean appears as a vampire, the head and brains of a clique of notorious international thieves, while Miss Hall was picked for the star lead, that of a society girl who is being forced into marriage with a man three times her age.

Hobart Henley, Goldwyn Director

Henley a Thorough Director

Sympathetic Understanding of His Players Is Real Secret of His Success — Now Directing Third Picture for Mae Marsh

THE success of Director Hobart Henley in directing Mae Marsh, now in the midst of her third production under his supervision, has occasioned no little comment among those in touch with Goldwyn activities. Heretofore Miss Marsh has had a new director for each of her productions, Goldwyn feeling that the summit of her art had not been reached. At their first meeting Miss Marsh recognized in Mr. Henley all the essential qualifications of a successful director, not the least important of which is sympathetic understanding.

It is this sympathy which gives Hobart Henley power and perception and is in itself the real secret of his success as a director. He is as acutely alive to the feelings of the player of a "bit" as he is to the star's conception of a role, and labors as diligently to bring out the best in a child as he does to surround a leading player with appeal. His striking success with Goldwyn Pictures starring Mae Marsh is evidence of this. They are perfect examples of Hobart Henley's art.

Immediately a script is handed to him, he reads it as he would a novel, for enjoyment only. It takes form in his brain as a narrative. He looks upon it almost impersonally. Then, as the story begins to digest in his mind, it assumes the aspect of a photoplay, with the high lights visualized. From that moment the production may be said to start. After that he leaves nothing to the inspiration of the moment, nothing to chance and little to the exigencies of actual direction. For this reason he produces rapidly, smoothly and with the least appreciable delay. His value to Goldwyn is enhanced by this thoroughness and facility.

"Missing" Story of Part of Women in War

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's latest Paramount picture, "Missing," taken from Mrs. Humphry Ward's novel, presents the woman's side of the great war.

The scenario is by Commodore Blackton and James Young; the latter is directing, with the Commodore supervising. The story in brief is that of two sisters, one an elderly and much-soured woman and the other young and beautiful. The former hopes to replenish the family exchequer by marrying off her sister to wealth and title. But Nellie, the younger, marries a British officer just before he leaves for the front. A kindly and influential man, Sir William Farrell, admires Nellie also and befriends her when her husband is away. The elder sister, Hester, thinks she sees a chance for a match if George, the husband, is killed. The young wife thinks only of her husband. Then she hears he is wounded and missing. She refuses to believe him dead. Hester goes to investigate, and, finding her brother-in-law wounded and with his memory gone, repudiates him. But George recovers and happiness returns to Nell, even at the sacrifice of learning her sister's perfidy.

Several Lloyd Comedies Await Release

"Fireman Save My Child," "Sic 'Em Towser," "Somewhere in Turkey" and "The City Slicker" are some of the new Harold Lloyd comedies now awaiting release by Pathe under the Pathe-Rolin trademark.

For some time now, since starting on the new comedies, Lloyd has scorned a slapstick make-up. He has no grotesque stuff in his personal appearance at all; merely depending upon his cheery smile and a pair of horn-rimmed spectacles to get his effect.

Book Dealers to Co-operate With Jewel

THE publishing firm of Grosset & Dunlap has issued a popular-priced edition of Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, "K," and is circularizing every large bookseller in the United States to the end that exhibitors throughout the country may have the active assistance of book dealers in exploiting the Jewel production, "The Doctor and the Woman," the screen version of the novel.

The advantage of having an exclusive window display of the novel "K" just prior to the presentation of the picture is urged as the very best kind of a selling campaign not only for the book but for the picture.

In a letter to exhibitors Jewel suggests that they call upon the book dealers and arrange the details.

Department stores with representative book departments are urged by Grosset and Dunlap to carry display space in their daily newspaper calling attention to both the novel and the picture.

While there has been previous co-operation between publisher and producer the executives of Jewel Productions say they have no record of any case where the publisher gave such hearty co-operation.

It is confidently predicted by Jewel officials that proper co-operation on the part of exhibitors will produce surprising results in the exploitation of this Lois Weber feature.

"Woman Against Woman" is the Bluebird Production which Has Been Scheduled for Release on June 10. It Features Priscilla Dean and Ella Hall.

Big Bookings for Empey Film

Greater Number of Prints of "Over the Top" Now Working Than of Any Other Vitagraph Production

VITAGRAPH announces that as the result of a record-breaking week at the Academy of Music, the largest auditorium in Philadelphia, Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger has booked "Over the Top," Vitagraph's war special, for every theatre in which he is interested. This is in addition to a booking of four weeks already arranged for the Nixon theatre in Atlantic City, where the Philadelphia theatrical magnate is preparing for an all-summer run of the Empey feature masterpiece.

In a telegram to Walter W. Irwin, General Manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, at the completion of the Academy run last week Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger said:

"Congratulations on Empey in 'Over the Top' and thanks for the wonderful cooperation of yourself and entire Philadelphia staff in making the engagement at the Academy of Music such a brilliant success. Sorry we could not get a second week at that theatre, but previous rentals interfered. Have booked the picture in every theatre in which I am interested and expect a repetition of the record-breaking business which put 'Over the Top' over the top of any picture that has ever played at the Academy."

The success of "Over the Top" at the Philadelphia Academy of Music is a really remarkable testimonial to the Vitagraph special, because the Academy is the largest auditorium in the Quaker city, and has a seating capacity exceeded by only a few houses in the United States. It is in the heart of the city and has long been the gathering place of the Philadelphia elect, being the scene of the annual Assembly Ball, the prime social event of the year, flower shows and other big gatherings.

The Nixon-Nirdlinger telegram, it is stated, is characteristic of scores which have been received at the Vitagraph offices from exhibitors of the great picture in the last few days.

Harry Morey and Betty Blythe, in Vitagraph's "A Game With Fate"

Incidentally, General Manager Irwin reports that bookings on "Over the Top" continue unabated, one of the recent additions to the list of prominent exhibitors who have contracted for it being Tom Moore of Washington, D. C., who will show it in his Strand theatre at the National capital.

It is announced by Vitagraph that a greater number of prints are working on "Over the Top" than on any other production, special or regular, ever put out by the company. Every one of the company's branches has called for extra prints and in the New York territory alone a record number of prints has been working continuously since the picture was released at the beginning of the present month. Bookings already in the New York office, it is announced, are sufficient to keep these prints busy until the last week in June.

Juanita Hansen in Dorothy Dalton Play

JUANITA HANSEN, said to be one of the most beautiful screen actresses and a decided blonde of the statuesque type, will be seen in support of Dorothy Dalton in "The Mating of Marcella," produced by Thomas H. Ince for Paramount to follow Miss Dalton's "Tyrant Fear."

Thurston Hall again plays opposite Miss Dalton. In accordance with Mr. Ince's belief that the public becomes accustomed to and welcomes combinations of star and leading man or woman, Mr. Hall has been retained to play leads with Dorothy Dalton and has proved a great favorite with audiences.

William Conklin, Donald MacDonald, Milton Ross, Spootiswoode Aitken, Buster Irving and others will also appear and from all indications the cast will be a superior one.

Joseph Franklin Poland wrote the story and R. William Neill, who has directed all Miss Dalton's previous Paramount pictures, is again at the helm, with Mr. Ince supervising.

Paramount's offerings featuring the beautiful Miss Dalton have won high favor with film patrons and they will naturally be interested in the announcement that "The Mating of Marcella" gives the star an unexampled opportunity to act, wear handsome gowns and depict a character that has many prominent prototypes in real life.

The scenes in a great department store where, as Marcella Duranzo, Dorothy Dalton poses as a model in exquisite gowns she would love to own but may not, make a beautiful picture. Later, as the co-respondent, innocent enough, in a divorce suit, she develops her powers as an actress and in the tragic climax which, however, brings her into her own, she is said to excel.

Chautard Signs for Long Term with F. P.-Lasky

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, makes the announcement that Emile Chautard, the noted French director, has signed a long-term contract to direct Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Recent pictures produced by Mr. Chautard are "Magda," "Marionettes" and "The House of Glass," starring Clara Kimball Young; "The Eternal Temptress," a Paramount picture starring Lina Cavalieri; "The Ordeal of Rosetta," starring Alice Brady, and "Her Final Reckoning," starring Pauline Frederick, a Paramount picture which has just been completed. Mr. Chautard will direct Miss Frederick in the next picture to follow.

Mr. Chautard has been a life-long student of drama, having been a well-known actor on the Continent before associating himself with motion pictures. For many years he was leading man with Mme. Rejane, playing the role of Napoleon in "Madame Sans-Gene" more than 1,600 times. Among other well-known plays produced in France in which he played the leading male roles are "La Gamine," "Le Scandale," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "A Doll's House," "Divorcons" and "Alsace."

He later was general manager and stage director of the Rejane theatre in Paris, and was the producing director of the Renaissance theatre and the Gymnase theatre, staging the productions of the greatest actors in the world. He deserted the stage to accept the position of producing director for the French Eclaire Company, and his artistic accomplishments attracted wide attention. Maurice Tourneur was a pupil of Mr. Chautard and was taught the intricacies of film production along the lines that the dramatic wizard had inaugurated.

Harry Hilliard Will Appear With May Allison in a New Metro Production

Cast Named for Allison Play

Metro Surrounds Star in Her Picture, "The Way to a Man's Heart," with Carefully Selected Supporting Players

IN "The Way to a Man's Heart," May Allison's third starring subject, which was written for her by June Mathis, the star has the support of a cast which Metro considers one of the strongest it has ever provided for one of its artists.

Harry Hilliard plays opposite the star in the role of Perry Arnold. For two years Mr. Hilliard was leading man under the Fox banner for such stars as Theda Bara, June Caprice, Valeska Suratt and Vivian Martin. On the stage he has appeared prominently with Wilton Lackaye, Blanche Ring, Florence Reed, Marie Dressler and Cyril Scott. Mr. Hilliard joins Metro after a successful engagement in "The Very Idea," in which he played the role originated by Richard Bennett.

Frank Currier, Metro character actor, is seen in another "father" role as Daniel Houston, the parent of Virginia Houston, who is portrayed by Miss Allison. One of Mr. Currier's greatest characterizations is that of Pharos, the old Gypsy chief, in "Toys of Fate," the latest picture starring Nazimova, a Screen Classics production.

Edward Connelly, another actor who appeared in "Toys of Fate," plays Lionel Houston, the brother of Daniel. He played Dr. Zulph in Metro's Serial "The Great Secret," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Stage successes of Mr. Connelly include Arnold Bennett's "The Great Adventure" and George Ade's "The Colonel."

Christine Mayo, who is a member of the all-star cast in "The House of Mirth," which was recently completed at the Metro studio, is cast as Rose Mason. Miss Mayo has played for Metro in "The Spell of the Yukon," "The Iron Woman" and "The Snowbird." She has played prominently on the stage in "Excuse Me" and "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

Fred C. Jones and Kate Blancke are also in the cast, as are Pauline Dempsey and Anthony Byrd, two of the best known colored players of the screen. There are also four clever children, Phoebe Starr, Maury Steuart, Howard Oppenheim and Dion Muse, the last named being a diminutive colored lad who is seen as his own true self in many amusing scenes.

In directing the production Harry Franklin was assisted by P. Thad. Volkman.

Offer Suggestions for Exploiting "Viviette"

Paramount directs the attention of exhibitors to the possibilities for special exploitation offered by "Viviette," Vivian Martin's newest picture, adapted from William J. Locke's novel of that name.

By arrangement with local booksellers, the releasing organization points out, the window display should be a profitable medium for advertising the picture. A suit of armor and old duelling pistols are used in the picture—this suggests splendid lobby display where such articles can be obtained. Generally the prop room of a local legitimate theatre has these things which could be rented or borrowed.

Finally, play up the fact that "Viviette" is a Paramount picture—use the trademarks freely—it will bring business, says the Famous Players-Lasky Co.

"De Luxe Annie" in Rival Broadway Houses

"De Luxe Annie," Norma Talmadge's newest Select picture, has the unusual distinction of having been shown the week of May 19 in two Times Square picture theatres. The play was the feature attraction at the Rialto theatre during the entire week, while on Wednesday and Thursday it was offered the patrons of Loew's New York theatre, practically across the street from the Rothapfel house.

This is said to be the only time Lieut. Rothapfel has ever consented to play a star's feature production day and date with any other New York City theatre. It is taken as a fine tribute to Miss Talmadge's popularity and artistry.

First Anniversary of Standard Pictures

THE Fox Film Corporation, in a review of what Standard Pictures have accomplished, calls attention to the fact that it is just a year since work was started on "The Spy," the first Standard issue, which was released on August 19.

"Director Richard Stanton commenced on that drama in the latter part of May," the review says, "and since then we have made twenty other films for release as Standard Pictures. The mere mention of their names is almost sufficient to indicate the tremendous scope and power and remarkable variety of subjects."

The Standard Pictures to date, in the order in which they were issued, are: "The Spy," "The Honor System," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Conqueror," "Camille," "When a Man Sees Red," "Alladin and the Wonderful Lamp," "The Rose of Blood," "Treasure Island," "A Daughter of the Gods," "Troublemakers," "DuBarry," "Cheating the Public," "The Forbidden Path," "Les Miserables," "Woman and the Law," "Rough and Ready," "The Blindness of Divorce," "The Soul of Buddha" and "True Blue."

Additional productions which are to be released as Standard Pictures during the next few months include "The Caillaux Case," "Queen of the Sea," "Under the Yoke" and "Riders of the Purple Sage."

"When we made our preliminary announcement about the forthcoming dramas last year," the review continues, "we promised that Standard Pictures would be all that their name implies—films worthy to be a Standard of comparison. We have been careful, as the list shows so clearly, to cover a very wide range of subjects. We have made historical plays and have had impersonated historical characters of first importance; we have screened propaganda films such as 'Woman and the Law' and 'The Blindness of Divorce,' and we were responsible for the innovation that was introduced as 'Jack and the Beanstalk' and others in that series.

"Our next year of Standard Pictures will be even more notable, if the plans which we are now rapidly completing are carried through to success." We have many more exceptionally attractive productions for Standard Pictures that are to be released within the next few months."

Travel Filming Has Its Perils

Clyde E. Elliott, Who Made Series for Post Film Company, Released by Pathe, Had His Troubles in West Indies

THE innumerable hardships and difficulties encountered by Clyde E. Elliott, creator of the Post Film Company's series of travel films which beginning June 16 are to be distributed by Pathe and shown throughout the United States under the auspices of leading daily newspapers in the larger centers, make sitting in comfortable theatre chairs and "traveling" with the eyes particularly attractive just now.

"Authorities in the English and French possessions are on the alert these days for German spies, and, it seems, that every stranger to their shores is regarded as an enemy agent until he proves otherwise," said Mr. Elliott the other day.

"The man with the motion picture camera, who might, of course, be out for the very purpose of getting pictures of forts, gun-locations and vulnerable points, must be watched. The authorities want to know more than a passport will tell—they want the history of a man's life—and what is more, they get it.

"Citizens, of the United States," he continued, "or the vast majority at any rate, hardly realize that within twelve hundred miles of New York, England and France have island possessions that are considered of much importance to these powers, especially in the time of war for the reason that they furnish naval bases and coaling stations. These islands are in the West Indies, and it is here that my cameraman and myself spent a few months in making films—and in fighting for the right to make them. The authorities of such British islands as the Barbadoes, Trinidad, St. Lucia, and the French authorities in Guadeloupe and Martinique, seem to be of the opinion that the Germans will at any moment carry the war right into the West Indies. During the early months of the conflict, the authorities of the Barbadoes had the harbor mined to prevent the entrance of submarines. The guardians of the Barbadoes imagine that the entire German fleet is off their island only a few miles, just waiting a slackening of vigilance in order that they may come sailing in to destroy the little island."

In Martinique, Director Elliott and his operator were arrested while taking pictures along the waterfront, and it took several hours for them to make satisfactory explanations as to what they were doing. This, too, was in the face of United States passports, and written permission from the Governor of Martinique to make pictures on the island. Martinique is the French naval base in the West Indies, and the authorities naturally are rather suspicious of the purpose for which pictures are being taken.

Well-Known Players in "Doll's House"

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation calls attention to the cast supporting Elsie Fergusan in Ibsen's "A Doll's House," released as an Artcraft June 2.

"The part of the straight-laced husband of Nora Helmar is played by H. E. Herbert, who is seemingly an indulgent and adoring bridegroom, but whose vacillating character is shown after the years go by and adversity shows its unwelcome head. The hypocrisy of Helmar awakens repugnance in the heart of the wife, who has evolved into a strong and resourceful woman, and who rejects a reconciliation when the clouds have flown by.

Alex. K. Shannon has the part of Krogstadt, the blackmailing money-lender, who brings grief to the Helmar household. His better nature is touched by the plea of Mrs. Linden, played by Ethel Grey Terry, and he destroys the evidence incriminating Nora. Warren Cook is Dr. Rank, the family physician, indirectly precipitating the domestic tragedy by advising that Helmar be sent to a Southern clime, to raise the funds for which the faithful wife commits forgery.

Mrs. R. S. Anderson plays the part of Anna, the nurse, and Tula Belle who appeared in "The Blue Bird," and Ivy Ward are the Helmar children and Douglas Redmond and Charles Crompton the Krogstadt children. These little ones are well known in the films, despite their brief span of life, and this is probably the first time that four such prominent child actors have appeared in one film. Maurice Tourneur directed the picture.

Select Drama Broke a Record

Select reports that "Over There," its patriotic photodrama which features the work of the Red Cross, is meeting with continued public approval wherever shown.

C. M. Peregrine, manager of the American theatre, Corning, Iowa, recently wrote to C. W. Taylor, Select's Omaha branch manager: "'Over There,' your patriotic production, smashed our box-office record to smithereens. We played to more gross business on the last day of the run than was ever known before in our seven years' experience as an exhibitor."

Hayakawa Pictures Booked in Many Cities

Charles Greenberg, secretary of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, who has recently visited San Francisco, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburg and other cities on his way to New York, wires Treasurer W. J. Connery in Los Angeles that the leading exhibitors in the above-named cities are displaying considerable interest in the forthcoming Hayakawa productions, the majority of them agreeing to book the pictures. Mr. Greenberg was accompanied on his trip by F. J. Howkins, manager of distribution.

Virginia Pearson, In "The Firebrand," William Fox Production

Civil War Veterans Come to Farnum's Rescue

To give the proper atmosphere to a street set in the new Fox production, "Riders of the Purple Sage," in which he was acting, William Farnum, the Fox star, enlisted the aid of 150 Civil War veterans from a Government home the other day and not only tided himself over a difficulty but also gave the old men a treat in the way of entertainment.

A hurry call for old men to participate failed to bring more than a few, and rather than hire a lot of high school boys and camouflage them with whiskers it was decided by Director Frank Lloyd to accept Farnum's suggestion, whereupon ten big automobiles were sent out to the home near Hollywood with the message that it was Farnum's treat. There was little further difficulty, although some of the veterans balked at first at the idea of discarding their blue uniforms and donning clothes of the early Mormon period.

Pathe Announces a New Western Serial

Announcement from Pathe this week carries the news that the next serial released through the worldwide organization of the big distributing company will be "Hands Up," produced by the Astra Film Corporation, story by Gilson Willets, scenario by Jack Cunningham, and starring Ruth Roland with George Chesebro as the hero. "Hands Up" is a Western story dealing with a field of motion picture material not yet touched for the screen, the traditions and legends of the Inca Indians, with a modern story of romance and adventure. In addition to Miss Roland and Mr. Chesebro in the two leading roles the cast further includes Easter Walters, George Gebhardt and William A. Carroll, the picture being under the direction of James Horne, who produced the "Bull's-Eye."

Jay Belasco Hurries East

Margaret Clayton Plays Lead for Cohan

In George M. Cohans new Artcraft picture, "Hit the Trail Holiday," which will be released the middle of June, the leading feminine role is played by Margaret Clayton. The Cohan picture is said to give Miss Clayton a fine opportunity to assert her talent in the part of Edith Jason, the hotelkeeper's daughter, who wins the ex-bartender over to the prohibition cause.

According to the Famous Players-Lasky office, Miss Clayton makes an ideal lead for the famous Yankee Doodle Boy. This is the first time that she has appeared in an Artcraft picture, although she has had wide experience in motion pictures covering a period of some six years, four of which she acted in important portrayals for Essanay, one with Paralta and the balance in special engagements. Among the films in which she met with particular favor are "The Great Divide," "Inside the Lines," "Prince of Graustark," "The Night Worker," with Taylor Holmes in "Two Bit Seats" and the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series.

Prior to her appearance on the screen Miss Clayton played in stock for three years in Salt Lake City, where she gained valuable training for the demands of the photoplay.

Novel Settings Are Used in "The Venus Model"

In "The Venus Model," her newest Goldwyn picture, Mabel Normand appears in a production said to be replete with movement, interest and unusual beauty. According to Goldwyn, although all these elements are concentrated in the person of the star the production itself is unique.

The settings were devised by Hugo Ballin. They range all the way from a shop window simulating a sandstrewn beach where Mabel Normand poses in a chic bathing costume to a restaurant where living birds are used in great numbers for decorative purposes. They are not caged but are grouped on branches of trees set in niches in the walls. Love birds, parrakeets and Java sparrows are used, with some magnificent parrots hanging in ornamental rings. The effect is original with Mr. Ballin and is an outstanding feature of the production.

Brandt on Tour of Exchanges

Universal Official Will Visit All Branches in the Country—To Preach Anti-Kaiser Propaganda Throughout Organization

JOE BRANDT, assistant treasurer and general sales manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, left New York May 20 on a trip which will take him to every exchange in the United States owned and controlled by the organization.

The purposes of Mr. Brandt's trip are manifold. Besides becoming acquainted with every member of the sales force, he probably will employ capable publicity and sales promotion men for each of the more important exchanges. He also will instruct the entire personnel of the organization as to what is expected of them in assisting the Government to win the war. In commenting upon this before leaving New York, Mr. Brandt said:

"President Laemmle feels that the first duty of every employe of Universal is to do everything in his power to help the Allies win this war. To accomplish this patriotism must be placed before business and personal ends. This fact naturally upsets many selling precedents, especially in the film business and of course in other businesses too.

"There are many good war propaganda pictures on the market. One of the best, 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' is being rented through Universal exchanges throughout the country.

"But there are several other splendid war propaganda pictures being released by other companies. The American public should see them.

"One thing the members of our sales organization must do is to promote the rentals of all of these war propaganda pictures. It doesn't make any difference to Universal if it is 'The Kaiser' or some picture released by another distributor. If the picture brings home to the American people the necessity of standing squarely behind our armies at the front the picture must be promoted.

"We are taking the position that every picture that will cause increased patriotism or hatred of the Kaiser should be presented in every motion picture theatre in America.

"Every salesman of every selling organization in the motion picture industry must be a promoter for every convincing war propaganda picture. If we had our way, if it was financially possible to make the number of prints, we would have 'The Kaiser' presented in every motion picture theatre in America on the same day. And we would do the same thing with 'Over the Top' and 'My Four Years in Germany.'

"This is the time every salesman must be a booster for every picture that shows the barbarity of the Kaiser and his advisers."

Southern Atmosphere for Dalton's Next

WITH a real Southern camp meeting and other adjuncts essential to a play dealing with the territory south of the Mason and Dixon line, Dorothy Dalton's newest picture for Paramount will be provided with an unusual amount of Southern atmosphere. One of the big items in the picture is a fox hunt, and not until everything else had been arranged, the dogs secured—real houn' dawgs, too—the redcoated huntsman engaged and the blooded "hunters" provided, was it discovered that a fox was not so easy to procure. It has long been the boast of film folk in the West that anything could be found in California from a skyscraper down to a gopher-hole—and this is true of anything but a fox. Reynard is conspicuous by his absence. Want ads were put in papers and the Ince studio was immediately besieged by people who had pet coyotes and wolves, which they knowingly assured the producers would be just as good in "long shots"—evidencing how film nomenclature has become prevalent in Southern California. But Mr. Ince wanted a fox—and he's going to get it if he has to send to Kansas for one. Meantime the fox-hunting scenes are being held up till one of the genus is secured.

Enid Bennett has finished another picture at Hollywood for Paramount release, titled "The Vamp," which will follow her "A Desert Wooing." The last named picture, by the way, Thomas H. Ince pronounces Miss Bennett's best to date. Following "The Vamp," Miss Bennett will be seen in a picture dealing with the "wet and dry" problem of a Middle Western town. Jerome Storm will direct it.

Charles Ray is vacationing while Dorothy Dalton is working on her Southern picture under R. William Neill. He is now at Coronado watching the sad sea waves, etc. Later he may go on an eastward trip. He has a month off. Incidentally, in "A Nine O'Clock Town," which he has just finished for Paramount, the young Ince star collaborated with the author and director, Victor L. Schertzinger, on the subtitles.

World Starts Releasing Its Comedy Series

Starting the week of May 27, World Pictures is now releasing Fay Tincher and Marie Dressler comedies, the two stars alternating. One comedy will be released every two weeks. The schedule reads as follows:

May 27, Fay Tincher in "Main 1-2-3"; June 10, Marie Dressler in "Fired"; June 24, Fay Tincher in "Some Job," and June 8, Marie Dressler in "Agonies of Agnes."

Miss Tincher and her company are busily engaged in making future releases at her studio in California, while Miss Dressler is about to begin a new series of comedies at the World studios at New York. Both direct their own companies.

Five World Releases for July

Barbara Castleton, Madge Evans, Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge Featured in the Order Named

BARBARA CASTLETON, Madge Evans, Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge are named as the stars of five World Pictures scheduled for release during the month of July. World Pictures declares that in the making of these program releases such care has been exercised that they will compare favorably with some of the best special features sold on the open market.

Barbara Castleton in "The Heart of a Girl" is scheduled for July 1. John G. Adolfi, producer of the third Annette Kellerman feature, handled the direction of this picture, and his initial World Picture is said to be of marked superiority. Irving Cummins is the leading man and the remainder of the cast includes Kate Lester, Grace Stevens, Florence Coventry, Clay Clement, John Tansey, W. T. Carleton, Anthony Byrd, Charles Wellesley, Joe Smiley and a number of other excellent actors.

The second production, released on July 8, is "Neighbors," featuring Madge Evans, the child star, and Johnny Hines, who makes his maiden appearance as a World star in this picture. Frank Crane, who staged "Thais" for Mary Garden, was responsible for the direction. The picture is a portrait of little Madge as a hoydenish youngster who by her pranks effectively stirs up the ire of the aristocratic neighborhood in which she resides. Violet Palmer, Maxine Elliot Hicks, Herbert Pattee, Katherine Johnson, Frank Beamish, Anthony Merlo and several others form the supporting cast.

Kitty Gordon appears in the third July release of World Pictures on July 15 in "Tinsel." Oscar Apfel, whose previous record needs no comment, directed the picture. The cast assisting Miss Gordon is almost entirely composed of principals, namely, Muriel Ostriche, Frank Mayo, Anthony Merlo, Bradley Barker, George de Carleton and Marie Nau. The mounting of the picture is said to be lavish and Miss Gordon wears a number of gowns in keeping with her reputation for sartorial beauty.

Director Oscar Apfel, Alice Lee and Warner Oland Rehearse a Scene for "Mandarin Gold," a World Picture

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley make their joint appearance in "The Golden Wall" on July 23, which was produced under the direction of Del Henderson. Besides Mr. Blackwell and Miss Greeley, other World stars make their appearance in the picture, namely, Madge Evans and Johnny Hines. George MacQuarrie, Jack Drumier, Kate Lester, Winifred Leighton, Florence Coventry and Louise Rigny form the assisting cast of high excellence.

On July 29 June Elvidge in "The Judge" is released, completing the five July productions of World Pictures. Travers Vale was in charge of the work of production. John Bowers plays, as usual, opposite Miss Elvidge, and among the large cast supporting the star are Albert Hart, George MacQuarrie, Marguerite Gale, Marie Pagano, George Morgan, Dore Davison and Henrietta Simpson.

Edith Storey Coming East for Summer

EDITH STOREY is soon to return to the East from the Metro studios in California where she has been engaged in the production of Metro features and screen classics for the past year. She will leave Hollywood as soon as she completes her work in "As the Sun Went Down," the screen version of George D. Baker's play of the same name.

Mrs. Storey, the star's mother, returned to the East some time ago, to get everything in readiness for her daughter at their home at Northport, L. I. On her arrival Miss Storey will begin work at once on a new play, as yet unnamed, written for her by Lois Zellner. She will require no rest or vacation, since, as her mother says, "Edith thinks no more of taking a trip across the continent than she does of going to New Jersey in the Hudson tube." "As the Sun Went Down," the picture now being completed, is a stirring photodrama of the days following the gold rush of '49. The star plays "Colonel Billy," a rough diamond of the mining camps, and the story is said to provide action and romance in the proper proportions. E. Mason Hopper is directing the Baker production. Her director in the Zellner picture has not yet been announced.

Metro pictures in which Miss Storey has starred are "Treasure of the Sea," by Leighton Osmun; the multiple-reel Screen Classics production, "The Legion of Death," by June Mathis; "The Eyes of Mystery," from the novel, "The House in the Mist," by Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy, in the People's Magazine; "Revenge," from Edward Moffatt's novel, "Heart's Steadfast;" "The Claim," from the Broadway success of the same name by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare; with "The Demon," from the C. N. and A. M. Williamson novel.

Hilliard Leading Man for May Allison

Harry Hilliard has been engaged to play opposite May Allison in her third Metro picture, "The Way to a Man's Heart," a story with a Southern setting written by Juno Mathis and prepared for the screen by Katharine Kavanaugh. Harry Franklin is directing the picture.

Hilliard has been in pictures for several years, his first appearance being in "The Strength of the Weak," with Mary Fuller. For two years he was leading man under the Fox banner for Vivian Martin, Theda Bara, June Caprice and Valeska Suratt. Some of his most successful pictures are "Merely Mary Ann" and "A Modern Thelma" with Vivian Marton; "Every Girl's Dream," "Little Miss Happiness," "Patsy," and six other plays with June Caprice; "The New York Peacock" with Valeska Suratt; and "Romeo and Juliet," "Heart and Soul" and "Her Greatest Love" with Theda Bara.

Finley in His Fifth Blue Ridge Drama

In the Blue Ridge drama "The Man from Nowhere," his fifth production for General Film, Fred Finley is said to be presented in one of the most appealing dramatic roles that he has ever played. A sawmill scene furnishes the climax for this play in which Finley plays the part of a very material witness to a murderous attack by the mill foreman on one of his new hands. Marion Henry is again seen as leading woman.

Several well-known players formerly associated with Finley at the Vitagraph studio are now working with him at Bat Cave, N. C. Among them are Harry Hammel and Logan Paul.

Tom Mix Starts Another Under Reynolds

Tom Mix has started work at the Fox Hollywood studios on a screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's story, "Slow Burgess." Lynn Reynolds, who handled the production of Mix's last picture, "Ace High," is directing from a scenario by Bennett Cohen. The cast, which is just announced, consists of Kathleen Connors, George Nicholls, C. McHugh, Jack Dill, Annette DeFoe, Val Haul, E. E. Wallace and Clarence Burton. Exhibitors will recall Annette DeFoe for her many appearances in Fox comedies last year.

Marie Osborne's New Play Is Named

"The Voice of Destiny" is the title finally selected by Pathe for the new Baby Marie Osborne picture, made by Diando soon to be released. The story was written by H. C. Hoagland, formerly of Pathe but now with the Committee on Public Information. It is said to have an unusual twist, showing the way evidence leading to the conviction of a murderer sometimes is attained.

Emily Stevens Has New Leading Man

John Merkyl has been engaged by Metro as leading man for Emily Stevens in "A Man's World," adapted from Rachel Crothers' play, which is now being produced under the direction of Herbert Blache.

Starting his professional career as a singer in grand opera, Merkyl played in repertoire in leading European capitals. He became more or less of a globe trotter and sang in opera throughout the Far East, China and Japan, twice encircling the globe. In the United States he at first followed his profession as a singer, appearing in such successful plays as "Miss Springtime" under the management of Klaw and Erlanger.

He has previously appeared under the Metro standard opposite Mme. Petrova in "The Soul Market." For Famous Players he has supported Pauline Frederick in "Fedora"; for Fox he played with Virginia Pearson in "The Blazing Love," and with Betty Nansen in "The Celebrated Scandal."

About New Pictures

Edith Storey and the Metro players making up the cast of "As the Sun Went Down," the versatile star's newest screen vehicle following "The Demon," "Treasure of the Sea" and "The Claim," have gone on location for several days in Topanga Canyon.

Monroe Salisbury, while appearing in his newest Bluebird production, "The Eagle," wore a fantastic headpiece of eagle's feathers in the play. To assure stability he glued the downy helmet to his head every morning and pried it loose ever night.

General Film Company reports an unusual advance demand for the first release in the Diamond comedy series, starring Diana Allen and a flock of eccentric comedians. The initial releases in the Diamond comedy series are "Way Up in Society," "His Fatal Fate" and "Her Ambition's Ambition."

The part played by "For the Freedom of the World" in stimulating enlistment grows more pronounced as time goes on. From the first Goldwyn was confident that the Lowry war spectacle would prove more than mere entertainment.

Returning from her Liberty Loan tour, Mary Pickford immediately plunged into her studio activities, which consisted of helping Director Taylor cut "How Could You, Jean?" and beginning the new production, "Captain Kidd, Jr."

As the final episodes of the big Pathe serial, "The House of Hate," are now being made by Pearl White and Antonio Moreno in the Astra Studio in Jersey City, Pathe is issuing the third and final campaign book for the use of exhibitors.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are working day and night at Universal City on their one-reel comedies. This week they finished a fun-fest, "Straight-Crooks."

The recent raid upon the city of London by Hun aviators has served to arouse unusual interest in "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," reports General Film, which is distributing this two-part war news thriller for the Interstate Film Company.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have placed in production at the Metro Studio a new comedy screen drama by Corporal Luther A. Reed, at present entitled "Both Members." Charles J. Brabin is directing the new feature.

The settings appearing in Paramount and Artcraft pictures now being produced in the Fort Lee, N. J., studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are the work of William MacNulty, who has been appointed Technical and Art Director.

Director Windom is completing his first World picture, "The Power and the Glory," and is preparing to commence work on a new production starring June Elvidge, bearing the title of "The Appearance of Evil."

Theda Bara, it is announced from the William Fox offices, began work to-day at the Fox Studios in Hollywood, Cal., on a new Theda Bara super-production, after a rest of a fortnight following the completion of "Under the Yoke."

In the picture which Clara Kimball Young and her company are making to follow "The Reason Why" in this star's series of Select Pictures, the story is located in the outlying desert regions of South Africa. There the lion reigns supreme, and his lords are the tigers.

At the Fort Lee Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Lina Cavalieri has commenced the production of "A Woman of Impulse," another Paramount picture to follow, "Love's Conquest," under the direction of Edward Jose.

After several weeks preliminary work, Director Oscar Apfel has "Mandarin's Gold" under way at the World Studio. Kitty Gordon is the star, and Irving Cummings is her leading man.

Not the least of the unusual elements in the story of "Social Ambition," Selexart's melodrama distributed by Goldwyn, is found in the character of Rose, a dance hall girl. This role is played by Rhea Mitchell.

"Turn About, Eleanor," Ethel M. Kelley's novel, will be reconstructed into a Bluebird photodrama. Ethel Kelley has been well known as a short-story writer for many years.

Bert Lytell and members of his support in the Metro production, "No Man's Land," are on location at Catalina Island. The young star's second picture under the Metro banner, which follows "The Trail to Yesterday," is well along.

"Joan" for Canada's Red Cross Drive

Goldwyn has forwarded nine prints of generous cuttings from Mabel Normand's "John of Plattsburg" to Canada at the request of the Canadian Red Cross Society's Campaign Committee. The cuttings are to be incorporated in a special patriotic film which is being prepared for exhibition during Red Cross Week. The film is being assembled by President George F. Gault and other officers of the Manitoba Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society.

Arrangements are being made through Charles J. Rosebault, managing editor of the Vigilantes, of which Porter Emerson Browne, author of "Joan of Plattsburg," is a member, to issue Mr. Browne's fiction version of the picture in "boiler plate" through the agency of the Western Newspaper Union. This will be used in thousands of small towns, as the full-page matrices are already being used in more than 200 newspapers in the large centers.

E. P. Terhune Story for Margarita Fisher

Margarita Fisher's next American-Mutual production, released June 10, is "A Square Deal," a Red Book Magazine story by Albert Payson Terhune, adapted to the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney.

The direction was in the hands of Lloyd Ingraham, who has supervised the production of many of Miss Fisher's successes. Jack Mower plays the lead, that of the young husband, and others in the cast are Val Paul, Constance Johnson, Louis M. Wells and Nanine Wright.

Gerard Film in Pennsylvania

"My Four Years in Germany" Opens at Easton and Erie—Mayors of Erie and Louisville, Ky., Give Endorsement to Production

"MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY," unabridged and unrestricted by the censorship which for a time threatened it, is now being shown in Pennsylvania, Charles F. Oldt's Third street theatre in Easton and the Strand in Erie being the first houses in the state to present it. A week's run opened there May 20. It is also booked for the week of June 6 at L. F. Heilberger's Lorenz theatre in Bethlehem and the Lehigh Orpheum in South Bethlehem.

In Louisville, Ky., the picture met with such an enthusiastic reception during its first week at the Mary Anderson theatre that Manager Lee Goldberg was obliged to hold it over for a second week. According to reviews in the Louisville newspapers, Ambassador Gerard's revelations have aroused more discussion than any motion picture material that has been shown in the Kentucky city in many years.

Hon. George Weissinger Smith, Mayor of Louisville, wrote the following letter of endorsement after attending the first showing of the film:

May 18, 1918.

MR. LEE GOLDBERG,
Mary Anderson theatre,
Louisville, Ky.

Dear Sir: I regard the picture, "My Four Years in Germany" as a most powerful incentive to America to curb the arrogance of Germany. If this picture does not arouse resentment in any heart, that heart is not American.

Yours truly,
(Signed) GEO. WEISSINGER SMITH,
Mayor.

At Erie, Pa., the Gerard picture also stimulated Mayor Miles B. Kitts to express himself in these words after he had witnessed its screening at the Strand: "Last evening I had the pleasure of viewing the picture entitled 'My Four Years in Germany' by Ambassador Gerard. It is vividly descriptive and highly educational. It is a picture which should be seen by every person in the United States. No better stimulus for enlistment could be offered."

Out in Seattle, Wash., F. V. Fisher, secretary of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Inc., gave a special showing of "My Four Years in Germany," at the Liberty theatre recently, which was attended by the Mayor, the City Council, heads of the Council of Defense, Liberty Loan Committee, Red Cross, as well as the Commanding General at Camp Lewis, the Admiral of the Puget Sound Navy Yard, the managers of all the film exchanges in the district and many of the prominent citizens. The picture received tumultuous applause, it is stated, and Mr. Fisher and his associates were highly complimented upon their enterprise in securing it for distribution in the northwest.

Triangle Dramatizes South and West

TRIANGLE'S first release on its program for June 2 is "The Man Who Woke Up," by William V. Mong, who with Pauline Starke is featured in the production which was done under the direction of J. W. McLaughlin. Darrell Fose and George Hernandez also have important roles. "The Man Who Woke Up" is a story of the South and relates the conflict between the unyielding character of a staid old aristocratic Southern gentleman and the progressive ideas of a kindly Northerner, who is residing in Oglesby with the philanthropic intentions of investing his millions to the welfare and progress of this small town community. Many trying experiences are encountered by the Southerner before his prejudiced dislike for the Northerner is overcome, but he awakes to a realization that the intentions of the philanthropist are sincere, when his good wife finally asserts herself. Then the romance which has developed between the son and daughter of the feudists reaches a happy climax and the two journey onward with the parental blessing.

The second feature release for the week is "The Red-Haired Cupid," a Western play featuring Roy Stewart. It is the first of a series of adaptations of the famous "Red Saunders" stories by Henry Wallace Phillips. It relates the adventures of a ranch foreman who through his natural interest in "things human" becomes involved in the love affair of his pal with an attractive little woman from the East. As a modern cupid with Western diplomacy he guides their romance to a happy conclusion. In the supporting cast are Ray Griffith and Peggy Pearce.

A Keystone comedy, "The Poor Fish," featuring Ed Brady and Claire Anderson, is the concluding release of the week.

Metro Stars Speaks for War Savings

May Allison and Emmy Wehlen, two of Metro's stars, were prominent factors in the drive for the War Saving Stamps Campaign in Philadelphia. Manager Robert Lynch, of the Philadelphia Metro Exchange, went especially to New York to bring these two stars to aid in the Pledge Week drive.

The famous Liberty Statue, south of City Hall, was the scene of the sale, and Miss Allison spoke enthusiastically to the large crowd which gathered there and succeeded in getting quite a number of pledge cards signed.

Miss Wehlen sang a few patriotic war songs, and delivered a very inspiring address. Several thousand dollars' worth of stamps were pledged as the result of their good work.

Essanay Prosecuting Film Pirates

In the first of a series of prosecutions which the Essanay Film Company is conducting against film pirates, Lee Friedman has been convicted at Cleveland of larceny, Joe Morrow has been found guilty of receiving stolen property and of contributing to the delinquency of a minor and a third man, one Orinesky, is about to be tried on the two last named charges.

Essanay discovered that several Broncho Billy and Chaplin films were missing in Cleveland. Andrew J. Callaghan was dispatched to the Forest City to investigate. He discovered that films were being shown that did not come from the authorized exchanges. These were traced to the men who were renting them out.

Detectives followed these films when they were returned and found that business was conducted from a shack in the outskirts of the city. The place was raided and Morrow and Orinesky arrested. Twenty-five stolen films, some of them belonging to Essanay and several to other companies, were found.

The detectives also waylaid Lee Friedman and took him into custody. The boy confessed to the thefts. He stated that the gang's method was to bribe boys working in film exchanges to steal the films, for which they were paid a small sum by the gang. Friedman admitted taking films from the exchange for which he worked.

The same organized method of theft was discovered in other cities and arrests are expected shortly.

Purchase the Paralta Studios

Robert Brunton and J. D. Hampton Buy Big Hollywood Plant and Will Produce for Paralta—Katz Makes a Statement

ROBERT BRUNTON and Jesse Durham Hampton have purchased of Paralta Plays, Inc., the Paralta studios at Hollywood, Cal., where they will make pictures for Paralta. Mr. Brunton has been the chief executive at the Coast studios since the inception of Paralta Plays, while Mr. Hampton, who is a brother of Ben B. Hampton, is himself well known in the film industry.

This is the first important development since the recent acquisition by Herman Katz, John E. DeWolf and others of the holdings in Paralta Plays, Inc., of Carl Anderson, Nat I. Brown and Robert T. Kane as well as the Paralta studios and the companies subsidiary to Paralta Plays.

From California Mr. Katz, now chairman of the Board of Directors, sends the following statement: "Following numerous conferences the issues existing between the Paralta interests have been satisfactorily adjusted and our full program of production will be immediately resumed. During the period of this adjustment, however, curtailment of the Paralta program has been necessary. In consequence of such a state of uncertainty which often attends the settlement of corporation disagreements various wild rumors regarding our organization were circulated. Inasmuch as such reports had no foundation, I know that the public will be interested in an authentic statement of the facts.

"Paralta Plays, Inc., and Paralta Studios, Inc., were organized about a year ago by Mr. Robert T. Kane and Mr. Nat I. Brown, both of whom had had experience with motion picture organizations. Associated with them was Carl Anderson. The financial backing of the organization was represented by Mr. John E. DeWolf and myself. Mr. Robert Brunton, recognized as a highly competent executive in motion picture productions, was also a partner and officer, being our director of productions. Owing to disagreement over matters of policy and internal details of management, the stockholders divided into two factions. On one side was the financial element represented by Mr. DeWolf and myself, and on the other side stood Mr. Kane, Mr. Brown and Mr. Anderson, identified with the inception and promotion of the companies.

"It was during the settlement of the various issues that our production program was curtailed. Throughout all of this time, however, the financial backing of the Paralta companies was perfectly sound but until our interests, which had invested more than one million dollars in Paralta, could be assured what element was to control, operations under normal and satisfactory conditions were out of the question. Further uncertainty is now happily at an end.

"The adjustment of all differences has been effected by our purchase of the interests of Mr. Kane, Mr. Brown and Mr. Anderson in the Paralta companies and these gentlemen are no longer associated with us or Paralta. Mr. Brunton retains his financial holdings and is now in complete charge of the production of Paralta pictures. A further agreement has been effected in the detail and manner of production. The Katz and DeWolf element will limit their activities to financing, owning and distributing pictures under the title of 'Paralta Plays, Inc.,' while Mr. Brunton and Mr. Jesse Durham Hampton, prominently identified with the moving picture profession, have arranged the purchase of the new and extensive Paralta studio on Melrose avenue, Hollywood. There they will make pictures for the Paralta Plays, beginning May 9th. The name of this plant will be changed to the "Brunton Studios." An abundance of new capital to carry out our reorganization plans is in hand so the resumption of the full Paralta program is now assured without delay."

Universal Would Offset "Summer Slump"

UNIVERSAL has announced that it intends to offer to exhibitors as an offset to the bugaboo of the "summer slump," which, by the way, failed to materialize last year, a notable line of big summer offerings. The first of these will be "The Model's Confession," which will be released in six reels as a Universal Special Attraction the week of June 2.

Mary MacLaren appears as Iva Seldon, the model, in "The Model's Confession," which was directed by Ida May Park. The supporting cast consists of Kenneth Harlan, Edna Earle, Herbert Prior, Louis Willoughby and Gretchen Lederer. The play itself was picturized from a story which appeared in one of the popular magazines. The big punch comes when a farmer falls in love with his own daughter, only to be killed a few moments later in an automobile collision.

Herbert Prior plays the role of the aged roue not loved by women for himself but for his money. His moral code, summed up in few words, is that "every woman has her price." Years before the opening of the story the aged dandy meets the mother of the model. In one of the few softer moments he marries her. There is a child. He deserts mother and child. When the child grows to womanhood she obtains a position as manikin in an exclusive modiste's. There she meets the elite of society in which the father who deserted her moves.

Father and daughter, their identities unknown to each other, meet under rather unusual circumstances and the meeting soon leads to the fatal automobile ride. But before the father's death he acknowledges the deserted daughter and bequeaths his great wealth to her.

Rex Beach Play Featured Spring Opening

REX BEACH'S "Heart of the Sunset," distributed by Goldwyn, was selected by the management of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., as the feature for its "Spring Opening" week. According to H. D. Green, house manager, the theatre was packed at four performances daily for a week and a repeat date is planned for the very near future.

The Majestic appeared in gala spring attire for the occasion, and Mrs. J. J. Parker, wife of the president of the Majestic Amusement Company, was responsible for its beautiful appearance. She transformed the lobby into a bower of fruit blossoms, in the center of which was a life-size portrait of Anna Q. Nilsson, featured feminine player in the picture. Around it were 100 beautiful roses. Adjoining the Nilsson portrait was one of Rex Beach, the author, garbed in the costume worn by the Texas ranchers depicted in "Heart of the Sunset."

The girl ushers were resplendent in new costumes of colored silk designed by Mrs. Parker. She decorated the interior of the Majestic with the same care expended on making the lobby a place of flowered beauty. The boxes were decked in roses and fruit blossoms, as were either side of the stage. On the opening night of the "Heart of the Sunset" a rose was presented to each patron.

Many of Portland's high city officials responded to Mrs. Parker's invitation to be present at the formal spring opening at the Majestic. Two hundred soldiers from a nearby camp also enjoyed the thrilling Rex Beach picture as guests of the management.

Helen Eddy Engaged for Salisbury Cast

Helen Eddy, former Famous Players-Lasky actress, who appeared opposite George Beban in several Paramount productions, has been engaged by Director Elmer Clifton to support Monroe Salisbury in his next Bluebird picture, based on D. W. Ogden's novel, "The Rustler of Wind River."

More World Figures

The World Pictures statistician has just completed the task of compiling figures on the circulation attained by each picture issued by the World Film Corporation. These figures show that each picture in the World Library of Dependability attains a circulation in the United States of 8,000,000—in other words 8,000,000 Americans see each weekly World issue.

Fairbanks, Rested, Back at Work Again

Douglas Fairbanks has returned to Hollywood after spending five days roughing it on a ranch in Montana. He has resumed work on "Say, Young Fellow," under the direction of Joseph Henaberry, who staged "The Man From Painted Post." Hart Finishes Another Artcraft

After numerous delays occasioned by his service for the Third Liberty Loan, William S. Hart has at last completed "Shark Monroe," his latest Thomas H. Ince-Artcraft picture. He has already started on another in which Katherine MacDonald will again be his leading woman.

Special Music Score for "Venus" Film

A carefully prepared musical accompaniment for "The Triumph of Venus," the Edwin Bower Hesser creation, has been secured by General Film Company. The score, as arranged for the various cues, carries through this feature appropriately with all the action. The selection, "Pomp and Circumstance," is the theme for the scenes on Mt. Olympus where the gods are assembled. Vulvan is introduced with "Furioso No. 2," changing to "The Dance of Egyptian Maidens" when Apollo and the nymphs disport themselves. The adventure of Venus with Cupid, and the pastimes of her maidens in the lake is treated with a "Romance" theme. Her discovery of her mortal lover drowned takes passages from "Old Love Story." A "Bacchanale" theme is devoted to the action in which Diana and her train of maidens dominate the story. And so on throughout the film the best of music has been chosen to harmonize with the essentially artistic atmosphere of the production.

General Film states that a great many inquiries have been received for pre-release inspections of "The Triumph of Venus" and the spectacular features of it have been greatly admired by exhibitors in the New York City territory. Some big bookings are being arranged on this production starring Betty Lee, and introducing swimming stunts that challenge anything shown on the screen before.

"'The Planter' a Knock-out"—Buffalo Showman

"'The Planter' was certainly a knock-out," writes Samuel Carver, of the Family theatre, Buffalo, to Mutual. "The crowd enjoyed it immensely. In fact, it is one of the best productions I've seen, and my house took it with a vim. I played to a capacity house on it Sunday and had the mob jammed down the aisles during the evening. I'm seriously considering rebooking it for a return trip."

Mutual reports many new bookings on "The Planter," in which Tyrone Power is the star.

William J. Bowman with Metro-Yorke

William J. Bowman has been added to the directorial forces of Metro-Yorke and will assist Director Fred J. Balshofer in the making of Metro's version of Henry Kitchell Webster's "A King in Khaki," in which Harold Lockwood is starred.

Before his entrance into films Bowman played Shakespeare in support of Robert B. Mantell, McKee Rankin, Nance O'Neill and other stars. In 1912 he joined Thanhouser as an actor, playing leads, and after that engagement he became a director for the American Film Company. Successively thereafter he was with NYMP, Quality Pictures and Vitagraph, remaining with the last named company three years.

Another new addition to the Yorke-Metro forces is Edward J. Hass, who has been engaged as technical director.

Two Paramount-Sennett Comedies for June

Two Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies are slated for June. They are "Love Loops the Loop," directed by Walter Wright, released June 3, and "Two Tough Tenderfeet," directed by Richard Jones, released on the 17th.

"Love Loops the Loop" derives its title from one of its stunts, when Mary Thurman "loops the loop" on roller skates. The picture is said to be a veritable cyclone of fun, in which are many thrilling acts.

"Two Tough Tenderfeet" presents Ben Turpin and Charlie Lynn as two exceedingly tough individuals. Their adventures land them in the desert, where they successfully escape lions, wild men, jack rabbits and other creatures. At another time Charlie Lynn loses his money in a poker game and bets his watch. It happens, however, that the watch was lifted from Lynn's opponent at the card table by Lynn in a previous scene and his absent-mindedness proves a painful error.

Five More Snakevilles

"Sophie's Legacy," one of the new series of Snakeville Comedy re-issues, is a current release in General Film's list of comedies. With new prints and paper it is expected to duplicate its earlier success. Five additional subjects have been added to the five Snakeville subjects announced last week, making ten in all. They are: "Slippery Slim's Stratagem," "A Hot Time in Snakeville," "Snakeville's New Sheriff," "A Snakeville Epidemic" and "Sophie's Birthday Party."

Essanay's Releases for June

Essanay's schedule of releases for the month of June includes nine pictures. Four of these are Western pictures, the revivified Broncho Billy dramas, and five comedies, the Snakeville series.

On June 1 comes "Slippery Slim's Inheritance" followed each week by "Sophie's Legacy," "Sophie Gets Stung," "Slippery Slim—Diplomat" and "Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent."

Beginning June 7 the weekly releases are "Broncho Billy's Grit," "Broncho Billy's True Love," "Broncho Billy and the Western Girls" and "Broncho Billy Wins Out."

Coming Program Offerings

List Four Artcrafts for June

Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House" the First—Pickford, Fairbanks and George M. Cohan Starred in the Others

IN the schedule issued by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, four Artcraft pictures are listed for release in June by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Two of the pictures, featuring Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, respectively, were made at the West Coast studios, while the other two, in which Elsie Ferguson and George M. Cohan are starred, were produced in the East at the Fort Lee, N. J., plant.

"The first subject in the order of release," says Mr. Greene, "is Elsie Ferguson in 'A Doll's House,' adapted from the immortal play by Henrik Ibsen, the famous dramatist, who has provided vehicles for the best known actresses of Europe and America. 'A Doll's House' gives to Miss Ferguson an artistic and emotional role for which she is fitted both by reason of her talents and her pulchritude. It was produced by Maurice Tourneur and includes in the cast H. E. Herbert, Alex K. Shannon, Ethel Grey Terry, Warren Cook, Zelda Crosby, Mrs. R. S. Anderson and the juvenile players, Ivy Ward, Tula Belle, Douglas Redmond and Charles Crompton.

"On the 16th Douglas Fairbanks creates a new character as a newspaper reporter in 'Say, Young Fellow,' and it is quite likely that the novelty of this picture will make it the most attractive of his screen successes. The author and director of 'Say, Young Fellow,' is Joseph Henaberry, who had charge of the production of 'The Man From Painted Post.' A romantic love story runs through the sensational incidents in which the reporter 'gets the goods' on the high financial grafters, Marjorie Daw playing the leading feminine role. Others in the cast are Frank Campeau, Edythe Chapman, and James Neill.

"On the same day 'Hit the Trail Holliday,' starring George M. Cohan, is released. It was adapted to the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos from Cohan's play, which was one of the greatest successes in recent years, and was directed by Marshall Neilan. The personal popularity of George M. Cohan with the American public in the title role of this great play should pack every theatre in which it is exhibited. In the cast are Marguerite Clayton, Robert Broderick, Pat O'Malley, Russell Bassett, Richard Barthelmess and William Walcott.

"Mary Pickford again makes her appearance on June 23 in 'How Could You, Jean?' a most appropriate photoplay to follow her recent remarkable successes, 'Stella Maris' and 'Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley.' It was adapted by Frances Marion from the novel by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd, which has been widely circulated as a serial and in book form. It deals with an aristocratic young woman who is compelled through changing circumstances to work for her livelihood, and teems with heart interest and dramatic and sensational incidents. The production was staged by William D. Taylor, and includes in the cast Casson Ferguson, Herbert Standing, Spottiswoode Aitken, Fanny Midgely, Larry Peyton, Zazu Pitts, Mabelle Harvey and Lucille Ward."

Universal Inaugurates Two-Reel Series

UNIVERSAL will release the first of its new series of two-reel dramas upon which it plans to make a drive for several months on June 10. "Play Straight or Fight" is the title of the drama, which inaugurates the attempt of President Carl Laemmle to turn back the clock to the time when every person connected with the motion picture industry was prosperous and happy. That was the time when exhibitors were presenting programs made up entirely of short reel subjects.

In making its selection for its first release Universal states that it has picked an average product, refusing, for the sake of future business, to place its best foot forward and give the exhibitors the best of the two-reel subjects, several score of which have been made and are awaiting release date.

Helen Gibson plays the lead in this Western drama and "Hoot" Gibson, M. K. Wilson and G. Raymond Nye are in the supporting cast. Miss Gibson appears in the role of the protector of a younger brother who has fallen under the evil influence of unscrupulous companions. The climax comes when Helen learns that her brother is to take part in a stage hold-up. To save him she dons male attire and holds up the stage at a point several miles in advance of her brother's attempt.

The picture is claimed to be full of thrills as well as of action. It is from a story by Leon de la Motte which ordinarily would be stretched into five reels through the insertion of many scenes unnecessary to sustain the action. The scenario is by Karl Coolidge, and Paul Hurst directed.

Madge Evans Gets Button

In recognition of her services in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has presented an Honor Button to Madge Evans, child star of World Pictures.

Edith Storey, Metro Star, Is to Appear in "As the Sun Went Down"

Mutt and Jeff Draw Their Own Cartoon

The greatest success that has attended the release of any of Bud Fisher's animated Mutt and Jeff cartoons thus far, according to a statement by an official of the Fox Film Corporation, through whose exchanges they are now being distributed, is that scored by "A Fisherless Cartoon" issued a fortnight ago. The picture is "a cartoon within a cartoon" and recites in pen-and-ink drawings the efforts of the genial Mutt and Jeff to make a cartoon without the aid of their creator, Bud Fisher.

The statement says that the contract department at the Fox headquarters has received many letters and telegrams from exhibitors complimenting the Fox offices on the novelty and the originality of the subject and appreciating the extra footage that the film carries.

The picture, it is explained, runs about 650 feet—150 feet longer than the usual Mutt and Jeff. It had drawn extraordinary attention from the public and the exhibitor because it is believed to be the first that has shown the difficulties with which an artist making animated cartoons has to contend.

The artist's troubles are dealt with in humorous vein, of course, the official states, but the seriousness of the problem is there, nevertheless. Few persons realize that it requires thousands of individual sketches for the material from which an animated cartoon is derived.

More Triangles Announced for June

In addition to "The Heritage," "Station Content," "The Last Rebel" and "The Poor Fish," the last named of which is a Keystone comedy and all of which have been hitherto announced, Triangle states that its June schedule includes several unusual productions now in the making.

In response to the demand for the finer motion picture plot and for diversity of theme in Western dramas, Triangle will offer Roy Stewart in a series of cowboy plays adapted from the famous "Red Saunders" stories by Henry Wallace Phillips. "The Fly God" is the working title for the second of this series of Western thrillers and will be released June 23.

Program Glances

For the first time in several months the release list as issued weekly by the Universal Film Company for the week of June 10 lists but one serial episode. The one listed is the eleventh episode of "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp.

Another trio of popular stars is featured in an O. Henry story, "The Girl and the Graft," released this week by General Film Company. Edward Earle, Florence Dishon and Adele De Garde are the principals in this sprightly story of New York life.

The release on June 2 of "Love's Conquest," a Paramount picture starring Lina Cavalieri, will, for the first time, not only enable the general public to see this play at popular prices, but also to witness a production upon a scale impossible on the speaking stage.

If the plans of certain showmen are successful, and there is every indication that they will be, "Cleopatsy," one of the new Toto comedies to be released in two reels on June 23, will play "day and date" in cities with some one of the "Cleopatra" features.

Although Tom Mix and his extraordinary ability as a horseman are the major attractions in "Ace High," the current William Fox release, the picture is made notable, according to notices from the Fox offices by a particularly strong cast.

In "Her Ambitions Ambition" the leading feminine role is taken by Suelain Dudet, a New Orleans girl, who is said to have developed exceptional screen talent.

To portray the role of a "tiger woman" artistically, necessarily calls for talents of a high order, and "Her Final Reckoning," a Paramount picture released June 9, makes heavy demand upon Pauline Frederick, who stars in such a role as Marsa, the half-gypsy heroine of this photoplay.

Three Paramount pictures are released on May 27, presenting Marguerite Clark, Wallace Reid and Charles Ray in new starring subjects.

"As the Sun Went Down" is a picturization of George D. Baker's drama of the days when strong men battled for gold.

"The Eagle," soon to be released, is a daring story of fast action with the scenes laid west of the Rockies.

How American brains have always kept our country ahead of the rest of the world in gun construction is shown in the one hundred and twenty-first release of Paramount-Bray-Pictograph on May 27, wherein a complete history of American made guns from the days of the Revolution to the present is visualized, under the title of "Guns of Our Forefathers."

A daring theme is followed in "The Spawn," a new Bluebird photoplay, in which Grace Cunard stars under the direction of Joseph de Grasse. The play deals with conditions, as the author assumes they will be after the war.

Director W. P. S. Earle's initial World production, "The Blood of the Trevors," written by Maravene Thompson, required over one hundred horses for one battle scene. The prologue of the picture is laid in the Stuart period.

An innovation in motion picture stage settings is marked in the release on May 27 of "Prunella," the Paramount picture starring Marguerite Clark, which is an adaptation by Charles Maigne from the play by Granville Barker and Laurence Housman.

"Believe Me, Xantippe," the famous Harvard Prize play, has been done into screen form for Paramount Pictures, and with Wallace Reid starred, and Ann Little in the role of the pretty Western heroine, is said to touch the high-water mark in the field of rapid-fire light comedy.

"Her Final Reckoning" is the first Paramount picture directed by Emile Chautard, the distinguished French producer, who has set a high standard for future productions.

"The Rustler of Wind River," a well-known novel by D. W. Ogden, is to be used as Monroe Salisbury's newest starring vehicle. It is being rewritten into scenario form for Director Elmer Clifton.

"Merry Mermaids," a two-reel L-Ko comedy in which the L-Ko beauties are given unusual prominence, appears on the Universal schedule for June 10. The comedy revolves around a swimming school.

John Barrymore Has Signed to Appear in Paramount Pictures

"For Sale," Pathe's Chief Feature, Week of June 9

Pathe offers as its chief feature release on the program for the week of June 9 "For Sale," in which Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale are the leading players. In this production Pathe states that it has come upon an unexpected "find," saying that everybody who has seen it has become enthusiastic over it.

"Underworld Allies" is the title of Episode No. 14 of "The House of Hate," the serial in which Pearl White and Antonio Moreno are starred.

The Harold Lloyd comedy for the week is "Sic 'Em Towser." Pathe says that the Lloyd comedies are going stronger with every issue.

Part V of "Britain's Bulwarks," the official British war series released exclusively by Pathe, has to do with the work of drifters and mine sweepers in the danger zone, and in this picture is revealed the hazardous work of the little boats that keep the seas free from deadly mines and floating bombs. Two famous destroyers, "Swift" and "Broke," are shown at sea.

The scenic for the week's program is "Yosemite in Winter," which shows some beautiful snow scenes taken in the famous garden spot of America.

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of June 3 has been scheduled by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, as follows:

Blue Ribbon Feature, five parts, "A Game with Fate," featuring Harry Morey with Betty Blythe. Written by Tom Terriss. Directed by Paul Scardon.

Serial, two parts, "The Fire Trap," Episode No. 9 of "The Woman in the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big V. Comedy, one part, "Sneakers and Snoozers," featuring Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock. Directed by J. A. Howe.

Vitagraph Drew Comedy, "Romantic Reggie," featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Still Going S.R.O. Everywhere

"The first day went big, the second bigger, the third still better, and so far it is still going over the top," says J. W. DiStassio of the Liberty in Sacramento, California. "'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin' is the most timely production and the best patriotic play that this great wide country can expect to see.

"The best drawing card of motion picture history. Sacramento people are crazy over it. The picture is the talk of the town. At the first show last Sunday I thought sure the gallery would come down. People on the street could hear stamping, whistling and applause for blocks away. I know that 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin' is a better medicine for theatre box-offices than any other ten big productions put together."

If words mean anything at all, these words from a man who ran for a solid week and broke all records in his town mean that you're overlooking the one best bet of your life if you don't act right now, today, on—

"The KAISER The Beast of Berlin"

"Tell the boys in the small towns," says A. M. Sprague of the Savoy in Palmyra, Missouri—a small town—"that they can make a clean-up with this picture, as well as those in the larger towns. 'The Kaiser' is certainly a wonderful picture, and your rental price is O. K., as a fellow can make some good money off it.

"I showed 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin' to three packed houses—my house seats 400—our population is about 2,000, and to save my life I could not tell where all the people came from. It was the best business ever done here."

This story is duplicated in every letter, telegram and phone call received by every Jewel Office in the country—a story of instant success for exhibitors which has never been equalled in the story of the business. Get Busy to-day.

Short Subjects in Review

PERFORMERS IN SEALSKINS

There is one section in the "Universal Screen Magazine" that would atone for even a very stupid reel. And this is not stupid by any means. We have reference to pictures showing a band of trained seals. These creatures, whom we had always supposed to be uncommonly lacking in intelligence, play cymbals, throw balls and catch them with the most amazing dexterity (we are confining ourselves to the exact truth—they do it with their noses), and end by tossing hoops blazing with fire. It is a picture that will give pleasure to any audience, and will delight children.

Interest in our army engineers has been heightened by the valiant way in which they filled a serious breach in the battle line. They are shown here engaged in the important business of building a pontoon bridge.

The bathing season is on, and the various methods of saving a person struggling in the water which are demonstrated in the "Magazine" should prove interesting and valuable. "Holds" are illustrated on dry land and then in deep water.

Pictures of a toy factory in Massachusetts assure us that Santa Claus need no longer be at a loss because the supply from Germany has stopped.

THE MEANING OF HUMANITY

What becomes of the endless lines of German prisoners that have trooped past, weary and sullen, to the rear of the British lines?

If Pathe's picture is typical of general conditions, the men who will be exchanged at the end of the war will carry back to their fatherland a report of fairness and good treatment that should do much to break down the structure of lies and hatred that have been built by the masters of the German people. The barracks at the camp in England, shown here, are decent and comfortable, and even adorned with little flower gardens by the prisoners themselves. The men work at trades, for which they are paid; they bake their own bread and enjoy weekly recreation with a football.

"GOODRICH" ESCAPES THE CASSEROLE

Somewhere else on this page we talk about some very wonderful cannibal pictures we recently saw. So when we say that the adventures of Goodrich Dirt, Pictograph hero, among the African cannibals are really not at all exaggerated —that cannibals do actually wear nose rings and "their native impudence," that the ladies of the ballet dance like clockwork bears, and the pot is literally kept boiling," we know whereof we speak. Which made the haps and mishaps of poor Goodrich all the more entertaining to us. And we have, no doubt, they will, because of their genuine fun, be just as entertaining to you.

There have been other films devoted to firearms old and modern, but the Bray Studios have introduced a novelty in having the flintlock exhibited and operated by a gray-bearded native of the Blue Ridge Mountain, where flintlocks are still in general use. No less than ten minutes are consumed in measuring out the charge from the old powder horn and ramming home powder and bullet.

The alligators on the alligator farm in California are, indeed, pampered aristocrats. Plenty of food and a real chute the chut keep them healthy and happy—and doubtless account for the price of the handsome bags and chairs into which they are at last transformed.

A MODEL TRAVELOG

Mexico on the screen is a distinct novelty, and presented in the manner achieved by Geo. D. Wright in his series, "Mexico of To-Day," shortly to be released by the Educational Films Corporation, is a valuable addition to the supply of good scenic and travel pictures.

The first reel very properly is devoted to Mexico City. The opening panorma of the great Plaza, with its ancient Spanish cathedral at once conveys the impression of a city of splendid proportions, an idea borne out in the succeeding scenes of handsome streets, parks and parkways, and fine monuments. The Citadel, erected in 1700, and the magnificent trees planted centuries ago recall a distant and dignified past, while the blackened ruins of President Madero's home remind us of a still-troubled present.

The scenes are short and varied in character, something not always characterizing motion pictures of cities, and there is a funny and sympathetic episode in the "circus" furnished by a small boy and two performing dogs.

HOLDING THE TURK AT BAY IN MESOPOTAMIA

Pictures of the British Army in the Far East bear eloquent testimony to the fortitude and spirit of those one-time English clerks and farm boys who have been struggling against fever, heat, mud, as well as savage attack, in the region about Bagdad.

The reel is full of picturesque incident. Streets of Basra are shown, with a British soldier acting as traffic policeman. Then come scenes attending the transport of troops on the Tigris, and the strange contrast of East and West when the huge motor trucks are pushed ashore almost in the shadow of the tomb said to be that of the Biblical prophet, Ezra. Even stranger is it to see our beloved army "Mauds" struggling in the deep sand of an Asiatic desert, co-workers of the native infantry from India that share the dangers and also the hospital comforts of the men from England.

The film is extremely interesting.

GETTING GOATS

"Getting the Goat" is no figure of speech in the Bronx "Zoo." When a few of these active animals are to be corraled and crated for distribution to other parts, it means the liveliest sort of chase for the keepers, up hill and down, over sharp rocks and into fence corners. Mr. Ditmars, with his camera, must literally have been all over the lot.

The present Ditmars release is devoted to the wild sheep and goats that form part of the great collection, and shows what pains are taken to give these animals surroundings resembling their native haunts. The Rocky Mountain goat, for instance, is provided with a wooden runway, so that he will get the necessary exercise in leaving and entering his lofty home. Perhaps the Barbary sheep do not know snow in the land that gives them birth, but they seem well adapted to it in the Bronx. The wild dog, dread enemy of the sheep, and the mountain wolf, come in for a share of attention.

"TWENTY DEGREES COOLER" IF YOU SHOW THIS

A scenic that should prove very welcome in the coming hot days shows the Yosemite clad in snow. There is plenty of hard climbing for the two men who essay the icy paths, deceptively clad in a snow blanket. The views of the various falls are particularly fine and present several novel effects, as the absence of foliage seems to have given the photographer an opportunity to place his camera at points never before used.

In the Independent Field

Captain Warwick Returns from "Over There"

Captain Robert Warwick, late of Harry Rapf's independent offering, "The Accidental Honeymoon," saw the results of his last work before the camera before leaving to join General Pershing's staff in France, last week, shortly after his arrival from the other side. Captain Warwick expressed satisfaction with the picture and went so far as to remark that he believed it to be his best work.

"The war," he said, "has created a new type of audience and the privilege of watching our soldier boys enthuse over the entertainment provided them has afforded me the keenest pleasure. I had thought that I was acquainted with audiences of all sorts but these soldier-audiences are distinctly different.

"In the first place the soldiers, without any exceptions, go to these shows with a determination to be pleased. They are less critical than audiences are wont to be, for the hardships of war have taught them to appreciate. They magnify the fine points of a picture and they minimize the occasional flaws if they notice them at all.

"But whether it is romance, tragedy or comedy that is unfolded before them they follow it all with an interest that is intense. Whether the actor appears in his physical being or only in his screen impersonation he receives an undivided attention which is the highest tribute an audience can pay.

Keeney to Continue Producing Activities

Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation sends in the following statement in the form of a correction to an article appearing in a motion picture publication, inferring that the Keeney Corporation had ceased producing activities:

"An article recently printed in a daily publication conveys the erroneous impression that the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation has gone out of the producing business. The facts are that a three months' lease was taken on the Pathe studio, at Park avenue and 134th street, by the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, for the purpose of producing two pictures, "Marriage" and a picture tentatively entitled "Out of the Night." Both pictures have been completed, except for the film-cutting and the titling, and Mr. Keeney has given up the studio, in accordance with his original intention. He had previously used the Biograph Studios under a short-term lease for the production of "A Romance of the Underworld." All three pictures star Catherine Calvert, who is under a long-term contract with the corporation. The work of production is to be resumed after the first of the Keeney pictures is placed on the market."

Doris Kenyon's Second Started

"Inn of the Blue Moon" Starts Under Direction of John B. O'Brien — Star Has Dual Role—Cast Announced

THEODORE C. DEITRICH, president of the De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Doris Kenyon's own company, announces that the casting for the star's second picture under her own management, has been completed and that work on the picture has been started under J. B. O'Brien's direction.

Doris Kenyon, DeLuxe Star, in "The Street of Seven Stars"

The title of Miss Kenyon's second picture is "The Inn of the Blue Moon." Miss Kenyon impersonates a dual role—that of twin sisters reared in different surroundings. When the girls reach majority each has a love affair and around the romance is woven a case of mistaken identity. She will be supported by Harry C. Browne and Crauford Kent in the leading male roles. Both Mr. Browne and Mr. Kent have had wide experience on both stage and screen. Mr. Browne is now appearing in "Oh! Lady, Lady" at the Princess theatre. Mr. Kent is an Englishman and has been prominent on the English stage. He has supported Pauline Frederick, Elsie Ferguson, Ethel Clayton and Mary Garden in some of their most successful pictures.

Lyn Donaldson, who impersonated "Night" in "The Blue Bird," has been cast for the role of an unscrupulous half-sister of the twins' father. Other prominent members of the cast are John Hopkins, William Walcott and Harriet Ross.

Actual work on the screening of "The Inn of the Blue Moon" was started last week at the De Luxe Studio in Mount Vernon. The splendid work of John B. O'Brien as Miss Kenyon's director in her first production, "The Street of Seven Stars," was responsible for his being re-engaged by Mr. Deitrich as director of "The Inn of the Blue Moon." William S. Crolly has been retained as cameraman, while Mr. Deitrich has appointed E. C. McCarthy, formerly Mr. O'Brien's assistant, as technical director and studio manager. "The Street of Seven Stars" was shown for review last week.

Six More States Join Affiliated Fold

COLORADO, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada and Wyoming have recently joined the fold of the Affiliated-Distributors Corporation. These states have subscribed, recently, their quota for membership, according to an announcement made by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the organization.

"The affiliated is a case of exhibitors only, even to the organization of the booking units comprising it," said Mr. Pettijohn. There are no stock salesmen on the payroll of the organization. Our feeling is that groups of exhibitors prefer having an exhibitor's proposition presented to them by exhibitors. Under the affiliated plan, every dollar invested by the exhibitor goes for the single purpose of obtaining better pictures, at lower prices. Not a penny of it can be touched for organization or promotion expenses."

"The Intermountain states which have just completed their quota, were organized by Byron Park of Salt Lake City, the secretary of the exhibitors' committee, which drafted the affiliated plan of operation.

"Following the election of officers of the booking association in these states, Mr. Park will go to Nebraska and Iowa, to organize the association in those states. In the meantime, Fred Herrington, having gotten the Pittsburgh territory under way, is devoting his efforts to the organization of the Kansas City, and St. Louis territories early in June. He will go to Oklahoma. Frank Rembusch has the Indiana interests lined up. He is helping Ohio exhibitors in the organization of a Cincinnati unit.

Messrs. Hopp and Frank of Chicago, in addition to completing the subscription of the association for Illinois, are lending their efforts to the organization of the Wisconsin exhibitors.

"In the East, John Manheimer, president of the Manhattan Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is assisting in the organization of the New York State Association. Sydney S. Cohen, president of the State League, is working with the Philadelphia exhibitors."

Flynn Serial Blazing Wide Trail

Exhibitors Throughout Country Asking for Extended Runs on "Eagle's Eye"—Going Very Strong

SOME of the largest motion picture exhibitors in the United States have found "The Eagle's Eye," the twenty-episode serial story of German spies and plots in America, by William J. Flynn, such a popular attraction that they are increasing the run of each episode. Nixon and Nirdlinger recently forwarded a contract calling for three days on each episode instead of the two days originally booked to the Wharton Releasing Corporation for the Colonial theatre at Germantown, Pa. Poli's Bijou at New Haven changed original booking to open on Sunday night instead of Monday, and the Strand theatre at Youngstown, Ohio, increased their original booking from three days to four days' run on each episode.

The manager of the Royal theatre, Cincinnati, has a new one as a means of breaking up any diffidence exhibited at any of the shows in his house. He reports that he has a means of arousing applause at any time, and after his patrons have applauded he declares they are in better humor and enjoy the show better.

"Any time I feel that a show is going flat," he says, "I will break into the picture with announcements of attractions which I know appeal to my patrons as being above the average. At the present time I am using a slide announcement of 'The Eagle's Eye.' The "Uncle Sam" trailers used on each episode of 'The Eagle's Eye' are invaluable aids to war propaganda," says a report from a prominent theatre manager.

"The worth of the picture and the trailers," says the manager of the Hippodrome theatre, Newport, Ky., "is visible in the showing made by this city and Campbell County in the Third Liberty Loan drive. Campbell County led all districts in the Fourth Federal Reserve district on the card report basis, showing 282 per cent. its quota, being $465,000 and its total subscriptions running to $1,699,150. 'The Eagle's Eye' deserves its share of credit for Newport 'going over the top' in the Third Liberty Loan."

The management of the Strand theatre at Salt Lake City had motion pictures taken of the crowd which assembled outside the theatre for the first showing of the first episode of "The Eagle's Eye." The picture will be used by the management as a means of announcing future episodes of the serial and also as a general advertising novelty for the theatre. The Strand opened with the serial on Sunday, May 12.

Courtney Ryley Cooper, who made the screen version of Chief Flynn's story, is a well-known newspaper man, novelist and scenario writer. He claims that he holds the record for the number of actual working days devoted to any one script. Mr. Cooper is making his headquarters at present with the Wharton Releasing Corporation, 1457 Broadway, where he is planning out the scenarios to several of the stories he had previously written for magazine publication.

Bret Comedies on American Standard Program

The Tom Bret Comedies will be released on the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation's program, according to an announcement coming from that company last week. These comedies will be distributed through the company's own exchanges. The foreign rights will be handled also by the American Standard.

Binney Invents Attachment for Camera

Harold J. Binney, producer of the Josh Binney Comedies, has invented an attachment for cameras which he says has been given a successful test and which he states will mark a big improvement in the work that can be accomplished by the motion picture camera. The invention deals with lens of the camera. Mr. Binney reveals nothing further in regard to his invention in his report to the NEWS. A patent is pending and as soon as it is registered Mr. Binney says he will come out with his secret.

Mr. Binney is now busy producing "Fatty's Fast Fliver," which will be released fourth on the Josh Binney Series through Earnest Shipman. The company is working at Pablo Beach, Florida. They expect to remain at Pablo about two weeks and then return to the studio in Jacksonville for the interiors.

Hayakawa's Wife Cast for His First Picture

Tsuru Aoki, Japanese actress, is casted for an important role in Sessue Hayakawa's first picture, by his own independent company, Haworth Pictures Corporation. She is the wife of the Japanese star and is no stranger to the camera, having appeared in a number of photodramas during the past four years and in pictures in which her husband has been starred.

Tsuru Aoki, although reared in this country from early childhood by relatives who brought her to Southern California from Japan, retains all the characteristics of the little brown maids of the "land of the rising sun."

Gaumont's Late Graphic Shows Timely Topics

The opening of the world's first aerial mail service and the German drive to separate the French and English forces are announced as the featured news items in Gaumont's Graphic No. 8.

The late Graphic shows the first United States mail-planes leaving New York for Washington and the first to leave Washington for New York. There are some timely pictures coming from the battle front in France. It contains also many interesting inventions in the commercial world. The training of the boys in the Navy and the annual cane rush of the University students (Pennsylvania) conclude the news items found in Gaumont's latest Graphic.

Jester's Late Release Bringing Good Reports

"The Wrong Flat," the latest release of the Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, is enjoying a successful run in New York, it is said. It has been booked by the Loew houses, and other first run theatres. From other points in the country, reports to date show that the same success is maintained.

"Mexico Today," Showing City and Country Customs as They Exist, Is Being Distributed by Educational Films Corporation. George D. Wright Secured the Pictures.

Christie Company Makes Big Shipment Abroad

Christie Comedy Company announces that it has shipped a consignment of more than 60,000 feet of Christie Comedy prints to Carlson and Company, foreign buyers, who have the territory of Denmark, Norway and Sweden for this product.

Carlson and Company, buyers of Christie Comedies for Denmark, Norway and Sweden, are looking out for the arrival of 60,000 feet of Christie comedy positive which left the plant of this comedy company in Hollywood just recently. The Carlson Company has found the Christie pictures to be a big unit of entertainment and has written the Christie brothers that they have experienced increased business with each Christie release.

The Carlson Company reports that the demand for comedy pictures is greater now than ever before, as there is so much tragedy being enacted on the border land of these three neutral countries that comedy pictures have increased 50 per cent in drawing power.

"Our people want events of everyday life given them with a human twist. This purpose is accomplished by the Christie comedies, which have the added value of exploiting beauty and youth as well," writes Carlson and Company's general manager.

All prints shipped by the Christie Company were made in the laboratory of the plant in Hollywood.

General Film to Distribute Interstate's "Zep"

The General Film Company has taken over the distribution of Interstate Film Company's production, "The Last Raid of the Zeppelin L-22," it is announced. John Libston who shot the scenes for this production announces that he will sail in the near future for Europe to commence his second production for the Interstate Film Company. The title for this picture is not announced. It is said that it will be a historical chronology of the life of President Wilson.

Enthusiastic Recruits for United Theatres

CARROLL E. KING, manager of the Johnsonia theatre, Leesburg, Ohio, gives the co-operative plan of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., an undeniable boost as a "live-wire" proposition, in a statement to a representative of the United Theatres, last week.

"I cannot for the life of me see any reason why exhibitors should hesitate a moment in grasping a United franchise. To me it seems a sound practical plan, Mr. King said.

From other sections of the country come reports of the informal gathering of exhibitors to discuss this co-operative plan all of which were optimistic.

On Sunday, May 19, representative exhibitors of Pittsburg assembled at the Fort Pitt Hotel to listen to Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of United, explain the details of the movement. A large number were present and the meeting resulted in a very considerable increase in United's membership in the Pittsburg district.

A few days earlier, Mr. Ochs presided at a successful meeting at Milwaukee. Mr. Ochs also stopped at several other cities in the middle west on his return from the Minneapolis convention, and in all of them found willing converts to the United cause.

In Seattle a meeting was called to welcome and listen to I. P. Arnold, district manager with headquarters in Salt Lake City, on the occasion of the first visit of a United representative in this section. Herman J. Brown, president of the Exhibitors' League of Idaho, in his official call for an annual convention, proposed careful consideration of the United co-operative plan.

The application of W. S. Bennett & Co., managers of the City Opera House of Frederick, Md., for membership in United, was mailed in Washington at ten o'clock Wednesday morning, and traveling by air-post, received at the New York offices of United early in the afternoon.

President J. A. Berst last week added H. B. Kester of Pittsburg and Frank J. Howard of Boston to the Advisory Board of United Theatres. This board, consisting of representative exhibitors from all sections of the country, now numbers twenty-four members.

Mr. Kester is the manager of the Cameraphone in East Liberty, and Mr. Howard is associated with the historic Howard's Athenaeum of Boston.

Kroulik Starts First Mode d'Art Comedy

THE formal opening of the new studio building of the Camel Film Company of Chicago, where the Mode d'Art Comedies will be produced, was held last week. The new building is located at 950-954 Edgecomb place, Chicago. In connection with this announcement, Frank J. Kroulik also stated in his communication to the NEWS that actual work on production had been commenced.

Alice Mann is to be the featured comedienne. She will have as support, a well-known comedian prominent on the vaudeville stage. Miss Mann left for Chicago last week to commence her first production under the personal direction of Mr. Kroulik. The comedies will be of the straight variety, not slapstick.

Mr. Kroulik said: "It is unfortunate that we have been delayed, but it could not be helped. We had ordered a great deal of material in New York of a bulky nature, which did not arrive in time. However, everything is now on the ground, and set up, and we are now under full sway."

"It's a Great Life"

Twede-Dan's Next Comedy Production for Jester Comedy Company Will Be Released Under the Title of "It's a Great Life." It Is in Two Reels.

"Universal Appeal's The Thing"

Western Import Official Says, It's Goal Toward which All Producers Work—Sennett Finds it in "Mickey"

"UNIVERSAL appeal's the thing," according to an official of the Western Import Company. "Universal appeal," he says, "is the guiding star toward which every producer in the moving picture world is straining. They are all agreed on the essentials, like heart interest, which make up and are always appealing to everyone, everywhere. That is quite evident, for even the best and most meritorious pictures like some of the big war pictures of today, have the heart interest thread to bind together the other essentials of the play.

"Mack Sennett, who produced 'Mickey,' knew how some of the most prominent movie stars of today first came to the foreground in the moving picture world through really masterful and 'different' characterizations in pictures whose plots were not only of a broad appeal, but gave particular play to the star's abilities.

"It is characteristic of Mack Sennett's thoroughness, the way in which he set about solving this problem of the overdone appeal, in the production of 'Mickey.' He supervised the direction. He could handle the humorous situations—humor was his field. But he didn't want 'Mickey' to be a comedy, pure and simple. 'Mickey' must be a step ahead—a super comedy-drama, interwoven with humor and pathos, love and adventure.

"He therefore secured four directors, each an expert in his particular field, and each to express his best abilities in the production of 'Mickey.' No one but an expert could have produced the original humorous situations in 'Mickey,' or the wonderful horse race, or the romantic wistful love story, with its pathetic touches. And no one could better portray the versatile, mischievous little tomboy, or the vivacious debutante heiress of a gold mine than Mabel Normand.

"When 'Mickey' was privately screened for a mixed audience, they were unanimous in their expressions of praise for 'Mickey,' but, oddly enough, to almost each one it appealed from a quite different angle.

Julius Steger, director general of the Marion Davies Film Corporation, produced it under his personal direction. The picture is scheduled for release June 3.

Martin Johnson Announces Some Rare Pictures

Pictures that are bound to create a sensation because of the remarkable material they contain are announced by Martin Johnson as a result of the trip he made last year among the New Hebrides and Solomon Islands of the South Pacific.

Mr. Johnson, who was accompanied on his entire trip by Mrs. Johnson, penetrated into regions so savage that he was practically prohibited by the British Government from attemtping to visit them. With only three native "boys," he went into the interior of Malekula, an island inhabited by a race of cannibals in the lowest scale of savagery. Even as Mr. Johnson realized he had become a captive in the hands of the chief, he set up his camera and ground away, "making more film in fifteen minutes than I had ever done in twice the time," as he says. Only the sudden appearance of a British warship in the bay saved him and Mrs. Johnson from death and worse.

The pigmies of Malaita, the miserable creatures who live on the Artificial Islands, the strange people of Lord Howe Island, with their dances and their "devil devil" ceremonies, are other subjects of the series.

Mr. Johnson is planning to issue about ten reels of film out of the fifty-two thousand feet he made while in the islands. The method of distribution has not yet been determined.

Capital Begins to Release in June

The Capital Film Company, with its executive offices and studios in Indianapolis, has completed arrangements whereby distribution of pictures to its subscribers will be begun by the middle of June.

"The increasing demand for short pictures—one-reel, two-reel and three-reel subjects—has become so pronounced," said Ike Schlank, president and general manager of the corporation, "that we are obliged to shift our plans somewhat and begin releasing at an earlier date than we had anticipated. This, however, we shall be able to do. Still we do not expect to put out our complete program, which means the making of thirty-five pictures every week, until our studios and laboratories are erected upon the site recently purchased by the company."

Distribution of the Capital Film Company's output will be through its own exchanges, twenty-five of which have already been established or are being established in the United States, while others are to be established shortly in Canada.

The date of release will be announced later.

The American and Canadian rights to the serial are controlled by the Randolph Film Corporation. The revised six-act edition will be sold through state rights by the Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building.

Miss Scott's Work in "Reclaimed," Praised

Mabel Julienne Scott who is co-starred with Niles Welch in Harry McRae Webster's first independent production, "Reclaimed," written by Richard Field Carroll and produced under the direction of Mr. Webster, has, by her capable work before the camera, reached the point of stardom. Mr. Webster in commenting upon her work in "Reclaimed" says that she surpasses anything that she has done in the past. Miss Scott will be remembered for her work in Edgar Lewis's production of Rex Beach's "The Barrier."

Mr. Webster directed Lenore Ulrich, Dorothy Dalton, Beverly Bayne, Dorothy Phillips, Gerda Holmes, Ruth Stonehouse and Dallie Crute in some of their first work for the screen.

Producers Form New Company

Ralph Ince, Arthur N. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin to Produce Special Features—Ralph Ince Film Attractions

RALPH INCE, Herbert Lubin and Arthur N. Sawyer have formed a producing corporation by contract, signed Monday of last week, according to an announcement made by the General Enterprises, Inc. The announcement states that the trio will produce a series of special features to be known as the Ralph Ince Film Attractions. It is also stated that another prominent film man is identified with the new organization. His name was not given. The announcement does not go into detail concerning the plans of the organization other than the statement that a series of special features will be produced and that these features will be screen versions of popular stage productions and works of popular authors.

The three principals of this agreement are prominent in their respective branches of motion picture activity.

Prior to becoming one of the foremost producers of the business, Mr. Ince was an actor, appearing in leading roles for Vitagraph. His characterization of Abraham Lincoln is one of his best efforts before the camera. During his several years with the Vitagraph Company, Ince directed "The Juggernaut," "A Million Bid," "The Wreck," and "413." He was responsible for the organization of the Kinemacolor Company, which produced the initial films in natural colors in this country.

Mr. Sawyer is regarded as an expert in studio management and production matters. He is a member of the firm of General Enterprises, Inc. He is responsible for the erection in Washington, D. C., of the Mather Building, devoted exclusively to the uses of film exchanges.

Mr. Lubin announced this week that a special department of publicity and exploitation had been created under the direction of Bert Ennis. Mr. Ennis began his film activities with the Vitagraph Company of America, afterwards becoming the first press agent to be connected with Messrs. Kessel and Baumann, during the days of the New York Motion Picture Company, exploiting such present-day celebrities as Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Charlie Chaplin and William Hart. He afterwards became publicity and sales manager for the Eclair Film Company. Mr. Ennis has been director of publicity for the Petrova Picture Company and McClure Pictures, Inc., during the past year. He is also handling the exploitation matter for our "Boys in France Tobacco Fund." He at one time managed "The Japanese Gardens," a theatre. More recently he directed "ToDay," starring Florence Reed; "The Woman Eternal," starring Elaine Hammerstein; "Fields of Honor," starring Mae Marsh, and featuring Madame Olga Petrova.

Herbert Lubin is one of our most prominent exchange men, State right specialist, exploitation and sales manager. He held the Metro franchise for the Dominion of Canada for several years. He has been responsible for many innovations in the fields of State right distribution during the past twelve months. He is a member of the firm of General Enterprises, Inc., which exploited "The Warrior" and "Mother." In addition to his activities in the fields mentioned, Mr. Lubin also negotiated and consummated the contract whereby Madame Olga Petrova became the head of her personal production organization.

Arthur H. Sawyer is one of the pioneers of the picture business, having been prominently identified for the past fifteen years with every branch of the industry.

"Vigilantes" Shows California Early Days

Life in California during the early gold rush days is depicted in a new film titled, "The Vigilantes," soon to be released by the Bear State Film Company of Los Angeles.

This subject, consisting of seven reels, has been filmed in California, and in many instances the original sites were used for locations. In others, the pictorial records and descriptions of historical societies of California have been used to give true to life atmosphere. The historical drama is based on the actual occurrences dating between '49 and '52, and deals largely with the necessity of the better element in the gold rush, taking the law in their own hands.

Plans for the first public showing of this film are now being made. It will take place shortly at Clune's theatre, Pasadena, where a thirty-piece orchestra will furnish music. It is the plan of Louis J. Hampton and C. M. Harrison of this company to give their first premier in Chicago. With this end in view they will open Chicago offices by the first of June, and the work of exploiting the film will be carried on from that city.

Betzwood Company Completing Lady Tsen's Picture

The Betzwood Film Company, now engaged in shooting the final scenes for Lady Tsen Mei's first Independent production, reports that Lady Tsen and her company of twenty people, made a successful trip from Philadelphia to Boston via boat last week, and that the company experienced fine weather on the trip. Many of the scenes of the picture are laid aboard a steamer and the trip was made for the purpose of shooting these exteriors. The company was in charge of Director Ira M. Lowry. David Calcagni is camera man. The release date will be announced later.

Takes More Territory for Christie Comedies

The Celebrated Players' Film Service, Chicago, has extended its territory on the distribution of Christie comedies. J. L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players, has added Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska to his territory for Christie comedies.

Mr. Friedman has attained success in the territory formerly covered, viz., Illinois and Indiana. He had Christie comedies on his distribution list beginning with the first release on the open market.

Sherman's First Production Shown to Trade

Harry Sherman, accompanied by Dustin Farnum, Winifred Kingston, Miss Kingston's mother, and Director Charles Swickard, are due to arrive in New York in time to witness the trade showing of Sherman Productions' first feature, "The Light of the Western Stars," in which Mr. Farnum is starred.

Northrup Was Given First Part by Griffith

Harry S. Northrup, who has the role of the villain in Harry I. Garson's latest production, "The Hushed Hour," featuring Blanche Sweet, now nearing completion at the Griffith studio, Hollywood, Cal., says his career in motion picture crime is entirely up to D. W. Griffith, who gave him his first engagement in pictures eight years ago.

"Surprising as it may seem," said Mr. Northrup, "I had never met Mr. Griffith during all these years, except in a business way, until on the day I started work at the Griffith studio with Mr. Garson. Mr. Griffith had just returned from Europe, where he has just completed 'Hearts of the World.' I reminded him then of our first meeting and how he started me out in a villain role. I have been playing these roles ever since, and am fully aware that the 'villain's' only applause comes from the 'hisses' of the audience. Therefore no matter what I do, he is responsible, and he certainly has a lot to answer for."

Mr. Northrup has created many leading roles in the spoken drama, and has to his credit 209 pictures under the Metro, Vitagraph, Triangle, Famous Players, and Fine Arts management. It is said that Mr. Northrup does excellent work in "The Hushed Hour," Mr. Garson's latest independent production.

Gaumont's Ten-Reel Serial Not Yet Named

"The Man From the Dead" will not be retained as the main title to Gaumont's serial production in ten reels. This title was offered as a suggestion only and has not been decided upon as the title under which Gaumont's serial will be shown. Objection was made by many independent buyers who are considering acquiring territory for this serial, to the word "dead" as being too gruesome. "The Avenger of Wrongs" has been suggested by several exhibitors, says the announcement from the Gaumont, denying the statement that "The Man From the Dead" is to be the title for its serial and it is said that the suggestion may be followed. To date the title has not been chosen.

Traverse Company Is Being Formed

The Madelaine Traverse Film Corporation is being formed, and matters in connection with it are going merrily along.

In a few days the roster of officers forming the corporation will be announced. Madelaine Traverse will be the star of the organization, and one scenario has been accepted by Miss Traverse which she thinks possesses unusual merit. Miss Traverse will be interested in feature productions only. She does not believe in the ordinary, being a woman of unusual intellect and talent,

The choosing of scenarios is occupying most of her time, and she expects soon to be equipped with suitable material to commence with.

Betzwood Film Features Chinese Star in First

The Betzwood Film Company's first big production at their plant on the Schuylkill River at Betzwood, Pa., is rapidly nearing completion under the direction of Ira M. Lowry, it is announced. The combination of its star—Lady Tsen Mei—the only Chinese woman film star in the world—its Chinese settings, its story by J. Allan Dunn, and its generally unusual atmosphere, augur well for its success.

An official of the company, in commenting upon the Chinese actress' ability before the camera, said:

"Lady Tsen Mei is known to the thousands on the vaudeville circuits. She is an exceptional subject for the camera. Tsen Mei's ability to portray types other than celestial ones make her a real 'find.' It is the purpose of the Betzwood Film Company to present her in various roles of the Far East in big, gripping stories written around those types. In the present story, the action of which is laid in China and Washington, D. C., no expense is being spared to secure the richest settings and costumes to surround the star. The production is in the hands of Ira M. Lowry, producer of 'For the Freedom of the World.' The supporting cast includes Robert Elliott, Benjamin Hendricks, Jr., Herbert Pattee, and others. Camera and laboratory work are under the direction of William Cooper and David Calcogni.

Lady Tsen Mei Is Featured in Productions Made by the Betzwood Film Company, of Pennsylvania

"The Betzwood Film Company will, on or about June 3, commence production of the second feature starring Louis Bennison, the star of 'Johnny, Get Your Gun,' who will be presented in a Western feature. It will be Western comedy drama based upon the character creation of 'Sandy Burke,' by J. Allan Dunn, recently published in Adventure magazine. Arrangements for release have not yet been made.

"With its unusual facilities, location, stars and big laboratory equipment, stages, 500 acres of every conceivable sort of exterior scenery on its own plant, the Betzwood Film Company means business from the start. The first release will be ready some time in July, and its second a month later."

Thompson Commences "Romance of Coal"

THE Educational Film Corporation commenced work on its educational feature, "The Romance of Coal," last week, under the direction of Frederick A. Thompson. Harry Lyon is cameraman and Charles Chapman is technical director. The week was devoted to the staging of a number of interiors laid in New York. The first week in June the company will go to Charleston, W. Va.

Director Thomson is familiarly known as "Bing" Thomson. He is a native of Montreal. He was stage director for Richard Mansfield, Julia Marlowe, Rose Coghlan, Felix Morris and other legitimate stars, and played all the Sol Smith Russell star parts after the comedian's death. Later he directed two of the finest legitimate stock companies in America, the Columbia at Washington and the Pike at Cincinnati. In the course of more than ten years' motion picture experience, he has directed Mary Fuller, Lillian Walker, John Barrymore, Marguerite Clark, Bessie Love, E. H. Sothern, Edith Storey, Earle Williams and Clara Kimball Young.

Harry W. Lyon, the official photographer of the Educational's "Romance of Coal," is a graduate of Yale University, class of 1899. An experience of over a dozen years in still photography qualified Mr. Lyon for the ground work of his entry into motion films. A good example of his efforts is the camera work in "The Land of the Rising Sun," a Japanese feature. For this work he spent over seven months in Japan. Recently he photographed the new Bessie Love picture, "How Could You Caroline?" which was directed by Mr. Thomson.

The technical director, Charles Chapman, occupied a similar position with the Vitagraph for twelve years. One of the largest libraries on this subject is the property of Mr. Chapman.

Educational Films Corporation's feature, illustrating the war activities of the U. S. Navy, is being rapidly put in shape for presentation at a Broadway theatre early in June. After this pre-release showing the picture will be distributed direct to the exhibitors of the Greater New York district. Outside of Greater New York, "Your Fighting Navy" will be sold on the open market. Among the visitors to the Educational's New York office last week was Sol Lesser of San Francisco, who is negotiating for the rights on the Pacific coast.

"All Woman" Said to Be Mae Marsh's Best

According to Goldwyn, the production "All Woman," in which Mae Marsh is starred, is unique in many respects. The story is by E. Lloyd Sheldon, and Director Hobart Henley, Goldwyn, says, has expended more than his customary painstaking care in translating it to the screen. The work of Mae Marsh, moreover, is said to bid fair to rank as the best she has ever contributed to the art.

"Independent of the star's work," says a Goldwyn statement, "'All Woman' has other claims to distinction. So clearly is the story related that there is no necessity for sub-titles. They are supplied only to create atmosphere and to emphasize certain points. The narrative might move along without them. In the introduction of every character the director has been equally fortunate. In the first half reel of the picture the entire cast is assembled and the action is well under way. This is especially praiseworthy, in view of the fact that picturegoers complain of the sudden appearance of an important character when the story is half over. An added instance of Director Henley's skill as a story-teller is found in this circumstance."

Fine Cooperation Here

"That real co-operation will rule in United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., as between exhibitor-member and the central organization and between members is shown by the action of Manager J. E. Costan, of Chicago, who, having secured the first run of United pictures in his district for his theatre, the Harvard, consented to have his contract amended so that the A. E. R. Theatre in the same district might be admitted into the same classification. Every new member of the United is becoming a booster for the cooperative plan and is doing his utmost to hasten the day when cooperative operation shall became an established fact," reads the report.

PLAYERS

THE news of what you are doing and your plans is what the exhibitors and photoplay editors want for local publicity. This Department offers you the opportunity to cover the country with a single effort. Whenever you have anything interesting don't fail to get in touch with Miss Dorothy Tarbell, at Motion Picture News office. Don't go to much trouble — just write the facts. We'll edit your news and prepare it for publication.

With Madge Kennedy in "The Service Flag" we have a brand new leading man, Clarence Oliver. He always has hated to admit that first name of his and now that he has cast his lot in the picture game he hates to admit it more than ever.

Madge Kennedy, with various members of her cast, has returned from Washington where exteriors for "The Service Flag" were taken around government buildings. She is a hero-worshipping young girl from a small town in this picture, whose background is its only connection with the war.

W. P. S. Earle has established a time record in his first World picture, "The Blood of the Trevors." It took him just thirteen days to put Barbara Castleton, John Bowers, Madge Evans and supporting company through their paces.

Ernest Truex, one of the cleverest comedians on the legitimate stage, whose recent work in "Very Good Eddie" and "The Big Idea" won him many followers, has just signed with Jesse Lasky to play opposite Shirley Mason in her new John Emerson-Anita Loose pictures.

John P. Wade has left the patriotic photodrama to take up the patriotic stage drama. Having finished the "Eagle's Eye," in which he plays an important part, he is rehearsing for the new Empey play, "Pack Up Your Troubles."

Anna Q. Nilsson won the heart of an Indian brave while she was working out West in the Metro picture, "No Man's Land." His name was Proud-of-His-Nose. But the role of Indian chieftess didn't appeal to this blonde leading lady, so big chief was left lamenting.

The blue linen apron which May Allison wears in "The Way to a Man's Heart" should be an inspiration to an amateur gardenerette. For pockets it has pieces of tan linen appliqued on in the shape of flower pots. Out of each grows an embroidered flower. Dean Raymond, who supported her in "The Winning of Beatrice," should not be blamed for writing a poem about her, even though it is spring, if he saw her in this costume first.

That the Scenario Department of Metro will not lag this summer is a good bet, after visiting its head, June Mathis, in her cool little office overlooking Central Park, through which a breeze is always blowing. The soft greens of the walls, the grey of the wicker furniture, and the green grey cretonnes, make it a veritable oasis these hot days.

Those two jovial darkies of vaudeville fame, Anthony Byrd and Pauline Dempsey, are back at the Metro studio working in Miss Allison's picture, "The Way to a Man's Heart."

Frederick Truesdale is playing opposite Emily Stevens in "A Man's World." Though his forte has been the legitimate stage his transposition has been effected so skillfully and speedily that he stands now as one of the recognized leading men of the screen. His own background of education, first in a southern boys' school, then in a Pennsylvania millitary academy, and finally in Yale, has, perhaps, something to do with the way he always convinces in the society parts for which he is generally cast.

Marie Pagano, who has doubled so much that she has not received half the credit she deserves in pictures, has a chance to be herself in "The Echo Girl," a new June Elvidge production. In it she plays the Indian Squaw and does a bit of good bareback riding.

The Dolly Sisters having tea with the minister of a small country church, and his wife; can you picture it? Metro could, but didn't as it was merely an aftermath of a wedding scene for "The Million Dollar Dollies," which was taken outside of the minister's little church.

It is nice to note in connection with the general exodus of stars and directors westward that a few celebrities from the coast come back to New York now and then. Frank Reicher, Metro director, of several of Edith Storey's and Viola Dana's last pictures, is the latest man to hit the big white way, while Louise Huff who is soon to become a World star is the latest woman.

Little by little a gradual elevation of the standing of the motion picture industry, due to its splendid war work, is being felt. Proofs are rapidly appearing, such as the reward of honorary sergeant of 122nd Company, 70th Engineers, U. S. Coast Defenses, recently bestowed upon Miss Doris Kenyon, for actual work done for the Liberty Loan and the Red Cross.

Tom Terriss is having a strenuous time of it right now, directing Alice Joyce and Anita Stewart at the same time, until Wilfrid North recovers from an automobile accident sufficiently to resume his work with the latter.

Harry Morey, With Betty Blythe, Is Starred in Vitagraph's "A Game With Fate"

A card from Mother Nellie Anderson, postmarked Concord, Mass., shows a picture of Louisa Alcott's own home which is being used by W. A. Brady for scenes in his now picture, "Little Women."

Barbara Castleton in a tan linen riding habit, which sets off her gorgeous copper-colored hair and bronze gold eyes, is a joy and delight around the World Studio these days as "Just Sylvia."

Tony Merlo of the flashing black eyes and sleek black hair affords a splendid foil for her as the "willun" of the picture.

Evelyn Greeley has developed a new talent in "Hitting the Trail." She has become an adept at making artificial flowers and rivals in skill and speed several professional flower makers imported for the scenes taken in the flower factory. In a close-up she will be shown making a large red rose.

Frank Mayo is with a company in Norwalk, taking scenes in a factory for the new World picture, "The Power and the Glory."

Tom Moore doesn't object to "locations" at all in his new picture, "Just for Tonight," when they are at the Tarrytown country club just across the river from Gedney Farms where he lives. He merely grabs a golf bag and meets the company on the other side. He plays golf just as well as he does everything else, in a way that "can't be beat."

Elsie Ferguson has consented to appear at the Rivoli for the benefit of the Red Cross. It was only after much persuasion that she did so, not because she did not want to do her bit, but because she was afraid that she could not make a good enough speech. Little did she realize that just for the pleasure of looking at her the tightest-fisted person would give gladly to the Red Cross.

Alice Mann is to be congratulated for appearing every night in person at various motion picture houses around New York the last week before leaving for Chicago. Next week she will begin work there on two-reel comedies for the Camel Film Company. Some leading ladies would have been too busy thinking about new clothes and good-by so whole-heartedly to the Red Cross.

"My Lady of the Screen" in the words of a new song is Catherine Calvert. Her recent work in "A Romance of the Underworld" and "Marriage" makes this bit of music by Arthur Oliver and F. W. Van, published by Witmark, decidedly apropos.

Ferdinand Earle, whose titles in "The Judgment House," "The Blue Bird" and "Toy of Fate" have been widely commented upon, aims to discard lettering entirely, and put into his miniature paintings living actors, weaving about them whole fairy stories. For those who are statistically minded it will be of interest to know that in the Nazimova picture, "Toys of Fate," Mr. Earle's work comprising only titles occupies one-seventh of the entire production.

The combination of Hobart Henly, director, and Mae Marsh, star, has successfully passed the three times and out stage. They are now started on their fourth successive and, needless to state, successful picture.

Franklyn Farnum's realistic work as a reporter in "The Cub" is ascribed to the fact that he has known the joys of a newspaper office in his past career.

Betzwood Films boast the services of Lady Tsen Mei, a Chinese star, who is a full-fledged graduate of Columbia Law School. If a legal point comes up in the course of the scenario it can be settled on the spot without outside appeal.

Florence Deshon has the honor of being the first American star under the direction of Henri Houry, who has recently come here from Paris. Work has just begun on their first picture which will be a Vitagraph feature, though the title has not yet been decided upon.

Rumor has it that Gene O'Brien is going to be starred alone after finishing his next two pictures with Norma Talmadge. They are now working on "The Safety Curtain."

David Powell has finished his work with Catherine Calvert in the first two F. A. Keeney pictures, and has begun work with Edna Goodrich in her new series of pictures for Mutual, which will be taken at the Biograph Studios.

THESE short items are just the sort that your local photoplay editor wants. They are newsy—not press bunk. Used rightly they will create real personal interest in the players appearing at your house. Clip those referring to players on your program, turn them over to your photoplay editor for use from time to time, then there will be double value in your later publicity on particular pictures in which these players appear.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

A system of indexing and retaining pictures conceived and installed in the Lasky library by Elizabeth McGaffey, is to be adopted by the Los Angeles libraries as an aid to motion picture companies who use the libraries for research work in connection with preparing settings, costumes and customs, in various periods of the United States and in foreign lands.

The system adopted by Miss McGaffey provides that a photograph shall be taken and filed as well as the story or descriptive matter pertaining to the picture which appears in the magazine. The system, of course, provides double or triple indexing, but has proven itself to be of great value to motion picture producers.

A Saturday Evening Post story titled "The Source" gives the plot for a photodrama put in production this week which will have Wallace Reid and Ann Little as the featured players.

The dance to be given by Lasky Home Guards to raise funds for former members of the Lasky organization who are now in the service, has been postponed from Saturday evening, May 25, to a date two weeks later, June 8, so that it will not interfere with the Red Cross drive which would be in progress on May 25.

At the Ince Plant

For several weeks there have been rumors to the effect that Thomas H. Ince would move his producing organization to the Paralta Studios where on rented space he would make all future releases for the Paramount program, but this week Mr. Ince has made a statement which sets all such rumors at rest. In this Mr. Ince said:

"My attention has been called to a statement that I am moving my companies to the Paralta Studios and that 'the Paralta-Brunton productions will be supervised by Ince under an arrangement similar to that between this producer and the Artcraft and Paramount Corporations.' In order to correct this impression I wish explicitly to state that any arrangement I might make for moving my companies to the Paralta Studios would be solely for the purpose of acquiring additional space and facilities for my productions, and would not, in any manner whatsoever, affect my very cordial relations with Artcraft and Paramount, through which all pictures in which William S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett appear will continue to be released; and, therefore, I will confine my personal supervision to the productions of the above-named stars only."

There have been negotiations for the past several weeks between Mr. Ince and the management of the Paralta Studios relative to Mr. Ince using a portion of their stage space and centering his production work of Paramount releases there, but nothing definite has resulted from the conferences. The Hart subjects for Artcraft, it is definitely stated, will continue to be made at the William S. Hart Film Corporation's studio, just off of Sunset Boulevard in Hollywood.

Universal Newsettes

This is a quiet week at Universal City, as most of the producing units have finished subjects, and are now co-operating with the scenario department in the preparation of new scripts. A change has been made with respect to the filming of "Turn About Eleanor," to be directed by Tod Browning, as Edith Roberts has been selected to play the featured role in this instead of Ella Hall. Elmer Clifton continues the direction of "The Rustler of Wind River," which stars Monroe Salisbury and the Harry Carey Company, directed by Jack Ford, is still at Bear Lake Valley.

The serial companies are progressing most satisfactorily. J. P. McGowan who is filming "The Circus Lure," is now on the third episode. "The Brass Bullet" Company, directed by Ben Wilson, is now working on the tenth release, and Harry Harvey with Marie Walcamp and company, are busy with the fourteenth release of "The Lion's Claw."

The work of preparing some unusual sets and necessary costumes for a play to be titled "Why Not?" which will have Carmel Meyers in the featured role, is now being carried on. Elsie Jane Wilson will direct this picture.

Prior to the departure of President Carl Laemmle for the East this week, a dinner was given him by his nephew, Edward Laemmle, at the latter's bachelor apartments in Hollywood. Among those present were: Harry Cohen, Henry McRae, Julius Stern, Louis Jacobs, Sam Behrndt and Douglas Gerrard.

A Home Guard of Marines with seventy-five members, has been organized at Universal City by Harry Harvey, who served several years in the government service in this department. Mr. Harvey is putting his soldiers through the Marine Corps drill three times weekly.

Vitagraph News Bits

Earle Williams, after completing the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "The Girl in His House," went on a week-end trip to Pine Crest. At least he thought it was going to be a week-end trip. He put his heavy Cadillac roadster in fine condition, put a suit case of his summer-est Summer clothes in the back of the car, and Saturday afternoon started for Pine Crest. He reached his destination, which is way up in the Big Bear District on some of the highest mountains in California. It was dark. Mr. Williams was hungry. Vainly he looked for the gladdening lights of a big hotel. After some time he found the hotel, but it was dark. There seemed not another human being in the vicinity of the Pine Crest Hotel, so there was nothing to do but for Mr. Williams to take the down-trail. It was some time in the early morning when he reached Los Angeles and the comforts of one of its hotels.

That swimming pool out at the Vitagraph lot is the studio's most popular attraction these days. Every member of every company working at this studio keeps his or her bathing suit at the studio and one always knows who has been in or who is going in the pool by the number and variety of suits that decorate the drying line.

Larry Semon keeps his dinner clothes in his dressing room at the Vitagraph Hollywood plant. Not that Larry wears them in Vitagraph Big V comedies. Not at all, as his get-up in these comedy pictures is as much the reverse of dress clothes as is possible. But in the evening, when the day's toils are o'er and the Vitagraph developing room has a thousand or more feet of film depicting the capers of the Semon Big V Company, then is Larry to be found—and always dress-suited—the central figure in the night life of Los Angeles. He is the Beau Brummel of the Vitagraph studio, and all members accord him this distinction even his comedy make-up into his evening clothes.

The Vitagraph Company was invited to send its players to be the guests of the exhibitors of Los Angeles at the weekly Tuesday luncheon of the past week. There were several companies out on location, so the Vitagraph representation was taken care of by William Duncan, Nell Shipman, Edith Johnson and Alfred Whitman. Speeches regarding the production of pictures generally were made by Mr. Duncan, Miss Shipman, Miss Johnson and Mr. Whitman. Mr. Duncan talked from the standpoint of serial productions, while Miss Shipman dwelt upon that of the making of five-reel features.

Live Triangle Items

Julian Johnson, who for the past eight months has been at the head of the script department of the Triangle Film Corporation, has tendered his resignation, and on June 1 went to New York to resume his former position as editor of Photoplay Magazine. Photoplay is moving its editorial offices to New York, having found location there would be far more convenient than the past plan of spending two-thirds of each month in New York, and one-third in Chicago, the present location of the editorial department. This will in no way alter the publication office, which will continue at Chicago.

Mr. Johnson served as editor of Photoplay for almost two years, and it was under his directorship that the magazine grew to be very popular.

Dick Donaldson is a new director at the Triangle studios, he having been promoted to this position from one of assistant director. His first work was that of directing the production of "The Heritage." He was identified with the making of a number of Triangle subjects, including the coming H. O. Davis production, "The Servant in the House."

Two new productions were begun last week. "Every Woman's Husband" is the title of one adapted from the story of that name by John B. Clymer and C. H. Logrue, and prepared for the screen by Charles J. Wilson. This concerns a woman who believed success in life depended upon ruling her husband and his check writing hand with an iron hand that she could climb the social ladder, but friend husband finds another home where he can flick cigar ashes on the floor if he wants too. Gloria Swanson is to be featured in this with Joe King playing the leading role. Gilbert P. Hamilton will direct, and in the cast in important parts will be seen Jack Livingston, Lillian Langdon, George Pearce and others.

The other new subject started has been temporarily titled "The Painted Lily," and will offer Alma Rubens, supported by William V. Mong and others. This is a melodrama of London night life, and the principal character is a reformed gambler who leads the painted Lily back into the righteous path after an entanglement with the king of the gamblers.

Here and There

The National Film Corporation making the Capital Comedies which feature Smiling Bill Parsons, has engaged Al Santell and Louis Chaudet to serve as directors in the making of these comedies. It is the plan of Manager of Production Isadore Bernstein and Mr. Parsons that the two directors shall alternate in producing. During the coming week Santell will begin the filming of the ninth by-weekly release which at present is titled "Bill Settles Down." While this is in production, Mr. Chaudet will arrange with scenario department the continuity for the next subject which will be taken up a week or ten days later. The fourth release, which comes the week of June 17, has been titled "Watching Billy," and following this will be "The Widow's Mite," "Dad's Knockout," "Billy's Fortune," and another as yet unnamed subject, all of which have been completed.

Mr. Santell will be remembered for the subjects he directed for the American Company which featured Kolb and Dill. Later he directed Ham Comedies for Kalem, and more recently has been director of Fay Tincher Comedies which are to be released by the World Film Corporation.

Director Chaudet has had a wide experience in production of both comedy and dramatic subjects, having servide in the capacity of director for Selig, E. & R., Universal and others. For the past eight months he has been identified with the Douglass Natural Color Film Company and has just completed "Cupid Angling," a five-reel scenic drama made in Marin County, California.

Clara Kimball Young is next to play in an adaptation from the French play or novel "La Fellesauvage" ("The Savage Woman"), and work of filming this will be started within the next few days under the direction of Ed Mortimer at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. There are but two important parts to this play, that to be taken by Miss Young and the lead which will be played by Milton Sills. Mr. Mortimer has been engaged in filming a special production for Harry Garson entitled "The Hushed Hour," which has been completed. Robert Vignolia, who has directed several Clara Kimball Young subjects whose most recent work was that of filming "The Claw," will be in charge of the direction of the first Ethel Clayton subject to be made at the Lasky studios.

"The Yellow Ticket"

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

TO recollect the phenomenal success of "The Yellow Ticket," when presented on the stage several seasons ago by A. H. Woods, is also to forecast its success in its present form, as produced by the Astra company with Fannie Ward in the role of the persecuted heroine. Times have changed since Michael Morton wrote his play dealing with the old Russia and of the persecution of the Jews by the secret police or Okrana, as this body was known, but the Bolsheviki have not managed to weaken the structure of Mr. Morton's play, even though they have successfully scrambled their nation. The terrible power held by the Okrana and its villainous chief, as pitted against the fragile Anna Mirrel, creates an exceptionally forceful drama. And so often is the heroine just saved from the miserable clutches of Baron Andrey and his henchmen that the intensity of her several plights cannot easily be over-estimated in cold type.

Fannie Ward, as Anna, gives a skilful and deeply appealing performance. The time has passed when one marvels at her astonishly youthful appearance on the screen. She is always the young woman. She never suggests maturity save in her performance which shows the accumulated skill of an artist. Her support is worthy of special mention in that besides being well chosen and capable from first to last, it presents an array of names that are considerably better known than those listed in the usual supporting cast. Milton Sills is a most suitable hero. Warner Oland, as Baron Andrey, makes a polished heavy, while Armand Kalisz and Leon Bary, as his aides, appear to no less advantage. J. H. Gilmour, Helene Chadwick, Anna Lehr and Dan Mason fill the remaining roles in a style that is satisfactory to the letter.

This fine work of the cast, however, as well as the excellently maintained intensity of the drama, are the result of the brains which guided the picture's production. A compact, clear and swift moving scenario, was furnished by Tom Cushing, while its possibilities were fully realized by the director, William Parke. The manner in which he has handled the many high lights of the story and bridged from one to another results in one uninterrupted train of forceful action, the accumulative power of which grows to startling proportions as the climax is reached. The detail of the production is excellent, noticeable for its realism and atmosphere. Mr. Parke seems to have realized that all Russians do not of a necessity dress themselves up in matted beards, nor must they constantly impress the spectator with their nationality by pouring tea from a samovar. The photographic work includes some effective lightings.

It might be noted that "The Yellow Ticket" found its way into the Rialto theatre, due to its high dramatic value and its box office power combined. That it may be billed as a special attraction throughout the country because of this valuable combination, is a fact that should not be overlooked in all theatres, large or small.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Baron Andrey (Warner Oland), head of the Okrana, sends Moujiks to disperse the Jews of Tasepevka who are getting too strong. A massacre results. From the shock of it the mother of Anna Mirrel dies. Anna (Fannie Ward) starts for St. Petersburg to join her father. Unable to obtain a passport because of her race she is forced to accept the yellow ticket, the official badge of dishonor, which alone will permit her to enter the city. Arriving in St. Petersburg she finds her father in the care of Marya Varenka (Anna Lehr) a radical. He dies shortly afterwards. Marya, in a rage over the death of her little sister, due to the interference of the Okrana, attempts to assassinate the Baron with a bomb. It explodes prematurely and kills her. Papers of recommendation and a passport discovered in Marya's apartment influence Anna to assume her name. Through Count Rostov (Armand Kalisz), nephew of Baron Andrey, she secures a position as teacher of her native tongue to Miss Seaton (Helene Chadwick), daughter of a United States diplomat (J. H. Gilmour). Here she meets an American journalist, Julian Rolfe (Milton Sills), bent on exposing the rotten condition of Russian politics. Having felt the heavy hand of the secret police, Anna readily aids him. His articles begin to disturb the Baron and he sets Petrov Paviak (Leon Bary) to spy upon her. Petrov soon discovers that she is none other than Anna Mirrel, possessor of a yellow ticket. Acting on the advice of the Baron, Seaton refuses to permit her to teach his daughter. But Rolfe believes Anna's story and determines to defend her. Anna, believing the Baron her friend, seeks his counsel when ordered from her lodgings for being a yellow ticket holder. The Baron offers to revoke the ticket if she will give herself to him. Struggling with him Anna stabs him to the heart with a hat pin. Count Rostov assumes the Baron's duties and, after giving out the story that his uncle died of heart failure, is determining on Anna's fate when Rolfe enters, demanding her release. He has her confession of the murder written to him by Anna. He threatens to publish the true facts of the case and so ruin the Baron's reputation if Count Rostov does not release her. To his surprise the Count turns on him and accuses him of the murder. About to cast him in prison, the Count is called on the 'phone by the American ambassador who Rolfe informed of his contemplated visit to the Okrana. Afraid of international difficulties and seeing that Rolfe has the better of him he permits him to depart with Anna providing they both leave Russia. These terms Rolfe accepts.

Five Christie Comedies

(Christie Film Company—One Reel Each)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE latest shipment of comedies produced under the direction of Al Christie are all fine specimens, two of them in particular being excellent in every department. Mr. Christie has brought to the screen light two very fair and capable comediennes since the present writer last reviewed a number of his pictures. These are Eleanor Field and Dorothy Dane, each of them ravishingly pretty and each possessed with a good idea of the type of acting demanded in the Christie comedies.

"Here Comes the Groom," with Miss Dane and Bobby Vernon, which shows the manner in which the prospective husband turns the brunt of a practical joke played on him just before the wedding on its perpetrators is perhaps the best of the whole five. It is full of humorous situations and benefits from Vernon's apt sense of comedy and Miss Dane's beauty.

"Somebody's Baby" has Billy Mason and Dorothy Dane, aided by Betty Compson. Billy becomes engaged, but to a very jealous young lady. A widow's baby somehow gets left in the rear seat of Billy's car, and when his fiancee discovers it there is a large amount of trouble for Billy. He ends up by marrying the widow.

"Love and a Gold Brick" presents a rollicking series of incidents showing the manner in which a young fellow fooled two city jokers into believing he was a rube. Bobby Vernon, Eleanor Field, Ethel Lynne, Harry Edwards and Milton Sims are the principals.

"A Regular Patsy" shows Eleanor Field disguising herself as a maid in order to enjoy the house party which her mother and older sister are attending. Eleanor proves the hit of the occasion much to the distress of all the others and captures the heart of the guest of honor, a soldier home from the front. Billy Mason, Helen Jasmere and Eugenia Forde complete the cast.

"Their Breezy Affair" is laid at the beach and has Billy Mason and Dorothy Dane (appearing as a perfect heart-breaker), in the principal roles. It is a comedy of lovers' misunderstandings which continues at a fast speed throughout its length.

"The Vigilantes"

(Bear State Film Company—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by J. C. Jessen

THE stirring days of the time of the California gold discovery and the few years which followed, has served as the plot for a romantic historical photoplay filmed by the Bear State Film Company, a Los Angeles organization. The film is titled "The Vigilantes" and consists of seven reels.

This is truly an interesting subject, showing as it does, the actual conditions that existed just prior to, during, and the few years that followed the mad rush for the yellow metal. The costumes of the people, their environment, and the fight of the better element to predominate over the lawless, make this a gripping film. "The Vigilantes," to all those familiar with California history, stands out as the Klu Klux Klan of the western state, an organization first composed of a few men which grew in power and ultimately had the strength to take the law in its own hands when officers failed to see that there was a proper enforcement.

Of particular interest in this film are the scenes showing the first find of gold, the crude machinery built to separate gold from the sand, and the various methods employed in taking it from the earth. All of these scenes, together with those that show conditions in San Francisco and other places during these days, were made from records and drawings collected by historical societies.

The picture introduces several new faces to the screen, and important parts are taken by others well known. Grant Churchill and Gertrude Kabierske play the leads, and around these two is woven a romance which began in New England and ended in San Francisco. William Parsons, remembered for his work in many Lubin pictures, appears as the heavy, Don Enrico Felipe. Others in the big cast of forty or more are Vera Lewis, Fannie Midgely, Robert Chandler, William Ephe and Robert Cecil.

In many of the mob scenes as many as 2,000 took part. In the final ride of the Vigilance committee there are more than one hundred horsemen, who thrill the spectator with their daring dash over dangerous mountain roads. The story opens with scenes showing the tranquil conditions in California when most of the residents were Spanish. Up at Hangtown, a lumberman started to build a mill. It was while working on this that gold was found. News of this spread to all parts of the world, and from a New England community many migrated westward. Amos Fenton leaves his sweetheart, Mary Hampton, and seeks wealth in the new western field, where he is fortunate and ultimately becomes a banker. While so engaged, he saw the need of a strict enforcement of the law, and was a prime mover in the formation and working of the Vigilantes. Later Mary Hampton goes to San Francisco "around the Horn," and the climax of the outlaw band and their clash with the Vigilantes comes when the outlaw leader kidnaps Mary Hampton, and she is finally rescued by Fenton and his followers.

"All Woman"

(Goldwyn—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

HOBART HENLEY'S direction, Mae Marsh's clever interpretation of the stellar role, E. Lloyd Sheldon's story, and a capable supporting cast, make this Goldwyn offering a smashing good picture—a little bit ahead of anything she has done for the Goldwyn Company. Miss Marsh has ideal surroundings—support, plot material and dramatic moments—all she puts over with a wallop in either hand. The star has the sympathy of her audience from the first flash on the screen. Attention is called and held throughout the run. Mr. Henley is back with some of his old-time directorial punch. He was on the job every minute and guided his workers through their parts and reproduced the mental creations of the author, with the fullest appreciation for the maximum percentage of dramatic persuasion.

The homely atmosphere of the opening flashes and the true-to-life touches he has given the general trend of the action, mark his work as excellent. And back of all this looms the personality of Miss Marsh, whose work stands out with all the force capable of the Marsh genius. She shines in every scene and never once is brought down from her pedestal of victory, but a weakness in the dramatic possibilities of the story's plot or incidents.

"All Woman" takes the medal for excellence in the field of late Marsh pictures. The human element is prominent throughout, backed by a smooth running, plausible story, told in logical sequence and presented by characters whose work justifies the confidence placed in them by the casting director. Oliver T. Marsh was at the camera and he certainly has made his camera behave. Jere Austin has a good part and he puts it over with a bang. Arthur Houseman, seen for the first time in some months in feature releases, holds up the role of Dick Wellman with all the assurance of his past performances. John Sainpolis does a good bit as does Jack Dillon, Joe Henaway, Hazel Alden, Madelyn Klare, Elsie Sothern and Lois Alexander. Good parts have been allotted the supporting cast and each member has done his or her work well.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Susan Sweeney (Mae Marsh) works in a New York toy factory. She receives a letter informing her that she has become half owner with William Kibby (Jack Dillon), of a hotel in the Adirondacks. Austin Strong (Jere Austin), the writer of the good news, encloses a check and informs Susan that he will come and talk matters over with her. But Susan cannot wait and goes to the Adirondacks. Strong is a young lawyer with a bright future. He is with his sister Miriam (Hazel Alden) and her fiance, Dick Wellman (Arthur Houseman), when Susan's letter arrives, telling him that she has left for the hotel.

The hotel is a great disappointment to Susan. She finds a dingy little building instead of the grand structure she expected. Kibby, her co-legatee, is an ill-kept fellow and given to drink. She meets Sam Tuper (John Sainpolis), a half-way lawyer. He urges Susan to return but she decides to stay.

Meanwhile Dick persuades Miriam to elope with him. A storm overtakes them and they seek refuge in Susan's hotel. Susan is suspicious of her guests and when the storm clears, she orders them from her hotel. Susan decides that the bar must be closed. The inhabitants take offense and when they are storming the place, Strong arrives. Tupper is killed in a fight with Wellman. Susan resolves to save Dick and conceals him in her hotel. Wellman is detected by Strong, leaving Susan's room at night. From this entanglement Susan comes out victorious and there is happiness among all.

"Old Wives for New"

(Artcraft—Six Reels)

Reviewed by R. E. Pritchard

DAVID GRAHAM PHILLIPS wrote a masterful indictment of the woman who, after her marriage, forgets to keep herself attractive and allows herself to sink into an utterly selfish and slovenly existence in "Old Wives for New." It is a remarkable story and as a picture it has been given an equally remarkable production by Cecil B. De Mille. There are somewhat risque situations in the story, but these have been handled delicately. It is not a story that children will understand, and it is one that the prudes will consider a reflection on themselves. All in all it is one of the most satisfactory pictures that has been shown on Broadway in months.

Every element unites to make it a great production. In the first place there is a real story, one that goes outside the commonplace. The plot holds up at every minute and there is always action and suspense, while all of the characters are drawn so faithfully that there is never the slightest temptation to question the probability of the action. Given this great advantage of a splendid story, Mr. De Mille is at his best in the direction and the story is carried through to its logical ending without a flaw. The result is a highly dramatic narrative, faultlessly produced, carrying a powerful sermon, but at the same time avoiding anything of the "preachment."

Another thing that makes the picture unusual is the cast, for the player for each character has been ideally chosen. Theodore Roberts, as Berkly, has never had a better character role, and he again proves himself the finished actor, while Elliott Dexter, the leading man, probably does the best bit of work of his career. Florence Vidor is genuine and refreshing as Juliet Raeburn, and immediately upon her appearance wins the full sympathy of the audience. There are a dozen others in the cast who are known wherever there is a screen. Such a splendid actor as Tully Marshall, for instance, has to be content with a butler's role.

"Old Wives for New" has proved a genuine treat for those who are satiated with the number of pictures they must see each week. There was the story to start with, each actor was selected only for his fitness for the part and never does the production let down for a second. The settings and costumes reach the same high mark. In short, it is the kind of a picture that will convince those who doubt that the photoplay has reached the artistic plane of the spoken drama.

This is a picture that will require a different class of advertising from the ordinary picture. It requires merchandising copy. Simply to announce the name of the production, the author, and the list of players is not enough. We would suggest such a theme as "The perfect production," and then devote the merchandising to telling why this statement is made. To those who do not know the story the title may not appeal, for, as the writer heard one man say in front of the Rivoli, "I don't want to see that picture. I don't care for Shakespeare."

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

After twenty years of married life Charles Murdock (Elliott Dexter) is still a young man, but his wife (Sylvia Ashton) has become fat, mentally and physically. She is a typical poodle-dog type, slovenly, selfish and utterly blind to husband and children (Helen Jerome Eddy and J. Park Jones). His partner, Berkly (Theodore Roberts), is frankly a man of the world and openly associates with other women. But his class, while affording a contrast to his wife, does not appeal to him and it is while he is on a hunting expedition with his son that he meets Julia Raeburn (Florence Vidor) and it is a case of love. He tells her of his love, but reveals that he is married and both decide that they can never belong to each other. But on the return home the son tells how the girl has saved him from a bear and instantly the fat wife is aroused to a frenzy of jealousy. With Berkly he then drops into the faster life, but later Juliet comes back into his life when he is injured in a railroad wreck and the girl becomes his nurse, but before he recovers from his delirium she leaves, the man retaining only an impression that he has seen her. In the meantime, Blagden (Gustav Seyffertitz), Murdock's private secretary, has been encouraging the breach between the couple and gradually metamorphoses her into a worldly woman. Accompanied by Blagden, she goes to the city and charges Juliet with too great friendship with her husband, but after the quarrel she yields to Blagden's advice and seeks a divorce. In the meantime Berkly, in his wild life, has abandoned one of his women friends for a new one and in the quarrel that follows he is shot by Viola (Marcia Manon). To stop the scandal Berkly is removed to his home to die and his death passes for the time as a natural one. But then Blagden starts the report that Juliet has killed Berkly and to shield her, Murdock openly takes Viola and announces that they are going to Europe together. Then Blagden and Mrs. Murdock are married and after some months Murdock settles money on Viola and leaves her. She has never been anything more to him than a screen to protect Juliet. At this juncture Juliet comes into life again and with his life practically ruined he begs her to return to America but she only agrees to do so as his wife.

"A Doll's House"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

HENRIK IBSEN'S play, "A Doll's House," which, whenever it is produced on the stage, always creates interest and which two or three companies have put into picture form, was selected as Elsie Ferguson's latest starring vehicle. Miss Ferguson's portrayal of the doll wife is marked with care and skill. She very well succeeds in bringing out the girlishness of Nora in the beginning of the play, while the emotional phase of the role which comes with Nora's anxiety over the thought of her husband discovering her innocent act of forgery and her gradual awakening is done with rare feeling. Miss Ferguson has been surrounded by a competent supporting cast including H. E. Herbert as the husband, Thorvald; Alex K. Shannon as Krogstadt and Ethel Grey Terry as Mrs. Linden.

The picture as produced by Maurice Tourneur, makes an interesting entertainment for the better classes. Naturally the play loses much of its force when transformed into a picture because the lines of the spoken piece discuss the problem of the wife who is kept in a "doll's house" by her husband, intelligently and brilliantly. But on the other hand the plot of the play has a deal of suspense and it is often remarkable to note the manner in which Mr. Tourneur and his scenario writer managed to drive home many of the points of the play by adapting them to the requirements of the screen. Probably the only criticism which one can find with it as a production it its lengthy subtitles and sometimes choppy scenes.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nora (Elsie Ferguson) is the petted wife of Thorvald Helmar (H. E. Herbert). Though she has borne him three children he insists on treating her as a child, herself. Shortly after their marriage Thorvald had been taken seriously ill. Nora had borrowed money from Krogstadt (Alex K. Shannon) but knowing her husband's prejudice against going in debt had covered this up by signing the name of her late father to a check and pretending it was a legacy from him. Mrs. Linden (Ethel Grey Terry), one of Nora's school friends, visits her in search of work after the death of her husband. Nora appeals to Thorvald who promises her a position in his bank. To make room for her he discharges Krogstadt, a self-confessed forger, who has since made restitution for his crime. Krogstadt visits Nora, claiming that he will inform Thorvald of her act of forgery if she will not use her influence to have him reinstated. Nora tries, but to no avail. So Krogstadt writes a letter and deposits it in Thorvald's letter box, telling him of his wife's deed. Mrs. Linden volunteers to make Krogstadt retract his statements concerning Nora and visits his home for that purpose. She finds him out of town. For a day Nora keeps Thorvald from opening the letter box, on the pretext that he must play for her while she rehearses a dance she is to give at a reception next evening. Mrs. Linden at length secures Krogstadt's word that he will retract. He writes another letter and puts it in the box. This one contains Nora's check. After the reception Thorvald opens the box, reads the letter and is furious, thinking of his reputation. He upraids Nora. When he reads the second letter from Krogstadt he is satisfied. Nora, however, begins to realize the utter selfishness of her husband and as Thorvald can not understand her attitude she leaves him with the words that each has much to learn.

"De Luxe Annie"

(Select—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

NORMA TALMADGE has what should prove to be as great a success as "Ghosts of Yesterday," in this adaptation of Edward Clark's play, "De Luxe Annie." It may be classed as a crook melodrama with its central figure, a woman of refinement, an adoring wife and happy mother, becoming notorious as a high-class crook, while suffering from a prolonged attack of asphasia. Its action is swift moving, containing a number of stirring physical thrills and maintaining the interest at a high pitch throughout, due to the originality and strength of the initial situation and the many complications which arise from it. Paul West made a skilful adaptation of the play and in the production it has been handled with fine effect by Roland West. The action is properly keyed and the various crises reached with no small measure of suspense.

The merits of "De Luxe Annie" quite overshadow its few flaws. The liberal supply of coincidence utilized in the development of the melodrama is perhaps only a matter of technique and will in no way interfere with its entertainment value. Where one might rightfully become critical is in the matter of the casting of Eugene O'Brien in the role of Jimmy, the crook. The polished and so agreeably gentlemanly Mr. O'Brien has rather a hard time of it being tough — in fact, save for a few scenes in the beginning, he is the thoroughbred at all times. No Jimmy could life his silk hat with the skill of this actor. But where the mistake is most obvious is in the finale when Jimmy, out of love for the one-time De Luxe Annie, refuses to recognize her after she has been restored to her true self. Here Mr. O'Brien, by reason of a great performance, bring all the sympathy to the character of Jimmy. If Jimmy had been tough and crude, this sympathy might have turned to momentary pity. But as it is one is more concerned over Jimmy's sorrow than the reunion of the Kendals. It is a mistake in casting. Miss Talmadge plays with the fine feeling and effect which one expects from an actress of the first water such as she. Her gowns are goregous. Frank Mills fills the role of the husband nicely. Perhaps if some of Mr. O'Brien's closeups had been awarded him in the last scenes the effect might have produced the generally desired poetic justice. Edwards Davis, Fred Stanton, Joseph Burke and Edna Hunter comprise an excellent supporting cast.

On the whole "De Luxe Annie," despite its lightly disappointing conclusion, is a thoroughly entertaining feature. The easy style in which the activities of the crooks are set forth is fascinating, to say the least, and the presence of such skilled and beautiful actress in the title part, adds immeasurably to both its appealing and commercial value. Ed Waynard and Albert Moses photographed it and the work is as good as that manifested in all other departments of the picture's production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Walter Kendal (Frank Mills), a lawyer, has as his hobby the study of criminals. Of an evening he leaves his country home in company with his friend, Dr. Niblo (Edwards Davis), a criminoligist, to trap a pair of crooks, Jimmy Fitzpatrick (Eugene O'Brien), and Mrs. Archer (Edna Hunter), notorious workers of a swindle game. While they are absent Walter's Wife, Julie Kendal (Norma Talmadge), fearful of her husband's safety, follows them. Jimmy has put up a good fight, and is escaping with his companion when Julie enters the house. She attempts to stop them, but is beaten off by Jimmy. Regaining consciousness Julie wanders off into the night, her mind a blank as to the past. After a lapse of time Jimmy finds her in Chicago, but is unaware that she is the woman of his encounter, and that she is Kendal's wife. He takes her up, having broken with Mrs. Archer, and soon the couple become known as two of the cleverest society crooks in the business. In New York again they are located by Kendal's detective (Fred Stanton), and soon Kendal finds an opportunity to present himself to his wife. She does not recognize him, but finds after a while that she loves him. But then she believes that Kendal is playing to turn her over to the police and, with Jimmy, puts up a stiff fight against him. The battle of wits contains a number of thrilling adventures, but at length De Luxe Annie is caught, and soon afterward Jimmy submits to the detective. The situation is explained to him. Because of his love for her he urges her to submit to an operation—an operation that completely restores her to her right mind. Her activities as De Luxe Annie remain but a bad dream. Jimmy, in sorrow, turns away from her bedside after disclaiming all knowledge of her, and leaves her in the arms of her husband.

JUNE CAPRICE was given the leading role in a story that is weak in plot construction and with very little in the way of dramatic strength to hold it up in place with a good program offering. Frances Crowley, the author, fails to give to her work a punch where such is needed. She has written a story and that's all. It does not afford material for reproduction on the screen that is satisfying. Miss Caprice hasn't sufficient dramatic ability to put over a poorly written story. Here is her handicap. She tries hard to make the best of the situations offered but has attempted the impossible because she hasn't the name or the artistic ability.

Harry Millarde, the director, has, considering the story he had to work with, given this picture a good production. It hasn't the meat of the drama and here is where it fails. Those who like June Caprice and her kiddish ways will, no doubt, like this picture. She is before the camera pretty much all the time and her smile is working over-time. She has been given the assistance of a good supporting cast, Helen Tracy standing out as the stellar light of the supporting element. Bernard Randall is seen in the villain role and carries his part with appreciation and is in general convincing. Jack McLean is seen in the leading juvenile role and does credible work. Florence Ashbrooke, Henry Hallam and Blanche Hines do well in minor roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Du Bois, Blue-Eyed Mary (June Caprice) lives with her father and mother in a small country town. Her father had been disowned by his mother when he married against her wishes. Mary's grandmother, Mrs. Van Twiller (Helen Tracy), lives in the fashionable district of Washington Square, New York. She is wealthy but refuses to forgive her son for his marriage against her wishes. Mary's father writes his mother that he is prosperous and wealthy. He does not want her to know that he has been a business failure. Mary goes to New York to visit her grandmother. Cecil Harrington (Bernard Randall), Mrs. Van Twiller's nephew, is planning to get her fortune. He lives with Mary's grandmother. When Mary arrives she is received in disdain by her grandmother but Mary's smile and her ingratiating manner soon wins the affections of the old lady. Bernard is detected in a robbery and taken off to prison. The old lady succumbs to Mary's winning ways and disinherits her nephew, forgives her son and all are happy.

“The Million Dollar Mystery”

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

TO reduce a forty-reel serial to a six-reel feature and still retain most of its salient points, continuity and interest is avowedly some task, but this is exactly what has been done with Harold MacGrath's masterpiece serial, “The Million Dollar Mystery.”

The natural result of this film surgical operation is that there are many thrills, sensations and gasp arousing incidents to each hundred feet of film; in fact, they came so fast that we began to doubt our own ability to assimilate them.

Consider for a moment a victim — in this case the late Florence La Badie — after each succeeding abduction, jumping overboard from a steamship in Newfoundland waters at midnight; fleeing from a gang of cutthroats from the top flight of a miniature skyscraper; escaping from a burning building, and again leaping from a swift motorboat, almost in mid-ocean, to be rescued by her hero in a hydroaeroplane.

And these are not all.

The whole picture, while intensely interesting, just as surely shows intensive crowding.

The original serial was on the market four years ago, and was then declared a winner in its elongated form, and now though considerably dwarfed, will no doubt find hearty favor in some sections.

The exteriors, of which all but about 15 per cent. are necessary for the picture's portrayal, are varied and remarkably well selected in every instance, and the photography, too, should be commended, particularly the midnight moonlight scene off the coast of Newfoundland. The cast is a notable one and all acquit themselves creditably.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Hargreaves, fearful of his own safety, and that of his infant daughter on account of his early affiliations with a Russian secret organization, “The Black Hundred,” surreptitiously places the child in a ladies' seminary to be taken out when eighteen years old. After about seventeen years the taking out of the child—now a sizable young lady—occurs, but Papa Hargreaves is missing. He had been repeatedly threatened by “The Black Hundred,” and on the suggestion of his aged butler, he and the butler (Sidney Bracy) swap places—Hargreaves only having to shave off his beard to present almost a life-like reflection. Numerous schemes are resorted to then to discover the whereabouts of Hargreaves (Albert Norton) who was supposed to have been rescued from a destroyed balloon in which he was making his getaway. Hargreaves, being previously tracked, was known to have drawn a considerable amount of money from the bank and the main purpose of the gang is to get this to further Russian revolutionary propaganda. The daughter is abducted many times and threatened with dire consequences, unless she reveals the hiding place of her father's million —a father she thinks she has never met and of whose business she is innocent. All this time, however, her father, in the guise of butler, is working overtime to guard her, but in spite of his watchfulness she has a most strenuous time. In the end, however, through the instrumentality of a newspaper reporter (James Cruze), the gang is run down and a reunion takes place.

The balance of the cast is Countess Olga (Marguerite Snow); Susan, friend of Florence (Lila Chester), and Braine, the conspirator (Frank Farrington).

" His Own Home Town "

(Paramount-Ince—Five Reels)

CHARLES RAY appears at his best in this adaptation of Larry Evans' story of the same name. As the young man who is considered a good-for-nothing by his father and the "best" people of his own home town, he creates a big appeal and his still refreshing air of unsophistication and youthful enthusiasm is as fascinating as ever. And while the story in many of its essentials is palpably impossible when cut to the measurements of the celluloid, it contains any number of human interest touches that radiate themselves through the whole picture with the result that it provides entertainment of no mean order.

The support surrounding the star is of an exceptional order. Katherine MacDonald has only a few opportunities as the heroine but rises delightfully to each one of them. Charles French, Andrew Arbuckle, Otto Hoffman, J. P. Lockney, Carl Forms and Milton Ross perform with great credit in character parts. The atmosphere of the "near-city" which Director Victor Schertzinger has instilled into every scene which takes place in the home town is excellent.

The manner of development which Mr. Evans employed in preparing his story is novel and gives rise to several comedy touches toward the finale. The hero has aspirations to become a playwright and the climax of the picture dawns on him as a very good climax for his play. As the manager enters on the final scene he asks him whether or not it wouldn't make a fine third act curtain and also wants to know whether it would be too conventional if he kissed the heroine. This conclusion leaves the spectator in a delighted frame of mind.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The town of Warchester is in the control of T. Elihu Banks (Charles French), a hypocritical millionaire who has misguided its destinies for some time. His aides are the Reverend John Duncan (Andrew Arbuckle), a minister whose ideal has been obscured by wealth and power, and Justice Jameson (Milton Ross). Duncan's son, Jimmy (Charles Ray), is looked upon as a failure. When he returns to his home town via the side door pullman he is disowned by his father. He protects the illustrious offspring of Banks and Jameson in a gambling raid but gets caught himself. He is practically driven from the town. David Landis (Carl Form), the editor of a run-down paper, is the only man in the city who dares oppose Banks, but the corrupt politician has such a firm hold on the town that Landis' efforts meet with small results. In the city Jimmy finally achieves some success as a playwright and has the satisfaction of seeing Carol (Katherine MacDonald), daughter of Landis, starring in a play of his writing. Another play concerning his own life he fails to place. The manager suggests that he bring the prodigal back to his home town to finish it up. Landis dies and states in his will that he wishes Jimmy to carry on his work. Jimmy returns and sets to with a vengeance, severely attacking the corrupt leaders of the city, including his own father. He finally gets them in such a tight hole that they offer him anything to quit. His terms are that they resign their several positions. In his triumph Jimmy meets with foul play at the hands of one of Banks' gangsters who shoots him from the rear. It is only a slight wound, however, and when Carol arrives with the manager, Jimmy takes her in his arms for a regular happy ending.

" The Interloper "

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE INTERLOPER" is the first picture to be released on the World program that has been produced under the new management at the studios. In every department it shows a marked improvement over the past average of the World production, but particular attention must be called to the fine direction of Oscar Apfel. His work, obvious in the well balanced and smooth running action, shows itself indirectly also through the work of Kitty Gordon, the star. Never before, it is safe to say, has Miss Gordon put such feeling and expression into her work as she has under Mr. Apfel's direction in "The Interloper." Her portrayal of Jane Cameron, the strong-minded woman of the southlands, is realistic and touched with a color and certain charm; qualities which many have missed in her acting in the past.

The story of "The Interloper," while it retains those elements which have been recurrent in the majority of the preceding World pictures, chief of which are the complications resulting from marital conflict, has been handled deftly both by author, adapter and director. The plot is in itself interesting and based on a novel situation, its development is logical and the dominating note in its production is realism. The scenes in the South were selected with care and the settings and locations throughout the five reels form a most pleasing background to the story.

Miss Gordon receives fine support from a cast headed by Irving Cummings. His work in the role of the husband who lives in the memory of his departed wife, is as skilful a piece of acting as he has ever contributed to the screen. Frank Mayo, as heavy, Warren Cook, Isabelle Berwin, June Blackman and George MacQuarrie complete the cast of principals.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jane Cameron (Kitty Gordon) presides over the destinies of the unproductive plantation left her by her father. She refuses a comfortable home offered her by her cousin and the offer of marriage from Carvel (George MacQuarrie), a neighbor. Whitney (Warren Cook), a railroad magnate in the North, has failed to obtain permission from Jane to run a road through her land. His son, Paul (Irving Cummings), is dispatched to the South to open negotiations with her. Paul has lived a life of sorrow ever since the death of his wife, whom he regarded as the epitome of modesty and virtue. Jane refuses to listen to the offers of Paul in regard to the railroad, but is by no means adverse to meeting him socially. In time a great love springs up between them and they marry. Returning to the North, Jane is at first happy, but in time the constant references to the memory of the former Mrs. Whitney made by her husband and his parents begin to pall upon her. She grows to loathe her name. There comes a time when Paul departs on a hunting trip despite Jane's confession that she will be lonely without him. While away she sees a great deal of Knapp (Frank Mayo), Paul's greatest friend. To him she confides her troubles. Knapp suggests that, perhaps, the late Mrs. Whitney was not as virtuous as she had been led to believe, and invites her to his apartment that night to obtain proof. Jane keeps the appointment, and discovers that Knapp was the secret lover of Mrs. Whitney. She obtains a signed photograph as evidence. She resists Knapp's advances and returns to her home, determined to shatter the memory of her predecessor. But when she thinks of the sorrow it will cause she throws the photograph in the fire, and resolves to keep silent. And her unselfishness is rewarded, for soon after Paul returns home, unable longer to stay away from his wife.

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses"

(Marion Davies Film Corp.—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

AFTER seeing Marion Davies in "Runaway Romany" some weeks ago, and yesterday witnessing her performance in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," under the direction of Julius Steger, we wonder if it is the same Marion Davies appearing in both photodramatic offerings. Judging from a strict dramatic basis, the two are distant relatives, without the same dramatic sense in common. If Miss Davies continues to make the same progress during future intervals between pictures as she has done during the interval elapsing between her appearance in "Runaway Romany" and "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," she can begin now to prepare for all the superlative praise usually accorded a star of the "empy" world.

Miss Davies has had lying dormant within herself a certain dramatic sense of artistic appreciation for action before the camera. During the few weeks that she worked at the studio under Julius Steger's direction, this little golden-haired beauty realized for the first time that she possessed real, genuine dramatic ability. It was up to Director Steger to make her register this ability on the celluloid. She has done so, and in all due respect and appreciation for this accomplishment, she should turn in acknowledgment to her director and advisor, Mr. Steger, and say, "Hats off."

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses" is a screen version of Katherine Haviland Taylor's novel, of the same name. Sam Weller prepared the novelist's work for reproduction on the screen, and Sam did a mighty good job. When the script reached the hands of Director Steger, he caught the human incidents in one hand, the dramatic possibilities in the other, waited the work of his property men, yelled "lights," and Miss Davies and her capable cast rushed into battle, emerging after the six offensives with a halo of victory encompassing her mass of golden hair. Hats off to Steger. From the crude product he has fashioned a polished exhibit, fit for eyes of every patron of the steen-odd thousands of theatres in the U. S. A.

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses" is not going to make you grip your seats, because of its sensational episodes, but it is going to get under your skin by the emotional route. Demure little Cecilia, her devoted, loving mother, her faithful Irish father, and her wayward brother will remain in your thoughts.

That's the way Marion Davies and her supporting cast are going to hold you during the enactment of "Cecilia of the Pink Roses." Don't expect the kind of thrills that you feel when the "stunt" actor jumps over a cliff or the heroine jumps aboard a moving freight train, but you will feel the emotional thrill of the sympathetic. You will smile with the one who gives thanks that the "silver lining" has appeared in the darkened cloud. You will feel the clutch of mother love, the devotion of a sister toward her brother who refuses to open his eyes to the greatest love known.

Edward O'Connor, whose work in past years for the old Edison company put him on the map as one of our best impersonators of Irish characters, is deserving a lot of credit for his work in this production. Willette Kershaw lives the part of the afflicted wife. Charles Jackson, a youngster, is good in a bit. George Le Guere, as the wayward son, gives a fine exhibition of juvenile work. Mr. Le Guere can take rank with our best juveniles. Harry Benham, who has the leading straight role, and is in chief male support of Miss Davies, is convincing while in evidence. His role is not prominent. John Charles, Eva Campbell and Joseph Burke have minor roles. Miss Campbell, a newcomer on the screen, has a bright future before her, if given a chance. Last but not least, the photography—it's of the first order. The interior sets are up-to-the-minute. The exteriors are beauties. "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" is a clean, inspiring photodramatic work, entitled to be featured on the program of any and all theatres. The story runs a bit slow in places, but this could be easily remedied by cutting.

(Progressive Film—One Reel)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

IT IS not generally known that a fully equipped, well managed fox farm is being conducted at East Northport, Long Island, where the animals are tended, cared for and nurtured until their furs are in such condition as to warrant the killing of the fox for the value of said furs.

A single reel, produced by the Progressive Film Co. and handled by General Films, goes into the minutest details of this exceptional industry, and depicts the habits of the wily fox and shows their development from birth to the final disposition of their pelt.

It is a very interesting picture and of great educational value.

Two Strand Comedies

(Strand Mutual—One Reel Each)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

BILLIE RHODES again shows to advantage in the two latest Strand releases, "Her Terrible Time" and "Her Rustic Romeo," in each of which Cullen Landis plays opposite. There is really very little plot to either of them, but Miss Rhodes' captivating personality will put them over.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipment And Good Projection

BROADWAY AT THIRD

March 13, 1918.

The Westinghouse Electric & Mfg.Co.,
811 Van Nuys Bldg.,
Los Angeles, Calif.

Gentlemen;

The 90 ampere motor generator set which you installed when our new theatre was opened has been in use several hours each day and we feel that the results obtained have demonstrated to us that a Westinghouse Motion Picture Generator set in the best apparatus in that line.

As you know we average between 85 and 90 amperes on our projection machines, and our chief operator tells me that he experiences no trouble what ever in carrying both projection machines on the generator at one time, in fact he has at times added the two stereoptican arcs making a total of four arcs with a combined load of about 200 amperes and still secured sparkless commutation.

The essential points most appreciated by us are first: The excellent voltage regulation and sparkless commutation under all running conditions. Second; Its simplicity and quietness of operation.

We also appreciate the service rendered by your Mr.H.F.O'Brien who laid out the wiring and switchboard plans for our projection room and installed the apparatus so that everything has worked O. K. from the start without any further adjustments being required.

Yours very truly,

Sid Grauman

—If you know Mr. Grauman, you know that no one is more careful than he to select equipment which will give the very best results.

—From his letter, it is clearly evident that our equipment has amply demonstrated its worth and superiority.

—When Westinghouse Equipment proves so satisfactory to Mr. Grauman, surely it is to your advantage to ask for particulars.

—Send us the details of your installation and let us help you also, to best results.

What is Film Service?

IT was my pleasure to talk to a motion picture theatre owner the other day who is representative of those houses which form the backbone of our industry. His house, which is situated in a small city of less than twelve thousand, has a seating capacity of one thousand. His progressiveness may be judged by the fact that he has just purchased an organ with orchestral attachments which cost him five thousand dollars. These facts are mentioned in order that you may be the better judge as to the clientele to which he appeals.

His operating room is fully equipped with everything which is necessary for the best screen results, and he does not hesitate to make purchases when they are necessary or suggested by either his head operator or the assistant, for he has two men who look after the presentation of the picture, either of whom is capable of taking entire charge.

His film service is from twenty-five to thirty-five days old and should be in good condition, yet from his description he seldom gets a picture which is even passable without inspection. He says from his experience he has found that he can never show a picture without inspecting it first, not only for bad patches and breaks, but also for misframes. This, he says, is not only true of one company's product but of practically every one whose film he takes.

From the exchange's point of view it is not just to the industry—inspection must be insisted upon. If a film does not reach an office, leaving time for inspection, before it has to be again sent out to another theatre, other arrangements should be made. Seventy-five (75) bad patches, breaks or misframes in seven thousand feet of film is far too many, though our friend says this occurrence is not uncommon. Two hours and a half spent repairing and patching film before daring to put it on the screen is absolutely unfair to any theatre, yet these boys consider themselves lucky if they can get away with anything less. This is wrong—all wrong. How can any exchange system expect to come out on the right side of the ledger if they allow this to happen continually? It is the duty of every exhibitor or operator to complain to headquarters letting them know how the branch exchange is handling film. If they can't get action we will gladly lend our aid in cleaning up this inexcusable condition, through the NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE.

Five thousand feet of film delivered when seven thousand is advertised as the length of the picture is another feature of the service which is often a great inconvenience. Explaining this, one film salesman said: "Well, you see the reason for this is that no feature can be less than five reels and still be a feature, so we pad it up to seven so that when it gets this old there will be at least five thousand feet left." It makes no difference about the story, it is the minimum footage which counts according to this bright and progressive salesman.

There is hardly a big theatre today which does not recut features, leaving out the padding and making the story stronger—but can you imagine having a feature cut for you by operators all along the line who slash the film and destroy it till its advertised length is reduced two thousand feet and the story is entirely gone, or at least mangled? It does not seem possible that this is being done, but it is and by men who should know better.

How many exchanges are there where every print is inspected every time it comes in and when a scene is missing in part, or entirely eliminated is replaced with a newly printed scene? This should be done after each rental in order that the story may be complete. How many exchanges encourage co-operation with the exhibitor and receive his complaints as helpful suggestions? How many really consider the total income derived from rentals of subjects thirty-five or more days old? It may be the first runs which count most in the eyes of the home office, but it must be remembered that the profits are from the thirty, sixty, ninety and one hundred and twenty day houses and that after all they are of just as much value to the industry in the long run as the big first-run houses. They must be encouraged and they must have film in proper shape delivered to them. The continuance of these houses means prosperity or starvation to the industry. They cannot keep open unless film in proper condition is delivered to them, for they cannot hold the patronage.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Fort Wayne A. C. to D. C. Compensarcs

IT is important that all parts of the machine be kept scrupulously clean. Oil should not be allowed to collect either on the machine or on the floor about it, and the machine should, as far as possible, be kept free from dust. When the coils of a machine are allowed to become dirty and oil soaked, it reduces their insulation strength and eventually causes them to burn out. A small hand bellows will be found convenient for removing the dust from the armature windings.

BEARINGS

The oil wells should occasionally be cleaned and new oil supplied. They should be filled through the side filling hole and not through the top of the bearing, for if filled from the top the oil is likely to flow out through the ends of the bearings into the windings.

Only good grades of oil free from dust and sediment should be used, for poor oil or oil containing sediment will greatly shorten the life of the bearings. Immediately after starting see that the oil rings revolve freely and carry the oil up to the top of the shaft. Keep the oil at the proper level in the well, that is, nearly to the lip of the over-flow gauge. As soon as the bearing linings become so worn that the rotor is in danger of rubbing against the stator, a new set of linings should be inserted. To remove the bearings, take out the set screws in the bearing housings, lift the oil rings and drive out the bearings with a wooden block of the same diameter as the bearings. The bearings are a light driving fit in the housing and must be handled carefully. When repair bearings are supplied for the alternating current motor the set screw depression is already in the bearing, but the direct current bearings, which regulate the end play, are supplied without being previously spotted. They must be spotted before being put in place, using a 3-16-inch drill and spot-drilling for the tip of the set-screw the same distance from the end of the bearing as in the bearing being replaced.

COMMUTATOR AND BRUSHES

It is very important that the brushes make perfect contact with the commutator and to secure good contact it is important that both brushes and commutator be kept clean and free from carbon dust and dirt.

To secure proper commutation and proper operation the brushes must occupy the correct position on the commutator. This proper position of the brush yoke has been determined at the factory while the machine was on test and is indicated by corresponding chisel marks on brush yoke and frame. It is very important that these marks, indicated by white lead, should be in line to secure satisfactory operation of the machine.

If the brush-holders should become loosened or moved in any way, they must be carefully reset so that they make the proper angle with the commutator as shown in Fig. 7. They must also be so spaced around the commutator that the distances from tip to tip of the brushes are exactly the same. Care should be taken that the brushholders are securely fastened at an even height 1-16-inch above the commutator.

When replacing worn-down brushes the new ones should be fitted to the commutator by means of fine sandpaper, carefully pulled under the brush in the direction of rotation, being held tightly to the contour of the commutator. It is recommended that one extra set of brushes be kept on hand to save time in replacing. They will, however, not be needed until the original brushes have worn down to approximately ¾ inch long.

If the brushes are inspected once a week and all gum cleaned away from the brushes so that they move freely in the brush-holders, much longer life of brushes and commutator will result. If the pressure is too heavy the wear of both commutator and brushes is excessive. If the pressure is too light the contact is not properly made between brushes and commutator and sparking may result. The proper pressure of the springs on the brushes is just sufficient to insure good contact between brushes and commutator.

A dirty commutator can be best cleaned by rubbing with a clean cloth saturated with kerosene or machine oil. To keep the commutator in good condition wipe it from time to time with a piece of canvas lightly coated with sperm or machine oil, Lubricant of any kind should be used sparingly.

If the commutator begins to cause trouble at any time, due to roughness, it should be given immediate attention. Any delay will aggravate the case and may result in undue sparking, heating and consequent troubles. The roughness may be removed by polishing the commutator with a piece of very fine sandpaper by pressing it against the surface of the commutator with a block of wood shaped to the curvature of the commutator face. In using the sandpaper (emery cloth should never be used), it should be moved back and forth along the surface parallel to the shaft to prevent grooving the face of commutator. When sanding is finished, the commutator surface and brush faces must be wiped carefully to remove any copper dust and grit which may have adhered to them.

If the commutator has been allowed to become very rough it may be necessary to grind it down to a true surface, using a small piece of fine sandstone. In using this it should be steadied against the brush-holder (properly protected) or other steady-rest. Brushes should be lifted from the commutator while grinding it. After grinding, polish with fine sandpaper.

If the above treatment does not remedy the trouble it will be necessary to tighten the commutator segments and turn down the commutator. The commutator should be trued by taking off the lightest cut possible, using a sharp tool and high cutting speed. Following the operation of turning down the commutator, the mica between the bars should be carefully cut below the surface of the bars. Next remove the tool marks from the surface of the commutator with a very fine sandpaper and then blow all the copper dust and chips from in and around the commutator bars, making a final inspection to see that at no place does the copper dust or chips bridge over the mica from one bar to the next.

The truing of the commutator should be required only after a long period of service, if the machine has been properly cared for, and should be done only by some one familiar with such work.

TROUBLES

(1) Machine Does not Start.

If the machine does not start when the switch is closed, examine the fuses and make sure that the current is on at the switch terminals. It sometimes happens that a single fuse has blown on a three-phase, three-wire, outfit, in which case the Compensarc will run as a single-phase machine, but if stopped will not start again until the blown fuse has been replaced if a single-throw switch be used. However, if a double-throw starting switch be used,, the compensarc will be started up on the unfused side, therefore the missing fuse must be detected by the operation of the machine while running. If a fuse is missing it can usually be detected by the unusual noise made by the machine while running, by the motor heating excessively and more particularly by change in speed with change in load and general unsteadiness of the arc. If a fuse be blown it should be replaced at once, for it may save the burning out of the motor.

(2) Sparking at the Brushes.

When a vicious sparking develops under the brushes of the compensarc it is an indication that something is wrong. The most usual causes are:

(a) Dirt on the Commutator or Brushes.

The brushes should be removed from the holders and wiped off occasionally so that they will not become gummy and stick in the boxes. When brushes are dirty they will not make proper contact with the commutator and sparking will result. It is a good plan to take the brushes out of the boxes once a week and carefully clean them. Do not take the pigtails loose from the brushholders and be sure to place the brushes back in the boxes in their original position for if they are turned around they will not fit the commutator surface. The brushes should have a smooth, unscratched, surface free from deposit of copper.

Uneven wearing or the commutator will sometimes result in the mica protruding slightly above the commutator surface. In this case the commutator should be trued up as previously described. There should be a slight endwise movement of the armature, about 1-16 inch, which will cause the brushes to wear evenly across the face of the commutator and prevent their wearing grooves in the commutator face.

(c) Wrong Spring Pressure on the Brushes.

There should be just sufficient pressure on the brush springs to insure good contact between brushes and commutator.

(d) Open or Short Circuit in Armature.

This trouble will most often occur near where the armature winding is connected to the commutator and results generally from a bruise in handling, from some foreign body getting caught in the armature, or from a chip caught when the commutator is being turned up or repaired. If an open circuit the trouble is very apparent, since the long heavy spark accompanying it generally eats away the mica between the segments on each side of the break and thus shows its location. A short-circuit in the armature will show at once by the excessive heating and perhaps smoking of the coil or coils short circuited, and if the operation is continued, the machine will be turned out. Where trouble of this kind is suspected, the necessity of prompt attention by an electrician is obvious.

If considerably more current is being taken by the lamp than the machine is designed for, sparking may result. See that the machine is not excessively overloaded.

(f) Brushes in Wrong Position.

If the brushes are left in the same position as when the machine is received, trouble will not occur from this cause. If brushes are ever moved or changed see that they are put back where they belong and that marks on brush yoke and bearing housing agree.

(3) Machine Makes Excessive Noise.

This is most often due to a weak floor or to the machine not setting firm and level. If the noise seems to be in the machine itself and nothing can be observed out of place, send for an electrician, as the trouble may be serious.

Sometimes the noise made by the compensarc when running can be heard in the theatre, where it is objectionable. Since these sets do not require holding-down bolts or special foundation, this noise can be overcome by setting the machine in a shallow box containing an inch or two of sawdust or mineral wool, or by putting several thicknesses of heavy linoleum or sheet cork under it.

Any electrical machine will make a certain amount of noise when running. Some locations, where there are reflecting walls or vestibules, may magnify this noise until it is objectionable. If possible the locations should be given a tryout before the machine is permanently installed.

(4) Bearings Run Hot.

The first rule, when a bearing runs hot, is to see that the oil well is filled with good clean oil, and that the oil rings run freely carrying the oil to the shaft. If the bearing runs hot on a new machine, shut down and wash out the bearing with kerosene. Trouble is probably due to dirt that has accumulated in shipment. If the bearing has been running along satisfactorily and suddenly gets hot, flood the well with clean oil, leaving the drain-cock open and pouring in the clean oil while machine is running to free the bearing from dirt. A change to a different grade of oil, either heavier or lighter, will often correct a bearing trouble of this kind. Never use water to cool a bearing; it may get into the insulation of the windings and cause a worse trouble. A machine with clean oil of the proper grade never gives troubles from hot bearings.

REPAIRS

When repair parts are needed it is poor economy to try to get along without them. Brushes and bearings for these machines can be shipped promptly and will always be of correct size and quality. In ordering repair parts (new brushes, new bearings or other part of machine), for one of these Compensares, bear in mind that the serial number and name plate readings of the machine should be placed on the order.

Pitting of Rear Condenser Surface

Mr. Harry E. Baker, Chickasha, Okla., writes as follows: "I want to ask a question regarding the Hold-Ark metal coated carbon. I am using three-quarter positive and seven-sixteenth negative, (Hold-Ark) negative and I want to know if there is any remedy to keep from pitting the back condensers. I also find that the Hold-Ark carbon, that is the metal on the carbon, forms in a ball shape on the rear part of the carbon, and I have fought this thing for some time and I cannot get rid of it. When the carbon cools off it has this formation on it, and when you go to strike the ark the metal ball interferes, the result being that I have to knock this formation off before I can strike the arc. I like the Hold-Arc carbon and get grand results with them except for the trouble above mentioned."

Reply: It seems to be the experience of all users of the metal-coated negative carbons now so extensively used in projection that a certain amount of pitting of the rear condenser surface is encountered.

The extent of this pitting, when using metal-coated negative carbons of various kinds, has been investigated, however, and it has been definitely established that the extent of the pitting does not exceed that which prevails in the majority of instances, where ordinary (uncoated) carbons are used. These conclusions were reached after a series of experiments in which a projector arc trimmed with various brands of metal-coated negative carbons was burned for definite lengths of time, and the number of pits inflicted upon the rear condenser surface was carefully counted in each instance.

The principal cause of pitting the rear condenser surface is improper striking of the arc, and there are an amazingly large number of operators who do not seem to know how to do this properly. If the carbon tips are held close together, or frozen, immediately after striking the arc, or if the carbon tips are jammed together and separated several times in an endeavor to steady the arc without allowing time for the proper formation of a crater, many carbon particles will be violently thrown off from the tips of the carbons, and it is such of these incandescent carbon particles as happen to strike the condenser surface which cause the pitting so universallly complained of.

As, however, the correspondent finds the Hold-Ark carbons very satisfactory in other respects, and a material aid in securing a good screen illumination, we believe he will realize that a little extra care in their manipulation is well repaid in the long run.

The formation of a ball on the rear of the negative carbon is commonly noticed where metal-coated negative carbons are used, but it is a legitimate characteristic of arc action. With ordinary carbon electrodes these balls, or beads, are also to be noticed, but they are of course, not so hard as the bead resulting from the metal coating and consequently do not interfere with the striking of the arc. We do not think, however, that the correspondent should consider it a very onerous duty to remove these beads from the carbon tip prior to starting his arc.

Suggests New Style Splice

Mr. Walter B. Tate, Jr., Senatobia, Miss., a member of the National Anti-Misframe League, submits the following:

"I am proud to be a member of the best movement for better film service that ever existed. I am taking the very best of care of all films, and though I sometimes get a five-reel feature that is in better shape for the junk pile than for anything else, I see that it leaves the operating-room in the very best condition possible.

"I am enclosing a sample of splice that I believe is much better than the old method. You will note that the splice is made on an angle, making the sprocket holes at the two sides three holes apart. This is an advantage, I believe, for this reason: While the film is passing between the sprockets only one side of the splice goes through at the same time, eliminating the chances for the sprocket to break the splice. I also believe that it makes a much stronger splice. The specimen I am enclosing is a rather rough splice, due to the worn condition of the film mender I am using, but you can get a fairly good idea of my experiment.

"Some of the films that I have been using are fairly covered with holes of every shape imaginable at the end of each reel; this is certainly a menace that should be stopped. Why any operator can deliberately cut up a perfectly good film in this way is more than I can understand. He evidently has a grouch against somebody and punches out revenge on the film."

Comment: The mechanical idea underlying the type of join suggested by Mr. Tate is a sound one; no doubt the strain on the join as a whole, in passing over the sprocket, would be much reduced when the splice is made diagonally across the film, as shown at (a) in the accompanying diagram.

There is, however, a very objectionable feature about this type of splice, the objection being that inasmuch as the splice is, and must be, so situated as to encroach upon the picture area of the film, it can be plainly seen upon the screen when it passes the projection aperture of the machine. It is true that any single picture upon the projected film strip is only transmitted to the screen for a very brief interval of time, but nevertheless so alert are the trained eyes of present-day movie spectators that even the slightest blemish, or marking, upon any single film image is readily detected to the detriment of the projected results.

As Mr. Tate's suggestion is a sound one, however, from the purely mechanical viewpoint, it is worthy of experimental trial in a restricted way, in order to see what sort of an account it renders of itself in actual service. To make a really serviceable join, either of the type now under consideration, or of any other practical type, certain precautions must be observed, which have not been carried out in the specimen join submitted by our correspondent. As is apparent from an inspection of (a) in the accompanying figure, which is a sketch of Mr. Tate's splice, the film has been cut so that it partially encircles the sprocket holes on either side. This is not good practice because experience shows that a splice thus made soon commences to loosen at the points e-e, which are small overhanging ends caused by cutting through the sprocket-holes. In order, therefore, to give the diagonal type of splice a fair tryout, we suggest that the film ends should be cut and joined as per the sketch (b), which is the same in principle as Mr. Tate's idea, but is carried out in a more careful manner, and takes account of the suggestions contained in our former article, "The Mechanics of Film Splicing" (NEWS of November 10, 1917, pages 3324-25). We believe that Mr. Tate will agree with us that a better join will result from proceeding as indicated at (b), in the accompanying diagram, than by allowing the join to partly encircle the sprocket-holes, and the slightly increased attention necessary in cutting the films is repaid by the permanency of the results. We will be pleased to hear further at any time regarding this diagonal splice from Mr. Tate or from any other experimenters with the same.

Universal Proves Valuable Ally of N. A. M. L.

As an outcome of the efforts of the National Anti-Misframe League to bring about improvements in the physical condition of the film, owners of motion picture theatres the operators of which do not appear to take ordinary care in the handling of film are given personal demonstrations to show the condition in which prints should be when they are returned to the exchanges after having been used in the theatres.

President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Company, recently issued instructions that a traveling school of instruction be inaugurated as an experiment. The order was issued at the suggestion of E. H. Goldstein, general manager of the New York exchange of Universal. Mr. Goldstein has been making a personal inspection of the condition of prints as returned by theatres, with the result that he has found many of them to be badly mutilated. The exhibitor has invariably blamed the exchange for the mutilation, and the exchange has blamed the exhibitor.

As a result of the suggestion of Exchange Manager Goldstein an experienced motion picture operator, who received his early film education in the laboratory inspection room, has been placed in charge of the New York exchange inspection department.

When the inspection room finds a reel to be in mutilated condition they immediately report the damage to the operator in charge. Through a checking system the operator ascertains the identity of the theatre from which the mutilated film had most recently been returned.

The next step in the educational program is a call upon the theatre owner by the operator, who carries with him the mutilated reel. The ensuing conversation does not take the form of a rebuke from the exchange man. On the other hand, it is strictly friendly, the head of the inspection department attempting to show to the exhibitor the inconvenience imposed upon other exhibitors by the careless handling of the print.

While the plan has only been in force for a short time, results already accomplished have justified its inauguration. Apparently every call has resulted in the suggestion by the exhibitor to his operator that better care of the prints be taken, and that they be inspected, even though the inspection does add a half hour to the working day of the operator.

Nor does the plan necessitate as many personal calls as would appear to be necessary on first consideration, because the operator who mutilates film is the exception rather than the rule, and it is found that damaged films are mostly due to a few unconscious mutilators who have repeated the offence over and over, sometimes not realizing they have done anything out of the ordinary. The damage one careless operator can do may be realized if the house where he works has a daily change of program. If the daily program consists of a feature, a comedy and a scenic, it will be in the power of the operator to mutilate three pictures a day, or twenty-one a week, thereby causing twenty-one complaints from the exhibitors who next show the same prints. Even with the most careful inspection in the exchange some of these mutilations are liable to slip by.

The experiments now being conducted by Universal show that three grave offences are continually being committed by careless operators. The first and most annoying is the habit of some operators of deliberately tearing the leaders from reels and failing to replace them before the print is returned to the exchange. As the leader usually carries the reel number and is the key to the continuity in which the picture is to be put on the machine, when the leader is missing the operator does not know how to run his picture without first screening its entire length. When a reel is returned without a leader it is acknowledged that a new leader should be supplied and attached in the exchange, but very often haste of shipment prevents this, especially when a new leader is not available.

The second habit of some operators, and one which borders on the criminal, is the joining of a broken print with a steel clip. If this sort of carelessness should get by an inspection it would be very liable to cause severe damage to the machine when the picture is next run.

The Kodak Park Works of the Eastman Kodak Company

THE Kodak Park Works of the Eastman Kodak Company, located on the Lake Avenue Boulevard, comprises about 225 acres, 18 acres of which are laid out with trees, shrubs, flowers and lawns. The property is irregular in shape and extends about one and one-half miles, from the Genesee River to beyond the New York Central Railroad, with a frontage on Lake avenue of about half a mile. The first building was erected in 1890. There are now about ninety buildings, most being of fireproof construction, giving a floor space of about sixty-five acres. The length of the longest building is 740 feet. The employes number about 4,800, one-third of whom are women. For the noonday lunch a special building is provided, in which 2,700 people can be served at one time.

The Kodak Park Athletic Association, maintained by the employes, has a membership of about 3,400, and supports the following teams: Baseball, football, basket ball, soccer football, tennis, track, bowling, indoor baseball and a musical club, with a band and glee club.

On the grounds are located nearly a mile and one-half of railroad track which is served by a spur from the New York Central Lines. There are also one and one-half miles of brick pavement.

The principal products of the plant are photographic film, photographic paper (more than 150 brands), and photographic dry plates. Many of the raw materials used in the manufacturing of photographic film and photographic paper are also manufactured, among which are: paper, gelatine, silver nitrate, nitrated cotton, nitric and sulphuric acids. Cameras and apparatus are made in four other factories, known as the Camera Works, Century Works, Premo Works and Hawk-Eye Works, situated nearer to the center of the city.

The plant is equipped with four miles of water-mains for fire purposes, with 67 hydrants, 9,800 feet of hose and 30 hose-houses. The buildings are also equipped throughout with automatic sprinklers, of which there are about 30,000 heads. There is an organized fire department of 160 volunteer members, who are drilled weekly, and are equipped with three hose carts, hook and ladder truck, salvage wagon, two chemical engines, pulmotor, Draeger helmets and diving suits. In addition, there are volunteer fire companies in all departments, whose duties are to use extinguishing apparatus and to see that employes leave the buildings promptly in case of fire.

The chief source of water supply is Lake Ontario and for the storage of clean waste water, a reservoir with a capacity of 600,000 gallons is used. A private water supply system is now under construction, to furnish water from Lake Ontario to the plant, a distance of six miles. The end of the 42-inch intake-pipe will be a mile and a half from shore at a depth of 50 feet. A pumping station on the lake shore will pump the water through a 24-inch pipeline to a 5,000,000 gallon reservoir at Kodak Park. A second pumping station, located at this reservoir, will deliver the water required at the plant. This system will have a capacity of 15,000,000 gallons daily; sufficient to supply a city of 200,000 inhabitants.

The first chimney, when built in 1907, was the tallest in the United States. It is 366 feet high, 28 feet in diameter at the base, and 11 feet at the top, outside dimensions. The concrete octagonal foundation is 40 feet across, 23 feet deep, and contains 915 cubic yards of concrete. The second chimney is 366 feet high, 31 feet diameter at base, and 15¼ feet at the top, outside dimensions. The combined capacity of the two chimneys is equal to 18,000 to 20,000 boiler horsepower.

The power house contains 22 boilers with a rated capacity of 7,800 horsepower, actual capacity about 10,000 horsepower. Above the boilers are located coal bunkers, having a capacity of 3,200 tons, from which the coal drops through chutes to mechanical stokers. Waste gases from the furnaces pass through fuel economizers. About 200 tons of coal are burned per day, the ashes being removed by a mechanical conveyor. Two underground tunnels, one 721 feet long, 8 feet wide and 7½ feet high; the other 815 feet long, 9 feet wide and 7½ feet high, connect the main power house with the ice machine room and other large buildings.

Two turbine-driven and five engine-driven electric generators, with a total capacity of 4,800 kilowatts or 8,000 horsepower, furnish electricity for light and power to the various buildings throughout the plant. A total of about 2,000 motors (ranging in size from one-twelfth to 150 horsepower) are required to operate the machinery in these buildings.

Twenty thousand incandescent lamps are used for lighting.

Refrigeration for cleaning and drying air, cold storage rooms and ice-making is produced by six ammonia compression ice-making and refrigerating machines with a total capacity of 2,620 tons, the size of the two largest being 600 tons each; three others being 400 tons each, and twelve ammonia absorption refrigerating machines with a capacity of 1,700 tons, making a total of both types of 4,320 tons. This is equal to the work done by the melting of 4,320 tons of ice (157 carloads) in twenty-four hours.

The Research Laboratory is the most complete of its kind, and contains a manufacturing plant for the production of photographic plates, paper and film, on a scale large enough to make its experiments of practical value. Its numerous laboratories are equipped with the most perfect scientific apparatus for the discovery and testing of new ideas in photography. The scientific staff of the laboratory consists of over thirty university graduates, specialists in physics, chemistry and photography, together with numerous assistants. The laboratory publishes many articles in the technical and scientific journals, recording the advances made in photography and in the allied sciences. The Research Laboratory, its equipment, and some of the important photographic problems which have been investigated there, will form the subject of a succeeding article.

Laboratory Equipment

MR. S. T. CLAWSON, Salt Lake City, Utah, inquires: "Will you kindly advise me what is a good positive printing machine which can be secured for a moderate price? Is the Williamson printer on the market at the present time? If so, can you give me the name and address of the company handling it?

"In making developing tanks can you tell me the kind of wood that is best to use, and what is used to prevent leakage?

"Where can I secure lenses mounted to fit the Pathé camera?"

Reply: Investigate the Hausman printer, made by the W. B. Hausman Company, of 1025-29 Rising Sun avenue, Philadelphia, Pa. If you will write to them they will doubtless be pleased to send you full particulars and the current price, which, we believe, is in the vicinity of $250. This is about as little as one can pay and expect to get a machine of the requisite precision. The Williamson printers were last handled in this country by G. Gennert & Co., Photo Supply dealers, 24-26 East Thirteenth street, New York City. It would probably be a good plan to get in touch with them, as they might have, or be able to secure, a Williamson machine.

Developing tanks, such as those used in film laboratories, are made of gulf-cypress, which is the only suitable wood for the purpose. Slate and soapstone tanks have also been used but are more inclined to leak than the cypress tanks. The cypress tanks used in laboratories are rendered leak-proof through the use of specially designed joints which are formed on the wooden sections, and factory tanks are also provided with a series of bolts, which, when properly manipulated, will serve to tighten up the joints when this becomes necessary.

The film that first made motion pictures practical is easily identifiable by the words these are the regular cine objectives mounted in barrels instead of in helical focussing mounts. Every optical manufacturer lists his lenses in barrels, as well as in focussing mounts, and when you have secured the proper lens mounted in a barrel, the rest of the fitting requires to be done on the camera itself, or a special collar may be made into which the lens barrel is screwed, and the whole, in turn, screwed to the flange on the Pathé instrument. Lenses of three-inch focus, or over, are attached to the front-board of the Pathé camera, employing the usual tube and jacket fitting, just as in the case of any other camera.

Music and the Picture

Importance of Music as an Essential Need of the Nation

(In the Musical Observer)

WITH due regard to the needs of our Government for carrying on the war and mindful of the enormous sacrifice to be asked in money, effort and blood, to bring the conflict to a successful and victorious issue, it may not be untimely to point out a grave danger into which we may unconsciously be led and which would result in disastrous consequences, not only for the musical profession, but our communities and fighting units as well.

In the preliminary announcements for the third Liberty Loan to be floated about March 1, particular mention was made as to the necessity of doing away with every unessential industry, and attention called to the fact that every dollar spent on a luxury is helping to support an unessential industry in the competitive consumption of essentials.

The danger of this argument, sound as it may be for the purpose for which it is intended, is a very grave one, as far as the interests of the musical profession and industries are concerned. Music, in its various higher forms, is looked upon by the general public not by any means as the essential necessity which it really is, but decidedly more as a luxury. And it is most necessary and important that this wrong impression should not be allowed to grow and gain ground any more than it already has. If allowed of such interpretation, musical instruments, printed music, music books unless necessary in a professional way, may also be looked upon and considered as luxuries, and with the matter placed before our communities in such a light, with the enormous influence of our Government to back it up, we will suddenly be facing the likelihood of having music, the most uplifting and solacing of all the arts; and musical instruments, the most innocent, pleasure-giving contrivances ever invented by human hands, declared by our authorities as non-essential for the nation's direct needs and briefly labelled — luxuries. The greater danger of such a thing, were it actually to occur, would lie in the very fact that while music cannot be made use of for the maintenance of our fighting forces like food, it forms a very essential necessity for the maintenance of the good spirits and happy dispositions of our armed forces and civilian population.

To place music among the list of luxuries would deprive thousands of teachers of the means of earning their livelihood, would close our opera houses, theatres and concert halls, and paralyze an industry involving hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of investments.

With all the stress and misery of the most pitiless warfare no such thing has ever occurred to the battling nations in Europe and reports about musical conditions in those countries received from time to time all prove that, as far as possible, music in its every form is encouraged and provided wherever possible.

The English, French and Germans have learned through bitter experiences what is necessary to uphold the spirit and comforts of their people. In recent reports printed in Musical America we are told that excepting the days of blackest and most immediate peril, "France has clung to such comforts as music can bring, and has, in addition, served her best creative ends by tending most assiduously to her own musical vineyards." England we are told, "does as much, but lets nothing interfere with the enviable catholicity of her taste. She listens to midday concerts and crowds the opera house even when hostile airships shower bombs upon her capital." In Berlin, the reports say, "there is shortage of food, many of the chief commodities of diet are unobtainable, people are hungry, but operas continue to be given and are amazingly well attended, and the orchestral concerts attract crowds, especially when some favorite from happier days, like Arthur Nikisch, conducts."

We should be guided by such examples and rather than shut down on musical activities, we should encourage, foster and develop them in every possible way, manner and shape. Good music and plenty of it has never before been so necessary as at the present time. The war has gradually engulfed our nation, and our very existence in its toils; every one, regardless of what his or her occupation may be is feeling its effects and the grim realities and stern duties which are staring us in the face allow of no more excuses or alternatives. The constant worries of everyday occupation, coupled with the universal strain of war conditions, are weighing heavily upon the shoulders of every one. Nothing can banish such worries or relieve the strain more effectively than good musical performances, and to stop these would be not only an injustice to all who can be assisted and encouraged thereby, but would prove exceedingly poor policy from every conceivable point.

Band and orchestras are needed more than ever for cheering our fighting forces, and the cares and worries which are besetting every home and fireside in the country cannot be relieved more successfully, if only for the time being, than through listening to good music of some kind or other at home or attending public performances as frequently as possible.

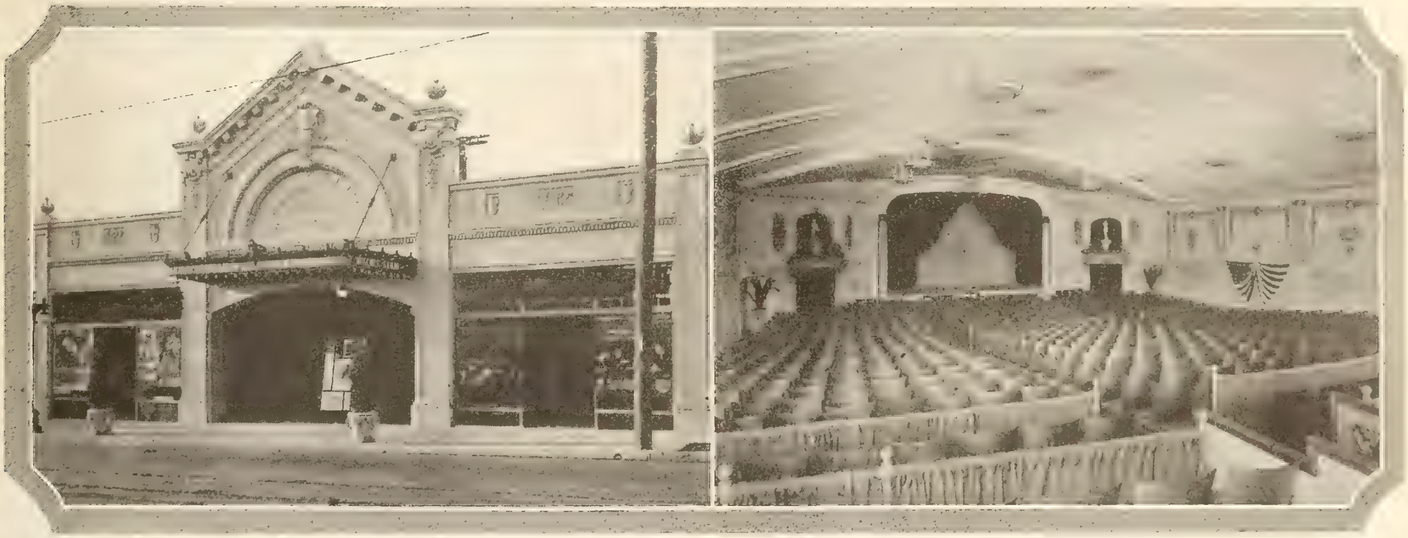
Theatres Worth While



Front View of the New Florence Theatre, Pasadena, Cal. and General View of the Handsome Auditorium

Florence Theatre Sets New Standard

PASADENA, CAL. now has one of the handsomest theatres in the country, opened in May, by D. H. Schumann, one of the most enterprising exhibitors in the country and one who promises to set a strong pace for the liver exhibitors of the West Coast with the Florence theatre.

There is no house in any part of the country where there has been greater care to achieve the greatest beauty. The result is an artistic treat.

The facade of the building rises to two-story height in the center. The front is trimmed in mottled terra cotta with a wide black iron marquee projecting over the twenty-five-foot entrance. Not a visible light is anywhere to be seen. Instead of the usual electric lights outlining the building's lines, three hidden flood lights illuminate the front.

The lobby is treated as an Italian outdoor patio. There is no marble, onyx, mahogany or brass anywhere in the Florence theatre, nor a polished surface of any kind. The patio lobby floor is laid in eight-inch squares of red tile. The walls which form a cove at the top are finished as artificial stone, and to complete the outdoor effect, the ceiling is decorated as a sky. The wall forms a two-story effect, the upper story having carved top windows with window hangings and each having a black wrought iron balcony with high railing projecting eighteen inches from the wall. Below these are a series of what would be the first-story windows, which are, in this case, devoted to the lobby display frames. To carry out the window effect, a black wrought iron grill below each of these forms a flower box. These lower boxes, as well as similar boxes along the top, are filled with flowers, foliage and grasses.

The upper window boxes serve another purpose in that they hide the electric light reflectors from which powerful electric lamps throw their rays upward, and so illuminate the entire lobby from hidden source. The central window on the left of the lobby is changed into an octagonal ticket booth with stained glass dome of a bay-window style. The booth has been placed on the left instead of the usual right. This because the usual arrangement causes the ticket office line and the waiting line to get mixed or necessitates a prospective buyer to elbow his way through the waiting line to the ticket office. Black posts and chains which can be removed are so placed in the lobby that various separate lines of waiting customers can be formed, neither interfering with the other and each landing at separate entrance doors still leaving a third door open as exit way. There are three exit doors on each side of the building.

The lobby measures 25 x 48 feet, and can easily accommodate 250 waiting patrons. The foyer is very prettily finished in silver and blue with mirrored sides and damask seats. Here are public telephone booths and stone drinking fountains. The retiring rooms for men and women are at either side at the rear of the auditorium.

The auditorium accommodates 900 seats. The seats themselves, furnished by the American Seating Company, through their Pacific Coast agent, C. F. Webber & Co., are what is known as the barrel-back variety, of a gray finish with blue leather upholstery. The box seats are in five raised rows divided into three boxes each with its own private center aisle, four seats on each side of this aisle so that only one couple will ever need pass the couple occupying the aisle seats. These boxes are surrounded Lobby, Florence Theatre, Done in Italian Patio Style, With All Lights Concealed Behind the Flower Boxes with woolen partitions of gray and blue. Above this, back along the rear, are glass panels filled with deep old rose curtains. The aisles and floors of these boxes are carpeted as are the foyer and front space of auditorium and the auditorium aisles, the carpet being in blue and gray. Separate from the boxes and from the center section of the house are two rows of loge seats.

Under every one of the 900 seats in the house is an individual outlet for ventilation or heat as the case may be, so that there never need be a rush of air of any kind coming from any large ventilator. The ventilating system heats or respectively cools the entire space below the wooden floor, there being a second floor of concrete two feet below. Heat is furnished from a large twin gas furnace under fan pressure, while the ventilating arrangement brings the fresh air from above the roof line through regulating louvres and through a water curtain below which there is also an arrangement for bringing the cooled air over blocks of ice, so insuring as low a degree of temperature as may be desirable. This is made still more easy by the fact that there is a seven-foot air space between the ceiling and roof of the building from which space large exhaust fans take the air out in such volume as may be desired.

Drinking Fountain in Foyer, Florence Theatre. The Foyer is Finished in Blue and Silver

The stage is equipped probably more completely than any motion picture stage devoted to photo-plays exclusively. A plaster screen is solidly built three feet out from the back wall showing picture approximately fifteen by twenty feet. Immediately in front of this screen is a shadow curtain of medium blue color. There is also a publicity curtain in front of which a blue-black velvet curtain is placed which drapes up into many curves instead of simply traversing to either side. Directly in front of the shadow curtain is provision for a scenic drop which will be used whenever a so-called dramatic interlude is introduced.

The decoration scheme embraces three colors—gray, blue and ivory. The ceiling is treated in gray and ivory; the lower part of side walls in dark ivory and light brown tints blocked off as artificial stone; the upper part of same with gray-blue background and a blue band of decoration introducing a few old rose and old gold medallions. In each alternating panel of the wall a life-size medallion, all original, has been sculptured, respectively representing six of the greatest Florentine celebrities: De Medici, as the ruler; Macchiavelli, as the father of comedy; Dante, as the writer and poet; Giotto, the composer; Galileo, the scientist, and Michel Angelo, the sculptor, complete the group. From just above these the ceiling curves up, there being no distinct line where side wall stops and ceiling starts, the latter ranging to an average height of twenty-two feet above the seats.

At either side of the proscenium arch is a balcony behind which rise open arches, and in each stands a stone fountain with artistically chiseled statuary and various basins. These fountains are each seven feet in height, and about five feet across at their base. Reflectors containing five colors of lights are placed above, and to the left and right of each fountain. The light is sprayed on a flasher of moderate speed. Vines and flowers back and surround the fountains which hide the main organ grill opening.

The projection room is 10 x 18 feet, and is located directly over the foyer. W. W. Hall, the chief operator, installed all the projection equipment, and has everything arranged in a convenient manner. The present equipment which was furnished by the Pacific Amusement Supply Company, of Los Angeles, consists of two Powers 6 B, with a stereopticon lens. Provision has been made and wiring installed for a two-light stereopticon.

The direct current for projection is furnished by a five and a quarter kw. seventy-two ampere Westinghouse motor generator set capable of taking care of both projectors and the stereopticon. H. F. O'Brien of the Los Angeles Service Department of the Westinghouse Company installed this apparatus.

A distinct feature in connection with the theatre is an automobile parking space on four enclosed lots immediately adjoining the theatre property. The parking space is free, and the theatre management has provided three uniformed policemen who will be in charge nightly.

A pipe organ is part of the equipment of the theatre, and in addition to this there is an orchestra of eight pieces.

Directory of New Theatres

An item published in these columns recently to the effect that a new theatre would shortly be erected at Binghamton, N. Y., is found to be incorrect.

ARIZONA

Architect T. L. Hoffman is reported to be preparing plans for a reinforced concrete theatre building to be erected in Jerome for Phil Pechariach of the Coliseum, to have a seating capacity of 536 persons.

CALIFORNIA

The Victoria theatre, now in course of construction by Pierson and Adler, at San Pedro, is fast approaching completion, and its owners point with pride to the many novel features being installed, not the least important of which is the bowled floor which enables every person in the house to have an absolutely unobstructed view of the screen.

IDAHO

The Idaho Howe theatre just completed at Meridian by John Hedges is one of the most complete in the state. The main hall has an area of 45 by 60 feet, with a stage 24 by 42 feet. The operator's room is above the hall and in front of it is a large and attractive lobby. Will Lowry of Meridian was the contractor and builder.

ILLINOIS

James E. Bacon opened his new motion picture theatre in Singer Hall at Lebanon recently to capacity business.

The Chicago Theatre Company is desirous of erecting a theatre at Marseilles, according to M. Engel. Several locations are under consideration but nothing definite has as yet been decided, except that the seating capacity will be between 600 and 700.

INDIANA

Decorators have practically completed their work at the new theatre in East Jefferson street, Tipton, and the interior of the building is being placed in first-class condition. The electrical wiring system has been installed and the seats are being placed in position and fastened to the floor. Thomas W. Davis, owner of the new house, announced this morning that he had contracted with the best film concerns in the country and "The Purity," as the new theatre will be known, will present to the Tipton public only the best and latest pictures. Pathe, Mutual, Universal and other films will be shown and the admission price will be fixed at 5 and 10 cents.

OHIO

The Lyric theatre, Cincinnati, will continue its summer season with motion pictures. The first feature booked was "The Kaiser," which opened its Cincinnati run May 19.

Plans for a new motion picture theatre in Cleveland with a seating capacity for 1,500 people, are under way. The house, to be located on the South Side, at the intersection of Fulton and Bush avenues, is being promoted by the American Amusement Company, which operates the American, the Lakeview and several other local houses. They expect to spend about $80,000 on the building.

Joseph Laronge, of the Williamson building, Cleveland, is authority for the statement that the Mall Theatre Company will erect three new theatres as soon as conditions warrant. The L. A. Cobb property at the northwest corner of Euclid avenue and East 63rd street, 89 by 300 feet, under 99-year lease and valued at $105,000, and the J. A. House property, 52 by 200 feet, at the northeast corner of Euclid and Auburndale avenues, valued at $30,000, have been sold to the Mall Theatre Company by the Grace-Ella Realty Company.

Laronge said the third house would be erected somewhere near Euclid avenue and East 9th street, will seat 2,500 to 3,000 persons and will cost about $300,000.

OREGON

Preliminary work on the Machon theatre at Coquille has been commenced under the superintendency of W. J. Longston, contractor. The structure, which will cost about $10,000, is being erected by C. A. Machon, a business man of Coquille.

PENNSYLVANIA

Folsom and Stanton, architects of Philadelphia, have been commissioned by Alfred Rothfield to prepare plans for a motion picture theatre to be erected at Clifton Heights.

TENNESSEE

An open air theatre is to be built for the benefit of the employes of the Government powder plant at Hadley's Bend, where the plant is situated.

TEXAS

Architect C. A. Logan is preparing plans for the construction of a modern motion picture theatre to be erected in the center of the business district of Beaumont by the Gordon estate at a cost of $23,000, including the equipment and furnishings, which will be of the latest modern type. The building, formerly occupied by the Cabinet bar, will form the lobby or entrance to the new playhouse. It is situated on Pearl street, between Fannin and Bowie. The auditorium will be erected on Bowie street, making the building "L" shaped. It will have a seating capacity of between 900 and 1,000 people. A stock company, composed of Sol E. Gordon, J. I. Pittman and J. C. Clemmons, will operate the theatre. Contract for the construction of the theatre will be awarded shortly.

WASHINGTON

The new theatre at Camp Lewis, Greene Park, Tacoma, was opened last week under the management of E. J. Donnellan as a highly auspicious affair. Pretty wives of men in the camp, in smart military uniforms, acted as usherettes and they certainly lent a military air to the occasion. The house has a seating capacity of 2,000, and indirect lighting is used.

Seeing the World's Best Stories

To see the characters of a famous novel come to life upon the screen is a tremendous thing!

There, alive, in flesh and blood, is the hero, or heroine, whose exploits you followed breathlessly upon the printed page.

To the great organization behind Paramount and Artcraft motion pictures we are indebted for this in the case of "The Prince and the Pauper", "Oliver Twist", "The Sub-Deb Stories", "The Rose of the Rancho", "Cinderella", "David Harum", "Girl of the Golden West", "The Heir to the Hoorah", "To Have and to Hold", "Jim the Penman", "Great Expectations", "The Virginian", Maeterlinck's "The Bluebird", and literally scores upon scores of others.

The beloved characters of these romances find a new and rich lease of life in the talent of the equally beloved stars of Paramount and Artcraft, —foremost in their world as the fiction-characters in theirs.

—as superbly directed in their actions as were those they portray.

—and doubly fascinating because touched with all the warmth and light of life.

one—by seeing these trade-marks or names in the advertisements of your local theatres.

"Old Wives

By David Graham Phillips

AN ARTCRAFT

It Has Every Quality

A statement from Mr. De Mille—

"I chose the David Graham Phillips novel 'Old Wives for New', because

"It has a big human appeal; it deals with intimate phases of marriage and divorce; every phase and humor of a woman is in it.

"It shows that a wife must compete with other women if she wishes to keep her husband, and that by such competition she benefits physically, morally and mentally.

"It is a real object lesson for wives who are taught by the story that merely being virtuous is not, as it may have been at one time, enough in these days.

"The human note is self-sacrifice and renunciation though the ending is satisfactory.

"It gives a wonderful chance for gorgeous costuming and scenes with wide diversity.

"It mirrors night life of Broadway but shows the evil results of Broadway life, in the effects upon the highly contrasted characters.

"The moral is obvious and convincing but there is not a trace of preaching.

"It has fine advertising possibilities with name of author, splendid gown stuff, marriage and divorce problem, catch phrases such as 'Why husbands leave home,' and so on.

"It will do more good than any picture I have ever produced."

A Tribute to the Motion Picture

by

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

When " The Birth of a Nation " started on its astonishingly prosperous career, critics, exhibitors and the public were kind enough to say that it would never again be equalled from an artistic or money-drawing point of view. I am now gratified to announce as a tribute to the constantly growing powers of the motion picture that " Hearts of the World," in the opinion of the trade and the public, has surpassed " The Birth of a Nation " both as a production and as an attraction.

I take this means of thanking everybody for so unanimously terming my current offering

" A thrilling dramatic and pictorial reproduction of the great world-conflict " and

" the sweetest love story ever told."

Propositions for certain state rights of " Hearts of the World " will now be received and considered.

Another Splendid Mae Marsh Picture.

MAE MARSH in ALL WOMAN

by E. Lloyd Sheldon
Directed by Hobart Henley

The authoritative critics of the important trade newspapers are more enthusiastic about Mae Marsh in "All Woman" than they have ever been about any Goldwyn Picture, including "Polly of the Circus," "The Cinderella Man," and "Thais." Exhibitors everywhere will recognize the ear-marks of a sure screen winner in these whole hearted criticisms:

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Hanford C. Judson: There is a pull at the heart strings in Mae Marsh's characterization in "All Woman." The humanness of this story and the character that Mae Marsh pictures for us makes the offering valuable. It has a specially pleasing pull at the sympathetic emotions of spectators.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW: George T. Pardy: Mae Marsh from the beginning to end carries insistent and sympathetic appeal . . "All Woman" is a valuable picture.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: P. S. Harrison: This is about the best feature Mae Marsh has ever been in. It will please everybody. The story is full of human touches that appeal to the emotions.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: Helen Pollock: "All Woman" is the type of story that has a general appeal . . it is true to life and thoroughly human.

VARIETY: Ibee: Goldwyn has turned out an excellent production with Mae Marsh in "All Woman." It is as interesting as if presented in printed form which appears to be a capital test of its worth. Hobart Henley, as the director, has had considerable to do with the good result obtained.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Joseph L. Kelley: This Goldwyn offering is a smashing good picture a little ahead of anything Mae Marsh has done for Goldwyn.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

MORE BOOKINGS THAN ANY NEW COMEDIES EVER HAD BEFORE

INSTANT nation-wide popularity with exhibitors and the public has launched "Smiling Bill" Parsons as a tremendously successful screen entertainer.

This quick success is due to—

1. His magnetism, his wholesomeness, his radiant good nature and comicality, and
2. The scarcity of comedies in general to supply the needs of more than 14,000 theatres, and to the complete absence of any comedian or comedies that can take rank with him.

Equalizing "The Balance of Power"

The fathers of American liberty foresaw that an equal division of the "balance of power" was a fundamental essential of a free people.

Accordingly they divided the power of the nation among three branches of the government—Executive, Legislative and Judicial.

Millions of money and men are being spent today to keep the balance of world power out of the grasp of Germany.

The safety of the motion picture industry, no less than that of the world, or of the United States, demands that the "balance of power" be equally divided—entirely out of the control of either producer or exhibitor.

Standing between both of these branches of the industry, and responsible to both, but controlled by neither, the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan is the one influence in the industry in a position to advance and protect the interests of all.

Another open letter to exhibitors who screen re-issues under new titles

Why Kill the Goose that Lays the Golden Eggs?

There are two or three stars whose names attract capacity business.

This is because those names have become the recognized trademarks of high class motion picture entertainment.

People believe in them because the players they advertise may be depended upon to supply good entertainment.

For instance:

When an exhibitor presents a new Chaplin film he knows he is going to play to capacity business; purely because people have faith in Chaplin's ability to entertain them, they want to see every new picture he does.

Why destroy this good-will by coupling the star's good name with an old subject under a new title?

The public will ever afterward distrust both exhibitor and star after having been deceived in this manner.

Why create distrust of yourself and one of your best assets—the drawing power of Chaplin's name.

Why prejudice the future of your theatre, your good name for fair dealing and the star's valuable—to you—reputation for the few dollars you may glean from the unwary by advertising popular stars in old releases under new titles?

Will it pay you?

GRACE VALENTINE

IN OLIVER MOROSCOS MOST BRILLIANT DRAMATIC SUCCESS

THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN

BY LOUIS K. ANSPACHER. SUPPORTED BY FRANK MILLS
AND AN ALL-STAR CAST. DIRECTED BY WILLIAM HUMPHREY

ALAN DALE
of the New York American says:

"I saw an extremely interesting and vividly gripping picture the other day. It was 'THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN,' with Miss Grace Valentine as the star. Miss Valentine is unforgetably authoritative, marvelously subtle, cynical and intriguing. I either like a picture for its story and its actors or—I don't like it. In the case of 'THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN' I appreciated the film for the sake of the Anspacher story, and for the unusually illuminative acting of Miss Grace Valentine."

HARRIET UNDERHILL
in the New York Tribune says:

"The most interesting thing that has been done on the screen this season. We never dreamed Grace Valentine could act like that. She was so convincing and compelling."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD SAYS:

"The play from which the picture was evolved was a New York sensation, and like all the Morosco productions enjoyed a long run on Broadway. As evinced by the enthusiasm the picture evoked, 'The Unchastened Woman' will continue in popularity and grow in the hearts of the picture fans everywhere."

NOTE:—

—"The Unchastened Woman"—a play that scored a sensational year's run in New York—was produced for the screen for the purpose of firmly establishing a higher quality of pictures to be released under the "Rialto de Luxe" trademark.

—It has more than achieved its purpose.

UNITED PICTURE THEATRES OF AMERICA, INC.
J. A. BERST PRESIDENT
1600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY
DEPOSITORY, COMMERCIAL TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, BROADWAY AND 41ST. NEW YORK

Is the Picture Industry Easy?

JUST recently a New York daily newspaper had about decided to publish a motion picture trade section.

Some friend of the proprietor talked him into the idea and then—before it was too late—some friend of this industry talked him out of it.

His—the proprietor's—main business reason for the new trade paper (so it is reported) was that the industry was easy, that it could be milked to the advertising tune of at least $150,000 a year.

That must have been the artificial optimism of an advertising socilitor who wanted a job.

But—is the industry easy?

Newspapers don't think of starting trade sections on automobiles, clothing, drugs, groceries, shoes, etc., etc.

They do carry advertising to the public on these commodities—but, trade sections! Well, the idea is about as ridiculous as the present numbers of so-called trade papers attempting to serve the field.

The exhibitor doesn't want more than two; the manufacturer doesn't want more than two.

Yet the needless, wasteful ones exist because—copy is handed around.

Just handed around.

Handed out with no business sense; handed out without any preliminary and adequate investigation of circulation value, or in defiance of such investigation; handed out as no other industry today would hand out its advertising money.

Therein the industry is easy.

And therein the industry is holding back its normal progress.

Advertising is a mighty big factor with motion pictures—more so than with any other commodity.

Because more people pay for motion pictures more often than for any other single thing.

This advertising must be done to the public through the exhibitor.

And to the exhibitor through his trade paper.

The trade paper advertising should tell the exhibitor how to advertise to his public.

This isn't hand-out copy—nor easy money.

It is well planned, linked-up copy, valuable to the exhibitor and worth millions of dollars to this industry through an increased and well sustained picture public.

And this era in trade and public advertising is bound to come about.

The Lure of Service

LOOKS like the industry was entering into a hullabaloo over service.

The word is getting popular.

Film salesmen will be glibly assuring the exhibitor that their service is "the greatest ever," "greater than Standard Oil service, etc."—just as they have always boosted their pictures up to the blue skies, and in the same parrot-like fashion.

It seems time to remark:

That making service—acceptable service—is like making acceptable pictures. A lot of skill, good judgment and a fine organization are required.

It takes brains—the same showmanship brains that picture making demands.

Service—the kind we are speaking of so much—means giving the exhibitor the proper advertising material and help required to put his picture over.

It means advertising.

We all know that the moment advertising becomes stereotyped—it ceases to advertise.

It isn't advertising—any more.

And the great trouble with the advertising service given out by the producer today is just this trouble: it is stereotyped.

We suspect it may even become more so.

Even the word service will become stereotyped—because many people will talk it who don't know what it means nor how to provide it.

The regular rigmarole today is to give the exhibitor just so much advertising display and press matter, so many catch phrases, lithographs, etc., etc.

Many exhibitor advertising campaigns pass our desk.

They are comprehensively and expensively produced.

But they are often stereotyped.

Some miss entirely the big, simple selling idea of the picture, and it follows that some good showman, waiving aside all the mass of advertising aids, will dig the idea out himself, after a review of the picture; and report to us a big picture out of what goes "average" in other houses.

Note our box-office reports.

Sometimes this selling idea is positively misstated, so that the exhibitor may be blindly led to give his public a false and bad impression of the picture.

Again, we note that different pictures, good, bad, and indifferent in quality, get about the same amount and kind of advertising service.

There's a danger here.

The exhibitor, who aims to keep faith with his public—the best of them do—does not want to play up mediocre pictures.

NOTE this sensible statement from Manager Momand of the Garden theatre, Flint, Michigan:

"Not every production offers the manager or press agent equal opportunity for getting results, nor have all the same popular appeal. Therefore it is up to the manager and press agent to discriminate to some extent, getting as much business as possible with the weak attraction by discretion in the wording of ad-copy and leaving it to the patron to extract as much pleasure and entertainment as he can—than by flamboyantly proclaiming every picture 'greatest on earth' and greater than the 'Birth of a Nation,' etc."

And here's another illuminating paragraph from the same statement: "Not every producer gets out the right kind of consistent advertising aids for the exhibitor, who therefore must rely greatly upon his own ability and his knack of extracting material from the trade papers with which to build his appeal to the public."

What Constitutes Service

ANY advertising campaign that misses the showmanship idea of the picture—we simply mean the public attraction idea that caused it to be made—misses the selling idea.

And any picture that hasn't a selling idea is not worth a strong advertising campaign.

The houses equipped with good advertising managers—and a few hundred are—want this selling idea most of all.

Other houses want ready-made advertising helps; and furthermore they want a man on the ground to explain their best use.

The one best way to give the exhibitor these advertising helps is through the pages of the trade papers he reads, and keeps.

The one way to give him personal help is through the exploitation department of his exchange.

Both are highly necessary avenues of service.

Service won't exist unless both are used.

Showmanship

THE Exhibitors' Service Bureau in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS gave exploitation aids on the following pictures:

"Revelation," "The Blue Bird," "Over the Top," "Doctor and the Woman," "The Kaiser," "Tarzan of the Apes," "My Four Years in Germany," "The Soul of Buddha," "Lest We Forget," "Heart of the Sunset,"

Motion Picture News will be issued on Friday, beginning June 21

"Freedom of the World," "Selfish Yates," "The Unbeliever."

These aids included: presentation, music, drop curtains, stage settings, newspaper advertising, slides, lobby displays, posters, window cards, etc.

For the most part these were originated by successful showmen. They were practical. They put the picture over. They furnish the kind of picture service sure to be appreciated by the later run house.

The Film and the Cannon

THE war will be won not by the cannon but by the film. This is the prediction of an American film man recently returned from several years' residence overseas.

The great struggle, he points out, is fundamentally that of democracy against autocracy; and however the cause of democracy wins by arms it cannot wholly triumph except through education.

The simplest, surest—to a large degree the only, medium of education today throughout all of Europe is the motion picture.

In Russia seventy millions of the population cannot read nor write. They must be reached through the screen.

He points out that the best propaganda pictures for America and for the cause of world freedom are pictures of the new world democracy—not pictures of our war preparation and participation, but pictures of home happiness, home prosperity, of our popular government, school system and the like. The people of Europe are weary of war pictures.

He calls attention, too, to the great era of reconstruction facing Europe after the war. Many a man and many a home will have to begin life all over again. Pictures breathing American optimism and courage, stories of successful battling against adversity, of starting life anew will be popular and inspiring.

A good production tip, seemingly, for those who value the foreign market.

Fewer and Better Pictures

FEATURE output was about 23 a week in 1916, 18 a week in 1917, and it is 15 a week at present.

It will be less, we forecast, in 1919.

We asked a distributor last week what his future policy would be.

"Well, I can say this," he replied, "I am going to make twenty-six pictures do the work of 52."

You can, Mr. Distributor,—provided your twenty-six pictures are worthy of exploitation and provided you are just as keen on exploiting them as you are on their box-office values.

But, anyway, you have stated a big thought.

It is one, in our opinion, which will rule the future and best destinies of picture production and exhibition.

The Newspaperman-Exhibitor

IT is an interesting fact that a number of the country's leading exhibitors are ex-newspapermen; and quite as significant is the fact that those who are not have made it a point to know the newspaper office inside and out.

Managers Branham of the Strand, Minneapolis, and Cohn of the Liberty, Seattle, say some interesting things on the subject in this issue.

Program make-up is like newspaper make-up; both must be made to catch and hold the public eye. Picking the lead out of a newspaper story is like picking the selling idea out of a picture.

And then there's the invaluable knowledge of typography, position and copy in newspaper advertising; of when and how press matter is acceptable to the newspaper; the ability even to manufacture good news—all of which the newspaperman-exhibitor knows.

Merry Wives of Windsor!

TWO passersby stopped in front of a New York theatre and read aloud the name of the feature, "Old Wives for New."

"Sounds interesting," said one, "let's go in."

"Nope," said the other, "I don't like this Shakespeare stuff."

Which indicates pretty plainly that the picture public must be told with brilliant clearness and completeness just what the picture attraction is, and why it was made for the picture public.

An Answer to Joe Lee's Story

SOL LESSER'S recent purchases ought to settle any doubt as to the status, present and future, of the state rights market.

If every other state rights exchange, the country over, had back of it the same organization and enterprise as Mr. Lesser's well established business enjoys, the query as to the life or death of state rights would never arise.

Provided, of course, the right kind of pictures are made and offered for state rights purchase.

Pictures and Autos

SPEAKING of service anyone will recall that automobiles were first offered to the public on the basis of product.

Then they were offered on a basis of product plus service.

For the past three years service has even dominated product.

There's a lot of similarity between the growth of the picture and the automobile industry; and this point of product plus service is one of them.

Coming later this industry has a chance to profit by the other's mistake.

Some of the motor companies which talked most about service didn't really give it.

It existed mostly on paper.

The automobile purchaser wasn't fooled more than once. He finally bought where he got service; and very often service was the prime factor in his preference.

Serving It With Speed and Ginger

DID you notice that snappy column "The Honor Roll" in last week's NEWS—with its list of film men who had just joined the service of Uncle Sam? Almost a full column reported in one week—and this week the same amount on page 3536.

What brought The Honor Roll to our mind was a further consideration of the "useful work or useful fighting" order. To date it has been impossible to secure any more definite statement from Provost Marshal Crowder regarding the motion picture's status than that given first in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS—but we have been thinking—

Will that pretty one column heading we have for The Honor Roll be big enough to carry all the names needed should the Provost Marshal's axe descend on the neck of the motion picture?

The pretty girls who sell Thrift Stamps never fail to leave the Universal table at Rector's with a handful of greenbacks. But we know one day last week when the seller made only one sale.

There's an explanation: It was early and Carl Laemmle sat all alone at the head of his family board. Carl bought with a smile—and be it added, the sales person was far, far, beyond the chicken stage.

JUST when the word "Finis" is written to Paralta's reorganization session, Triangle steps forward to give trade paper reporters something to talk about. At this writing the reports are not entirely clear as to just what is taking place within the Triangle fold but one thing is certain:

Triangle has no intention of slacking up—not when it has engaged Christy Cabanne as a producer, and made strengthening moves in the scenario department.

Aside from this there is little room to even surmise or read between the lines of happenings to date. Perhaps there will be some more interesting and definite reading when Harry Aitken steps off his train in New York this week.

Meanwhile, the news story on page 3535 will temporarily satisfy your craving for gossip.

Captain Merritt Crawford of the Seventh Regiment, New York State Guard, has been called to serve as Captain Merritt Crawford, U. S. A. Our congratulations to Merritt—and with them, our desire that we could express only a portion of the good wishes from his friends in Filmland which we know will follow the Captain to his important duties in Washington and later "Over There."

TO say the least, that's an interesting little quarrel that has arisen between J. D. Williams, of the First National, and the W. H. Productions over the question of re-titled reissues.

There is trouble enough in this life for useless editors without going out of our way to find it so we are perfectly willing to let the advertising page announcements and the statements from both camps in the editorial pages decide the merits of the case.

But incidentally we can't refrain from expressing the opinion that in many states the laws governing advertising could easily be stretched to affect advertising matter on an old picture which makes it appear to be an entirely new one. As the Vigilance Committees of the advertising clubs are the only persons giving any attention to the enforcement of the advertising laws there is probably little danger of exhibitors running afoul of its workings, but nevertheless, a mite of caution is never harmful.

Though it has little in common with the present squabble, there's an interesting case of deceptive advertising on Chaplin subjects in Lowell, Massachusetts, treated in this week's NEWS on page 3562.

We hate to admit forgetfulness—but for three weeks we have been intending to squeeze a mention on this page that Walter Hoff Seeley was recently the recipient of a brand new baby daughter. By the time we got around to mention it we suppose the daughter is a sprightly young lady.

Miss Seeley is one of the reasons for the expansive smile worn by Walter Hoff these days.

WE seldom work up any enthusiam over the news that some new city had been found to be ideal for picture making purposes and that a company is being formed which will have the hearty support of the local Chamber of Commerce.

We have seen them come and seen them go—and Fort Lee, Jacksonville, Los Angeles and New York go on forever.

But the latest story of the kind—hailing from San Francisco—earns its share of interest from the name of Carl Anderson. Brother Anderson is a real picture maker and if he is interested in placing San Francisco on the film map there is every chance of his succeeding.

Especially so when we consider the imposing roster of other men interested with him in the San Francisco project. Read the authoritative story concerning the new organization on pafe 3534.

Strangers in our midst might be led to believe that R. A. Rowland is some distinguished Government official. Almost every day the Metro president has a military escort on his way to lunch at the Claridge in the person of Lieutenant Arthur James.

We suggest that the entire machine gun company be called out when the Kulturists in our midst learn what R. A. has done to Gott's far from silent partner in "To Hell With the Kaiser."

POOR William Fox! Just when he begins to look forward to a rest in the guise of attending to his own motion picture business—along comes another charity job.

The desks on the Red Cross headquarters in the Subway Building had barely been closed, the last cent of the more than a minute fund tabulated, when the Los Angeles film colony appoints Mr. Fox as Eastern Chairman of the Motion Picture War Relief Association.

And this War Relief organization is surely some ambitious body. If you have read the previous stories in MOTION PICTURE NEWS you know what large aspirations its promoters had—and if you read the story on page 3539 of this issue you will know how they went "over the top" with a whoop in their first skirmish.

Over $40,000 for life memberships was the result of the initial meeting at Clune's theatre. How's that for essential usefulness in these war times?

'Frisco is Agog Over Rumors

Two New Producing Organizations Plan to Build Studios There, It Is Heard—Six Millions Behind One of Them

ADVICES received from San Francisco concerning the likelihood of two new studios, backed by powerful organizations, being established there, are creating quite a stir in film circles, both in the East and on the Coast.

A few days ago Fred Ward arrived at the St. Francis Hotel, in San Francisco, and heralded the coming of the Society Players Film Company, a $6,000,000 corporation. Prospects of this kind have been so frequent in San Francisco, without materialization, that little attention is paid to them, but the newspapers are said to have paid considerable attention to Mr. Ward. The latter said that A. Blackburn and Carl Anderson, directors of the new corporation, were on the way there.

"The San Francisco possibilities have been canvassed and found satisfactory," he stated. "Anderson has sold out his interests in Paralta Plays, at Los Angeles, to become executive manager. Other persons interested in the new organization are Dudley Field Malone, former collector of the port of New York; F. Eugene Farnsworth, Dr. Thomas Dixon, H. Grattan Donnelly and E. R. Sherburne." It is understood that Farnsworth is the president, and Sherburne the vice-president and treasurer.

Reports from San Francisco mentioned the name of W. W. Hodkinson in connection with the new organization, but inquiry by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, at the New York office of the Hodkinson Corporation, brought forth the statement that nothing was known there regarding any interest by the corporation in the San Francisco project.

Norman Manning, according to announcements, has resigned from Pathe Exchange to become vice-president and general manager of another new corporation that will go into the producing business on an extensive scale in the San Francisco region. Associated with Manning are Carlton Wall, Paul T. Carroll, Alexander Morrison, A. L. Meyerstein, J. M. Hotchkiss, Colonel A. F. Andrews and John R. Wilson. It is planned to build the main studio in the Piedmont Hills on the Oakland side of the bay and another about two miles from San Rafael.

Said Manning on his arrival in San Francisco: "Ninety per cent of the films manufactured during the next two years must be made in California because the Fuel Administration has issued an order that the use of artificial light and heat in the eastern studios must be curtailed. Florida and California are the only two centers where pictures can be made outdoors. Florida has no mountain background and can produce only tropical screens."

Doll-Van Corporation Gets "Hearts of the World"

The Doll-Van Film Corporation, of Indianapolis, with offices in the Merchants' Bank Building in that city and in the Consumers' Building in Chicago, has purchased the rights to D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" for the territory of Indiana and Kentucky. Henry Dollman, president of the corporation, closed the deal which is said to involve the largest sum ever paid for state rights to a film production in that territory. The first engagement will open at English's Opera House, Indianapolis, on Sunday, June 16.

Mr. Dollman, whose corporation also handles "The Cold Deck," with William S. Hart; "Today," "The Mad Lover" and "The Public Defender," has engaged Leon Victor to handle the bookings of "Hearts of the World." Mr. Victor has just closed a three years' campaign on "The Birth of a Nation" in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, where he met with great success. Daniel L. Martin, formerly with the "Intolerance" organization, will handle the advance publicity. In addition a complete and efficient staff has been engaged by Mr. Dollman.

Parsons Comedies Going Well, 'Tis Said

With the first release but five weeks distant and only two of the comedies issued so far, the National Film Corporation states that the Parsons Capitol comedies have been contracted for by nearly all the leading exhibitors of the country. The Strand theatre is to be the first-run headquarters in New York City, while among those elsewhere who have signed for the year's output of twenty-six comedies are: Jones, Linnick & Schaefer, Lubliner & Trinz and Asher Bros., Chicago; the Marcus Loew, William Fox and F. F. Proctor houses in New York; A. H. Blank, of Des Moines and Omaha; Turner and Dahnken, of California; Swanson & Nolan, of Denver and Salt Lake City; Thomas Saxe, of Minneapolis, and N. H. Gordon, of Boston.

Zella Call Writes Drama, Will Play Triple Role

Zella Call, the well-known actress, whose stage work with Al Jolson and Raymond Hitchcock met with such success and whose efforts in "The Doctor and the Woman" placed her in the front rank of film stars, has been offered the principal part in a new seven-reel film production. Miss Call is undecided as to whether she will accept the offer because of the fact that the proposed contract calls for her travelling throughout the country for the purpose of making personal appearances.

Reorganize Staff for "Romance of Coal"

The increasing proportions of the Educational Film Corporation's picture spectacle, "The Romance of Coal," have made necessary the reorganization of the production staff, with the result that on June 1 E. Lloyd Sheldon was put in charge of the scenario and Carroll Fleming, former director of the New York Hippodrome, playwright and film producer, was appointed director-in-chief.

Among the spectacular pieces Carroll Fleming made while at the Hippodrome (some of which he wrote and originated as well as staged) were "The Raiders," "Pioneer Days," "Under Many Flags," "Around the World in Eighty Days" and "Gypsy Love." After leaving the stage for the motion picture field he directed the early thrilling episodes of "The Iron Claw" and "The Hidden Hand." Several of the most successful Thanhouser dramas and comedies were made by him.

Lloyd Sheldon wrote the Mae Marsh vehicle "All Woman," acclaimed by critics as one of the best pieces presenting this young actress. His new Mary Pickford story, "A Girl of the First Empire," will be publicly presented soon. For the last year Mr. Sheldon has been in continual demand for scenarios to fit the personalities of Mary Pickford, Mae Marsh, Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson and other popular women stars.

Officials of Exposition Give Luncheon to Press

Under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, a luncheon was given the members of the trade press last Friday at the City Club of New York. Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the Association and New York manager of the exposition to be held at Boston, July 13 to 20, in the Mechanic Building, presided as host. Samuel Grant, Boston manager, was present and gave a short address on the purpose of the exposition and what may be expected to be seen there. Mr. Elliott called for suggestions from the press for novelty displays or other innovations toward the success of the exposition.

Mr. Elliott announced that to date, space for exhibits had not been assigned. He promised the biggest and best exposition yet held by the National Association. The exposition is given under the auspices of the association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Vitagraph Star Writes Two for the Screen

Nell Shipman who is co-starred with Alfred Whitman in Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features, is an author as well as an actress. Miss Shipman's latest contribution to her list of stories already accepted for adaptation to the screen, are "The Tiger of the Sea" and "The Coast Guard Patrol," both of which have been accepted by independent producers for reproduction on the screen.

Davis Out—Aitken in the Saddle?

Many Changes Reported Made in Triangle Producing Organization After Heads Disagree as to Nature and Size of Pictures Made—Christy Cabanne Engaged as Director

IT was reported from the West Coast last week, on the heels of rumors that for several days had been creating various fates for the Triangle Film Company, that the organization is undergoing a thorough spring housecleaning in the way of changing department heads and others. In this connection it was said that H. O. Davis, who has been manager of productions of the company, had withdrawn, and that other shifts were imminent.

Mr. Davis, who came to New York last week apparently to confer with officials regarding the future policy of the company, is said to have disagreed with H. C. Aitken in business matters from time to time.

The New York office of the Triangle Distributing Corporation disclaimed any knowledge of changes in the producing organization, but did not deny that many new names and faces might be added immediately.

Aitken Takes Hold

According to reports from the Coast, where Motion Picture News had a representatives investigate the rumors, H. O. Davis' withdrawal and consequent trip to New York were the cue for Harry C. Aitken to step into production work. It was said Mr. Aitken would take over all the duties formerly performed by Mr. Davis, and would immediately begin a speeding up of production work with a view to turning out better subjects of the program variety.

In assuming direct control of production Mr. Aitken appointed O. A. Sellers his assistant according to the reports.

Although much information was withheld concerning the exact policy to be followed under the new regime, it was volunteered at Culver City that a continuation of program subjects is contemplated. This will include the reducing of the stock company to principals only. Other members of the company will be engaged by the picture, it is understood. This will do away entirely with the maintenance of a large company of players.

Cabanne Is Engaged

The West Coast report carried the news that Christy Cabanne, who recently decided to branch out for himself with a company of his own, has beeen engaged as director.

Further intimation of greater plans are found in the report that Charles Stocking has been engaged as head of the scenario department, with Dr. Daniel Goodman as his assistant.

Late in the evening of June 1 it was announced at Culver City that Mr. Aitken had left May 31 for New York, with the expectations of conferring with officials regarding the changes and additions.

Several weeks ago Triangle discontinued its policy of releasing publicity through its regular New York press department. At that time it was announced that all press matter would come from the West Coast plant exclusively, and this has been lived up to since the announcement was made.

New York Silent

As far as actual news of changes within the organization is concerned, nothing could be learned from the Triangle Distributing Company of New York. It was admitted that Mr. Davis had made the trip to the metropolis in connection with the future policy of the producing organization, but current reports that Mr. Davis had received "The Servant in the House" in return for his interest in the company are denied. This production, which was recently completed, has been press agented as an H. O. Davis picture almost exclusively, and little or no mention has been given in the publicity matter to Triangle. That this was done because the picture belonged to Mr. Davis is denied, however.

In connection with the changes, the name of S. A. Lynch is excluded. He is interester in the Triangle Distributing organization only.

Just where the main difference of opinion existed between Mr. Davis and Mr. Aitken is said to have been in the matter of expenditnre on productions and the magnitude of the releases. Mr. Davis held out for big pictures on an elaborate scale, contending that at present they are the ones in demand. In support of his claim he points to "The Servant in the House." It is declared that Clune offered $100,000 for the picture. With Mr. Davis out, however, it is thought that the company will continue along the program line, but will strive to raise the quality.

As Motion Picture News went to press Mr. Davis was still in New York, at the Belmont Hotel, and Mr. Aitken was expected to arrive June 3.

Seek to Keep Funkhouser Out

Recent Suspension Caused by Politics, But Film Industry Follows It Up in Attempt to Make It Permanent

ALTHOUGH the Chicago authorities are endeavoring to make it clear that the suspension of Major Funkhouser was in no way influenced by his arbitrary activities in censoring films in the past, the film exchanges, exhibitors and every fair-minded picture fan in the city are rejoicing at his being ousted. The prayer at present among these is that the charges of Acting Chief Allcock to the effect that Funkhouser had been misusing his authority as deputy police commissioner, will be sustained and that there will be no more Funkhouser.

A brief review of Funkhouser's arbitrary censoring in the past few months shows the reason for the wrath that has been vented on him in the past and the joy that is being felt now on almost all sides that he has been "fired." Just after the United States entered the present war, on July 14, 1917, Funkhouser put his ban on the "Little American," Mary Pickford's picture that received such acclaim and aroused such feeling against the Germans at that time. He looked at the picture and sent word to the Paramount-Artcraft offices that he would not pass it. A mandamus suit was brought against him and in his answer to it Funkhouser said that his action was influenced mostly by the fact that the picture would offend the law-abiding Germans living in Chicago.

The newspapers of the city and most of the patriotic organizations as well immediately jumped into the fight against the major and he lost the case, the hearing judge ordering that a permit be granted.

In May of this year, when the famous Griffith masterpiece, "Hearts of the World" came to Chicago for its premiere, Funkhouser is said to have ordered personally damaging and drastic cuts. He overruled his censor board, and the picture that had been shown throughout the entire country and with universal endorsement greeted the Chicago public badly emasculated.

"My Four Years in Germany," the Gerard picture, also suffered mutilation at his direction and decision and brought the storm down about his ears heavier than ever.

For eight months the William Fox branch office in the Mallers Building, Chicago, has been the center of the bitterest fight the major has ever had on his hands. Since last fall no less than eight of the more important of the Fox pictures have been the subject of controversy between the major and the film company. Those which aroused the most comment were the cases of "The Spy," "The Rose of Blood," "For Liberty," "The Tiger Woman" and "Cleopatra." Others were "The Conqueror," "Camille," "When a Man Sees Red" and "Du Barry." Before that period there were numerous other differences of opinion between the major and the Fox officials, but it was upon "The Spy" that the producer made his most determined fight and that picture may be said to have marked the beginning of the real warfare between the major and the company.

When "The Spy' was taken to the censor board for a permit, the Major ordered scenes depicting German cruelty eliminated. Inasmuch as the picture had been produced for the very purpose of arousing hatred in loyal American hearts of the barbarisms of the Hun, the producers determined not to yield an inch. In fact, word was sent to

Exporters to Meet at Hotel Astor

A meeting at which all film exporters have been asked to attend has been set for Thursday, June 6, at the Hotel Astor in New York. At this meeting, which will take place on the eighth floor of the hotel, it is intended to discuss the advantages of organization for mutual protection and benefit, and it is confidently expected that arrangements will be made that will bring the exporters together into a solid association.

The trend of affairs as caused by the war has made a banding of the export men very desirable from many points of view. In fact, according to many of the more prominent exporters, an organization must be effected or the business will be considerably affected in a way not satisfactory to the trade.

The meeting on June 6 has been set for 12:30 P. M.

"Stolen Orders" Opens at Park Theatre

William A. Brady's screen adaptation of the big Drury Lane melodrama, "Stolen Orders," had its first presentation Sunday evening, June 2, at the Park theatre, New York City, and was greeted by a capacity audience.

Written before the war by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, the story of "Stolen Orders" looked to the future. It told of the German spy system and revealed a condition of which Americans were skeptical, but which long since has become known as fact.

In addition "Stolen Orders" is interpreted by an all star cast. No less than six stars of the screen appear prominently in its enactment—Carlyle Blackwell, Kitty Gordon, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Madge Evans and George McQuarrie. Appearing also in "Stolen Orders" are some 20,000 others.

World Loses an Actor to Canadian Army

Maurice Fallet, a French war hero, who upon being honorably discharged from the French army after being gassed at Verdun, came to this country and was engaged by World Pictures, has again enlisted, this time with the Canadian army. He is now with the Second Battery, Light Artillery. Mr. Fallet appeared with success with Kitty Gordon in World Pictures. Not only was Mr. Fallet gassed at Verdun, but he was wounded in other battles and was given the Croix du Guerre for bravery under fire. He is but seventeen years old.

Ohio Board Passes Venus Film

The Ohio Board of Censors has passed "The Triumph of Venus" with very few alterations. This film is being handled by the General Film Company, and Mr. Jack Conant, Cleveland general film manager, says that the local exhibitors are all eager to get bookings on it.

Honor Roll

Last week Motion Picture News published nearly a column of names of men who have recently joined the colors, or are preparing to do so. This week the Honor Roll is swelled by the addition of the following:

A. E. Hoerl, well known through his connection with the Herbert Brenon organization, left New York for Spartanburg last week, where he will become a member of the engineer unit.

Gilbert Malcolm, publicity agent of the Victoria theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., has resigned and gone to Camp Meade, Md., where he is now in training.

Harry Smith, machine operator and electrician of the Colonial in Harrisburg, Pa., and Operator Samuel Micklowitz, of the Victoria, are expecting the call to the colors at any time.

Jake Fried has resigned from the Cleveland Mutual office to enlist in the Aero Corps, and is stationed in Indiana.

John Flaherty, assistant cameraman of the De Luxe Pictures, Inc., has been called to Camp Upton.

Roy King, owner and manager of the King theatre, Perryville, Ohio, has closed his theatre to fight for Uncle Sam and liberty.

F. Flarity, manager of General Film's Albany exchange, and C. D. Hill, branch manager at Indianapolis, have abandoned the office chairs and are now in camp. Theodore F. Holland, formerly a General branch manager, has also entered the fray.

Tom Colby, Cleveland city salesman for Universal, has been transferred from Fort Thomas, Ky., to Camp Wadsworth, S. C.

Oscar C. Binder, assistant auditor for Universal, left last week for Camp Upton.

Richard Nelson, who played a bit in Goldwyn's "Fields of Honor," has been called to a training camp in the South.

Jack Greenbaum, manager of the Alhambra theatre in Cleveland, is having his friends address him at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. He has been assigned to the Medical Corps.

Private Philip Jules Armand, formerly property man at the Metro studio, and who is a graduate of the school of aerial photography, signal corps, was married while on a leave of absence recently.

Idaho Governor's Attitude Threatening

The seventy odd motion picture theatre owners in Idaho are confronted by a grave situation through the threatening attitude of Gov. Alexander of that State, who has permitted his enthusiasm for the sale of War Savings Stamps and Liberty Bonds to cause an order to be issued closing all pool halls until 6 p. m. Gov. Alexander has let it be known that he thinks the theatres should be closed except in the evenings, and theatre men know that he is now working to see that such an order becomes effective.

This is a new matter and has not generally become known to all Idaho exhibitors, but in all instances where they have heard of the Governor's intention, work has been commenced to prevent such a ruling being put in effect. At Boise, the State capital, Herman J. Brown, president of the Idaho Theatre Managers' Association, and owner of several theatres in Boise, is trying to arouse public sentiment by very liberal advertising which sets forth what the film industry has accomplished and the manner in which it is thought of by President Wilson, Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, and others.

Scarcity of Operators in Pennsylvania

The serious problem of the rapidly decreasing number of motion picture machine operators in Pennsylvania is causing much concern to theatre managers. While Major Murdock, head of the state draft headquarters located at the capitol in Harrisburg, has not yet received information as to whether this class of employe is included among the "non-essentials" who, if within the draft age, are expected to get into war work, the fact that large numbers of operators are volunteering or are being drafted in the regular way, has caused theatre men to lay plans for training older men and in some cases women to operate their machines. The recent ruling of the Department of Labor and Industry, requiring operators to pass rigid examinations in order to qualify for licenses in this state and specifying that no operators may be less than eighteen years old, creates a situation which, in the opinion of wideawake theatre men, threatens a serious shortage of operators unless immediate steps are taken to train substitutes to take the places of the young men likely soon to go to war.

Hayes Named Head of St. Paul Exhibitors

Theo. L. Hayes was elected president of the St. Paul Exhibitors' Association at the annual meeting held May 25. He is manager of the New Garrick theatre and a member of the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

Oliver Rowe, manager of the Blue Mouse, was named as vice-president with Joseph Friendman, manager of the Park as secretary and James Giloswky, manager of the Alhambra, treasurer.

Lesser Buys Griffith Film for West

Is Said to Have Paid a Record Price for "Hearts of the World" —Also Secures Other Productions to Prove His Faith in State Rights Field

NOTHING whatever ails the state rights field of the motion picture industry, judging by the celerity with which Sol Lesser dropped into New York and snapped up the rights of several productions and thenceforward turned his face toward the West and his beloved San Francisco.

Mr. Lesser left New York for the Golden Gate May 30, having made the following important purchases for his West Coast territory: "Hearts of the World," for eleven Pacific Coast and Mountain states; "The Still Alarm," "Nine-tenths of the Law," "The Crucible of Life," "Just a Woman" and "The Grain of Dust."

It is significant that at this time Mr. Lesser is said to have laid out large sums of real money for these productions, and speaks exceedingly well for the state rights field. "It's what you make it," is Mr. Lesser's motto.

All Profits Invested

Mr. Lesser, whose extensive operations in and long connection with the state rights market lend much weight to his word, gave an interesting interview to a Motion Picture News representative upon the much mooted question of state rights and the stability of this branch of the distribution market.

"I have been in the film business since 1907," said Mr. Lesser, "and since 1912, continuously and exclusively in the state rights end of the business. My present working capital, and a very considerable one is required, represents the profits I have made. Furthermore, during this period, I have had many offers from distributing concerns to take franchises for my territory. I have preferred, however, to remain strictly in the state rights business. I am quite as content to remain in it right now as ever before. This, briefly, gives my answer to the many questions raised as the status of the state rights business.

"It is good if you make it so—and, of course, if you get the right product. Few pictures have been available this spring. This factor, quite as much as any other, caused an apparent or real decline in the state rights market. The future, however, looks as good as ever."

Organization Eventual

Mr. Lesser believes that a cohesive organization of the various leading state rights exchanges will eventually be brought about and that this organization will greatly stabilize as well as stimulate the state rights market. Mr. Lesser's arguments are sound and logical. He proposes a sort of buying syndicate. The various percentages allotted to each territory have already been ratified by the organization which he is fathering and which would have been brought to a final point before this had not his illness postponed his activities.

Each prospective purchase will be viewed by all the exchange members of the syndicate. If any members do not want the picture for their territories the syndicate will have the right to purchase it and either assume these territories or else sell the picture to other exchanges outside of the syndicate.

RICHMOND CONVENTION

ARE you going? Well, just about every exhibitor in Virginia or the Virginias will be there "stronger than horse-radish."

The dates are June 13, 14 and 15, and a combination business-pleasure program has been arranged to take the edge off the war-time atmosphere.

The receipts of the convention will be donated to the Milk Fund for the poor babies of Richmond—a good, big reason why the event should be a success.

A galaxy of stars will also be there to help the exhibitors lend brilliance to the meeting.

The basis of Mr. Lesser's successful organization is an elaborate system of bookkeeping which lists each theatre dealt with in various purchases, the price paid and full data showing the success had with each picture. Mr. Lesser is enabled thereby to estimate as accurately as possible the earning capacity of a picture in his territory. In other words, he knows his market. If this rule were followed throughout the state rights market by each exchange the business would soon approach that standardization which it must have in order to succeed and endure.

In connection with the purchases made by Mr. Lesser in the East, it is claimed that he advanced $200,000 for "Hearts of the World" and $50,000 for the other pictures.

Claims New Record

In purchasing the rights to "Hearts of the World," for the eleven Pacific Coast and Mountain States, including California, at a reputed figure of $200,000, Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., is claimed to have paid the highest price ever offered in the history of the industry for state rights to a film production.

In addition to this transaction, Mr. Lesser also invested $50,000 more in rights for the same territory for smaller features, including "The Still Alarm," "Nine-Tenths of the Law," "The Crucible of Life," "Just a Woman" and "The Grain of Dust." This total of a quarter of a million dollars is said to represent the greatest sum of money ever invested at one time by a single state rights buyer.

Such an unusual financial outlay indicates that in the opinion of one of the biggest figures in his branch of the film business, the state rights market is in a very wholesome condition. Mr. Lesser has been recognized for years as one of the two or three most prominent state rights buyers in the country.

The most remarkable feature of the transaction, aside from the large sum involved, is the speed with which the deal was consummated, the total time spent in negotiations having been two hours. This is a notable tribute both to the value of D. W. Griffith's great war film and the quick decisiveness of Mr. Lesser.

The picture will be presented immediately by Mr. Lesser in all the important Coast cities.

California Exchanges Get Behind U. S. Film

The film exchanges of California, combining under the leadership of Sol L. Lesser, have instituted a novel method of booking the United States official six-reel war picture, "The Remaking of a Nation," to the end that all persons and classes may be educated as to what Uncle Sam is doing toward building up our boys in every branch of the service for action "over there."

So that "The Remaking of a Nation" will show in absolutely every motion picture theatre in California, each film exchange has pledged the support of its entire organization to Mr. Lesser, guaranteeing to obtain five bookings per salesman. There are twenty-four film exchanges in San Francisco, which will more than assure the booking of "The Remaking of a Nation" in every California theatre.

Some Cleveland Houses on Part Time

Following the precedent set last Summer, a large number of motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland are operating their shows on an average of two or three nights a week during the hot weather. There are about twenty of the neighborhood houses which have adopted this policy, and they have found it very satisfactory. They claim that they concentrate their audiences in this manner, and lose comparatively little business, while their overhead saving is considerable. The larger houses and the downtown houses continue to run on regular schedule, however.

John C. Graham Goes to Chile

General Foreign Representative of F. P.-Lasky Will Help Form South Pacific Paramount Company —Former Chilean Envoy Interested

JOHN CECIL GRAHAM, general foreign representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has gone to Chile to complete the organization of the South Pacific Paramount Company, a corporation which will handle the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft films in Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

Associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the enterprise, the headquarters of which will be located in Santiago, Chile, will be a number of prominent local capitalists and business men, headed by the Honorable Edouardo Suarez, former Chilean ambassador to the United States. Mr. Suarez is a man of integrity and high standing, as evidenced by the high position which he occupied, and having become impressed with the magnitude of the film industry in the United States has associated with him a group of men of the same calibre. The completion of the corporate organization will be the result of negotiations started months ago between Mr. Suarez and E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

In a statement given out before he sailed Mr. Graham said: "The business will be launched by about 125 productions featuring the most prominent stars, and these subjects have been most carefully selected under expert advice as suitable for the theatrical requirements of the countries in which they will be exhibited. The business will be inaugurated along advanced progressive lines, similar to those now in vogue in the United States which have made Paramount and Artcraft household words from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts. This will include publicity drives and exceptional service to exhibitors, which will no doubt command wide attention as such methods are entirely unheard of in South America at this time. Following the 125 subjects already selected we will continue to supply the market on the basis of at least two new features per week.

"This project is inaugurated under most favorable conditions, as our pictures have been so thoroughly protected at home that but an infinitesimal amount has fallen into the hands of improper parties, and these pictures will be absolutely first run in those countries. Furthermore, we are soliciting the business at a time when a healthy demand exists for our goods, for in my various interviews, from time to time, with theatrical men from both Peru and Chile they have expressed gratification that a high grade product, such as ours, will be available to them on a legitimate marketing basis.

"With this additional distribution point established, we will be represented throughout South America, and it will add one more link in the chain of worldwide distribution which is now practically complete, excepting, of course, enemy countries."

Goldfish Defends Review Board

President of Goldwyn Deprecates Slurs Cast Upon National Body at Recent Session of Federation of Women's Clubs

THE discussion of the subject of censorship indulged in at the recent biennial meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, held at Hot Springs, Ark., has drawn the fire of Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The effort on the part of several of the speakers to deride or deprecate the value of the services of the National Board of Review is the particular target of a statement by the Goldwyn chief executive, which we reproduce, in part, as follows:

Against this effort to minimize the value of the National Board, I make vigorous personal protest. In behalf of the sincere and earnest men and women who give their efforts to the work of viewing and passing upon pictures, I, as a producer of pictures, desire to indorse the benefits this body has brought and is bringing to the cause of film cleanliness and healthfulness.

Always it is the custom of reformers who seek to introduce a new mechanism to attack the existing one they wish to supplant, and this accounts for the slurs directed at the National Board of Review in the Arkansas conference. It was notable that the women members of this big and powerful organization did not personally engage in or encourage these attacks, which came from imported censors from other States, who hold positions created for them by State political machines.

The National Board of Review has elevated the tone of motion pictures one hundred per cent. It has been the mainstay and backbone of those producers whose inclination is to make clean, wholesome pictures. It has been the deterring mechanism that blocked the way of evil-minded speculators who would have brought ruin to the industry by rushing in and making one or two foul pictures for the quick profits that such productions occasionally earn. I know of no body of men and women more sincere in their purposes or more self-sacrificing in their work than the National Board of Review.

There is to-day in America, for the first time in the history of our nation, a centralized authority. State lines have been wiped out or forgotten; no State is to-day questioning the national viewpoint or the national authority in any manner. A President who is the most remarkable figure in our country's history has, with the backing of the public, become the most powerful authority and master any country has ever had. His Food Administrator is a final authority. His Railroad Administrator is a national instrument who cannot be halted by petty individual claims. His Munitions Administrator is unhampered in authority. His purchasing department centralizes the buying of supplies, and no one other than petty politicians and evicted managements stands to question the wisdom and authority of these men.

I mean by these examples to show our complete nationalization in every respect and to urge the nationalization of motion picture inspection and reviewing through the existing National Board of Review.

Evans Goes to Universal in Minneapolis

C. R. Evans, who has been with the General Film Company for some time, has been engaged by the Universal Minneapolis exchange to take charge of the features of Jewel Productions.

Rothacker Heads Committee on Membership for N. A.

Waterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, and one of the founders of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry when it was organized in Chicago in July, 1916, has been appointed by President William A. Brady of the National Association as chairman of a membership committee which will have all the Middle West territory under its jurisdiction.

The appointment is a well-deserved recognition of Mr. Rothacker's sincere devotion to the welfare and success of the National Association, and while the field is limited in his territory, it is safe to predict that every prominent film company, as well as the supply and equipment concerns will be listed in the membership rolls of the organization in the very near future. Mr. Rothacker has been given power to appoint his associates on the committee, and an active membership campaign will be inaugurated immediately with a view to securing the support of all important interests whether directly or indirectly identified with the motion picture industry.

President Invited to See "Over the Top"

Elaborate preparations were made by Tom Moore for the premiere of "Over the Top" at the Strand theatre, Washington, D. C., where the big Vitagraph production is booked for an engagement beginning June 3. Invitations were sent by Mr. Moore to President Wilson, the members of the Cabinet, leading military and naval officers and Senators and Representatives.

In addition to the distinguished audience invited for the opening performance, Mr. Moore made arrangements to give "Over the Top" a historic presentation. He had special scenery painted, a section of trench built on the stage, and a company of soldiers, together with a magnificent orchestration, to give the picture verisimilitude.

After making these arrangements, Mr. Moore notified Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, that the handling of "Over the Top" would be made one of the biggest events in the history of theatrical presentations at the national capital.

Altoona Firm Presents a Car to Army

Silverman Bros., proprietors of two motion picture theatres in Altoona, and formerly in control of the Photoplay theatre, Harrisburg, have presented an automobile, which has been equipped with a machine gun and painted all of the colors of the rainbow for "camouflage" purposes, to the headquarters of the Central Pennsylvania recruiting station of the United States Army in Harrisburg. The car, which is exactly like many that are used by the American expeditionary forces in France, will be used to stimulate recruiting in the cities and towns of the district, under the direction of Lieutenant R. W. Lesher.

War Relief Body Launches Its Work

Two Hundred Members of Industry Meet in Los Angeles and Boost New Organization Over the Top—Will Build and Equip Hospital

WITH enthusiasm running high, more than 2,000 representative members of the motion picture industry, drawn from its every branch, gathered in Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, Sunday afternoon, May 26, to launch the Motion Picture War Relief Association, a nationwide patriotic movement undoubtedly among the most far-reaching to have been attempted in this country since the entrance of the United States into the present world conflict.

Briefly the purpose of the organization is to lend the co-operative aid of the entire industry as a unit to the government in the prosecution of its national campaign of war relief work. More specifically the association's immediate program involves the raising of funds sufficient to build, equip and maintain a 1,000 bed hospital to cost approximately $185,000. Upon its completion this institution will be turned over to the government to be used by them in caring for invalided men in the trenches and convalescents during the duration of the war.

Nation-Wide Move

When it has ceased to be of further service to the nation, the hospital will revert to the association to be maintained by them for charitable purposes.

Aside from its patriotic trend, the Motion Picture War Relief Association is similar in purpose to the actor's fund, although because of the greater number of its members, its scope will be considerably broader.

The project had its conception in the minds of some of the biggest people of the Los Angeles portion of the industry, and was originally to have been handled by a committee from the Motion Picture Directors' Association. Despite the enthusiasm with which this committee approached its work however, only a few meetings were needed to convince them of the folly of attempting to carry forward such a work on a scale commensurate with the size and importance of the film industry, unless the movement be made nationwide and be conducted with the pledged cooperation of every individual member of its various branches.

It was for the purpose of launching this more comprehensive movement that Sunday's meeting was called; and if previously there had existed any doubt as to the stand of the industry on the war question, the spirit of that houseful of enthusiasts successfully dispelled it. Advised in advance of the purpose of the meeting check books in hand and pens poised, an army of picture people waited for the doors to open that they might give concrete evidence of their sentiment.

Following a concert by the Submarine Base Band from San Pedro, and vocal selections by Master Howard Enstedt and others, the meeting was called to order by Charles Chaplin.

Congratulations Plentiful

Indicative of the spirit with which the meeting was being received by the industry from coast to coast were a sheaf of telegrams addressed to the committee on organization and read to the assembled film folk by Walter Edwards. Wires were received from Douglas Fairbanks, Alan Dwan, Marguerite Clark, Louise Martha Hale, Lee Ochs, and other absent members expressing regret at circumstances which forced them to be away at such a time. A telegram from Martin of the Liberty Theatres Association, spoke of an enthusiastic meeting held by exchangemen and exhibitors and pledged 500 members from those who attended. A wire from James Clemmer of the Clemmer theatre at Seattle, spoke of a similar meeting held there, and promised the support of exchangemen and exhibitors of that city and of the whole northwest. Willis and Inglis made an offer to the association of free offices for such time as they might need them during the period of organization.

EXCHANGES, AWAKE!

Small Town Exhibitors Discarding "Green Horn" Togs and "Perking Up"

EXCHANGEMEN in general recently received a harpoon jab from Exhibitor John C. Green of Canada. All is not green that answers to that name.

And right behind it came an avalanche of "bravos" and "you said its."

And last week MOTION PICTURE NEWS received the following: "I wish to compliment specially the article in March 25 issue by John C. Green. It certainly hits the nail on the head. It is high time exchanges awaken to the fact that all small town managers are not 'green horns.' The sooner they do the quicker they will get whole-hearted support and cooperation from the small-towners, and there are many of them too."

This letter was also from an exhibitor.

Where Do We Go From Here?

These wires were identical in spirit, and unanimous in their expressions of willingness to help in any way outlined by the officers of the association; and coming as they did from people of every branch of the industry in all parts of the country, eliminated for all time any belief that the organization might be local in scope, or its operations confined to any one branch of the business.

Frank Beal spoke briefly of the constitution and articles of incorporation, and characteristic of the crowd and its confidence in the judgment of those minds who had conceived the movement, is the fact that by unanimous vote they accepted both documents as drafted without waiting to hear them read. Also without a single dissenting voice they elected to office those candidates whose names were suggested by the committee on organization.

Twenty-five Directors

Following the election of officers, the business of the association, the raising and disbursing of funds, and the conduct of its affairs, in short its entire government was placed in the hands of a board of twenty-five directors. Of this board, D. W. Griffith was acclaimed president. Six vice-presidents were named in the following order: Cecil B. De Mille, Lois Weber, Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart. Mack Sennett was made treasurer, and to S. E. D. Taylor was assigned the position of secretary. In addition to these names, other members of the board chosen at the meeting were Jesse L. Lasky, Marguerite Clark, Maurice Tourneur, J. Searle Dawley, S. Rothapfel, Henry McRae, Frank E. Woods, J. Gordon Edwards, W. F. Alder, William D. Taylor and W. G. Bitzer. As each name was read from the list, it was received with a storm of cheers from the assembled throng that fairly rocked the house. Accustomed as these people have been to the adulation of the public, it is doubtful whether they have ever received so delicate a compliment as that implied by the spirit of absolute confidence with which two thousand members of the association unquestionably placed in their hands the government of its affairs.

D. W. Griffith, Lois Weber, Cecil B. De Mille and Mary Pickford delivered addresses setting forth the reasons for organizing, the purposes of the association and its aims, and urging upon all members a deeper and more complete sense of their responsibilities, the duties incumbent on them as Americans, and the service which their own heartfelt sentiments must command them to perform in their role of the men behind the men behind the guns. Although these were the principal speakers of the occasion, a number of other

Buhler to Run Stanley House

Appointed Managing Director by Jules E. Mastbaum — Is Theatrical Executive of Wide Experience and Proved Ability

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, that Frank W. Buhler, one of the most widely known theatrical men in the East, had been appointed managing director of all the theatres under the control and direction of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia and its affiliated enterprises. Throughout theatrical and motion picture circles in that city there was heard general expressions of pleasure over the fact that Mr. Buhler's ability has been thus signally recognized.

Mr. Buhler was born in Savannah, Missouri, and will be thirty-seven years old this fall. From early years he displayed an aptitude for the theatrical business, combined with a genuine talent for music. As a young man he was at the head of a dramatic stock company. Later he became engaged in the motion picture business with Harry Davis of Pittsburg and in 1908 was transferred by Mr. Davis to Buffalo, N. Y., as manager of the Davis house in that city. In December of the same year, Mr. Buhler came to Philadelphia and was associated with Alexander R. Boyd in the Bijou Dream and later the Regent theatre. Later he became managing director of the Central Market Street Company, operating a chain of theatres on Market street, all of which, under his supervision, became successful motion picture houses.

In his new position as managing director of the Stanley Company, Mr. Buhler's ability as an executive and organizer will have a wider scope. There are few men besides himself possessed of the necessary requisites to handle the work of this corporation, which includes in its lists many theatres in this city, New York, Atlantic City and other cities and towns in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and other states. That he is finely equipped to undertake the task is conceded by all who know him.

F. W. Buhler Has Been Appointed Managing Director of the Stanley Theatres

The Stanley standard of music will be fully maintained by Mr. Buhler, who is himself a deep student of musical harmony. Another feature of theatre buildings in which he is considered an expert is the ventilation. He studied this under the best men in the country in this line and it is safe to conclude that every theatre that is under his supervision will have the proper ventilating system installed if it is not there already. While these are but a few of the special gifts possessed by the new managing director, his executive ability is prodigious and this is combined with a thorough knowledge of the theatrical amusement business from every angle.

The Pioneer Film Corporation announce that "The Still Alarm" which this company is now exploiting on the independent market, has been booked over the Keith Circuit of theatres in and about New York and over the Marcus Loew Circuit. It is also scheduled for a run at Coney Island.

Other sales reported recently on this production are: To the Pioneer have sold California, Arizona and Nevada to Sol Lesser of the All Star Features Film Corporation; Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Alaska to the First National Exchange of Seattle; Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico to the First National Exchange of Denver; Ohio and Kentucky to the Hatch Film Corporation; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Hatch Film Corporation; Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia and North Carolina to Sidney B. Lust of Super Features, Inc., Washington, D. C., and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida to the Special Features, Inc., of Knoxville, Tenn.

Menessier's Art to Adorn Nazimova Picture

Mme. Nazimova's next multiple-reel Screen Classics, Inc., picture will be a screen version by Albert Capellani and June Mathis of "L'Occident." The actual filming begins June 10 under the direction of Mr. Capellani. Henri Menessier, the French technical director, has been engaged by Maxwell Karger, studio supervisor, as a part of the Nazimova organization, and he has already completed the art-drawings of sets and scenery which will be followed in the production of "L'Occident." E. J. Shulter is now in charge of the actual execution of these plans. Menessier, it will be remembered, was an artist of note before coming to America, having exhibited original paintings in the Paris Salon.

Charles Bryant will again have the role opposite Mme. Nazimova, while Richard Barthelmess will have the juvenile lead. Sally Crute and E. L. Fernandez will also be seen in the cast.

Tourneur Defends Prominence of Directors

Maurice Tourneur, who formed recently, his own independent producing company, and who is now completing the final scenes of "Sporting Life," companion piece to "The Whip," in commenting upon the progress made by directors, said:

"The charge is made that to substitute the prominence of the director for the player is but to shift stars—and is therefore no cure for the star system evil. This is obviously not true. The director is the man who paints the dramatic picture. Give him a bigger canvas and recognition and he will do bigger things, but make him paint around the limitations of a certain player and you curb him.

"Let us not forget that the director and the scenario writer must be the big factors of the photoplay's future."

World Pictures Has a New Advertising Artist

Claire Wille, a recent graduate from the art department of Cooper Union, has accepted a position in the art section of the advertising department of World Pictures. Miss Wille takes the place left vacant by the drafting into the army last week of James MacDonald, who for two years was the World Pictures advertising department's artist.

Cleveland Likes "My Four Years in Germany"

"My Four Years in Germany," the film version of Ambassador Gerard's book of the same name, has just completed the second week of its four weeks' engagement at the Opera House in Cleveland.

Anna Held Sees "Joan" from Sickbed

Anna Held, the noted French actress, who is lying probably on her deathbed at her apartments at the Hotel Savoy, suffering from a rare disease of the bones, saw Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg" one day last week. The showing was arranged for Miss Held by her personal physician, Dr. Donald McCaskey, as a surprise and a diversion from the stressful routine of the sickroom.

Charles H. Christie is on his way from Los Angeles to New York. Although it is Mr. Christie's semi-annual business trip he will combine work for the Red Cross with that of his own interests in all the cities in which he stops.

Industry Scores in Red Cross Drive

Final Returns Come in Side by Side with Praise for Tireless Workers Who Helped Make It Success—Eighty-first Street Theatre Up in Front

No sooner had the Red Cross drive ended than reports began to arrive of the glorious work accomplished by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, of which William Fox was captain. The team has been credited officially with raising $1,024,618 for the cause, and this is well in the neighborhood of the amount predicted by Motion Picture News last week.

First honors among the motion picture theatres of Manhattan goes to the Eighty-first Street theatre, which collected $17,905. It is said this sum was surpassed only by the Palace, Broadway's leading vaudeville theatre.

No slackers have been found. They all classified in the "useful" class.

Compliment to Fox

A remarkable tribute to the organization powers of William Fox is paid in a letter by Sydney S. Cohen to Motion Picture News. It may explain in part why the American Red Cross Drive, in so far as the motion picture people are concerned, was such a success. Mr. Cohen, in part, said:

"In a period of about ten days, Mr. Fox gathered about himself a staff of a few men and women whom he quickly enthused and a most remarkable organization was developed through his dynamic power and ability. My own personal services were infinitesimal and virtually nil. A great amount of good work was done by Samuel Berman, Secretary of the Exhibitors League of the State of New York, John Manheimer, who was the General of the Manhattan Division, William Brandt, General of the Brooklyn Division, John J. Wittman, General of the Bronx Division, Samuel Sheer, General of the Queens County Division, and Charles Moses and Samuel Peyser, Colonels of the Richmond County Division. These generals in turn had the help and assistance of a great number of exhibitors who were made colonels of zones in different parts of the Greater City, these men enlisting the services of exhibitors operating theatres in their particular zones, who were made captains."

Elliott Springs Surprise

Probably the biggest surprise in the drive for Red Cross funds conducted under the auspices of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team was the big sum turned in by the Industrial Committee of which Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was chairman.

The Industrial Committee was the last one to receive consideration by Captain William Fox and Lieutenant Winfield R. Sheehan, who on the second day the headquarters were opened, called Mr. Elliott into conference with a notice that he had been appointed to organize the industrial campaign with a view to securing subscriptions from the employees of the theatrical profession, motion picture industry, vaudeville artists, the music publishers, employees of the motion picture theatres, film exchanges, wig makers and costumers and the various motion picture circuits in Greater New York.

The task of securing pledges of employees of theatrical, motion picture and allied interests was admitted by everyone to be a big one. Captain William Fox was frank in his expressions in regard to the selection of the committee with Frederick H. Elliott at the head, to organize the employees in a quick and effective manner so that the Industrial Committee could roll up a big total for the Red Cross Second War Fund.

Within a period of four days, Chairman Elliott had the various committees and divisions organized and the results are shown by the fact that $80,023.69 was raised by this committee, coming only from employees of the professions, trade, and industries listed by the Industrial Committee. The motion picture employees lead the list with a total of $63,938.69.

Bigall Wires President

On Monday, May 27, William Bigall, of the Irving theatre, Brooklyn, wired President Wilson as follows: "The Irving theatre patrons, in a district commonly known as a German neighborhood, went over the top for democracy, justice and liberty for the amount of $1,135.96 in the second Red Cross Drive." The President's secretary replied and congratulated Exhibitor Bigall.

The Bronx section of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team also marked up a good score. John J. Wittman, of the Cinema Exhibitors of Bronx County, was chairman.

William Brandt, in speaking of the drive, said: "I wish to express my admiration for the leadership of Wm. Fox and to add my opinion that the credit for the success of the drive is entirely due to him.

"Mr. Fox was the inspiration of every man and woman on the team. By his example of "twenty-four hours a day" working, his aggressiveness, determination and ability, he was a veritable human dynamo, radiating energy into every person with whom he came in contact.

"What Mr. Fox has accomplished in elevating the Motion Picture Industry, in the minds of many who were previously more or less unacquainted with the men in it, time alone will show. For this, entirely apart from the wonderful good he has done for our boys overseas, he is entitled to the hearty unanimous thanks of the industry."

WHAT THEY DID

The Cleveland branch of the Fox Film Corporation subscribed $588 to the Victory Chest Fund in addition to excellent Red Cross work.

E. H. Goldstein, chairman of the F. I. L. M. Club Collection Committee, reports that every exchange employee has contributed his bit, and that he can report 100 per cent. Twenty-three exchanges are included.

As an aftermath of the Red Cross drive a checkup shows that every employee of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, at the main office, 1600 Broadway, New York City, the Fort Lee Studio and at Universal City contributed to the fund.

Add the name of Edward Earle, Vitagraph star, to the roll of Hard Work Done in the Red Cross drive. Eddie was drafted for theatre appeals by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team and he went willingly to as many theatres as he could reach.

Elsie Ferguson, Artcraft star, posed as a Red Cross nurse on the Public Library steps, Fifth avenue and Forty-second street, for James Montgomery Flagg, the artist. Mr. Flagg sketched a likeness of the actress as the crowd watched, and when the portrait was finished Miss Ferguson auctioned it off. A final bid of $3,000 took the sketch, whereupon the money was turned over to the Red Cross.

General Film's part in the American Red Cross second war fund drive resulted in contributions totaling $1,500 from the New York headquarters office and New York exchange. Its donations were placed to the credit of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team through the F. I. L. M. Club branch manager, J. A. Hammell, in charge of General's collections, reporting to that branch of the team.

With total contributions running high into thousands of dollars, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is in the van of motion picture companies 100 per cent. subscribed to the second war fund of the American Red Cross.

One of the important contributors to the success of the Red Cross campaign was Florence Deshon, who did yeoman service as an auctioneer during the closing day of the drive.

Richmond Expects Stars as Guests

According to information from Richmond, Virginia, last week, that city expects to entertain many stars of the screen on June 13, 14 and 15. These are the dates of the convention of the Virginia Motion Picture Exhibitors, the crowning feature of which will be a motion picture ball on Saturday night, June 15.

Twenty-six booths, it is said, will be arranged in Gray's Armory, each showing the latest appliances for the projection of pictures, the exhibition being intended to combine interest and instruction.

The exhibitors have decided to donate the receipts from this three-day exhibition to the milk fund for the poor babies of Richmond. Music has been arranged for and the exhibitors expect the event to be one of the most successful of its kind.

"Amen," Says W. H. Company

Recent Statement by J. D. Williams on Subject of Counterfeiting Draws Comment from Official of Organization

THE recent statement by J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in which Mr. Williams branded as "counterfeiting" the practice of some distributors in revamping and re-issuing previously successful films, has elicited the following comment from W. H. Productions Company:

"We agree with Mr. Williams that steps should be taken to blot out the evil of counterfeiting and misrepresenting films to the public and we hope we can be of some assistance to Mr. Williams toward securing satisfactory results.

"Counterfeiters and those who practice fraud should receive their just deserts and for Mr. Williams' edification, W. H. Productions Company, from its inception, has taken the stand to do everything possible to stamp out the evil and we desire to be among the seven producers appointed so that we can give all the assistance possible to help eliminate this evil in the industry, primarily because we have been a leading factor in re-issuing famous pictures with famous stars which have met with tremendous success throughout every section of the country and which have caused a number of unprincipled people in the industry at various times, to endeavor to take advantage of W. H. Productions Company.

"Mr. Williams is a BIG man with BIG ideas, and we do hope that his latest BIG idea will make a success for him. It is about time. If everybody engaged in this industry were as reputable as some of Mr. Williams' associates in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, we would soon get rid of the counterfeiters and those who practice fraud. Many of his associates have bought our re-issues, prints from original negatives and are also using all of our advertising literature, and from reports we have received, these re-issues are meeting with the approval of the public. For Mr. Williams' further edification, the following is a list of First National Exhibitors' Circuit members who are handling our product:

"John Kunsky, a member of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Madison Theatre Building, Detroit, Mich.

"H. Schwalbe, a member of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Thirteenth and Vine streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Nathan H. Gordon, a member of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, 20 Winchester street, Boston, Mass.

"Jake Wells, a member of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, 176 Marietta street, Atlanta, Ga.

"Jake Wells, a member of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Lyric Building, Richmond, Va.

"Tom Moore, a member of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, 419 Ninth street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

"T. E. Larsen, a member of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Empress Theatre Building, Oklahoma City, Okla.

"We are now successfully covering the country with our latest series of re-issues of the famous Charlie Chaplin re-issues, re-issued because the public demand them again and again in preference to a great many new pictures—re-issues sold as re-issues—and which save and make money for the exhibitors and tend to cut down some of the enormous rental prices for some pictures.

"The trade concedes that Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett are two of the greatest directors. Every production re-issued by W. H. Productions Company to date has been produced by either of these two men. They are all productions that made the particular star in them famous. Three-fourths of the exhibitors in this country are booking these re-issues and their box office reports are criterions as to how the public is taking to them. In many cases, by renting W. H. Productions Company's re-issues, exhibitors are enabled to book high class features on the same program at smaller rental prices. You see, W. H. Productions Company has neither production costs, inflated salaries nor wasteful expenditures and these facts conclusively prove that Mr. Williams labors under an hallucination when he states that re-issues have served their full duty from a standpoint of entertainment and money-making. If Mr. Williams had clarified his statement in last week's trade papers, he would not have placed himself in a position now of calling three-fourths of the motion picture exhibitors in this country, who not having theatres on Broadway, cannot afford to pay the prices necessary to the success of Mr. Williams' enterprise, swindlers and thieves.

"We beg to recall to Mr. Williams' mind that on March 7 he approached, in the Astor Hotel, Mr. Simmons of W. H. Productions Company, with the following conversation: 'Simmons, we have a very good organization in New York. Can't we get together to handle your re-issues through our exchange in New York on a percentage arrangement?' Mr. Simmons informed Mr. Williams that as we had our own exchange in New York, it would not be advisable to make other arrangements for handling our product here.

"W. H. Productions Company is placing not only on all advertising matter but on the film itself, not only the new title, but the original title from which the new title has been adapted so that the public can become familiar with these re-issues, because in the majority of cases they are meeting with more success than a great many of the new productions. They are classics and in their reconstructed form surpass in every way the original production."

Ft. Hancock Soldiers See Metro Pictures Free

Through the generosity of Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, Metro pictures are being shown free of charge every Saturday night to the soldiers at Fort Hancock, one of the fortresses guarding New York City. The opening picture was "Outwitted," with Emily Stevens as the star.

As the post is somewhat off the beaten track, it has not been regularly visited by the entertainers who are so often seen at other camps. This need of entertainment came to the notice of Miss Elaine Sterne, a First Lieutenant of the National Honor Guard. Miss Sterne consulted June Mathis of Metro's scenario department, who in turn consulted Mr. Rowland, with the result that the boys are assured of motion pictures every Saturday night.

"The Kaiser" Enters Small Nebraska Town

"The Kaiser," Jewel production, in its march to screen success, has invaded the small town of Merna, Nebraska, where it has been booked for the Opera House, operated by W. H. Jones, for June 20.

In a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Exhibitor Jones said: "I would like for you to mention the fact that I have booked 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin.' The city of Merna has only 450 inhabitants, and I think at the price I have to pay for the picture I am due for the asylum, don't you?"

To Show Pictures at the Brooklyn Ice Palace

The management of the Brooklyn Ice Skating Palace, Bedford and Atlantic avenues, has decided to present high-class motion pictures at the big amphitheatre during the summer months. It is possible that the showing of pictures will be the permanent policy.

Williams Asks Opinions of Seven Leading Producers

Seven of the leading powers of the motion picture industry have received copies of an open letter addressed to them by J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, on the subject of reissuing old films with new titles.

Some of the points covered in Mr. Williams' letter run substantially as follows:

"The prestige of the motion picture industry as a whole is being seriously compromised by the actions of a few people, more notable for their greed than their honesty, who are putting out successful films of three and four years ago under new titles with the deliberate effort of leading the public at large to believe that they are seeing new productions.

"I hereby appeal to you as men who have expended years of energy and millions of dollars for the purpose of putting the business of making and marketing motion pictures on the high plane that it now occupies to express yourselves regarding this decidedly questionable practice.

"It appears to be high time that the facts in the case were given thorough consideration and a definite policy agreed upon to combat an evil that will cause you no little annoyance and loss of both money and reputation if it is allowed to proceed.

"Two of the big stars who have been made targets in this campaign of guerrilla warfare are William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin. Trading on the renown that these exceptional artists have achieved after many seasons of hard work, and on the money that men of your calibre have lavishly expended to exploit their productions, a small group of sure thing gamblers have gotten hold of the negatives that Hart and Chaplin made when they first started work before the camera, and are putting out reprints of the old stuff under new titles that are palpably designed to deceive the unwary film fan.

"This is not only contrary to all decent business ethics, but I believe it is in direct violation of the state and federal law forbidding false and misleading advertising.

"Gentlemen, where do you stand on this question?"

Eighty Simplex Projectors Sold in Australasia

A recent report received by the Simplex Company from the Australasian Films, Ltd., Sydney, Australia, distributors for the machines in the Island Continent and in New Zealand, indicates a very satisfactory demand for the Simplex Projectors in the Antipodes. The report records the sale of eighty machines in all principal cities in every State of the Commonwealth and in New Zealand, covering a limited period.

"While these sales are very satisfactory considering the present difficulties of transportation," says E. M. Porter, general manager of the Simplex Company, "we are particularly gratified, as we have every reason to believe that in normal times the number of machines placed by the Australasian company would have been more than double."

In and Out of Town

Sol Lesser after making several purchases on the independent market, including territory on "The Hearts of the World," left New York last week for San Francisco.

Leon Victor and Daniel L. Martin, who are handling the exploitation of "Hearts of the World" for the Doll-Van Film Company, Indianapolis, in the Indiana and Kentucky territory, are in New York. They leave for Indianapolis the latter part of this week.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Exhibitors-Affiliated Association, left New York last week for a swing around the circuit, embracing the recent acquisitions to the membership of the Affiliated plan.

Louis B. Mayer has returned to New York after a short vacation spent in the Maine woods.

Harry K. Lucas, representing the Precision Machine Company in the Southern territory, was in New York last week calling on old friends. Mr. Lucas is one of the most prominent dealers in accessories represented in the South.

Among the district managers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation who were in the city last week attending the special meeting of district managers were: Harry Ascher, Boston; William E. Smith, Philadelphia; James Steele, Pittsburgh; Max Goldstine, Chicago; A. D. Flinton, Kansas City; C. E. Tandy, Atlanta; Louis Marcus, Salt Lake City; Herman Wobber, San Fransisco.

Robert Priest and Walter Hoff Seeleye have severed their connection with the Arrow Film Company, which will in the future be handled by Doc Shallenberger alone.

OUR FLAG'S BIRTHDAY

Is There an Exhibitor with Soul So Dead Who Will Not Observe June 14 in Manner Befitting Our Nation's Pride?

ON June 14, 1918, our flag, the Star Spangled Banner, will be one hundred and forty-one years old—old, but ever young. We call it Old Glory, because behind it is a spirit of glory in doing right and in living right. It has ever stood for the best—the right—and its red, white and blue have floated to the breeze even more proudly in the face of adversity. It has never been unfurled in a cause other than of liberty and righteousness.

Exhibitors will find a wonderful opportunity in this day to give our Flag a birthday celebration in keeping with its place. Let your orchestras play the National Anthem and invite your audiences to sing it. The songs our boys sing on the march and in the trenches will not be out of place.

We can make this one of the most momentous Flag Days in the history of our country—and will all feel better for doing it.

Let's do it!

F. P.-Lasky Managers End Session

After a session of six days devoted to the discussion of plans for the season of 1918-19, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation district managers adjourned their meeting last week. The session was called by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, and those who attended were:

Harry Asher of Boston; William E. Smith, Philadelphia; Jomes Steele, Pittsburgh; Max Goldstine, Chicago; A. D. Flinton, Kansas City; C. E. Tandy, Atlanta; Louis Marcus, Salt Lake City and Herman Wobber, San Francisco. The session was inaugurated by an address from Mr. Adolph Zukor, who congratulated the men present on the success that had attended the present year's method of distribution under the star series plan. This plan, first inaugurated by Artcraft Pictures Corporation on the release of the Mary Pickford productions a year and a half ago, was expanded to include both Paramount and Artcraft commencing last August 5.

The new season's star series, Mr. Walter E. Greene announced, will commence on September 1. In addition to the popular Paramount and Artcraft stars in the present year's list, six new artists will appear in the new season's productions. Their names and the number of pictures to be made by each will be announced in these columns soon.

In addition to a thorough discussion of film conditions in this country, an outline of the world distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures was made.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, announced that a series of territorial meetings of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Branch managers and Salesmen will be held under the auspices of the various district managers commencing about June 15. In this manner every member of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from President Zukor to the employes of all the exchanges, according to Mr. Lichtman, will be made thoroughly conversant with the policies of the company and its entire sales plan of distribution.

Although final details of the new year's plans will not be made public for several weeks, it is said that there will be regularly released three big features each week in addition to which a number of the most famous features of the past will be reissued under a novel arrangement, which should prove highly profitable to exhibitors.

Marion Davies Signs with Select Pictures

Confirming earlier reports Select Pictures Corporation announces the acquisition to its ranks of Marion Davies, who has signed a contract calling for the production of six pictures during the first year.

According to the terms of the contract, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," which has just been produced under the direction of Julius Steger with Miss Davies as the star, is included as the first of the six productions in the series.

The large amount of advertising and publicity issued on "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," coupled with the fine reception given the picture at its first private showing recently, resulted in its being booked for the week of June 2 by the Rivoli theatre, and its booking for simultaneous showing during the same week, starting June 3, in all of the Loew theatres in Greater New York.

Miss Davies is a noted beauty of the stage, having appeared first, while still in her teens, in the chorus of a Broadway musical comedy. From that first season Miss Davies has climbed steadily upward. Soon she was given speaking parts, and these were followed by leading roles. She has been prominently featured in "Chin Chin," "Ziegfeld's Follies," "Oh, Boy," and "The Century Girl."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Films Spread Fraternal Spirit

Fox Office Substantiates Press Dispatch Which Stated That Pictures Had Succeeded Where Diplomacy Failed

A RECENT United Press dispatch from Rio de Janeiro says that motion picture dramas are succeeding in the Latin-American republics where diplomats have failed. This broad assertion has drawn the approval of the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation, which observes that although films from the United States have always been quite popular in South America, it was the war—when it was merely a European war, two or three years ago—that gave the great impetus to the photodramatic product of this country and opened the eyes of Brazilians and others to the real state and mode of life in the United States.

A Fox statement points out that William Fox was a pioneer in the development of the South American film trade. Although the corporation has exchanges in more than a score of centers aboard, the first branch that was opened outside the United States was the Rio de Janeiro office. A Fox representative who returned a short time since after a long tour in the countries under the Southern Cross says that any one who has lived for any considerable period in Brazil, particularly, will agree emphatically with this statement:

"Much has been said and written about the tightening of Pan-American ties. Conventions there were at which representatives of more than twenty western continent republics banqueted and made speeches. Commercial interests strove to weave tight the web of business relations.

"Diplomats multiplied plans and policies for the common acceptance of the Monroe Doctrine. The press of the two continents clamored for a solidification of American interests. But the man 'who is putting it over' is the impresario of the celluloid stage."

The Fox offices declare that the basic reason for the remarkable success of our pictures in Latin-America is the insistence of the United States film producer upon action. As the dispatch said, George Walsh, the athletic star of the Fox forces, is extremely high in the favor of Brazilian picture "fans" because he is always "doing something." The Fox foreign department predicts that European-made photodramas will never regain the hold they once had in South America now that our own productions have displayed their merit.

Laemmle Has Message of Cheer

Universal President, Back from Long Trip, Optimistic Over Conditions —Prohibition and High Booze Prices Are Factors, He Says

FILLED with enthusiastic optimism over the prospect of the immediate return of prosperous conditions in the film industry, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, returned to New York on May 26 after one of the most extensive business trips he has made in years.

Notwithstanding huge advances in the cost of living and in the price of essentials Mr. Laemmle declares nearly everybody appears to be well supplied with money.

"I attribute the plentiful supply of money in the hands of the public," he explained, "to the fact that the great majority have learned to economize in living expenses by eliminating the non-essentials and cutting waste to an irreducible minimum. The people seem to believe, however, that the eliminating of expenditures for entertainment is not economy but that such action is dangerous.

"In my talks with numerous men who have made a study of the psychological question they take the stand that the people are following the proper procedure. In spending money for entertainment during their hours of play they are safeguarding their hours of work. They are going to their labors in a happy frame of mind in which they can accomplish the most with the least effort."

Thousands of dollars heretofore spent for liquor now is finding its way into the box-office of theatres, according to Mr. Laemmle. He says this does not apply only in the States where the Prohibition forces have won their fight, but is apparent in the cities where the saloons still flourish. His explanation and the explanation of others who have made a study of the question is that the saloonkeepers in some localities have raised their prices to such an extent as to be charged with openly profiteering.

"Men who, one year ago, spent two and three dollars daily over the bar, have become teetotalers. Not because they wanted to cut off their supply of liquor, but because they refuse to pay prices they consider exhorbitant. The result is that this money goes largely for other forms of entertainment."

During his trip Mr. Laemmle remained at Universal City for two weeks, during which time he went very thoroughly into the production end of the big company controlled by him. He personally impressed upon the staff at Universal City that the demand of the public is for better pictures all the time. And he told the members of the staff that the Universal Company meant to give the public that which it desires.

Mr. Laemmle informed the studio management that it was his intention to make Universal Special Attractions the talk of not only the industry itself but of the general public.

"That name 'Universal Special Attractions,'" said Mr. Laemmle, "must stand for the best pictures produced. It must be one name that may be advertised as a trademark and the people must know that back of the trade-mark at all times are productions of merit."

New Tax Bill Gets Hearings June 6

It was announced by Chairman Claude Kitchin, of the House Ways and Means Committee, last week that the public hearings on the new Revenue Tax Bill would be started June 6, and that representatives of industries desiring to be heard should communicate with the committee for assignments of time. Only one representative from each industry will be permitted to speak, it is understood.

A meeting of the producer and distributor divisions of the National Association was called for Tuesday, June 4, to discuss the attitude of the producers and distributors toward the new bill.

Gerard Film Shown at Nat. Cash Register Plant

"My Four Years in Germany" was booked by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for a day's showing last week at the big plant of the National Cash Register Co., at Dayton, O. The picture is said to have aroused the greatest enthusiasm among the employes, for whose enjoyment the executives of the company arranged the showing.

"Keep Funkhouser Out!"

Funkhouser when a compromise was suggested, that not a frame would be cut from the picture.

The Federal courts promptly granted an injunction restraining the city officials from interfering with the exhibition of the picture, and its wide showing in Chicago undoubtedly had a strong effect in awakening the city to the dangers of German espionage and to the prevalence of Teuton propaganda.

A "white" permit was denied for "For Liberty" until four ridiculous "cuts" had been made in titles. Again the company sought relief in the courts. Now this picture, with its stirring appeal for the highest standard of patriotism, is being shown in many Chicago theatres.

Funkhouser's objections to "Cleopatra" caused comment from every quarter of the United States. The censor ordered hundreds of feet cut from the film. The courts were resorted to again and when the production was offered to Chicago a few days ago the critics found themselves unable to detect the pruning ordered. Major Funkhouser endeavored to make this picture an issue in his fight to retain control of censorship in the city council when an ordinance to clip his power was introduced. He showed "cut-outs" from it to the aldermen, who then insisted upon viewing the whole picture. Their decision was against the Major.

It required five weeks to obtain a permit for "The Conqueror," while the title alone prevented the issuance of a "white" permit for "Camille." The same was true in the case of "Du Barry." The twelve members of the censorship board suggested three or four minor cuts in "The Rose of Blood," and recommended a permit. Overruling them, the Major rejected the picture in its entirety. This case is still in the courts.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Sherry?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

IT'S a shame that it seems to have become an unwritten law that nothing approaching "news" should enter these near flashlight studies of picture men.

We almost broke the rule last week in discussing J. Stuart Blackton when we let slip the news that he is preparing to start work on a patriotic spectacle as successor to "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Womanhood."

But even so, that news beat was somewhat of a slip of the pen. We'll have to regard it so, and in a few weeks we suppose we'll have to give page heads in a surprised sort of way to the press agent's announcement to the trade that J. Stuart Blackton is staging a new propaganda spectacle.

But this is one week when we would like to borrow the function of the news pages.

We would have liked the job of backing William L. Sherry into a corner and asking him just what he means by his plans to establish a new chain of exchanges.

Yes, we know that is a subject which has already been covered in the news columns. But we don't believe that the matter-of-fact news stories have told half the story.

We suspect that behind that restrained Sherry smile plans are brewing more definite and even greater than the mere establishing of a new Exchange system.

We think that William L. has something up his sleeve—or concealed behind that neatly trimmed mustache.

And we have only a hunch to base our suspicions on—a hunch born of the impression we have always carried regarding William L. Sherry's status in this great and glorious motion picture industry.

It started back in the days when we made our own bowing acquaintance with the fillum game.

One of the biggest things we became acquainted with was the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company. Its chief activity was the distribution of Famous Players pictures in these Eastern parts; but we remember that the hazy impressions of those days used to leave us often wondering whether the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company didn't often overshadow the Famous Players Company in importance.

Then came the formation of Paramount. Through its executive personnel and producing units Paramount naturally deserved ranking as important—but—film men of the time will tell you that it sounded a whole lot more important when one remembered that the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company was actively interested.

And so on to the present day, which finds William L. one of the largest individual stockholders in Paramount.

William L. Sherry has always had a place up front on the seats of the mighty in this game, and if he is starting something new—well, it isn't going to be "just another one of those things."

For our personal appraisal of the man we relied on two employes. The first one we hinted our desires to replied:

"Sherry? Why, he's the greatest boy that ever lived. He's——"

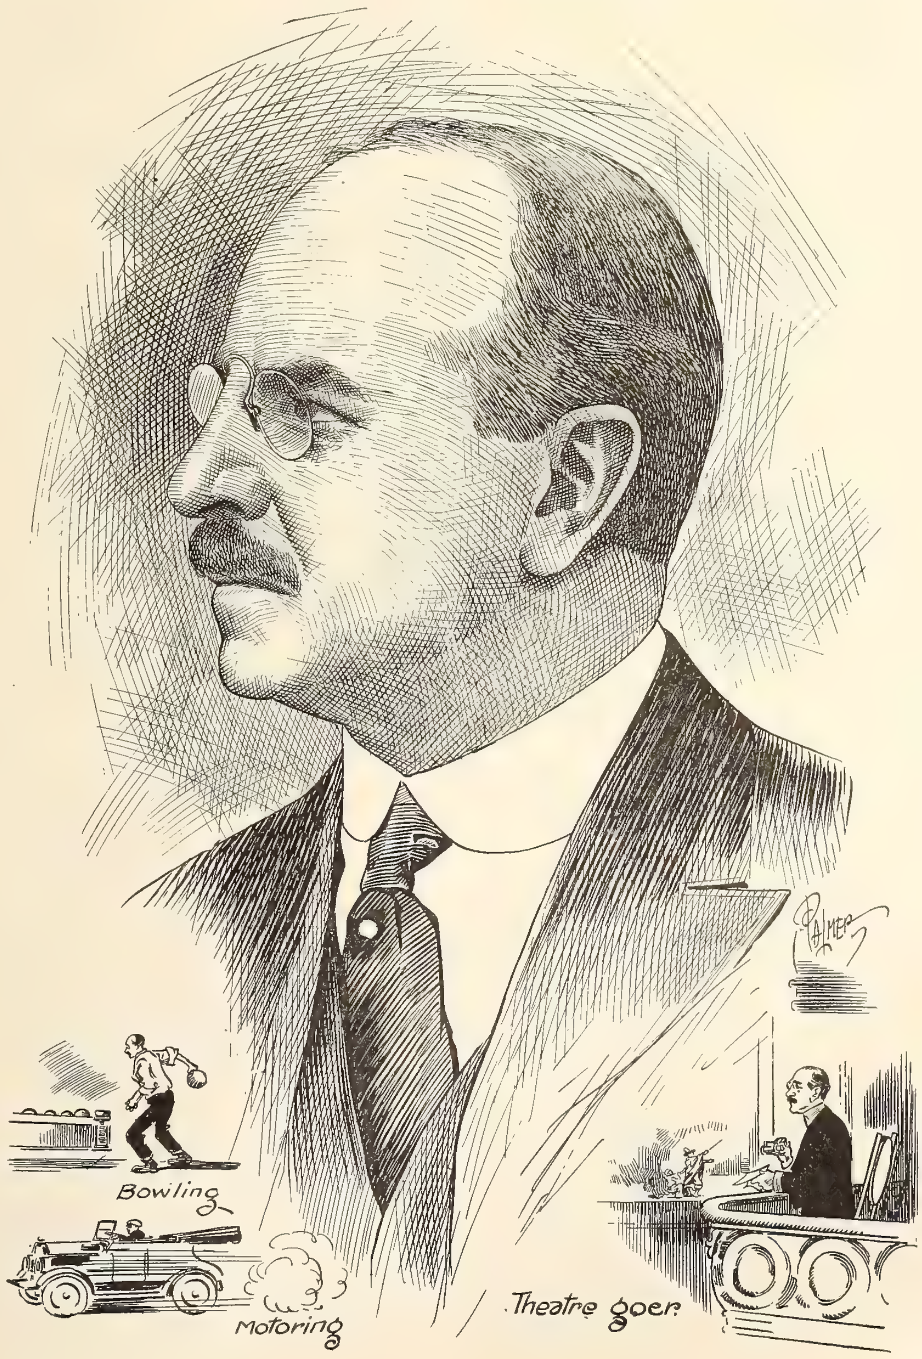
"Yes, we know all that," we interjected. "But tell us something definite. Why is he great?"

"Oh, just because. He's the greatest man ever; he's—oh, because, because; well, because if you're working for him he just treats you so white that you'd fight through hell for him. That tells everything in a nutshell."

The other man told us:

"An interesting point is the fact that he is one of the few executives who can go out and sell his own product when the salesman falls down.

"Sherry doesn't have to sit in his office and wait for others to bring home the bacon. "He can go out and get it."



Soriero Appeals to Lowell Trade Board Against Misleading Ad by Competitors

THOMAS D. SORIERO, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and the Strand, Lowell, Mass., has just had occasion to bring the policy of advertising on the part of one of his competitors in the latter city to the attention of the Lowell Board of Trade.

Mr. Soriero has booked for his Lowell theatre the first of the million dollar Charlie Chaplin's and he was amazed when his local manager called attention to the fact that the Owl theatre was advertising in the Lowell papers with the large type "A Dog's Life," and then going ahead to say that this sort of life is led by the comedian in "His New Job," a picture made more than three years ago.

Strand theatre is a member of the Board of Trade and so Mr Soriero determined to appeal to that body and claim the same protection that any merchant is given. His letter to the board explains itself and is the only comment that is needed on the sort of misleading exploitation that was done by the Owl. An immediate dropping of that sort of advertising was the result of the letter, which follows:

"As the Strand Theatre Company, of which I am the general manager, is a member of your board, I want to enter a complaint and call your attention to an ad which appeared in the Lowell Sun, issue of May 10, of an opposition theatre, known as the Owl theatre in Lowell, copy of which you will find enclosed. This is an ad which misleads the public.

"In other words, we are playing Monday, May 13, Charlie Chaplin in 'A Dog's Life,' for which we are paying a big price. The Owl theatre has taken advantage of this and is misleading the public and making them think that they have 'A Dog's Life' ahead of us. They are also making the public think that it is the same picture. As you will readily see in their ad, it says, 'Don't wait to see him, see him today.' The picture they have is an old picture, 'His New Job,' as you will notice from the ad.

"I have found that there is a criminal statute, passed some four years ago, about making false statements in newspapers, and I think it is my duty to my firm (being a member of the board) to call your attention to such misleading advertising. A stop should be put to it and the newspapers of Lowell should not take such ads without investigating them. The producers of 'A Dog's Life' are paying Charlie Chaplin a million dollars a year or more and the Owl theatre is trying to reap a profit at their expense.

"We are an institution that is a credit to Lowell and our advertising is the best that we can give to the public and is truthful advertising. We are at all times working for the interest of our patrons and we want to protect them from being led to other theatres that would misrepresent to the public and make them think that they are getting something they they really haven't. We want to be protected like a good reliable merchant of your city. The big producers of our pictures who spend fortunes to make them will certainly thank you for protecting them and putting a stop to advertising which misleads the public about their pictures."

well known film favorites also delivered short talks along the same lines. Among these were Dustin Farnum, Clara Kimball Young, Reginald Barker, Mae Murray, Fannie Ward, Harry Sherman, W. D. Taylor and Frank Keenan.

Bids Run Sky High

When the house had cheered them to the echo, Charley Murray climbed to the auction block, and announced the opening of bids for the first membership in the association, the card for which was to be autographed by Mary Pickford. Bidding started at $100 and rose from that point by hundred dollar bids until it reached an even thousand. When it touched the $2,000 mark, the house gasped in open-mouthed amazement and waited for the hammer to fall, but the bidding still continued. A moment later the crowd went wild when the ticket was "knocked down" to Dustin Farnum for the sum of $2,500, the first official donation to the charitable work of the association.

During the next half hour, thirteen additional memberships were auctioned off in the same manner, netting the association a total of $31,750. In the order of their purchase the memberships auctioned were bought as follows: Second autographed by D. W. Griffith to Mary Pickford for $2,500; third, autographed by Charles Chaplin, was purchased by Chaplin himself for $2,600; the fourth signed by Clara Kimball Young, went to Mack Sennett at $2,400; the fifth, autographed by Mae Murray was bought by D. W. Griffith at $2,500, following which Mae Murray agreed to donate $1,500 on general principles. The sixth card signed by Cecil B. De Mille went to Sessue Hayakawa, for $2,000; the seventh autographed by Lois Weber went to Phillips Smalley for $2,000. The eighth autographed by Mack Sennett was bought by Henry McRae for $1,000. Number nine, autographed by William S. Hart went to George Melford for $2,000. Card number ten, autographed by Marguerite Clark, went to Douglas Fairbanks at $2,500 (Mr. Griffith taking advantage of Fairbanks' absence to make three successive bids for him); number eleven signed by Frank Keenan went to Fannie Ward at $2,500. Number twelve signed by Miss Ward, went to Frank Keenan for $2,000. Unlucky thirteen autographed by Dustin Farnum, brought the biggest sum of any card sold. It went to Harry Sherman at $2,750. The last card to be signed by Douglas Fairbanks, was bought by Miss Weber for $2,000.

Following the auction bevies of girls from the various studios made their way through the audience signing membership cards. So enthusiastic was the crowd that the books were nearly exhausted before the last membership was signed. The nominal price of these tickets was one dollar, but the majority of the signers took advantage of the sliding scale allowed by the board, and paid as much as they were able. Memberships thus sold brought the total amount raised at this first meeting up to nearly $40,000.

Lasky Guards Drill

At the close of the business session, the Lasky Home Guards marched to the cleared stage, and under the direction of Cecil De Mille, executed a drill which was received by the house with deafening applause. A series of tableaux representing the various warring allied nations followed. With Clara Kimball Young and Wallace Reid as America; Bob Leonard and Mae Murray as England; Bobbie Harron and Constance Talmadge as France; Francis McDonald and Mildred Harris as Belgium; Sessue Hayakawa and wife as Japan; J. Warren Kerrigan and group as Italy. Properties used in these stage settings and the work of dressing the stage were donated by the Universal Film Company through Henry McRae.

Aside from its undoubted importance as a patriotic war service measure, the organization of the Motion Picture War Relief Association bears perhaps an even deeper significance as regards the industry itself. For, with the launching of this movement, there has apparently been born in the breasts of its members, a spirit that promises to unify the entire motion picture business in its every root and branch throughout the country, eliminating all class and sectional prejudices, and uniting the thousands of individuals who make up its mass, into a single co-operative invincible unit.

Fox Eastern Chairman

In connection with the War Relief Association formed on the West Coast, news of which is carried in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, William Fox was named eastern chairman at a meeting of directors, May 30, on the motion of Jesse Lasky. Mr. Fox will supervise all work in the territory east of the Mississippi River.

"A Red Haired Cupid"

Roy Stewart Not at Home in This Comedy Drama

(Triangle—June 2. Director, Cliff Smith)

THIS is rather a poor picture for a Roy Stewart. It is supposed to be a comedy drama, but you will hardly get two laughs out of it. In the first place there isn't much to the story, and in the second, the casting of the character of Albert Jones, which could have pulled it along to a certain extent, has been made very unsuccessfully. Players who can act well in drama are not always adaptable for comedy work.

The story is based on the magazine story by Henry Wallace Phillips and tells of Albert Jones (Ray Griffith), who was sent from the East by the directors of the Chanta Seechee Ranch to superintend it, although he didn't know anything about ranches. "Red" Saunders (Roy Stewart) was the foreman of the ranch. Later Jones had sent for his niece (Peggy Pierce) with whom Kyle Lambert, "Red's" bunkie, fell in love. Eventually they married much to Jones' objections.

Great dependence is placed on Lilly, a cow, to pull some laughs, but with the exception of one instance where she runs through the window, she fails.

You will be able to get by with this attraction but will not please your patrons as some of the previous Stewart contributions.

"Love's Conquest"

Lina Cavalieri Presented in Dramatic Story of Athens

(Paramount—June 2. Director, Edward Jose)

THIS is a magnificently produced costume play. As an entertainment, however, it will hardly appeal to the masses. The story is fairly interesting. It is based on the book, "Gismonda," by Victorien Sardou, and evolves about a beautiful Athenian noblewoman early in the sixteenth century whose little boy was thrown to the lions by some conspirators. She offered her hand in marriage to the one who would rescue him. A slave jumped into the pit, fought the lion and saved the child, but when she found out he was only a slave she refused to marry him. Later she killed a Prince who was conspiring to kill the slave, and when he assumed responsibility for the crime for her sake, love and admiration awakened in her breast and she accepts him publicly as her chosen husband.

The costumes used are gorgeous and the photography beautiful. The direction is also excellent.

It is a clean picture and will appeal mostly to the educated element, especially to those who have studied Greek history.

"Which Woman"

Ella Hall in a Melodrama with Rather Squeaky Mechanism

(Bluebird—June 10. Director, Harry Pollard)

ONLY an average program picture, which will appeal mostly to children. The story reads more or less like a dime novel, with a hero and a heroine and jewels and crooks and, of course, policemen to arrest them. It is very improbable and the kind grown-ups will not believe.

The wreck of the automobile is too amateurish, but is in harmony with the balance of the picture. The constant change from dark to light in the barn to represent lightning is very straining to the eye.

Ella Hall is charming as usual, but she can't pull this weak story from the hole.

This picture will appeal to the non-critical element.

"More Trouble"

Frank Keenan Scores Strongly in the Best Comedy Drama of Recent Months

(Pathe—July 14. Directed by Ernest C. Warde)

THIS is the best Keenan since "The Stepping Stone." It is one of the finest comedy dramas released for some time. It starts with good comical situations which will draw hearty laughs and culminates in a dramatic climax.

The story was written by Edgar Franklin and tells of Harvey Deering, son of Lemuel Deering (Frank Keenan), who has just returned from college. Bills for wine, poolroom, cigars, billiards and many other little items soon commence to pour in. Harvey denies to his father ever having anything to do with them. The climax is reached, however, when a note of $25,000 is presented for payment by the bank. Harvey denies this too and his father refuses to pay and the bank forecloses on Deering's steel mill. Harold Moronton, a college chum of Harvey and a son of Deering's friend, confesses that he forged Harvey's signature when his father cut off his allowance. Harvey confesses to his father he knew of the forgery but would not tell as he and Harold belonged to the same fraternity.

The last point in the story when Harvey tells his father he wouldn't give away his college chum because they belonged to the same fraternity is bound to please the young folks.

The picture is clean and will appeal to anybody who goes to see pictures.

ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS: As a comedy, both on the speaking stage as well as the silent drama, very seldom offers a strong foundation to carry on a good advertising campaign, I would suggest your tackling the dramatic end of it and I am sure you will get better results. Let your patrons find out about the comedy element after they get in. It will be a kind of a pleasant surprise to them.

Play up strong on the school element, as this picture is wound around college life. You may use the following catch words, "If a fellow member of your fraternity has done you wrong—ruined the reputation of your family and has even brought your father to the edge of bankruptcy—would you tell on him? Would you expose him and thus violate your oath? See 'More Trouble' with Frank Keenan, and find out how his boy stood the test."

For the balance of your program use a News Weekly and a scenic. Conserve your good comedy and cartoon in building up some weaker bill during the week, as this picture doesn't need any strengthening. In any event don't be afraid to go to the limit with it. Play it longer if you can.

"The Cabaret"

Carlyle Blackwell, Montague Love and June Elvidge in World's Latest

(World—June 10. Director, Harley Knoles)

"THE CABARET" is just an average program picture that will help fill the week's bill, and which will do no harm to run if you have to, but will do you no good either, as no one will go out talking about it.

There is no heart interest in it at all and the characters seem to be walking through the picture just because the story calls for such action, nothing more. Miss Elvidge is miscast.

"Viviette"

Vivian Martin Seen to Advantage in a Heavy Role

(Paramount—June 9. Director, Walter Edwards)

WE have been used to seeing Miss Martin in light dramas, therefore it will be kind of surprising to all of us to see how well she handles the heavy roles as well. This is a very well produced attraction with many tense situations. The ending is heavily dramatic, and there is where Miss Martin scores so well.

The story is based on the book of the same name by William J. Locke. The basic idea is that of a brother who attempted unsuccessfully to murder his brother whom he suspected of loving the girl he loved. In the end he discovers his suspicions were unfounded.

Although the story has been executed with great skill, the point of showing a man trying to murder his own brother is not a very pleasant one to incorporate in an entertainment, and I am afraid it will leave rather a bad taste. It is one of those things that prove repulsive to public taste even as reading matter. Another point that may prove a little embarrassing to those of you catering to exclusive family patronage is the fact that a girl in the story is wronged, the perpetrator afterwards refusing to marry her. It is shown only in flashes, however, and may not prove so objectionable.

"The Bravest Way"

Hayakawa's Latest Lasky Not Up to Usual Standard

(Paramount—June 16. Directed by George Melford.)

THIS is a melodramatic offering below the average Paramount. It is a Japanese story, is slow and hardly of the nature that makes good entertainment. It was written by Edith Kennedy and tells of Tamura (Sessue Hayakawa), whose chum was murdered by another Japanese while working in his own uncle's store. When the wife and children of the murdered man arrived from Japan the uncle refused to help them so Tamura took them to his home. Later he was compelled to marry her to avoid gossip although innocent of any wrong doing.

His half-breed sweetheart (Florence Vidor), was disappointed when she heard of his marriage, therefore she accepted the proposition of a wealthy American to go to Europe in order to cultivate her voice. When she came back she was shocked to find out that he had a sinister purpose in view, and she ran away from him. Eventually the murderer was apprehended. Tamura's wife died, thus making it possible for him to marry his old sweetheart.

You will possibly be able to get by with this picture especially if this actor is popular in your town.

"When Men Betray," with Gail Kane

Doubtful Story in Ivan Abramson's Latest, with Gail Kane and All-Star Cast

DRAMATICALLY this picture is just passable; as an entertainment, however, it is not for theatres catering to family patronage.

The story deals with the husband of a young couple who has fallen in the meshes of a beautiful adventuress, the wife seeking revenge by making him believe she is trying to make love to someone else. Eventually they are reconciled. The young sister of the husband is also shown as betrayed by a young man.

"The Ranger," with Shorty Hamilton

(W. H. Clifford Photoplay)

JUST a fair picture which will have an appeal to children and to those of the grown ups who like Western stories. It is the third of the Shorty Hamilton series in which Mr. Hamilton is given the combination part of a bad man and a newspaper reporter. It will barely hold your interest.

"Lend Me Your Name"

(Metro—May 27. Directed by Fred Balshofer)

YOUR patrons will have a somewhat hard time keeping their eyes open while this picture is shown. There is very little in it that will help hold their interest.

The story is based on Francis Perry Elliot's novel, and gives Mr. Lockwood a dual role, that of the Earl of Gilleigh and of a poor, hungry burglar. The plot is developed around their exchanged identities.

This offering might please the better class of Lockwood followers, especially the women, but will hardly appeal to the masses.

"Stolen Orders"

(Produced by William Brady—Released by the World Film Corp.—Special Attraction)

THIS is a good production. It is the kind that will offer your patrons entertainment worth their money.

The story is very interesting. It is based on the Drury Lane melodrama that was produced on the stage under the name "Sealed Orders," and deals with the German spy system and their activities before the war. It tells how a German spy had secured the sealed orders which the American Government had sent to the Admiral, commander of the fleet, when the relations with Germany had bcome strained, by using the Admiral's wife, who had lost heavily at gambling, as his stool. She was led to believe she was helping the cause of world peace; but once she found out the real motive of the supposed peace worker, she confessed, and gave the clue by which the sealed envelope was recovered before the contents became known to the enemy.

On the whole, this picture has been directed very intelligently. There are several points in it that are impossible, the author having taken too much "license"; however, nobody will kick, as they do not affect its entertaining values. The cast includes Kitty Gordon, June Elvidge, Montagu Love and Carlyle Blackwell, and they do the best acting of their career.

It is a picture that will appeal to all classes.

Directed by Harley Knoles, assisted by George Kelson. Screen time, 1 hour 40 minutes.

"Cecelia of the Pink Roses"

Simple Homely Touches That Will Appeal in Marion Davies Offering

IF there are any corners in your heart where sympathy has never reached, this picture will do it, especially when the mother puts her face close to that of her children and kisses them and begs them to be good after she is gone. It is full of such situations all the way through, and will surely appeal to the emotions of any human being.

The story tells of a poor Irish bricklayer who became wealthy from a brick invention, but too late for his wife to enjoy any of the luxuries, as she had passed away. Complying with her wishes, he sends his two children to school to become educated. Cecelia becomes a fine girl. The boy, however, is snobbish, and was ashamed of his own father because he is illiterate. Later he takes to dissipating and is caught in the meshes of a woman blackmailer and her man accomplice, but saved by the sweetheart of his sister. Eventually he is made to realize the folly of living such life, and reforms.

The picture is somewhat slow in places, and it would help if it could be reduced to five reels.

Miss Davies photographs well and gives a very good performance. She gets away with some fine emotional work.

The picture is clean and ought to please any audience.

Cincinnati a "Ten-Center"

And the Reason For It Is Seen in the Failure of Most Theatres to Advertise and Newspapers to Co-operate

JUST as we started to open this article by saying that Cincinnati was about the worst city in this whole country from the point of view of motion picture advertising and newspaper co-operation, along come the week's newspapers and show some excellent display work from some of the houses.

But in "Your Idea—and Ours" we have said the same thing so often and have week after week noted the improvement that has been shown by the theatres that seemed to care whether they got good effect or not that we are mighty well satisfied, and if the criticism that we have dispensed with a generous hand has been responsible for the improvement we believe that we have done the photoplay world in general a service.

There is one reason for this showing. Two of the theatres that regularly play legitimate attractions, the Grand and the Lyric, are now showing pictures and they appear to be spurring the others to use of more space.

Cincinnati is notoriously a bad motion picture city. It is cheap in the admission that it charges and cheap in the prices that it pays for film, an apparent result. Not one of the theatres so far as we know has an orchestra and not a manager strives for originality in the presentation of his pictures. The ticket is sold, the operator starts the machine and the show is on.

"Ten cents" is the rule in Cincinnati. But we hear that there are better things coming and that the price is going up. We believe that this summer's showing of pictures at the two legitimate houses that we have mentioned is going to help a lot in this movement.

One of the theatres, the Walnut, made an attempt to raise the admission to twenty-five cents, but the war depression caused the management to reduce again to fifteen. With this exception there seems to have been no earnest effort made to get higher prices and to use advertising to bring them about.

There are some peculiarities about Cincinnati. Its census population is 402,175. But its newspapers, the most of them have long made a play for out-of-town circulation. The Sunday Enquirer probably sells five times as many papers away from the city as it does in Cincinnati itself. Some of the papers have made it a practice of printing editions dated ahead and sending them in the surrounding territory. We say surrounding, but we know of one city 310 miles away in which an afternoon paper had a regular carrier system for the distribution of its paper. This may be good circulation for the general advertisers, but it is waste circulation for the local man, and especially the theatre manager. At the same time it would appear that while these newspapers seek this wide general circulation that they would seek to make their newspapers interesting to all their readers, and we know nothing that would so much improve them as well edited photoplay departments printing NEWS about the plays and players. Not one is doing this.

Cincinnati is one of the "greater cities." It includes as a part of itself Newport and Covington, across the river and in Kentucky. Most of the people living in those towns work in Cincinnati and they bear the same relation to each other as do many of the Jersey towns to New York. In this territory there are about one hundred and twenty theatres. With this immense territory to draw from it would appear that some of the houses would strive to stand out—to make themselves institutions—to force recognition as the leading motion picture houses of the entire section. But they do not.

There is considerable syndicate control of the houses. Davis and Harris own the Walnut, Family and Strand, which lead all of the other houses in advertising, and the firm is affiliated with Keith, Albee and Libson chain. During the summer Libson takes over the Grand Opera House and runs pictures there. He also owns the Bijou, a five-cent house with a splendid location on Fountain Square, "where all Cincinnati meets." MacMahon and Jackson, state rights buyers, own Gift's theatre, at Sixth and Vine streets, a splendid location, and they are reported to be interested in the running of pictures during the summer at the Lyric. In all there are about fifteen downtown houses, with the first runs being the Walnut, Family, Strand and Gift's and the regular theatres during the summer. The Alhambra has second runs, and other downtown houses with good locations are Lubin, Star, Colonial and Royal.

The most important of the suburban houses is the Orpheum. It was built for the legitimate, but could not compete with the downtown houses and turned to pictures. It is reported to be doing a big business with a considerable overhead to take care of. It used the remarkable space of four agate lines daily to announce its bills. It shows about third run pictures. The Forest, Avondale, is another fine neighborhood house with large capacity. It is doing well and does not advertise. Theatre capacities, as a rule, are small in Cincinnati, many of them being under 500. The Libson houses have average capacities of 1,200 and Gift's 650.

So much for a rough survey of the theatres. Certainly the newspapers are not doing anything to encourage the theatres. They appear to make no efforts to show them how to advertise. There has been some improvement in the past six months, but it has been outside criticism that has been responsible for this and not the papers themselves.

The Cincinnati papers are:

Commercial-Tribune, morning and Sunday.

Enquirer, morning and Sunday.

Post, afternoon daily.

Times-Star, afternoon daily.

Now there is a wide divergence in the circulation of the morning and the afternoon papers; the evening editions average four times as many copies. But there is a big percentage of this circulation outside of the city and which does not do the theatres any but incidental good.

Let's look at the Sunday edition of the Enquirer. Now the Sunday circulation of that paper is reported as well over 200,000, but probably not more than one-fourth of that is in Cincinnati itself. But here is one thing to bear in mind from the point of view of the newspapers—all of this outside circulation is in smaller cities and therefore the readers in general would expect to find in the Cincinnati paper an interesting photoplay section.

Now the first of these pages contains a small layout on current attractions, the legitimate and the screen together. On this page there are reading notices for each of the theatres, matter that is furnished by the theatres and of course necessary, but not with any great news interest. There is a New York letter included that is devoted entirely to the legitimate. This page carries the advertising of one of the theatres that runs pictures in the summer.

On the opposite page appears the bulk of the advertisements. Now the first thing that attracts attention are the "strips" that are run entirely across the page. It is mighty bad advertising and the newspaper that will let a theatre occupy such a position has no regard for its own typographical appearance. Of course the theory of the first manager that got the right to spread his ad across the top of the page was that he overshadowed the other displays, but the other theatres, of course, followed suit, with the resulting mess that is almost impossible to read, but which can but have the effect of making the stranger believe that the theatres are cheap in every way.

There is no need for further comment on the advertising of the theatres and parks at the top of this page. It could not be worse.

However, we want to say right here that this advertising does not apply to that of the Walnut, Family, Strand and the Grand

Pictures are Compared with Newspapers

TWO members of the Advisory Board this week discuss pictures as compared with newspapers. Sam W. B. Cohn compares the feature to fiction and the news reels to the news stories. He believes that some padding is essential and that if it is all eliminated from most pictures little will be left.

Charles G. Branham declares that he wants variety in his bills, and he declares that many of the rules that obtain in gathering together a good newspaper hold in the case of arranging a good motion picture show. He points out that just as in a newspaper the people will tire if all the pictures are long.

Ernst Boehringer wants a sane program, the sort that will keep the patron interested and not surfeit him. He favors the short five-reeler, to which short subjects to balance the program may be added.

E. J. Myrick sees the era of hundred per cent pictures and longer runs. He wants pictures rehearsed before they are made, and he believes that this would eliminate much footage.

Read each of these opinions. They are interesting and vital.

SAM W. B. COHN, manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., wants intelligent padding of pictures. He declares that the feature is the novel of the screen and that it must have "atmosphere." He compares the news weekly to the newspaper in making his point and shows that the "descriptive matter" is needed to round out the fiction portion of the screen entertainment:

I repeat, give me a production with intelligent padding. As an ex-newspaperman allow me to use the daily newspaper and the fiction magazine in drawing my comparisons.

When I first entered reportorial work on a large city daily in the West, my first instructions from the city editor embraced the statement that I must make my stories brief, terse and to the point. The editorial department would take care of the adjectives and superlatives and it was no part of my duty to use either in my journalistic career.

Secondly, I was given to understand that the tired business man and the overworked housewife had no time to waste—they wanted NEWS in a newspaper and not fiction.

I also learned that fiction magazines were the proper agencies for the planting of my "brain children" and that readers of magazines expected, and were dissapointed, if they did not get complete descriptive stories.

Personally, I believe the above arguments apply equally well to the present exhibiting situation. I further believe that my patrons want "descriptive matter," close-ups and so called "padding" in the dramatic productions. The five, six or seven reel picture is the novel of the screen while the current event and news weeklies are the newspapers.

Eliminate the padding from nine-tenths of the present day releases and you will find that your picture is sadly lacking. Too much will be left to the imagination and you can't afford to take it for granted that a majority of your audience has a very vivid imagination.

Our audiences, I believe, come to our playhouse to be entertained and to rest. They are not in a hurry but they do not want to overwork their minds puzzling out intricate plots or mysterious situations.

By the above arguments I do not wish to give the impression that I am in favor of long-winded, overdrawn and over-descriptive productions. Most decidedly, I am not!

Take your average magazine article or fiction story. What would they be without "padding?" Why should it be any different with a motion picture production? The picture is built upon a story—it is a visualized novel, nothing more.

Personally, I do not buy films for quantity. If a story loses nothing in its picturization in three reels instead of six, I want it. But boys, I am a Westerner with a Missourian's ideas and you've got to show me!

CHARLES G. BRANHAM, manager of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, draws the comparison between the motion picture and the newspaper. He wants not only action in all of the film that he shows, but he believes in giving the public variety in entertainment. He declared that it has frequently happened that a snappy single-reel picture has saved a show when the feature was a tiresome, long affair:

After having just seen a seven-reel production shot through in fifty minutes it may seem unreasonable to still insist that the five-reeler is the thing, but nevertheless the shorter feature is, in my opinion, the most satisfactory, both from the standpoint of entertaining the public and for proper program arrangement.

Movie patrons seem to be better pleased with the shorter show. Give them the five-reel feature, a snappy comedy of one or two reels and a weekly and they leave contented. I have heard them howl for the short subjects after witnessing a splendid seven or eight reel picture.

The fact that one of the most popular numbers on all of my programs is the reel of current events and war pictures proves that the length of the films has little to do with it.

Frequently the biggest drawing cards on a program are the one reelers—properly exploited, of course, and any number of live-wire exhibitors will tell you that they have saved a poor feature with a short subject or a Fatty Arbuckle or Charlie Chaplin comedy. What chance would they have had to do this if their features were all seven or eight reelers.

I believe it was General Otis of the Los Angeles Times who often told his editorial staff that there never was a story so big but that it could be told in a quarter of a column. "After that you are padding," he said. This applies in a big measure to the pictures. There are very few of them that really are worth more than five reels and the stories will not be spoiled by holding them to that length. After they are once made into six or seven reel subjects, however, it is next to impossible to cut them so that the story will not lose value.

This is a day of attractions, not features or "reelers," and the exhibitor will pay for the subject that will get him the money no matter whether the attraction be in one, two or five reels.

The producers seem to be working to this end, too, for there are more short features on the market today than for a long time.

The more I see of the motion picture game the more I realize that it is a real blood relation to the newspaper business. Many of the same principles laid down in the news-gathering game apply to the exhibition end of this industry.

The same attention to "makeup" should be applied to arranging one's picture program as is applied to that of the front page of every up-to-the-minute daily newspaper. The publisher early in his career as a newspaper man is taught the value of a snappy page I. He knows that his paper will be cast aside unread if he has seven columns of long stories or "features" on the front page.

And he also knows that a page of well-digested yarns, attractively displayed will sell his paper faster and please more readers, for they will be getting the meat of the news in an interesting, entertaining manner without being forced to read a lot of superfluous junk.

The reporter who quickly learns to tell it all in the first paragraph invariably is the boy who is called upon later for the big assignments. The exhibitor who follows the policy of giving his patrons one hour and thirty or forty-five minutes of genuine variety is the one who not only is getting the business but also is carrying the heaviest money bag to the bank every morning.

NO, the question about the length of pictures was not asked by a manufacturer. This is purely a department for exhibitors, of, for and by them. Therefore we are glad to print so comprehensive reply as that which comes from Ernst Boehringer, manager of the Liberty theatre, New Orleans. He would be glad to pay the same about for the 4,000 feet plus film as he is now paying for the padded seven-reeler:

The paying of identical prices for features whether of three reels or of six or seven is absurd. In our opinion of the ills which beset modern day pictures, we dwelt at some length on the exaggerated lengths of many of the current features. This is a condition for Mr. Producer to remedy, but he should not be forced to be honest with himself and with those upon whom he is dependent for success by baiting with identical prices for his product whether he offers it in honest measure or shortweight. If the producer asks the question, he admits that he has been stuffing, inflating or padding, call it what you will, to make his pictures big in a literal sense. However, we did not accuse all six and seven reel pictures of padding even though we condemn the extra long picture.

The question involved is simply one of common sense. We are in this thing as a commercial proposition. Whether we are operating an average theatre showing a feature and a comedy, or a more pretentious house with newsfilm and travelogue in addition, our profits are in proportion to the number of times we may re-sell our seats. If there is a producer who does not know this, now is the time for him to learn it. The next is that the popularity of the house is dependent to a great extent upon the popularity of the films shown.

It is necessary to state that tiresome pictures are harmful. It requires no scientific mind to tell us that the normal human being tires of anything on which he must needs focus his attention for any length of time, especially, in the case of a motion picture, if the interest is not sustained. But even in big pictures in which the interest is sustained there must be an intermission. However, intermissions are time consuming and are to be avoided in the ordinary presentations of motion pictures; and we are talking about the average presentation.

Therefore, we find it necessary to limit the length of the picture so as not to tire the spectator. In doing this we are making it possible to re-sell our seats sufficiently often to turn over a profit after meeting the bills. This is the ideal condition. And inasmuch as one of the lessons we have learned from the legitimate stage is that plays may be made to consume an approximate period of time, there is no good reason why the same may not apply to the production on the screen.

We do not believe the producer would experience any hardship in keeping within certain limitations. He can do so if he will resist the temptation to hold too much of what he has "taken." More footage is taken than is ever used, no matter what the attempted or intended length of the picture. When the pruning is done, it should be continued until nothing is left but what should be there. No arbitrary length may be established, but it is reasonable to believe that the footage can be held somewhere between four thousand and fifty-five hundred feet. If this were done, we would more than gladly pay as much for the 4,000 plus film as we would for the same subject with impedimenta stretching it to 7,000 feet.

But three reels would not make a feature of sufficient weight to headline a good program, and we do not incline to the payment of the same price for it as we now do for features. And we do not believe that the honest producer expects to receive it.

We like best the short five-reeler. To it may be added short subjects sufficient to make the program of the particular time-consuming period established by each individual theatre. The length of our ideal feature is not sufficient to tire the patron. The short subjects afford balance. What we are driving at is a sane program. In that way only may we hope to keep the patron interested, ourselves in business, and the producer producing.

Plain common sense should warn against a surfeit, for as soon as we foster a tribe of motion picture dyspeptics we may as well say: Farewell, little motion picture, you've served to give us a few exciting years, anyway.

E. J. MYRICK sees the era when pictures will run for at least twice as long as they are now doing, but he declared that to do this they must be Hundred Per Cent pictures. He believes that if the companies did more rehearsing before actually starting to work the result would be better pictures instead of following the haphazard footage arrangements that are generally followed:

Length of pictures, is a subject which to my mind, requires a most serious consideration from exhibitor and manufacturer.

Pictures in the far west are as a rule advertised by the exhibitor, not from a footage standpoint but from a quality standpoint and it might sound very foolish to you, or in fact lots of motion picture men, when we tell you that we use the knife on pictures to a considerable extent, with excellent results.

A big star should by all means secure stories that would carry out the desired length without padding. I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe that a feature would be just as valuable 3,000 feet in length as it would be in five. However, I would like to suggest that the manufacturers insist that the companies making pictures do a little more rehearsing on scenes before the camera is put on it, eliminating a lot of footage.

Longer runs of pictures is coming, can't help but come, but the public must be assured and know that they are going to see a picture that is 100 per cent perfect in story, cast, photography and settings, and to get this interest, there will necessarily have to be a curtailment in output.

There is no reason in the world why a picture cannot run just twice the length of their present engagements, but to do this it is necessary for the manufacturer to realize that every film which is made is not a feature.

LAST week we told you that S. L. Rothapfel has returned from his trip for the U. S. Marines, but that he had returned late in the week and that he found "the boys" had already arranged the shows and therefore he did not interfere—except when he saw little things that went wrong. But this week the shows are Rothapfel's—and what a difference his hand in a presentation made in them. All that we have said about his having a wonderful organization of hard workers and hard thinkers is true, but after all there is only one Rothapfel.

In talking to him Sunday night we believe that we hit at the vital thing in a chance remark. We said: "No matter if the others do wonderful things we generally know what is going to happen before it does. When you are on the job we never even try to guess, because we know that we are going to be surprised by something unexpected.

There are a dozen different things done in the shows this week, things that are strong lessons to all exhibitors. They range from "little touches" up to what we consider the most striking arrangement of music that we have ever seen for a feature—in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" at the Rivoli. It adds a hundred per cent to the enjoyment of the picture and there are at least two novelties in the arrangement of the score itself that are well worth remembering.

"Martha" is the overture. Now to appreciate thoroughly why it is used and to get the full meaning of it, you must know that it tells the story of an English lady and her maid who disguise themselves and hire out as servants at a fair and two supposed farmers fall in love with them. But one is a nobleman in disguise and he wins the lady and the real farmer marries the maid. Now note that the story of the opera brings in the question of social inequality and this is one of the big elements in "Cecilia," for the son is ashamed of his father, once a bricklayer, who became rich, while the girl's sweetness wins the whole hearted love of the scion of a rich family. Now the spirit of the opera is largely the spirit of the story of the picture. But there is more than that, for in this orchestral selection the old Irish air, "The Last Rose of Summer" is introduced.

You might argue that not enough people would know the story of the opera to justify its use as an overture, but that is another one of the little things that makes one presentation good and another one perfect—the height of art. And passing that aside, every one knows "The Last Rose of Summer" and its coupling with the feature is obvious to every one. This selection is played with the main lights red, the inner dome and the side panels gold.

Then comes the Animated. First there is a new animated title for this showing the deck of a battleship with the heavy guns in the foreground. In the battlemast a sailor gets the signals presumably from another ship and the guns begin to fire and out of the smoke from three shots come the words, "Rivoli Animated Pictorial," the first in red, the second in white and the third in blue. Here we have the roll of drums and the sound of cannon, with the main selection "Festival March." This continued through some striking Hearst-Pathe pictures showing French, English, Belgian and American sailors at Pelham Bay forming human designs of the united flags. It gets almost constant applause. Then the music changes to "Master Builder March," and first are shown Universal pictures of adding another ship to the victory fleet at Bath, Me., and then Gaumont pictures of the champion negro rivetter, and the launching of the first fabricated steel ship at Newark. A splendid close-up of Schwab and Thomas A. Edison adds greatly to this.

Now come Ford Education pictures of "Hunting Wild Geese," which includes some splendid photography showing flocks of the birds and many of them in remarkable closeups, and then adds a good laugh by showing the gander guarding his spouse from a dog. For this the music is "Down South," played on through, and then "The Cricket." Now the arrangement of the Animated this week is unusual in that the first half of it is devoted to sailors and ship, and then there comes in the wild geese as a dividing line, giving the relief and the laughter, and then the general subject of the Red Cross is taken up. Of course, one in the audience does not see at once why this was done, but one knows that one had been applauding vigorously and that there was an opportunity for a let-up and a laugh before the patriotic fervor came again. Another of the little things that count so much.

Now come Gaumont pictures of the President at a Red Cross benefit ball game at Washington. There is a splendid view of him in one of the boxes and he throws the first ball and the sphere is then auctioned for a big sum. Here the music is "You've Got to Get In and Get Under." Also from Gaumont come scenes at Washington as the Red Cross goes over the top, and here "Onward Christian Soldiers" is played once through.

Now note another strikingly unusual thing that will make a big hit. This hymn is carried on organ and orchestra, played in its usual manner. Then follows "Keep the Home Fires Burning," which continues through pictures of a Belgian dancing for the Red Cross and East St. Louis girls' fife and drum corps until a scene where men and the girls are shown dancing. Here the same selection is turned to waltz time just for the period of this picture. It is a happy ray right there, and just the right thing. Then as the scene of the picture shifts to the parade in San Francisco, the same selection is shifted back to march time. This continues through the picture and there is another change with Universal pictures of the "beauty squad of New York," and here "Onward Christian Soldiers" is taken up again and played in a very broad and martial manner to the finish which comes with Universal pictures of the American flag and the Red Cross emblem flying together from the dome of the capitol. It is one of the punchiest effects that we have ever seen, and largely a result of the arrangement of the music.

No, the novelties are not done yet, not by a long shot. The next is the Ampico reproducing piano rendering "Concerto—First Movement," by Grieg. First the lights are all in blue, with the uprights at the sides of the stage in red and then the panels come out in green, with the mysterious effect. First the orchestra plays through "Morning," the introduction, and then the curtains at the side part showing the piano. On this is a green spot and the polished top of the piano is so lighted that it throws the reflection of the keys in a mirror like effect, giving a barely noticeable flashing effect that seems to represent the absent player and adds further to the effect. A setting used before, but now made different by the lighting, showing such windows and the red of the evening in the background is used, and at the start there is a hanging flaming light which goes out. The curtains fall while the last notes are being played.

But there was another thing right here. There was also a second light at the extreme right of the stage during this entire number, and after the selection was over the fixture, now unlighted, still hung there during the next picture, "Studied in Floriculture." This was done to give the eye a little relief from the screen. Now everyone unconsciously turned the eye now and then from the picture to the unlighted fixture, and the result was eye relief. The fixture could barely be seen and therefore it could not be called something obvious—merely a little relief that everyone appreciated without hardly knowing it was done.

"Roses and Memories" is the selection for the flower picture, from Pathe, showing the opening of various flowers, closing with the pink rose. Do you note how this same spirit of the roses is brought in in the music and the pictures—carrying a beautiful theme entirely through a presentation?

Then the orchestra begins "Macushla," the beautiful Irish song, and there are a few bars and then the curtains part, showing with red lighting effects a rose garden in the evening with Miss Gladys Rice, in white hat and dress, seated on a bench with the small pot barely on her face to bring it out. Now the columns have been removed from the sides of the stage at the Rivoli, giving it more width and better effect, and the splendid scenic effect by John Wenger brings a tribute of hearty applause from the audiences before the young woman starts to sing. The effects of the song itself are wonderful, but as she approaches the end the scene curtain begins to fall and the voice seems to die away in the background as the title of the picture is immediately thrown on the screen curtain. During the presentation of the feature the red draperies remain at either side with bushes of roses before them.

is the theme used, but there are no less than forty-one changes of music used with this selection, ever coming back at the proper time. There are many Irish melodies used with "The Story of the Rose" and others brought in several times as second motifs. After a few bars of the theme, "I'm Leavin' from Erin" is played, and then back to the theme again for a few more bars, then "Mother Machree," and again back to the theme. Other selections that are introduced are "Irishman's Dream," when the father's hopes for the future are revealed; "Little Mother of Erin," at a point where the daughter's loving solicitude is shown; "A Little Bit of Heaven," "Come Back to Erin" is also used several times during the picture.

"The Story of the Rose' is first introduced when the girl meets the man she is to fall in love with. Now let's call your attention to the general arrangement of this music without trying to give you the score, and show you how the themes are worked out and why we call it such a wonderful arrangement. In the first place, "Macushla" is not only the theme, but it is the underlying touch of love of all the family (except for the forgetfulness of the son) for the mother. "Little Mother of Erin" is used time after time to carry the idea of the girl's self-sacrifice; "Mother Machree" for the spirit of the mother herself and the memory of her after she is dead. "The Story of the Rose" is carried through the love story, while the lighter Irish music is for the happier scenes. The picture has to be seen to have this arrangement of the music appreciated, but it is a perfect example of carrying out each idea and blending them into a symphonic whole.

Now there are two distinctly novel touches introduced. At one point Mr. Rothapfel used the organ and one violin to carry the music for probably twenty minutes. Here the violinist is seated by the side of the organist and the rest of the pit is dark.

Here's another one. There is one point in the story where the girl plays her father's favorite air on the piano. It's "Macushla," but instead of the piano solo breaking right into the other music the entire orchestra stops and there is not a sound while the film runs probably fifty feet and then the piano solo of "Macushla" begins. It's an unexpected little thing that gets a wonderful result.

The happy ending of the story is carried into the next orchestra number, selections from Herbert's "Sweethearts," and there is a continuous laugh at the end with the Educational Films presentation of Happy Hooligan in "Throwing the Bull." The trap drummer and the effect musicians get a splendid chance, and there is "hoochie koochie" dance music together with "Toreador" played during the arena scene. It's a big dose of heart laughter right at the end of the remarkably artistic bill.

Not because it is not a splendid show, but for space reasons, we cannot describe the Rialto show as fully. "Maritana" is the overture, a tragic bit with a happy ending.

EMPEY
TO-DAY
'OVER THE TOP'

Remarkable lobby display used by the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, during the run of "Over the Top"

It is played with the lights in gold. Then comes "Scenes in the Virgin Islands," the first of the Pathe-Post films, containing most interesting matter about our newest possession, starting with a cartoon effect showing its location. "Petite Suite de Cocerte" is played, first Nos. 1 and 2, then No. 4 and finally No. 3.

Miss Greta Torpadie follows, singing the Polonaise from "Migon." Here the Byzantine setting is used with the lighting all red. The first series of curtains on the side panels part for this and here the effects again are in red.

Then the Animated. It starts with a punch and ends with another big one. First is a Universal picture of the New York Memorial Day parade showing the veterans of the G. A. R. marching with the sailor boys of today, and here "Daughters of the Revolution" is used and when "America" is reached in the counterpoint here the entire audience stood up with one movement. Of course it is not the national air, but it is the national air of Britain, and there was the reason. Then comes another Universal showing the children's dance in Central Park, for which "Tete-a-Tete" is used. There is a good hot weather bit in a splendid Gaumont picture of seals swimming, and the music carries out that same effect, for the selection is "Nights of Gladness." "Shepherds All and Maidens Fair" is played for Gaumont's pictures of sheep on San Clements Island, Cal., with some wonderful shots of running sheep.

Here starts the punch again. Universal presents pictures of King George decorating heroes of the war, and the music becomes "Sons of Britain," and then follows a Hearst-Pathe cartoon entitled "Now or Never," describing the German offensive, and here the tune becomes "La Forza del Destino." Now Mr. Rothapfel threw in a big punch here by showing across the screen the French battle cry at Verdun, "They Shall Not Pass," accompanied by just a bar or two af the "Marseillaise." The effect on an audience does not have to be described. Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures showing American troops marching through the streets of London. The music now becomes "Over There," turning into the roll of drums and the call of trumpets, and then the full orchestra bursting into "Over There" to the smashingly big finish. It's just as much of a punch as the one at the Rivoli. It shows that you don't all have to have the same picture to get the effect.

With the main lighting of the house blue, Greek Evans, baritone, appears. The side panels part, revealing on one side a lighthouse scene and on the other a sea scene, and sings "The Trumpeter."

"Believe Me, Xantippe," is a refreshing piece of comedy, bordering on the burlesque at times, and so the music is made refreshing for this. It opens with "I'm Afraid to Go Home in the Dark," and includes such popular numbers as "Hunting the Huns," "Good Scout," "Sweet Baby," which helps along the laughs when the hero shoots a skunk, and "Introduce Me," when the girl discovers that he is the much wanted man. "Listen to the Dixie Band" and "My Gal Sal" are also used.

With the lights all gold the orchestra then plays selections from "The Chocolate Soldier." We have remarked once before that the public appreciates the repeating of the music of the almost-old-time comic operas, and if exhibitors everywhere should have heard the applause that this number got at the Rialto Sunday they would see what a hit they could make, and how easily.

"Ambrose's Cup of Woe," one of the reissues of Triangle comedies, is the last number on the bill and it is filled with laughs. The music is all popular, with a burlesque on the sob stuff, and the imitations keep up all through.

WE have reproduced many advertisements on "The Kaiser" and most of them have been very similar in that they have used the cartoon of the Hun chief. But here was a case where there was a splendid piece of material supplied, and if we had been writing advertising for a theatre we would have used this in every one of the displays, just as much as we would use the trade-mark in exploiting any standard product. They are striking and they command the attention of every one who looks at the page.

Bijou theatre, Saginaw, Mich., has used scene cuts in half-tone instead, and they fail to stand out as strikingly and do not offer the same contrasts with the black type that would be furnished by the line cut.

Just one thing about the Bijou and a number other theatres through the country. We don't get the idea of spelling out the name of the theatre with a series of dashes. Of course, it is done with the idea of driving the name of the house home, but how much better the use of a distinctive name plate that one doesn't even have to read to associate the picture with the specific theatre.

Ancient history is good reading, but poor advice.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Milwaukee, sends us two specimens of advertising, both of which we reproduce because they illustrate so splendidly the point that we have made of advertising your NOW attraction and devoting the least possible space to the change of bill for the middle of the week.

There is that "perfectly balanced" effect that seems to delight some designers, and which almost always results in poor displays attempted in the Mary Pickford-Pauline Frederick advertisement. Even to the height of the cuts and the use of the names of the authors in the same type the display is "balanced," and the Artcraft and Paramount trade-marks are "nicely balanced" on either side of the centre tree. It is bad advertising, because it is distinctly without the touch—because it invites the reader to choose WHICH of two pictures to see.

What a contrast there is with the display on "Selfish Yates." The picture of the star, his name, that of the theatre, and the title are brought out well. There is ample white space, and, the main thing that we were talking about, the picture for the latter half of the week is given the position that it deserves—mere incidental mention.

Both are artistically good advertisements. One has selling power, and the other starts a debating society—that's the difference.

Yes, with a lot of people it is still "moving pictures."

WE started out to reproduce this advertisement of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, Ohio, and then we noticed this "thing" underneath it. "Thing" is the only fit word that we can think of. It is, theoretically, a newspaper advertisement, but it is just about the worst waste of money that we have come across. Columbia theatre is paying for it.

There are two things the matter with the otherwise good display of the Dayton. In the first place, the border has no business at the side of the Mabel Normand cut. It weakens the effect. The border should have been "run in" at the bottom. There is too much reading matter under the name of the star. We find here "the snuggly girl, the roguish girl, the smiley girl, the saucy girl." Now, any one of these expressions would have been excellent, and would have proven a good catch line, but the use of them all leave that impression that we should always try to avoid—that you are trying to fill space. One other thing is a serious error. The date of "The Unbeliever" is brought out prominently, but the date of the current picture is hard to find. Always feature the date and the name of the house. Don't let anything else overshadow them.

To be asleep at his throttle is the unforgivable crime with a locomotive engineer. One man so slept and a smash-up was the result. But—he had been on duty for eighteen hours, despite his protest. Did that fact save him? It did not. He was fired by the president of the road. He left cursing the iron heart of the big boss, and swearing that some day he "would make him pay." Did he? ZELDA THEATRE, Duluth, Minn., did some mighty fine advertising on "Over the Top," and it looks rather mean of us to pick out the one poor display to hand it a knock. But one of the foundation stones of this department was to avoid the usual motion picture trade magazine comment of telling every man how good he is, but to try to get some lesson from each comment for the exhibitors in general.

"Trick" advertising is sometimes good, but only sometimes. What does the eye strike on this display? Nothing. The arrow is frankly disconcerting; it was evidently meant to be. There is no reason in the world why the name of the picture should have been circled and then a huge arrow required to point to it.

We repeat that the man who writes this advertising generally writes something worth while. This time he wanted to do something "different." He did. It is a mere display of type, and anything but a selling talk.

What you do between starting your picture and counting up your cash and between counting up your cash and starting the next picture are the things that count.

HERE Paramount has gone half-way with a good idea.

As we have said to you many times it is not altogether fair to take an advertisement and reproduce it alone, and then either condemn or praise it. A great deal depends on the surroundings that the display has in the paper. We have commenced many of these as good when the reproduction apparently showed that they were faulty, but the things that appeared bad had to be done on account of the fact that the specific displays were surrounded by a lot more heavy ones.

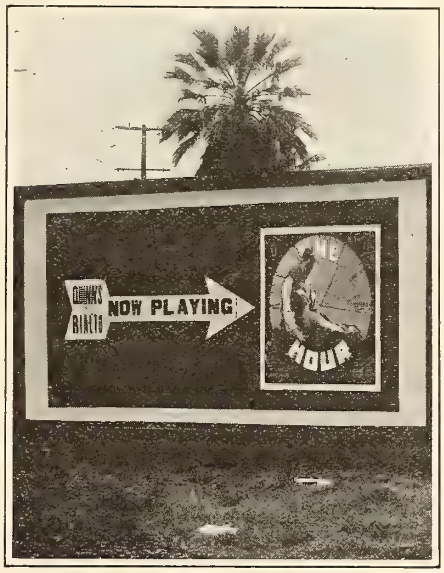
ARMY DESERTER TELLS OF WORKING AS SPY

So Paramount, in its press books, has done a good thing in showing how the displays that it suggests would look against reading matter. But the newspapers that give you a position in the center of reading matter are mighty few and far between. Illustrate these advertisement circles by a lot of heavy displays, and you will have shown the exhibitor to show constructive effort without the almost universal resort to heavy Gothic type.

The fellow who does without advertising is like a chair with three legs. He's all right when all is serene, but when the jar comes what a fall he has!

HERE is an excellent idea that can be used on billboards with a six-sheet, and getting even greater effect than larger paper. Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles, uses the arrow in all of its advertising, and here a billboard stand has been made very striking by using a six-sheet on the Four Square picture, "One Hour," and adding a huge arrow pointing to the poster.

The great trouble with most paper for billboards is that the name of the theatre is sacrificed, or that it is used in lettering entirely out of sympathy with the poster itself. It is that very thing that gives most billposting the character of "cheap" advertising, and for that reason many high-class houses avoid it. This use of paper created a distinctive display, and at the same time keeps the name of the theatre the big thing.



When you sacrifice the name of your theatre, you admit that the thing you sacrifice it to is better than the reputation that you have built up for your house.

WITH one exception here is a splendid advertisement, and we have the same fault to find with most of the specimens sent by the Grand Amusement Company, operating four theatres in Johnstown, Pa.—too much black. Now, the designer of this display has left sufficient amount of white space around the border and in the inner display, but the whole thing would have been more effective with the use either of a light black border or a Ben Day. The use of the cuts, the arrangement of the name of the theatre and the matter included in the advertisement are all excellent.

In fact, all of the advertising sent in by this company is exceptionally well written. It has tone and punch. It is descriptive without exaggeration, and it gets close to one. When this is true bad typography can be very well excused.

Ten inches is the rule for the single column ads. of this company, and all of the specimens, but one, that we have seen use a cut of the star at the top, a mighty good rule in single-column displays where there is sufficient room underneath to talk about the picture.

We are also reproducing two of these single-column displays because of their excellent merchandising value. Note the words "Adventure" and "Mystery." The ad writer takes a text and talks about it, and the result is a display, every word of which will be read.

There is just one little fault that we would find with these. The word "See" is not only unnecessary, but it cheapens the sales talk. It is the obvious thing that you are writing the display to make the people want to see the picture.

The trouble with the windows of some exhibitors' minds is that they are so clouded with hot air that they can't see through them.

opera house. This display matter is designed by the same man and with the exception of the man who designs Gift's he seems to be the one writer in the city who is trying to make the advertising distinctive.

The space used in the Enquirer in these "strips" is about one inch in depth. Here the Walnut, Family and Strand occupy a combined space of 9½ inches double column and Gift's 5½ inches double. The Orpheum uses the four agate lines that we have mentioned. The Lyric and Grand hardly come under the heading of motion picture discussion, for they return to the legitimate with the passing of each summer. However, they are apparently stimulating advertising by other houses, though with a total of nine picture theatres represented in the Enquirer there's a whole lot more of stimulation needed.

On a third page, three pages removed from the other matter the Enquirer carries about two columns of NEWS matter. It is apparently taken from the trade press and it is not what we would call the ideal matter for the fan. It is intensely heavy, serious stuff. If half column cuts of players were used, together with little news stories about them, short paragraphs about coming pictures and that class of matter there would be a great deal of improvement shown.

The Commercial-Tribune evidently does not care for the photoplay, for it appears that every effort is made to fill the space with matter about vaudeville and legitimate for the only matter that we can find in the issue at hand is reading notices for each of the houses that advertise and representation of some of them in the layout. There isn't the slightest thing that suggests photoplay news or that will interest. There is slightly less advertising than in the Enquirer.

The Times-Star refuses to allow the theatres to carry streamers across the top of the pages and makes the advertisers who want this class of exploitation go to the bottom of the page, where they belong. The Walnut, Family, Strand and Gift's carry the same advertising as in the Sunday papers, but no other motion picture houses are represented. The motion picture matter is confined to a few lines about each house that advertises and then some agate matter under the heading "Behind the Screen"—interesting matter for what there is of it.

In the Post motion picture matter is scattered over three pages, and there is not enough to it for much scattering at that. On the editorial page there appears the advertising of Colonial, Metropolitan and Gift's and the smaller directory advertising of nine other theatres, some of them neighborhood houses. It is the only paper that seeks to get this smaller advertising and group in.

The display matter for the Grand, Lyric, Walnut, Family and Strand is carried on the sporting page, a position that we would not appreciate if we were running a family house. On the third of these pages there is the only representation in the news and the only line about motion picture houses are three on the Lyric and four on the Grand.

On Mondays under the heading "The Picture Houses," the Enquirer gives each of the houses a few lines of review matter and on Thursdays the same thing is done. In the same issue it carried five inches double on the Lyric, 1½ double on the Grand and very small ads for the Orpheum and Gift's. The Walnut, Strand and Family use a combined standing ad about ½ inch. With these exceptions the theatres do not advertise during the week in the Enquirer.

On Mondays and Thursday the Commercial Tribune does the same thing in the way of notices and carries about the same advertising.

The Times-Star groups the advertising during the week and carries a total of twelve houses, more than any other newspaper. The gain is made in the neighborhood houses. It also gives notices Mondays and Thursdays. The Post carries small ads for seven theatres regularly.

Cincinnati, to our mind, offers one of the most startling examples of a city where the theatres and the newspapers should get together. With the exception of the few houses that we have mentioned, none of them are doing good advertising and few are advertising at all.

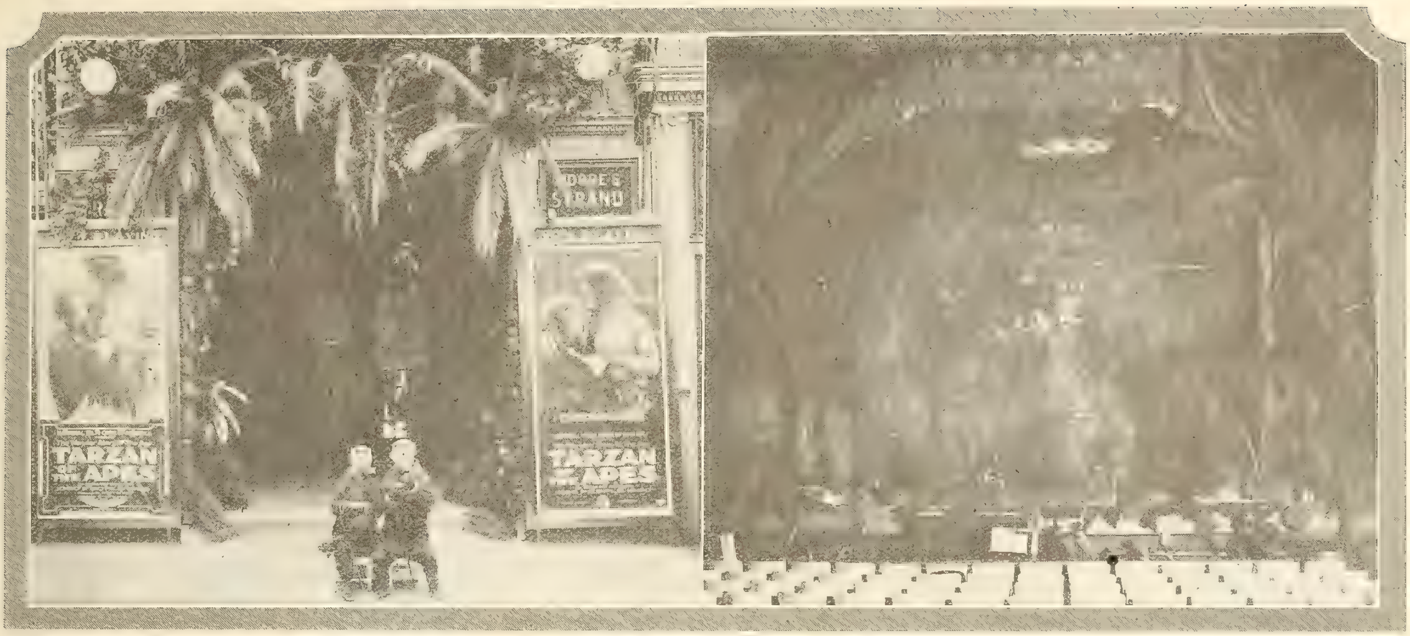
And there's nothing in the world done on the part of the dailies that would encourage the theatres to do more. We imagine that the situation in Cincinnati is this: The manager thinks that he can get only ten cent admission and therefore he tries to save money in two ways, first by paying the least amount possible for films and second by refusing to advertise on the ground that they cannot afford it. When theatres have limited capacities there is a temptation to avoid advertising because the management sees no way of accommodating the increased crowds. But it seems to us that the answer in Cincinnati is the low prices that are charged.

"Cheapness" seems written all over the motion picture exhibition game in Cincinnati and the city as a whole is far behind others of the same size. Some of these days one of the papers is going to employ a man who understands the motion picture industry and he is going out and line up some fifty or sixty of the houses as regular advertisers. At the same time the paper is going to start to print real news matter about motion pictures.

There is one thing about Cincinnati—a grand opportunity for some one.

UP WITH THEM

WEEK after week exhibitors from all sections of the country are recording their accomplishments in these pages. Much of this matter comes from various sources, yet the individual exhibitor is not only asked, but urged to send his accounts to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. Where possible, include photos of stage settings or lobby displays and specimens of the newspaper advertising or any of the other exploitation aids that you used.



Lobby display and stage setting on "Tarzan of the Apes," at Tom Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C., showing how the tropical idea was carried out

Tom Moore Breaks All House Records With His Novel Presentation of "Tarzan"

SCORE three runs for Tom Moore of Washington, D. C. After having established an exceedingly high artistic standard in photoplay presentation by his prologuing of "The Blue Bird" with special scenery from the original stage production and an especially arranged flower ballet at Moore's Strand theatre Easter week, Mr. Moore came right back with a tremendously successful eleven-day run of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," a record-breaking ten days of Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" and then the triumph of triumphs, "Tarzan of the Apes," which has just finished the pleasant task of hanging up new house records.

"The Kaiser" was not prologued at the Strand, but was given the advantage of shrewd advance advertising in the form of one column display "teasers" warning the police to watch the audiences for seditious acts and treasonable utterances; warning pro-Germans that the picture was not for them and advising all red-blooded Americans to come and see why the Kaiser had to be conclusively whipped. The Sunday ads on the day of the opening then were so drawn as to "own" the theatre pages in every newspaper in the Capital. The result was an unprecedented run that packed the Strand—the largest motion picture house in Washington—at every projection, and they were run continuously from 10 A. M. to 11 P. M.

"Dog's Life" at Two Houses

The same course was pursued in the case of Chaplin's new release for the First National, except that this feature was put on simultaneously at Moore's Strand and at Moore's Garden, two first-run, down-town houses located within two hundred feet of each other on the same block. Both houses played absolute capacity during the time the film was on, the run being limited to three days at the Garden and one full week at the Strand—an equivalent of ten days, since the same prices prevailed at both houses.

In putting on "Tarzan," Mr. Moore again demonstrated the genius for effective setting and atmospheric prologue that has given him a preeminent position among exhibitors in the East. Schaffer, one of the leading florists in the National Capital, was commissioned to give the entrance lobby and stage of the Strand a jungle treatment in order that there might be an immediate creation of quick response to the spirit of the picture on the part of the spectator. V. P. Wormwood, the animal trainer, was then secured in person, to present in a jungle prologue, "Charles, The Great," the famous educated ape, and his sister, who masqueraded in male attire and occupied the important position of ticket taker at the door.

In the treatment of the lobby, Schaffer was particularly happy. In addition to achieving an effort of dense tropical growth, he attained a heightened effect of the wilderness by an adroit arrangement of stuffed wildcats, jaguars, etc., which seemed to be lurking in their natural habitat and gave a conclusive touch to an excellent simulation of primeval morass.

Stage a Tropical Verdure

The stage was a mass of tropical verdure, the jungle effect being carried past the front of the proscenium into the main auditorium by the planting of full size cocoanut palms at the ends of the orchestra trench, and banking the footlight groove with luxuriant greens. An added advantage of this treatment lay in the fact that Washington's summer was already in full blast at the time of the run, May 19-25, and the restful greens of the outdoor set were instrumental in creating the delusion of low temperature.

It will be noted, too, that the jungle setting, in addition to being completely in consonance with the subject matter and the spirit of the picture, afforded a perfect background for the demonstration of simian astuteness offered by Mr. Wormwood's extremely diverting exponents of the theory of the late Mr. Darwin. The antics of Charles the Great and his consort were as amusing as they were informative.

Splendid Salesmanship Sets Seattle Record with Run of "My Four Years"

COLISEUM theatre, Seattle, Wash., one of the Jensen and von Herberg houses, has just put over "My Four Years in Germany" to big business for two weeks. The longest previous run of any picture at one of these houses has been eight days.

Naturally, the principal reliance was put on the newspaper advertising in which these houses excel through the splendid work of G. F. Fullerton. Page ads were used the Sunday of the opening of the picture and on the start of the second week. During the interval half-page displays, some of which are reproduced, were shown and on one of the days there was a series of single column advertisements, which are also reproduced, run in the same issue of the paper, one on each page. In addition the half page carrying the silhouette figures ran on the photoplay page. With such exploitation as this it is natural that every one in Seattle was talking about the picture.

Now here is one point to gather from the work of Fullerton. After a picture had been a big success at a theatre for

"Over the Top" to Open New Orleans Liberty

"Over the Top" is to open the new Liberty theatre, New Orleans, about June 15. This handsome house has been erected by Ernst Boehringer, who is one of the pioneer exhibitors of the South and one of the most successful. He began exhibition in Baton Rouge and then came to New Orleans where he has conducted the Triangle and the Columbia. The Liberty represents the best ideas that he has collected during his long experience.

Delay in receiving materials has been responsible for a number of postponements from the dates tentatively set. However, during the recent Red Cross drive Mr. Boehringer tendered the gross receipts on the opening day to the fund of mercy and the Red Cross officers will co-operate with him in an effort to break all photoplay records. There are twenty-four sets of box seats and these will be sold to the highest bidder. Mr. Boehringer himself bought the first box for $100.

One of the features of the new house is to be a fifteen-foot replica of the Statue of Liberty. This is of white marble and at night will be flood-lighted in a similar manner to the statue in New York harbor.

"Kaiser" Gives Broadway a Real Sensation

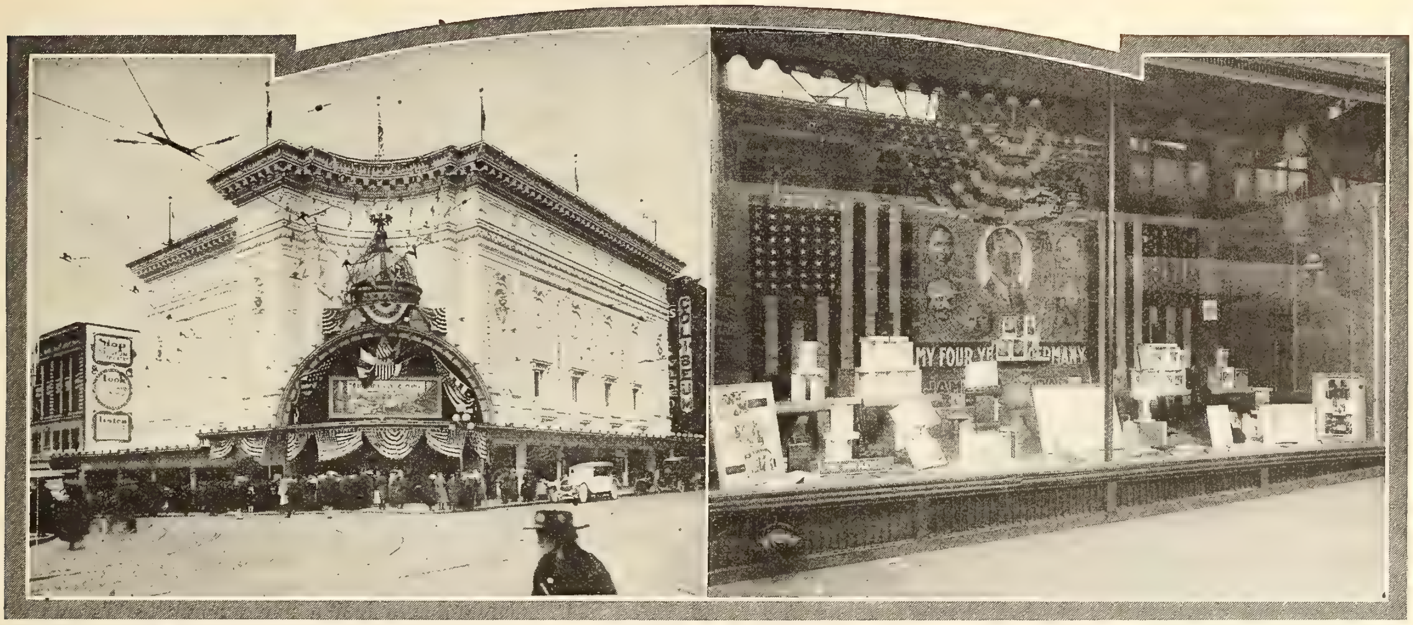
Broadway had a new sensation during the Red Cross drive when the kaiser was driven down the Great White Way in an iron cage. But it was not the real Hun Thing, but Lawrence Grant, who plays the title role in "To Hell With the Kaiser," the forthcoming Screen Classics production.

As a matter of fact this was not done for the purpose of exploitation, but to take some scenes for the production. However, the crowds gathered in such numbers around the cage that it was almost impossible to do the work. After the scenes were concluded Baby Ivy Ward was lifted inside of the cage and called out "Now I have captured the kaiser, what are you going to do for the Red Cross?" Then Grant came out of his character long enough to make a speech and the result was the collection of a large sum while Broadway was practically blocked.

12,000 Billboards to Exploit Vitagraph Serial

For the fourth serial to be issued by Vitagraph, "A Fight for Millions," starring William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson, twelve thousand billboards in cities of more than 25,000 population are to be used. This is to be the first step in the nation-wide publicity campaign for this picture, the first chapter of which will be released July 15. The entire serial will be in the hands of the various exchanges before release so that it may be seen by exhibitors and their own publicity campaigns carefully planned.

A forty-eight page campaign book, containing press matter, program material, complete novel, advertising cuts, star cuts, stunts and other exhibitor helps, will be mailed to exhibitors about June 15.



How the Coliseum theatre, Seattle, looked during the run of "My Four Years in Germany," with the line waiting to buy tickets, and window display at the Bon Marche, one of the city's largest department stores.

one week, most advertising managers would have dropped down on the second week. But you never see Fullerton doing this, for he came back with a full page when the second week opened. What does this mean to you? It means that if advertising is a good thing it is worth going to for all you are worth. The theatre that advertises like this will never be worried about the balance on the bank book.

Every one of these displays were distinctly salesmanship advertisements. The type in the reproductions are large enough to allow them to be read and one may see the intimate manner in which the contents of the story are carried home to the people of Seattle. They really invited the public to come to the theatre and actually live with Ambassador Gerard the experiences that he recounts. It differs from many other campaigns. On this picture inasmuch that the main emphasis is put on the drawings rather than on extended reading matter. And it proves again that there is more than one way to exploit the same picture. This instance differs materially from the plan followed by S. Barret McCormick at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, but it would be hard to say which is the better under the conditions peculiar to each city.

No slight part in this exploitation was played by the window display at the Bon Marche, one of the city's leading department stores. American flags were draped in the background and then there were pictures of Mr. Gerard and the principal German characters which are brought into the story. The main display was, of course, the copies of the book. Ordinarily we have no tolerance for the producer who is always recommending that you get your booksellers' co-operation. It is only in a case like this where there is a picture made from an unusual book that it can be done. The bookseller will get mighty tired if he is asked to do the same thing on each picture, that you show.

Good showmanship, Jensen and von Herberg, as the crowds in front of your theatre show, and more than that a new tribute to the power of printer's ink, which has been so ably demonstrated by Mr. Fullerton.

many copies from an automobile driven by Mrs. John P. Pitney, of the Motor Corps, and in the afternoon attending the baseball game at American League Park. The activities of the monkeys advertised the run of "Tarzan of the Apes" as well as the Red Cross Drive by reason of the fact that Charles carried a banner which read: "Charles the Great with 'Tarzan of the Apes,' at Moore's Strand, is doing his bit—NOW YOU DO YOURS."

The run of "Tarzan" was followed by an engagement of "Lest We Forget," Rita Jolivet's picturization of the events surrounding the sinking of the Lusitania, of which she is one of the comparatively few survivors, in connection with which Miss Jolivet apeared in person three days of the week, addressing audiences forcefully upon the necessity of overwhelming the Hun.

The fast pace set by Tom Moore in the matter of feature bookings shows no sign of lessening, with Sergt. Arthur Guy Empey in "Over the Top," and Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" underlined for early showing.

It pays to be out in front with ideas.

Goldwyn Plans Service for Middle West

According to announcement from Goldwyn, it is to have an exhibitor service bureau that will rank at the very top. Harold Bolster, vice-president of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has gone to the Middle West to discuss the department with the contract customers.

Goldwyn realizes that the exhibitor needs not only to be told how to merchandise his pictures, but also requires the material to work with. It is now the plan to place a service bureau man in each of the more important Middle West exchanges. These men, Goldyn says, will be salesmen trained in merchandising rather than publicity men graduated from newspaper work. Their time will be at the service of the theatre and they will, on request, design the advertising that the exhibitor wants and put into execution such special exploitation plans as each production warrants.

Ready-Made Ad Talks

Tom Mix in "Ace High"—Big Play of Canadian Northwest

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

Anything that Tom Mix does these days in pictures is bound to attract attention and that is why patrons of the ——— theatre are taking the keenest interest in the Fox production, "Ace High," in which this favorite portrayer of Western roles is starred, which comes to the ——— on ———. The "master cowboy" has a role in "Ace High" which is somewhat different than his previous portrayals, nevertheless it smacks of the great outdoors just the same for the scenes are laid in the Canadian Northwest. This wild, beautiful country, with its rugged men, both good and bad, is familiar to Mix, for he spent a long time up there in the wilderness working with the Northwest Mounted Police. In the character of one of these intrepid men who hold duty above life and honor above safety, he is only portraying the things he knows from experience. Supporting the star are Kathleen Conners, Lawrence Peyton, Colin Chase, Jay Morley and Pat Chrisman, besides a number of the famous Fox Kids, including the wonderful Virginia Lee Corbin. The story was written and staged by Lynn Reynolds, known far and wide in filmland as a master of outdoor picturecraft. The first part of the story relates the early life history of Jean Rivard, who finds Baby Annette Dupre and her mother, the latter dead, in the snow. The child is adopted by a man who later becomes owner of a notorious saloon, sending Annette East to be educated. When Jean grows up he joins the Mounted Police. He learns that the man is planning to bring Annette back to work in a dance hall. Fearful that harm is coming to the girl he rescued as a child and has loved all his life Jean decides to save her. To do this he has to have two desperate fights, one in a dark room and one in a river, but he finally gets the girl and eventually returns her to her own father, now a railroad president. Of course, he marries her.

Tom Mix in "Ace High" comes to the ——— on ———.

"Restitution," a Stupendous Allegory of the Ages

(Mena Nine-Reel Production)

Once in a while—a great while, indeed—a big play flashes across the firmament of motion pictures and lives in memory for years, establishing an epoch, as it were, in photoplay production. Such a super-feature is announced as the attraction at the ——— theatre for ———. It is "Restitution," a production so big, so different, so wonderful, in fact, that it must be seen to be properly appreciated. This stupendous photodrama is said to have cost upward of $200,000 to produce, requiring the taking of more than 100,000 feet of film. It is an allegorical and spectacular treatment of Satan's part in the World War, tracing the plotting of the present conflict back to the very days of Eden when Adam and Eve were expelled from their garden. It is a medley of myth, truth and fiction, and purposes to show that the great conflict today in Europe is but a chapter—a final and climactic chapter—in the world-old struggle between the forces of good and the forces of evil. With no particular star, there are nineteen remarkable types portrayed by the principal actors in the different historical settings. In addition there are hundreds of other actors ably supporting the leads. A vast number of scenes are shown, covering many periods of the earth's history—the Garden of Eden, Egypt, Babylon, the Holy Land, Europe and America. Finally, in fanciful aftermath, "Restitution" brings Man on the way to be restored to that happiness of which his original ancestors' sin deprived him. The historical settings and costumes are the result of years of careful research and comparison. A special musical score, the work of eminent artists, has been specially prepared and carefully synchronized with each of the separate scenes.

This epoch-making production will be seen on ——— at the ———.

"The Man Who Woke Up," Story of Prejudice Overcome

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Have you ever seen Pauline Starke in pictures? No? Then you are due for an agreeable surprise when you see "The Man Who Woke Up," at the ——— theatre on ———. Here is a girl who has only been acting before the camera a few months, yet has already "arrived" through her wonderful work as a star in three previous Triangle pictures, the first of which, "Until They Get Me," set all filmland talking about her. Miss Starke is not exactly pretty, in the commonly accepted sense of the term, but she certainly is attractive—and O boy! She can act. More than that, in "The Man Who Woke Up," William V. Mong, one of the best character actors on the screen, is co-starred with her and they have the support of a splendid cast which includes Darrell Foss, Alberta Lee, George Hernandez, George Pearce and others. Mr. Mong wrote the story himself, the scenes of which are laid in the quaint little town of Oglesburg, Va. Thomas Foster, philanthropist, is experimenting with Oglesburg in his effort to break down the last remaining prejudices against the North which is retarding industrial progress in some Southern towns. But Foster's disinterested philanthropy fails to meet the approval of Colonel Oglesby, Confederate veteran and editor of The Clarion, in which with undisguised hate he pilloried the dreams and ideals of the Northerner. But ere long his circulation dies out, his cash balance disappears and ruin overtakes him. His friends turn from him and ridicule covers his old-fashioned ideals, his antiquated clothes and his isolated prejudice. But when Love takes a hand and brings the daughter of Colonel Oglesby into the arms of Tom Foster's son, there is nothing left for the out-of-date crusader to do but surrender.

You'll sing the praises of Pauline Starke if you see her in "The Man Who Woke Up," at the ——— on ———.

"The Street of Seven Stars"—Doris Kenyon in Rinehart Story

(De Luxe Seven-Reel Production)

Doris Kenyon, charming star of serials, who made such a big success in "The Hidden Hand," makes her debut at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., in "The Street of Seven Stars." This picturization of Mary Roberts Rinehart's great novel is announced as the offering for ——— at the ——— theatre. Here is a combination of author, story and star to please the most exacting taste. There is no better story writer before the public today than Mrs. Rinehart and throughout the screening of "The Street of Seven Stars" she kept in constant touch with every detail. The result is a veritable artistic triumph, with the author and the director, John B. O'Brien, sharing the honors with the pretty and accomplished star. The story is laid in Paris where Harmony Wells, daughter of a widowed mother and in straitened circumstances, has gone to complete her musical education and lay the foundation for her "career." With two other American girls Harmony has taken lodgings in the Street of Seven Stars. Following the departure of the other two she takes up her abode in a pension where she meets Dr. Peter Byrne, who is taking a clinical course. An Apache crosses her path and Harmony is rescued from him by the young daughter, who urges her to marry him. This she persistently declines to do, arguing that she owes all to her art. Peter becomes interested in a tiny waif whose mother has deserted him for a career on the vaudeville stage. He takes the child home and Harmony becomes as a mother to him. Not until the child dies and Harmony meets his remorseful mother sobbing at his grave, does she realize the tragedy of the woman who sacrifices love and the joys of motherhood to her art. "Play for your children, as you played for my little boy in his last hours," is the admonition of the agonized mother. Whereupon Harmony hastens to the Street of Seven Stars and to Peter, who is preparing to return to America. "Ask me to marry you again, Peter," are her astonishing words.

"The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, at the ——— on ——— with Doris Kenyon in the stellar role.

"For Sale," Pathe Play, Presents Interesting Psychological Problem

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Announcement is made by the management of the ——— theatre that on ——— one of the best screen dramas of the year is coming to that home of photodrama. It is the Pathe production, "For Sale," with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in the leading roles. The story was written by Fred Jackson, who already has a score of successful plays and novels to his credit and whose short stories may be found in current popular magazines. The play is tense with gripping situations and recalls the famous play, "Bought and Paid For," in its style and vivid realism. It is a story that will grip the spectator by its sheer emotionalism, and Gladys Hulette is said to have surprised even her most enthusiastic admirers by her work in it. Miss Hulette, by the way, has been on the stage since she was three years old, starting as a cherub in DeWolf Hopper's production of "Wang." She later played child parts with Bertha Kalisch in "The Kreutzer Sonata" and Mme. Nazimova in "A Doll's House." In the New theatre production of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," she was the original Tyltyl. She has been in motion pictures for eight years, appearing in many fine productions including "Prudence the Pirate," "Miss Nobody," "The Cigarette Girl," "The Candy Girl" and "Mrs. Slacker." There is a fine little problem in theoretical psychology in "For Sale." Gladys Hulette as the heroine, Dorothy Daniels, marries her wealthy young employer (played by Creighton Hale) so that she may obtain money to send her sweetheart to the mountains where he may regain his health. Now the question is, "Was she justified?" Maybe she was and maybe she wasn't. But you will never know until you see the picture at the ——— on ———.

"The Buyer from Cactus City," Another Delightful O. Henry Story

(General Film—Two Reels)

Another of those delightful little Broadway Star Features, through which the subtle philosophy and satire of O. Henry is being offered to the American public by the medium of the screen, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ———. It is "The Buyer from Cactus City," and is one of the best of the short stories of that author of immortal memory. Dramatically and artistically this series has set a high standard for short screen subjects and the present one fully lives up to it. Under the direction of Ashley Miller, one of the best-known producers of good pictures, the little cast of principals gives the story the high character of artistic interpretation which it requires. In fact, a better cast is seldom seen in a longer feature than this one which includes Harry Eytinge, Denton Vane, William Dunn, Miriam Myles and Charles Ransom. The story of "The Buyer from Cactus City" treats of the adventures of the junior partner of the firm of Navarro & Platt in New York on his annual buying trip. Arrayed in his Texas frock coat and broad-brimmed hat he is a picturesque individual. He is treated royally by Zizzbaum, of the cloak and suit house, who encourages him to invite Miss Asher, his model, to dinner. Miss Asher accepts perfunctorily, but some real surprises are in store for her. The Texan talks fervidly of love and flashes a diamond solitaire which the girl assumes is a mere "come-on." When he attempts to kiss her at the door she strikes him full in the face and then—well, it isn't fair to tell the whole of an O. Henry story in advance.

This O. Henry gem will be flashed on the screen of the ——— on ———.

"The Red-Haired Cupid"—Western Comedy-Drama with Roy Stewart

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

It isn't often that one sees a good Western comedy, in five-part feature length, on the screen, yet that is the offering which the ——— theatre will show to ———'s picture lovers on ——— when Roy Stewart comes to the screen of that popular home of good photoplays in "The Red-Haired Cupid." Matchmaking is generally accepted to be an occupation—rather a pastime—of women. It is generally done in a very quiet and sly manner over the tea-tables or in quiet nooks at social affairs. But in "The Red-Haired Cupid" which, by the way, has its share of Western thrills and gun-fighting—Roy Stewart, as Bill Saunders, undertakes to play the matchmaker for his friend and bunkie, Kyle Lambert. The latter has fallen in love with a dainty lass from the East, Loys Andres, but is up against the strong opposition of the girl's uncle. As the match-maker, Saunders gets in some mighty efficient work, even going so far as roping a minister to make sure of the ceremony. Bill's one and only love adventure in the picture comes to a melancholy ending. He hears that Lilly is coming West and pictures a ravishing beauty on a par with Loys. Arriving at the station on schedule time he finds his anticipations sadly dashed. Lilly proves to be a mild-eyed Jersey cow. Meanwhile, Lucas, a cattle rustler, in league with Lambert's uncle, overhears the elopement plans and intercepts the pair at a ford, where he shoots Lambert. In a thrilling race, Loys, with the wounded man, beats the Mexican to the ranch, where the latter is killed by Saunders. The pair are married before the uncle returns from his search for his lost cow, Lilly, and uncle is forced to extend congratulations. Peggy Pearce plays the lead in this love affair and others in the cast are Charles Dorian, Ray Griffith, Aaron Edwards and Walter Perry. The story, by Henry Wallace Phillips, attracted considerable attention when published in a recent number of one of the popular magazines.

Mabel Normand in "The Venus Model"—It All Happened Because of a Novel Bathing Suit

(Goldwyn Production)

Mabel Normand, the fetching little beauty who captivated her audiences in the comedy field and whose late pictures for the Goldwyn Company have been pronounced the best in the art of photodramatic work, is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture "The Venus Model," written by H. R. Durant and produced under the direction of Clarence G. Badger. In the supporting cast are seen Alex B. Francis who has been seen in support of Mae Marsh, Alfred Hickman, Edward Boulden, Edward Elkas, Albert Hackett, Una Trevelyn and Nadia Gary. Mabel has the role of Kitty O'Brien, head clerk in a Braddock and Company, manufacturers of bathing suits. Kitty hits upon an idea for a novel design for bathing suits and is promoted to the position of head of the designing department. Her appearance in the new bathing suit makes such a decided hit with the buyers that her employer's business which had run down because his designs were old-fashioned, was increased a hundred per cent. Kitty is also instrumental in reforming her employer's son who has been led astray by an adventuress. He falls in love with her and they are married. But this short account of "The Venus Model" can only give you an inkling of the story. Suffice it to say that it is one of Miss Normand's best screen dramas. "The Venus Model" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Cabaret" Presents a Quartette of Stars of the First Rank—Bohemian Life

(World Five-Reel Production)

Just take a look at this cast of World stars and see if you don't agree with the management of the ——— theatre that "The Cabaret," which is to be seen on the screen of this theatre on ——— of ——— week, is bound to be a picture worth while. It is—take it from the management. Montagu Love, the star of "The Cross-bearer" and many other World features; Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, John Bowers and George MacQuarrie—all prominent stars and all seen in "The Cabaret." The four male stars impersonate four artists living in New York's Bohemian section, Greenwich Village. The happy-go-lucky, care-free life of the inhabitants of this section is shown in all its reality and woven in with dramatic subtilty is a love romance. Greenwich Village is one of the points of interest that never misses the eye of the tourist coming to New York. It is one of the first places that the average visitor seeks out. It constitutes a little city by itself—its people are different—its customs are different—in short the inhabitants of "The Villige" as it is known live their own lives and forget that there is surrounding them the mighty metropolis of New York. All this has been reproduced on the screen by World Film under the direction of Harley Knowles.

"The Cabaret" will hold your interest from the first flash. See it on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Ella Hall and Priscilla Dean in Cleverly Conceived Story, "Which Woman"

(Universal Five-Reel Production)

Two stars of the screen are seen in action in "Which Woman," a Universal production coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Ella Hall and Priscilla Dean are the two and from their past performances you have every reason to believe that there is good, sound entertainment in store for you when you see them on the screen. In support are seen Eddie Sutherland, Andrew Robson and Edward Johnson. The picture was produced under the direction of Harry Pollard. The story, written by Eveyln Campbell, ran in the All Story Magazine. You have always seen Miss Dean as the refined, loveable girl. In this late Universal you see her as the girl of the underworld, an adventuress. Ella Hall has the role of Doris Standish who is being forced into marriage with an aged millionaire she does not love. Mary Butler, the role impersonated by Priscilla Dean, plans to get possession of the valuable jewels of the intended bride, on the night of the wedding. She enlists the aid of Jimmy Nevin, who is down in his luck and driven to desperate means. Jimmy, at heart, is not a crook but the plan promises something to eat, at least, and he consents to drive the car which is to take away the jewels. But the adventuress' plans do not work out exactly as planned and Jimmy finds himself the custodian of a very charming little girl who refuses to marry an aged millionaire.

Lina Cavalieri, Most Famous Beauty in Europe, in "Love's Conquest"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Lina Cavalieri, known as the "most beautiful woman in Europe," is the star of Paramount's late offering, "Love's Conquest," a screen version of Victorian Sardou's famous stage play, "Gismonda." The story deals with the love affairs of an Athenian widowed duchess of the early sixteenth century, whose beauty attracts the attention of countless suitors. She spurns all offers of marriage until Almerio, a poor huntsman, comes into her life. A rejected suitor, Prince Zaccaria, in revenge, has Gismonda's little son, whom she adores, thrown in the den of a captive lion. Gismonda offers herself and her kingdom to the one who will save her child. Almerio jumps into the pit, stabs the lion to death and rescues the child. Gismonda, when Almerio is brought before her, refuses to live up to her promise, but events so turn, that Almerio proves himself a man, and becomes the husband of Gismonda and the ruler of Athens. "Love's Conquest" was produced under the direction of Edward Jose. It is a masterpiece. Convinced with the historical beauty of the play is the thrill experienced when Courtney Foote, who portrays the part of Almerio, enters the lion's den, saves the child. "Love's Conquest" has been given a lavish production, and presents Mme. Cavalieri in one of the most dramatic roles ever conceived or created by this great author.

Marion Davies in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," Appealing Human-Interest Story

(Marion Davies Film Corp.—Six Reels)

Marion Davies, the charming little golden-haired beauty of stage and screen, in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses." Isn't this statement sufficiently attractive to insure your attendance at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, when she pays her first visit, via screen. You're going like this picture, if you don't, then the management of the ——— theatre is no judge. When it was shown at the Rivoli theatre, New York, one of New York's finest picture houses, New Yorkers crowded the theatre at afternoon and evening performances. "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" is an adaptation from the novel of the same name by Katherine Haviland Taylor. It was produced under the direction of Julius Steger. In the supporting cast are seen, Edward O'Connor who gives one of the best characterizations of an old Irish father ever seen on the screen; Willette Kershawe, Charles Jackson, who will be remembered for his work in the Lincoln Cycle series; George Le Guere, Harry Benham, now leading man in "The Rainbow Girl," a Broadway stage success; Daniel J. Sullivan, John Charles, Eva Campbell and Joseph Burke. The story tells of a demure, humble little Irish girl, who lives with her parents outside of New York, and her patient struggle to win success for her father.

The Famous Dolly Sisters, Yancsi and Roszika in "Million Dollar Dollies"

(Screen Classics Five Reels)

The Dolly Sisters, Roszika and Yancsi, the two clever dancers and light comediennes, who have entertained New Yorkers in some of the best musical comedies, among them "Her Bridal Night," which played to crowded houses for more than three hundred consecutive nights on Broadway, will be seen on the screen for the first time ——— of ——— week, when "The Million Dollar Dollies," a special five-reels production released by Metro on Screen Classics, Inc., program, under the direction of Leonce Perret, the famous French director. In support the Dolly Sisters will have Bradley Barker, Huntley Gordon, Paul Ducet, Dolores Cassinelli, Ernest Maupin and Marshall Phillips. If you like musical comedy you will enthuse over this first appearance of the Dolly Sisters. All that is lacking are the catchy songs and the dialogue to make it a musical comedy hit. The orchestra of the——— theatre will play a special accompaniment, and the management promises an entertainment that is unsurpassed for novelty, artistic settings and originality. One scene in particular which will elicit the praise of all, is the one showing the ice-skating palace atop New York's most famous hotel, the Biltmore. Director Perret has supplied an Oriental atmosphere, which rings true of the lavishness and brilliance of the Orientals' life.

Viola Dana in Adventurous Life in Mexico—"The Only Road"

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Adventure in the land of the Mexican is always well worth a front page story in a daily or repetition in pantomime on the screen. Such narrative never fails to entertain when told on the screen. Metro, under the direction of Frank Reicher, has produced "The Only Road," starring Viola Dana, supported by Casson Ferguson, Edith Chapman, Fred Huntley, Monte Blue, Paul Weigel and Marie Van Tassel. The story tells of how a young girl who has lived for years in the belief that she is the daughter of a low-caste Mexican family, suddenly discovers that she is really the daughter of a rich ranch owner. And it all comes about after the arrival of a young fellow from the States, who has been sent to live with his father's friend, Clara Hawkins, wealthy and owner of a large ranch. Throughout the run of this picture you are made to feel that you have lived your life among the quaint surroundings of the Mexican people. Director Reicher has reproduced the Mexican atmosphere in such a realistic manner that a Mexican, himself, could not distinguish between the locations and his own native country. Viola Dana is cast as the supposedly Mexican girl, and it is safe to say that she gives one of her best characterizations before the camera.

"The Only Road" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Viola Dana featured, story of Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in Five-Reel Mystery-Comedy-Drama, "Pay Day"

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a five-reel comedy-mystery-drama — listens pretty good, doesn't it. And the five-reeler is an adaptation from a successful stage play, "Pap Day." Under this title it is shown on the screen. Can you imagine Sidney Drew, the comedian, in a mystery drama? Yes he is and he is there "with bells on." One of the supporting members of the cast is Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Picture Corporation, which produces the Drew Comedies. And you will also see Joseph Engel, treasurer of this company. Other members of the supporting cast are, Florence Short, Linda Farley, Mrs. Samuel Zucker, Emily Lorraine, Charles Riegel, and Dan Baker. It would be too long a story to go into the details of the story—suffice it to say that "Pay Day," is a mystery-comedy-drama—that's the only way the management of the ——— theatre can characterize this offering. But he can say with all the assurance of one who is selecting pictures for the entertainment of his patrons, that no one will leave ——— theatre, after seeing "Pap Day," with a disappointed look or feeling. You will enjoy every minute of the sixty-five odd minutes that Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are on the screen unravelling this mystery.

Live News from the Producers

Griffith-Artcraft Film for July

Titled "The Great Love," Subject Will Be Released About the First of the Month—Great Cast Named

THE first D. W. Griffith-Artcraft picture has been given the title of "The Great Love," and will be released in the middle of July. This is the subject on which the famous producer has been engaged since his return from Europe, where some of the scenes were taken, and it will be the first time in several years that a D. W. Griffith picture will be available to motion picture theatres immediately on release instead of being presented at two dollar prices.

In connection with the above announcement, Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, says:

"We are advised by Mr. Griffith that this picture meets with his greatest expectations, and it will undoubtedly be a revelation and a sensation to the public and the film industry. We anticipate that it will duplicate at least, if not exceed, the popularity of 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Hearts of the World,' and that exhibitors will get the cream of this success by playing it at once should prove highly interesting from a financial point of view, and give every theatre that runs it considerable distinction in its community.

"The theme of this picture, 'The Great Love,' is a story of the awakening of the social butterflies of England after the declaration of war, the loss of the young manhood in the early days of the struggle and the consequent marshalling of the nation's forces in the gigantic struggle, in which all ranks were levelled and the aroused country worked with a unity of purpose.

"In his stupendous undertaking Mr. Griffith had the support of the British Government and the personal assistance of Queen Alexandra, Sir Frederick Treeves, head of the British Red Cross, the Baroness Rothschild, Sir Henry Stanley, especially assigned by the British War Office to assist the producer. Other noted personages who appear in the film are the Princess of Monaco, Countess of Masserene, Lady John Lavery, Miss Bettina Stuart-Wortley, Miss Violet Keppel, Countess of Drogheda, Lady Diana Manners, Hon. Mrs. Montagu, Miss Elizabeth Asquith and Miss Lilly Elsie. Lady Diana Manners is the daughter of the Duke of Rutland and is the most famous beauty in English society, and Miss Asquith is the daughter of the famous ex-Prime Minister.

"In addition to these celebrities, 'The Great Love' offers the most notable cast ever assembled in one picture, including practically all of the important players who appeared in 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Hearts of the World,' prominent parts being portrayed by Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, George Fawcett, Robert Harron, George Siegmann, Mansfield Stanley, Rosemary Theby. The two previous Griffith pictures in which these actors appeared were admittedly the greatest successes ever launched in motion pictures, having played throughout the United States at $2 admission.

"The story of 'The Great Love' should prove of absorbing interest to Americans who find themselves in the same conditions and frame of mind as the characters in the great drama which Griffith has produced, and they will see how, in the great extremity of the English nation, women of the highest and proudest families, the very cream of nobility, reared in the most luxurious surroundings, cast aside their costly plumage and plunged into the hardest kind of manual labor, and levelled all caste by working shoulder to shoulder in munition plants, in Red Cross work and other pressing fields of endeavor."

Choose Cast for Anita Stewart Feature

THE following cast of principals will appear with Anita Stewart in "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," the first of Vitagraph's special series of Anita Stewart productions, according to an announcement made by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

Conway Tearle, Vernon Steele, Arthur Donaldson, Templar Saxe, Virginia Nordon, Katherine Lewis, Hattie DeLaro, George Stewart, Harold Foshay, Frank Andrews, Robert Lee Kelling, Gladys Valerie, John Hopkins, and Philip Van Loan. The production is under the direction of Wilfrid North.

The George Stewart mentioned in the cast is the fifteen-year-old brother of the star, and he plays the role of her childhood sweetheart in the early part of the picture. Conway Tearle, Vernon Steele and most of the others in the cast are all of established reputation and among the most recent popular players of the screen.

It is announced by Vitagraph that very satisfactory progress is being made on the production, which, in the estimation of President Smith, will prove one of the best reproductions of a stage play ever shown on the screen.

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn's Star, Exercising the Feminine Privilege

Goldwyn Pictures Said to Be Popular in Antipodes

Goldwyn Pictures are said to be daily growing more popular in Australia and New Zealand. Though given their premiere in the Antipodes only three months ago, Goldwyn says that four of its productions have met with tremendous success in Melbourne, Auckland, Sydney and other large cities in New South Wales and several big centres in other sections. One of the reasons for Goldwyn's popularity is the fact that its output is being exploited by the most enterprising and most widely known showmen the Antipodes can boast.

Caillaux Trial Coincident with Fox Release

It is more than likely that the release of the William Fox production, "The Caillaux Case," will be practically coincident with the placing on trial for treason of former Premier Joseph Caillaux, "the evil genius of France." The trial is expected to open in June or early July.

The picture, which was made by an all-star cast is declared to show in amazing detail the spread and aims of the "defeatist" propaganda, which resulted in the execution of Bolo Pasha, the arrest and conviction of men connected with the newspaper Bonnet Rouge, and the arrest and incarceration on a charge of treason of Caillaux, the ex-premier.

Shea's Hippodrome Gets Mutt and Jeff

Shea's Hippodrome, of Buffalo, one of the foremost motion picture theatres of the East, is announced by the William Fox offices as one of the big theatres that have recently contracted for all of Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons that Fox is releasing. The booking for Shea's was made by Manager Harold B. Franklin.

One of the novelties Bud Fisher introduced recently into his cartoons consists in a "double exposure" effect in "Occultism," a May release. Jeff has been reading a book on psychic subjects and on astral planes and Mr. Fisher shows in clever pen-and-ink sketches how Jeff causes his super-soul to project into space.

Myron Selznick Now G. M. for Norma Talmadge

Myron Selznick, son of Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, has become general manager of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation. Mr. Selznick has been acting as manager of the Norma Talmadge studio in East 48th street for the past two months, and now with the retirement of Roland West after the completion of Miss Talmadge's recent release, "De Luxe Annie," he assumes the larger berth of general manager of the producing corporation.

Jean Calhoun, Prominent in Triangle's "The Man Who Woke Up"

Gossip from the F. P.-Lasky Studios

"THE SOURCE," by Clarence Buddington Kelland, will be Wallace Reid's next starring vehicle following "Less Than Kin." George Melford will direct the picture which will be largely filmed in the mountains—a lumber camp being the locale for the most impressive scenes. Ann Little will again appear in support of Mr. Reid. Monte Katterjohn has been specially engaged to do the scenario.

Donald Crisp, who has been directing Wallace Reid in his recent productions for Paramount, will handle Fred Stone on the latter's arrival next month.

There is much activity at the Famous Players-Lasky Studio just now preparatory to the big studio benefit dance and entertainment to be held June 8 to raise funds for relief of distressed members of the families of men from the studio who have gone to camp or to the front in the service of Uncle Sam. Cecil B. De Mille has accepted the position of chairman for the fund and Mrs. H. C. De Mille is at the head of the entertainment committee for this praiseworthy object.

Vivian Martin's new Paramount picture has been named "Her Country First." Every move that the little star has recently made has been of a patriotic nature, so this title is appropriate.

Raymond Hatton, enacting the role of the Marquis of Strathdene, an English aviator, in Cecil B. De Mille's "We Can't Have Everything," had an exciting experience the other day while making scenes for the picture. He was seated in a warplane when some gasoline took fire and the flames threatened him for awhile. Hatton sat calmly in the plane until the blaze was extinguished without damage to the machine or any of the people engaged.

"You Can't Have Everything" is from Rupert Hughes' novel and will be released as an Artcraft special.

Jewel Gets Rights to "The Yellow Dog"

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC., has secured the rights to "The Yellow Dog" and will use it as a companion picture and sequel to "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

The rights to "The Yellow Dog" were purchased by President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Film Company, through the exchanges of which all Jewel Productions will be released in the future. The heads of six other production companies were outbid by Mr. Laemmle in obtaining the rights. All desired to co-operate with the United States Government in stamping out the insidious German propaganda in the United States which has been spread through the constant repetition of unconfirmed rumors.

The story first appeared in the issue of the Saturday Evening Post of May 4. It is the work of Henry Irving Dodge, the widely known author, and is to appear shortly in book form from the press of Harper & Brother.

Harnessing the boy power of the United States so that the millions of youngsters in the forty-eight states of the Union will be a compelling force in the stamping out of German propaganda is one of the chief reasons for the screening of "The Yellow Dog." It is to be done in such a manner that every boy in the country will be a semi-official member of Uncle Sam's detective force.

In accomplishing this three tremendous forces join hands—two of the leading publishing firms of the country, the Curtis Publishing Company of Philadelphia, publishers of the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal and the Country Gentleman, and Harper & Brother, leading book publishers of the country—and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company with its sixty-eight branches throughout the United States and its connections in foreign countries.

Besides these three agencies all the force of the Federal Government will be placed behind the picture to insure the accomplishment of its purpose, it is said.

Fox Stars Busy on Six Plays

Production Speeding Along at Both East and West Coast Studios—Farnum Completes "Riders of the Purple Sage"

PRODUCTION of the super-feature, "The Message of the Lilies," just started at the William Fox Hollywood studios, makes a total of six pictures now under way for release under the William Fox imprint. "The Message of the Lilies," the story for which was written by Betta Breuil and the scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon, is being directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

William Farnum, In Fox Productions

Jewel Carmen, also in the West, is working on the adaptation of Gouverneur Morris's famous story, "You Can't Get Away With It," under the direction of Robert Thornby, and Gladys Brockwell, a fellow Fox worker at Hollywood, has just completed "The Bird of Prey." Tom Mix has begun on "Fame and Fortune," a picture which is said to give plenty of opportunity for hard riding, in which the Fox star excels. The other Fox star now in the West is William Farnum, who has just completed "Riders of the Purple Sage," the film version of Zane Grey's famous novel, which will be released next month.

In the East, the Fox stars are Jane and Katherine Lee, June Caprice, Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland and George Walsh. Jane and Katherine Lee have just finished "Doing Their Bit," at the Biograph studios; June Caprice has "Miss Innocence" in work at the Victor; Virginia Pearson is finishing "Her Price" at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn, and George Walsh is busy at the Kalem studio under the direction of Burton George on a play which has for its tentative tittle, "The Sleep-Walker." Pathe Serial as Summer Tonic

"Hands Up," Western Directed by James Horne, Presents Many Novelties, 'Tis Said—Ruth Roland and George Chesebro Starred

PATHE states that "Hands Up," announced last week as the next Pathe serial to follow "The House of Hate," is specially designed for summer business. It will consist of fifteen two-reel weekly installments and is said to offer something entirely new in Western adventure and romance. With a background of cowboys, cowgirls, Inca Indians and hidden treasure of untold value, it relates the adventures of a girl journalist and a phantom rider whose identity remains a mystery until the last chapter.

Ruth Roland is the heroine and reports from the Coast say that she looks in the first episode better than ever before, mounted on a beautiful horse and wearing a [illegible] habit of doe skin trimmed with black velvet which ought to make the women folk sit up and take notice.

George Chesebro, the hero, from whose nickname, "Hands Up," the serial takes its [illegible] a high [illegible] Pathe [illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] of a phantom rider, but he is a mystery character of a new sort. His identity remains a mystery [illegible] lighting effects cleverly handled by Director James Horne and his cameraman.

As outlined in the opening episode, the heroine is a New York newspaper writer who is sent to the southwest to investigate the report that the last of the Aztec Indians, the sole survivor of the race, has been found. While entering upon this mission she is captured by the Indians. From then on the action is fast and the strong current of probability, the provision of a motive and a necessity for every piece of business, are strong recommendations for this serial.

The story is by the well-known writer, Gilson Willets, with scenarios by Jack Cunningham.

"Caillaux Case" Arouses Much Interest

Reports from the offices of William Fox indicate that "The Caillaux Case," the film expose of the alleged pro-German plot of Bolo Pasha and the notorious "Caillaux Ring" in France, has aroused the keenest interest among the exhibitors. This interest has been intensified by the recent execution of Bolo, by the impending trial in Paris of members of the staff of the notorious "Bonnet Rouge" the pacifist organ with which ex-Premier Caillaux was associated before his imprisonment.

Advance bookings are declared by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, to exceed those of any other Standard picture.

Two June Metro Plays by Katharine Kavanaugh

Katharine Kavanaugh is the author of two of Metro's four June releases, "Social Quicksands," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which makes its first appearance June 10, and "The House of Gold," with Emmy Wehlen as star, to be released June 17. The two pictures are wholly dissimilar in style, the Bushman-Bayne feature being a society comedy, and Miss Wehlen's vehicle being essentially a drama.

This writer is also the author of Emily Stevens' Metro success, "The Wheel of the Law," and "Peggy, the Will o' the Wisp," starring Mabel Taliaferro, and is co-author with June Mathis of "The Winding Trail," starring Viola Dana. In addition to writing these original stories for Metro, she has provided the scenario versions for numerous feature productions.

Morey and Joyce Rivals

Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, Vitagraph stars, are engaging in a little friendly rivalry these days in the matter of production activity. On the same day that Miss Joyce finished "Find the Woman" and started on "The Highest Bidder," from the novel by Florence Morse Kingsley, under the direction of Tom Terriss, Mr. Morey with Betty Blythe began working under Paul Scardon on "Fiddler's Green," adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story by Donn Byrne.

Meantime, the scenario department of Vitagraph is preparing new plays for the two companies. Miss Joyce probably will start next in "Brick Dust Row," another O. Henry story which has many of its scenes at Coney Island, while "The Green God," by Frederick Arnold Kummer, is waiting for Mr. Morey and Miss Blythe.

Jesse L. Lasky, Vice-President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Vice-President Says War Has Changed Public's Taste and It Must Be Catered To

IN the opinion of Jesse L. Lasky, Vice-President in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the present is no time for the morbid, tragic or depressing element in screen entertainment. The war has brought about a revulsion of public feeling in this respect and Mr. Lasky's corporation purposes to give it the fullest recognition. Nor are religious subjects, fairy tales, allegories or costume plays longer desired or accepted, according to the following statement made by Mr. Lasky to MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

The present world-conditions have, it is scarcely necessary to observe, resulted in a pronounced revulsion of feeling and a decided alteration of the public thought, which in turn have had a marked influence upon the character of amusements provided for public entertainment and edification today.

America is finally involved to virtually the fullest extent in the World War and each day brings closer to the people of this country the actual meaning of the struggle for Democracy.

At such a time it is obvious that the duty of those engaged in manufacturing motion pictures or producing stage plays is to inculcate the spirit of cheerfulness, striving invariably to lift the thought of the people above their troubles, or by the tone of the entertainment offered, to relieve their minds, if only temporarily, from the tragedy now at our very doors.

At all times the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been actuated by a desire to give the public and the exhibitors the kind of pictures they demanded and has welcomed advice, suggestions and even censure, if merited, from film showmen or the patrons of the photoplay. And in this connection I wish personally to say that such comment and suggestion that has come to me has been a source of real satisfaction and has been thoroughly appreciated.

From the exhibitors and the public, then, we have received assurance over and over again that cheerful pictures are what are needed and must be produced. The morbid, tragic or depressing element in screen entertainment must be eliminated. This is more than a mere matter of good business sense; it is a National duty. Wars are as much the concern of the people at home as of the men in the trenches and without the spirit of optimism, cheerfulness and confidence at home no battle is likely to be won. It is psychology, simply.

In addition, we have become convinced that photoplays dealing with religious subjects, fairy tales, allegories, costume plays and the like are neither desired nor accepted today by exhibitors or public. This conviction is the result of a thorough canvass of the situation, a campaign of extensive character in which showmen in all parts of the country have been interrogated as to their experience with motion pictures. The consensus of opinion has been decidedly against pictures of the character named.

Therefore, in pursuance of the foregoing, I desire to say emphatically that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will hereafter eliminate from its productions all photodramatic offerings of a morbid, depressing or tragic character, as well as those concerned with religious problems, fairy tales, costume plays, allegories, etc.

Wholesome dramas, uplifting in character, clean comedies, comedy-dramas and plays dealing with the more cheerful aspects of life will be exclusively chosen for production.

"The Triumph of Venus" in Demand

Reports received by General Film from Ohio indicate strong popularity for "The Triumph of Venus" the Edwin Bower Hesser photo-drama of life on legendary Olympus. The exhibitors in all sections of the State are said to be making spirited bids for the privilege of showing this five-reel feature. The attention gained by "The Triumph of Venus" is indicated by the fact that a prominent group of State rights buyers in Ohio offered General Film a fancy sum for the right to the film in a certain section of the State. This offer has been refused General Film says despite its attractive nature in order that it may continue its policy of placing all of its exchange resources behind this production.

Bookings in the New York and Boston territories have been usually good it is said, in anticipation of the early release of "The Triumph of Venus" in those territories. For the present this feature is available only in these centers and Detroit and Cleveland, but its artistic appeal and its unusual swimming stunts are expected to make wider distribution necessary.

Says Goldwyn Breaks Australian Records

GEORGE TALLIS, who with Hugh Ward owns J. C. Williamson, Ltd., the theatrical trust of the Antipodes, arrived recently in New York to purchase some of the current stage successes and to attend to details of the distribution of Goldwyn productions in his country. Mr. Tallis reports that bookings thus far received on Goldwyn pictures in Australia have never been equalled in the history of the industry.

In January last Williamson entered into a contract with Goldwyn for the distribution of its productions. The first of these, "Polly of the Circus," opened the last week in March at the Theatre Royal, in Sydney, with the largest symphony orchestra in Australia. A week later it was given its first showing in Melbourne at the Paramount theatre.

F. W. Thring, who manages the Williamson enterprises, has obtained record bookings for the Goldwyn productions, Mr. Tallis declares. He considers Mr. Thring the ablest motion picture man in Australia and says that the record achieved by Goldwyn pictures through his efforts is no more than he expected.

Among the Williamson theatres of Australia are Her Majesty's theatre, the Theatre Royal and the Majestic in Sydney, and Her Majesty's theatre and the Theatre Royal in Melbourne. In addition to these houses, Williamson also has beautiful theatres in Perth, Adelaide and Brisbane. In Melbourne they own the Paramount theatre, the most pretentious motion picture house in that city, and the Star and Victoria theatres.

Kansas Mothers Approve More Goldwyns

THE Kansas Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations has placed its stamp of approval on three more Goldwyn productions in its State-wide campaign for better films as a part of its child welfare movement.

The three latest Goldwyn pictures to receive approbation are "The Danger Game," starring Madge Kennedy; Mae Marsh in "The Face in the Dark" and "Joan of Plattsburg," starring Mabel Normand. These, together with seven other Goldwyn pictures previously approved, are being shown throughout the State on the designated "Family Nights"—dates set apart by the Board of Review and the child welfare workers for showing pictures that are entertaining for adults and at the same time highly moral fare for children. The cooperation of the Board of Review and the mothers' organization has made "Family Nights" in Kansas a huge success.

Mrs. Carl F. White, of Topeka, who is vice-chairman of the combined organizations, has written to Goldwyn that Kansas clergymen and school superintendents are helping the "family night" campaign in various ways. Always some mention of the better film movement is being made in the pulpits, and some of the Goldwyn productions have been shown in church auditoriums. "Family night" productions and screening dates are bulletined on the boards of many churches and schools.

Fairbanks Has Another Leading Woman

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS last week arranged with Pauline Curley to play the leading female role in his next film to follow "Say, Young Fellow."

Miss Curley comes to the Fairbanks company with eight months of film training which started at the Eastern Triangle Studio under the direction of Art Rosson, who then worked under the supervision of Allan Dwan. The latter is now identified with the Fairbanks Studio and will stage the next picture in which Douglas has a part that brims over with possibilities.

Miss Curley's last speaking stage engagement was in the all star cast of "Polygamy," and although she has recently passed her sixteenth birthday, has played sixty different parts in the "Speakies" which covers a period of fifteen years. She was a well-known child actress and six years ago made her first screen appearance in "A Straight Road," produced at the Famous Players Studio, under the direction of Allan Dwan. She was then too young for a permanent berth in the "Movies" and Dwan secured a promise from her that she would give him preference any time he would care to use her in pictures. A few weeks ago he called Fairbanks' attention to Miss Curley and a short time after satisfactory arrangements were completed for her services.

Louise Huff Starts First World Picture

World Pictures announces that on June 3, Louise Huff will start work in the World studio, in a picture bearing the title of "T'other Dear Charmer." This story was written by Charles Sarver, the scenario editor of World Pictures, and the continuity was prepared by Wallace C. Clifton, of the World scenario staff.

Miss Huff's most recent work has been with J. Stuart Blackton and Paramount. In Mr. Blackton's picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "Wild Youth," she played the leading role. She also appeared with much success with Jack Pickford in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," "Jack and Jill," "Great Expectations" and the picturization of some of Charles Dickens' stories. She also played the lead in a number of other Paramount productions.

"The Safety Curtain" for Norma Talmadge

The production upon which Norma Talmadge has been so hard at work ever since the completion of her recently released Select picture, "De Luxe Annie," is a screen version of the highly successful novel by Ethel M. Dell, entitled "The Safety Curtain."

S. A. Franklin, who is directing Miss Talmadge in the new production, prepared its scenario with the assistance of Paul West, who put on this photoplay the last work he did before he left for France.

Eugene O'Brien, who plays opposite Miss Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie," is again seen as leading man.

George D. Baker Returns to His Work

George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, is back at his work following his recent operation for appendicitis. Less than three weeks after the operation he appeared at the studio, although only out for a motor ride to assist in the recuperation process, and so eager was he to get back in the harness that he had a large cushioned chair brought in and insisted on seeing three reels of a new film run off.

All "Big V" Comedies to Be Made in West

The Big V Comedy companies, headed respectively by Lawrence Semon and Montgomery and Rock, will remain in the West permanently, according to a statement from Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

Formerly, the comedy companies alternated between the Eastern and Western studios of the company, but last Fall Mr. Smith mapped out a definite comedy policy and sent the two companies West to carry it out. He called for greater action, more pretty girls, and "atmosphere." He said at the time that he recognized the demand for slapstick comedy, but he felt that slapstick could be served in such a way as not to be offensive to any motion picture patron. The experiment has worked out to his satisfaction and the success attained by the comedians in the Western studio has led him to make the decision to keep them there indefinitely.

Airdomes Are Running to Serials This Year

The twelfth episode of "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp, is scheduled for release by Universal during the week of June 17. The episode title is "The Spy's Cave." In this episode practically every animal in the big Universal zoo is used, making it not only a tremendously melodramatic picture, but a nature study as well. Universal will not release its latest serial, "The Brass Bullet," until following the release of the final episode of "The Lion's Claws."

Universal notes that proprietors of airdomes are running largely to serials this season.

New Popularity Mark Set by O. Henry Story

"The Purple Dress," a recent O. Henry release featuring Agnes Ayres and Evart Overton, is said to have set a new popularity mark for the O. Henry stories. Several prints of this subject have been booked solidly for a period of six weeks by the New York exchange of General Film, and Manager J. A. Hammell declares there is no indication of a let-up in the demand.

Thomson Back with Vitagraph

Director Renews Old Relationship with Former Employers — Will Direct Gladys Leslie in Blue Ribbon Features

VITAGRAPH has engaged Frederic A. Thomson to direct Gladys Leslie in Blue Ribbon features and he is now busy on the preliminaries of "Wild Primrose."

Mr. Thomson's return to Vitagraph is like a homecoming, for he started there nine years ago and did some of the best work of his career in association with Albert E. Smith, now president of the organization. His most notable work, perhaps, was the memorable Vitagraph production of "The Christian," Hall Caine's most successful drama, which was adapted for the screen by Eugene Mullin, at present the manager of the Vitagraph Scenario department. Earle Williams was starred in "The Christian" and it stands today as one of the finest things he has ever done.

Mr. Thomson directed many other features for Vitagraph and about two years ago was specially chosen to direct the series of pictures featuring E. H. Sothern, in whose support Mr. Thomson had played on the legitimate stage. He produced in this series "The Chattel," "An Enemy to the King," and "The Man of Mystery."

Prior to his adoption of motion picture direction as a career, Mr. Thomson had seen long service on the dramatic stage, as actor, stage manager and director, and had supported some of the most famous American stars, among them Sothern, Mansfield, Julia Marlowe and Rose Coghlan.

"Wild Primrose" is declared by Albert E. Smith to be the strongest story in which he has presented Gladys Leslie and one which presents her in the role of a young college girl who changes the character of her rich but selfish father and takes an important part in his financial affairs. The date of release will be announced in the near future.

John Barrymore Starts His First Paramount

John Barrymore is at work at the 56th Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on his first Paramount picture, "On the Quiet," adapted by Charles E. Whittaker from the famous starring vehicle for William Collier, written by Augustus Thomas. Chester Withey, chief director of the Griffith staff and one of the most brilliant graduates of the school of the great producer, is directing, having come on from California to take charge of this production.

"Good Night Nurse" Is Arbuckle's Next

"Fatty" Arbuckle's next appearance in a Paramount-Arbuckle comedy will be in a picture entitled "Good Night Nurse," which is now being produced at Arrowhead Hot Springs, California, in which the obese comedian plays the part of a man who is still celebrating the morning after the night before, and while in this ecstatic frame of mind visits various places where his welcome is more or less warm, and brings home a strange collection of people and animals, to the indignation of his wife.

"A Square Deal" from Mutual

Margarita Fisher Starred in Terhune Story Set for June 10—Screen Telegram Shows Official French War Pictures

"A SQUARE DEAL," from a story by Albert Payson Terhune which appeared in Red Book and was scenarioized by Elizabeth Mahoney, is announced by Mutual for release June 10. The production was made by the American Film Company, Inc., and features Margarita Fisher. The director was Lloyd Ingraham, who has produced many of Miss Fisher's successes.

Miss Fisher's role in "A Square Deal" is said not only to call on her ability as an emotional actress but to utilize her talents as a comedienne as well. A girl who is the idol of her old-fashioned parents, becomes tangled up with a radical "higher-thought" clique and adopts their theory of "a square deal" when she marries a conservative young lawyer, the "square deal" meaning the absolute freedom of each party to the contract, the arrangement to be terminated when either one tires of the shackles. The theme is one that has become very much discussed recently, and the play is said to follow closely the dramatic construction which made the story so widely read.

Supporting Miss Fisher in the leading male role is Jack Mower, who plays the young husband. The cast is an excellent one, including Louis M. Wells, character actor, while the photography and settings are said to be exceptional.

The Strand Comedy, released June 11, stars Billie Rhodes in a comedy in which a young wife is suddenly called on to prove her culinary ability by roasting a turkey for her admiring husband's friends. She solves the difficulty by borrowing her neighbor's turkey, already cooked, without neighbor's consent, and a heated scene occurs when the neighbor appears and demands her bird.

Screen Telegram Nos. 30 and 31 are released June 12 and 16. The official French War Pictures shown in this news serial are said to be remarkably graphic. American troops being rushed across the plains to stem the advance of the Huns in Picardy, in the world's greatest battle, was a striking scene in the last issue of the Screen Telegram. Actual verification of recent statements referring to the great aerial activity and the supremacy of the Allies' aces of the air, featured this issue. The stupendous impetus of the great American military drive, both in this country and on the front, is emphasized in striking scenes.

"Moral Suicide" Convinced This Manager

General Manager Bartley Cushing, of the Lexington Theatre Corporation, New York City, after observing the box office power of "Moral Suicide," now running there, is convinced that motion pictures will prove profitable at the Lexington.

"The reception accorded 'Moral Suicide' convinces me," said Mr. Cushing, "that motion pictures will pay at the Lexington theatre. The size of the audiences is increasing every night. It has increased every night since the picture opened."

"Moral Suicide" is released by Pathe.

Rumors Draw Denial from Thomas H. Ince

The following statement from Thomas H. Ince, producer of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, is evoked by the continued publication in Los Angeles and other newspapers of rumors that he is to supervise productions of other organizations than Famous Players-Lasky Corporation:

"My attention has been called to a statement that I am moving my companies to the Paralta studios and that the Paralta-Brunton productions will be supervised by Ince under an arrangement similar to that between this producer and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In order to correct this impression I wish explicitly to state that any arrangement I might make for moving my companies to the Paralta studios would be solely for the purpose of acquiring additional space and facilities for my productions and would not in any manner whatsoever affect my very cordial relations with Famous Players-Lasky, through which all pictures in which Wm. S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett appear will continue to be released; and therefore, I will confine my personal supervision to the productions of the above named stars only."

Many Big Bookings on "Yellow Ticket"

Pathe's version of A. H. Woods' sensational stage success, "The Yellow Ticket," is being booked by leading first-run exhibitors in all parts of the United States. Like Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, of the New York Rialto theatre, who featured the production during the current week, they are playing up the full possibilities of this big box office attraction.

All of the exhibitors who have been heard from to date are preparing to follow up the advance advertising campaign conducted by Pathe, with concerted drives in their individual districts.

William Fox Names New Productions

William Fox brought back with him from the Middle West, decisions as to the titles he would give five pictures now in work in his Eastern and Western studios. Mr. Fox took with him on his three-week trip, most of which time was spent in Chicago, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, a list of suggested titles and the result is this announcement:

"Names have been selected for five productions on which actual photography began last week, or will, in one or two instances, start this week. The films star Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, Peggy Hyland, George Walsh and Tom Mix."

The titles for the stars, in the order named, will be "For Gold," "Miss Innocence," "Other Men's Daughters," "The Bird of Prey" and "Fame and Fortune."

Domestic Science Films by Essanay

Following a suggestion of the United States Government the Essanay Film Company has begun the production of six short films on Domestic Science as a means of teaching food conservation. The work will be under the direction of Eleanor Lee Wright, an expert in foodstuffs.

These films are being issued without expense to the government and will be attached to Essanay's regular releases. They will be 100 to 200 feet in length, issued as six lessons in Domestic Science.

Fairbanks Signs a New Scenarioist

Douglas Fairbanks has closed a contract with a new scenario writer in the person of Ted Reed, whom the actor ran across in Detroit while engaged on his recent Liberty Loan trip. Reed was at the head of an automobile machine shop in Detroit and upon his making some interesting suggestions to Fairbanks the latter took him along to the Coast. He proved he "had something" and the contract was the result.

Kaiser Play Nearly Finished

Screen Classics, "To Hell with the Kaiser," to Be Released by Metro, Intimately Glimpses the German War Lord

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER," a seven-part Screen Classics production, is announced by Metro for early release. The final scenes of the feature, which has been produced with an all-star cast and a company of twelve hundred, will be finished and assembled within the next few days.

Based largely on facts which Screen Classics, Inc., had access to during the making of the picture, the story of "To Hell With the Kaiser" is pronounced one of the most dramatic and sensational dramas ever screened. In a startling and highly original manner, it pictures the machinations of Europe's military monster before and during the war, his contempt for Americans and their ideals his elaborate plans to crush France and destroy Russia and partition the world, including the United States, among his sons and his court favorites, his indorsement of and order to Germany's chemists to employ deadly gases in the war, the true circumstances under which he ordered the sinking of the Lusitania, the raiding of hospitals, his plans for the disintegration of Russia, and other intimate glimpses into the character of Germany's ruler never accurately and fully revealed before. Through the co-operation of the Government a fleet of aeroplanes is shown to give a faithful idea of what real air fighting at the front is like. Throughout the drama runs a gripping and appealing story. The scenario is by June Mathis and the direction was under George Irving and a staff of capable assistants.

"Kildare of Storm" for Emily Stevens

A SCREEN version of "Kildare of Storm," by Eleanor Mercein Kelly, to which Metro has secured the screen rights, is now being made by Jere Looney and work on the new production will be begun by Emily Stevens as soon as she completes her present feature picture, "A Man's World," which June Mathis has adapted from the successful play by Rachel Crothers. "Kildare of Storm" is a recent novel published by the Century Company. Miss Kelly has been for several years a successful writer of short stories. This, her first book-length novel, made an instantaneous hit. It is understood that a new one will appear soon.

"Kildare of Storm" contains a fine role, that of Kate Kildare, which will call into use Miss Stevens's full histrionic powers. The scene is laid in the South, on an ancestral estate where pride of family is the strongest asset, the tendency being to let the place run to seed. Its great possibilities are undeveloped, until Kate, a young girl with a wide-awake mind, marries the "master" and comes to Storm to live. Then she sets about making it pay, using up-to-date scientific and businesslike methods. Against this background is acted a drama that for sheer gripping power is claimed to be unsurpassed in the field of modern story-writing.

World to Film Justus M. Forman Novel

WORLD PICTURES has just acquired the motion picture rights to the late Justus Miles Forman's best-known novel, "Buchanan's Wife," and under the supervision of Charles Sarver, the World scenario chief, the continuity is being prepared for filming. "Buchanan's Wife" was written in 1906 and deals with the developments arising from the peculiar disappearance of a famous figure in business leaving no trace behind and the manner in which his ambitious wife solves the way out of the predicament.

Forman was one of the victims of the Lusitania disaster in 1915, while returning from France. He started out with the intention of becoming a painter after graduating from Yale and with that in view he studied with the Julien and Bougereanu ateliers, but he finally succumbed to writing. He was a most prolific writer and contributed incessantly to McClure's, Harper's, Smart Set and Cosmopolitan magazines. Among his other famous works are "Jason," "Unknown Lady," "The Blind Spot." "Garden of Lies," one of the author's most interesting stories was dramatized by Sidney Grundy from Forman's novel and produced by George Alexander in London.

Northwest Exhibitors Bid High for This Jewel

G. A. Metzger, of Jewel Productions, Inc., in charge of the Portland, Oregon, branch, has wired H. M. Berman, general sales manager, that as a result of a trade showing of "A Soul For Sale," featuring Dorothy Phillips, exhibitors became so enthusiastic that they started bidding against each other for the privilege of being the first to show the picture to the public.

As a result of the spirited bidding the first showing in Seattle went to the Orpheum theatre, where the picture will remain for the entire week and the first run in Tacoma went to Ed James.

"I paid the same rental price for 'A Soul For Sale' as I did for 'The Kaiser,'" said Mr. James, "and I will make just as much money on it."

Cast Announced for Jewel Carmen Play

WHAT the William Fox offices term "one of the finest companies that has been seen in any special feature this organization has made" is that which will interpret for the screen the Gouverneur Morris story of the hurly-burly of metropolitan life, "You Can't Get Away With It."

Robert Thornby, the most recent addition to the staff of Fox directors in Hollywood, Cal., is filming the drama, with Jewel Carmen as the star, in the role of Jill Cummings. The other principles in the picture, it is announced, include such well-known players as Charles Clary, one of the most prominent of picturedom's leading men; L. C. Shumway, who appeared opposite Miss Carmen in "The Kingdom of Love," "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes" and "Confession," all of her starring vehicles; Herbert Heyes, who had the chief male part in a half-dozen Fox offerings, Lavina Monsch and Daisy Robinson.

Miss Robinson's work in "Peter Pan," "Ben Hur," "Sapho" and other stage successes is familiar to theatregoers. Bennett Cohen wrote the scenario for the photoplay.

Ferguson Play Completed at Fort Lee

Mystery and Romance on Triangle Card

Alma Rubens and Wallace MacDonald and Belle Bennett are the featured players in the two productions released by Triangle the week of June 9. The first two named will be seen in "Madam Sphinx," the first release of the week. This is the story of an amateur detective, played by Miss Rubens, who profits by her mistakes. After causing the arrest of an innocent suspect she falls in love with her victim and through natural intuition, intensified by her love, she finally succeeds in fastening the crime on the guilty one.

Belle Bennett is featured in "The Last Rebel," a Southern story, in which it is taught that the happiness that has been denied to the grandparents shall be enjoyed by the children of the second generation. Joe King is Miss Bennett's leading man.

"Madam Sphinx" was directed by Thomas N. Heffron and "The Last Rebel" by Gilbert P. Hamilton.

Many Successes Credited to George Irving

George Irving, director of "To Hell With the Kaiser," the Screen Classics, Inc., melodramatic spectacle released by Metro, is one of the country's foremost directors. On the stage he was associated with Charles Frohman for thirteen years, playing with William Gillette, Maude Adams, Francis Wilson and others of note, but like most successful actors he was attracted to the screen because of the opportunities it offered over the stage. He made his debut as Jimsey, in a screen version of Eugene Walters' "Paid in Full." After that he appeared as leading man in "The Education of Mr. Pipp." Giving up acting, he became general production director for the Frohman Amusement Corporation, for whom he made "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour," and others. He was also director for the Petrova Pictures and produced "Daughters of Destiny." With the Hyclass Production Company he made "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman." With Metro, where he has produced some of the best work of his career, he directed Effie Shannon in the patriotic picture, "Her Boy," and Harold Lockwood in "The Landloper."

Edna Goodrich Starts the First of Mutual Series

Work has been begun on "The Gadabout," the first of a new series of productions starring Edna Goodrich to be released through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The pictures are to be made at the studios of the Biograph Company in New York. The Goodrich pictures will be released at intervals beginning August 5, following "Impossible Susan" in the Mutual schedule.

"The Gadabout" is the work of Maibelle Heikes Justice, whose status as a writer of picture plays has been amply established by important successes released by various distributors of quality dramas. She is the author of "The End of the Trail," starring William Farnum, "Durant of the Bad Lands," in which Dustin Farnum played, "The Glory of Yolanda," an Anita Stewart vehicle, and plays in which Mary Miles Minter and Peggy Hyland have starred.

Mr. Young, with Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, has just completed "Missing," and by the time "Viviette" is completed will have finished the technical work on the former production.

Particulars of the new production will shortly be made public. Meanwhile, Miss Martin professes to be quite pleased with her prospects.

Fox Changes June Release Title

As the result of a decision reached at the William Fox offices, the next Virginia Pearson photodrama will be called "Her Price," instead of "For Gold" as was announced previously. The picture, which Edmund Lawrence has in work at a Brooklyn studio, will be a June release.

The leading man for this new special feature has not yet been decided upon, but among the important members of the company already chosen are Edward F. Rosen, Henri Leone and Charles Martin.

Universal Comedies for Army Camps

Owing to the heavy demand from the army cantonments for comedies of all kinds, President Carl Laemmle has issued instructions that every available print of L-Ko, Nestor and Star comedies be placed at the disposal of the cantonment theatres. The order will make it necessary for many exhibitors to abandon their catch-as-catch-can method of running comedies as fillers and book them in a systematic manner, as under the proposed arrangement there will be no excess of prints.

Giles Warren Now with World Pictures

Giles R. Warren has signed with World Pictures as staff writer and is now engaged in doing the continuity for a new World picture which will be published toward the end of the summer.

Mr. Warren, who has been writing continity since 1910, claims the distinction of being the first scenario editor ever to write personal letters to authors submitting manuscripts.

Chautard Finishes Pauline Frederick Feature

Pauline Frederick's next Paramount picture to follow "Resurrection," is founded on the emotional masterpiece, "Prince Zilah," writtten by Jules Claretie, director of the Comedie Francais and of the French Academy, in Paris, which has been adapted to the screen under the title, "Her Final Reckoning," by Charles E. Whittaker. Emile Chautard had charge of the staging of this picture, work on which has recently been finished at the 56th Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Faro Nell" Introduced by General

"The Coming of Faro Nell," by Alfred Henry Lewis, is the current release in the Broadway Star Fetures series of Wolfville Tales, distributed by General Film. Patricia Palmer, Robert Burns, Hattie Buskirk, George Hold and William Lester appear again in their favorite characterizations of the famous Wolfville characters. This plan of keeping the same group of players in the series insures a growing intimate interest among audiences as it goes along, and General Film Company reports great public response to these Western films already in evidence.

Thrills Promised in Ned Finley Feature

Thrills are promised by General Film in "The Man From Nowhere," the current Blue Ridge drama with Ned Finley and Marion Henry. Numerous tense dramatic situations are said to be found throughout this L. Case Russell story, the climax coming in the fight in which Ned Finley, as Jud Lindsey, narrowly escapes death in a sawmill. There are a number of other scenes in which the action of the story is said to strike a high dramatic pitch, making this, the fifth of the Blue Ridge dramas, the most interesting of the series.

Montagu Love, Recovered, Back at Work

Montagu Love, World Pictures star, has fully recovered from his recent illness and has started work at the World Studio in West Fort Lee, N. J., on a new production. This attraction is a film version of the famous best selling novel by Leroy Scott, "To Him That Hath." Oscar Apfel is directing Mr. Love in this picture. The scenario and continuity are by Wallace C. Clifton.

"Yellow Ticket" Booklets in Big Demand

THE head office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., reports that within five days after the appearance of the half-page advertisement of "The Yellow Ticket" in the Saturday Evening Post of May 25 it received more than five hundred coupons requesting the souvenir booklet of the feature in which Fannie Ward is appearing.

Indications are that the returns in actual replies will reach into the thousands, Pathe states. These names are forwarded to exchanges and sent to exhibitors who will show the attraction. In this way there is a direct tieup between the advertising and the box office.

The booklet sent to the persons signing and mailing the coupon that appeared in the advertisement is similar to the one distributed in the Rialto theatre during the entire week prior to the showing of "The Yellow Ticket" in that theatre.

So successful was this idea that Pathe made arrangements by which exhibitors can get these booklets and imprint the names of their houses on the back cover. Pathe branch managers are in possession of prices and particulars.

Reports a Clean-up on "Heart of the Sunset"

Alvah G. Talbot, manager of the America theatre, Denver, Col., reports to the Goldwyn Denver office that Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset," distributed by Goldwyn, scored a tremendous success during a four-day engagement at his theatre.

"Everyone of our patrons was thrilled by the big feature and we had 'extra big' business throughout the four-day engagement. We do not hesitate to recommend 'Heart of the Sunset' to all exhibitors."

Christie June Releases

The four pictures which the Christie Comedy Company offers for its June program are as follows: June 3, "Petticoats," featuring Bobby Vernon and Eleanor Field; June 10, "Her Slumbering Hero," featuring Smiling Billy Mason and Ethel Lynne; June 17, "Some Romeo," featuring Bobby Vernon, Eleanor Field and Dorothy Dane; June 24, "War Gardens."

Fred Stone Leaves for F. P.-Lasky Studio

Fred Stone, famous eccentric comedian and one of the best known musical comedy stars on the stage today, left Sunday afternoon for Hollywood, California, to begin his motion picture work at the Famous Players-Lasky studio, where his first Paramount pictures will be produced. Mr. Stone, Saturday night, completed a season's run in "Jack o' Lantern" at the Globe theatre—the only theatrical production in New York City that has played to absolute capacity at every performance this season since it opened at the Globe in October. Mr. Stone could well have played "Jack o' Lantern" all summer, but he is anxious for what he terms his vacation, which this summer will be found in his motion picture work.

Mr. Stone's first Paramount picture will be a circus story written by John Emerson and Anita Loos especially for him, and will be directed by Donald Crisp.

New Cavalieri Film Is Pretentious

The release on June 2 of "Love's Conquest," the Paramount picture starring Lina Cavalieri, marks the issue of one of the most pretentious efforts ever conceived in the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, special attention being given by Director Edward Jose to the cast.

The stellar role of Gismonda, Duchess of Athens, is a heroic characterization, whose mediæval splendor is said to be sustained by the intelligent conception of Mme. Cavalieri, an education gained from her portrayal of similar roles on the operatic stage.

Coming Program Offerings

Pathe Offers "Kidder & Ko."

Feature Comedy Has Bryant Washburn as Its Star—First of Post Film Company's Travel Pictures Released June 16

PATHE heads its program of releases for the week of June 16 with a Bryant Washburn comedy, "Kidder & Ko." In it Washburn is said to have the best role of his present series of comedies, that of a college lad whose father, an old-fashioned codfish packer of Kiddersport, Maine, believes that his son is just one degree less than altogether worthless. He bitterly regrets the ill-omened day he ever sent him to college and never "cal'clates" he'll ever amount to anything. Indeed, Cuthbert (that being the hero's name), does seem to set a store of pride upon the fact that he is one of the slickest pool players in the state, Then he falls in love and spurred by the desire to get a stake so that the gay wedding bells may tinkle for him, he invents Kidder's Kutless Kan and attains success.

Episode No. 15 of "The House of Hate," which Pathe claims is its greatest serial to date, is titled "The False Signal." It was staged on the Palisades of the Hudson. "The House of Hate" stars Pearl White and Antonio Moreno and will run to twenty chapters.

The Harold Lloyd comedy, "Somewhere in Turkey," is said to be well up to the standard set by the comedian in his previous releases. Bebe Daniels has the leading feminine part and there are a lot of extras, pretty girls, harem scenes, etc.

An important item in Pathe's releases for June 16 is the first of the Post Film Company's travel pictures. This series is being distributed by Pathe and presented under the auspices of forty of the largest daily newspapers in the country. The first number is "St. Thomas, Virgin Islands of the U. S. A." and is said to be different from all other scenics and travelogues seen on the screen. The customs of the people, animal life and points of interest are cleverly arranged.

Part 6 of "Britain's Bulwarks," the Official British war series, is "The Destroyer Raid on Zeebrugge" and includes the attack on the famous German naval base by English destroyers while German sea-planes try to ward off the attack.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 50 is released Wednesday, June 19, and No. 51 on Saturday, June 22.

"A Fool There Was" Has Notable Cast

A STATEMENT from the William Fox offices regarding "A Fool There Was," the Theda Bara super-production that heads the list of the new versions of Fox successes that are soon to be released, calls the attention of exhibitors not only to the work of the star but to the notable supporting cast which surrounds her.

"Miss Bara is, of course, supreme in this sensational production, but she has the aid of a wonderful cast of prominent players," says the statement.

"Edward Jose, who is seen as the fool, is a distinguished director and actor with a brilliant record on both screen and stage. Mr. Jose was for twenty years a great figure before the footlights in France, Belgium, South America and England. He was stage director for Antoine and Sarah Bernhardt, and, in fact, began his career with the 'Divine Sarah.' He appeared in practically every classical part in her repertoire.

"When he produced Cyrano de Bergerac, Rostand's splendid play, in Paris, one of his audience was Mme. Bernhardt, who warmly congratulated him upon his work.

"Clifford Bruce, leading man for Charles Frohman companies, and equally well-known on the screen; May Allison, a favorite of picturegoers everywhere; and Victor Benoit, who has achieved a reputation for his excellent characterizations in musical comedy with Lillian Russell and Eddie Foy, are others who have important roles in 'A Fool There Was.'"

Holmes Climbs to Summit of Volcano

In the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue released June 3 Mr. Holmes takes one to the summit of the volcano of Halekala in the Hawaiian Islands. The most striking phase of this "Melting Pot of the Pacific" is the human phase, for Hawaii is truly the melting pot for the races of mankind.

Mr. Holmes shows one school in Hawaii where the children are of twenty nationalities, and they are found singing "The Star Spangled Banner" so lustily as to give one a lasting impression of their sincerity.

Salisbury Next in "The Eagle"

Monroe Salisbury's next appearance will be in "The Eagle," a Bluebird release, scheduled for the week of June 17. In it Salisbury portrays a character who is a law unto himself. His mother has died in poverty after having invested her last cent in a stock-jobbing proposition which proved to be a plain swindle. The son determines not only to avenge her death but also to obtain the return of the money. In order to accomplish this he assumes the role of "The Eagle" and terrorizes the whole country.

Mabel Normand Has Completed "The Venus Model" for Goldwyn

Alice Joyce in O. Henry Feature

The Vitagraph program of releases scheduled for the week of June 10 is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, as follows:

Blue Ribbon Feature, five parts, "Find the Woman," starring Alice Joyce. Adapted from the O. Henry story, "Cherchez la Femme," by Stanley Olmsted. Directed by Tom Terriss.

Serial, two parts, "Out of the Dungeon," episode No. 10 of "The Woman in the Web," starring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big V Comedy, one part, "Skids and Scalawags," featuring Lawrence Semon. Written and directed by Lawrence Semon.

Vitagraph Drew Comedy, one part, "A Case of Eugenics," featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Fox Names Releases for July

Plays to be released by William Fox during July, according to an announcement from the Fox offices, are four in number, and are as follows:

Peggy Hyland in "Other Men's Daughters," a drama in which the Golden Rule strikes back home.

Virginia Pearson in "Her Price," the story of an opera singer's ambitions and sacrifice.

June Caprice in "Miss Innocence," in which the daughter of gay Parisians struggles against the desires that she has within her as her only inheritance.

Tom Mix in "Fame and Fortune," a swift melodrama of a man who was robbed of his birthright, but who won it back after a tremendous struggle. These productions, with which William Fox has taken unusual care in making, are expected to be among his best.

Wallace Reid, Paramount Star In "Believe Me, Xantippe"

Cohan, Artcraft Release June 16

George M. Cohan, the famous author, composer, actor and theatrical manager, will be seen in a picturization of his own Broadway success, "Hit the Trail Holliday," released as an Artcraft picture on June 16.

To all who have seen Billy Sunday, the famous evangelist, in action, it will be quite apparent, and no secret is made of the fact, that this is a "take-off" of the famous baseball revivalist, and it is an excellent re-introduction to picturedom for the energetic comedian.

As Billy Holliday Cohan plays the part of a bartender whose characteristics have won him enviable celebrity. He plays the bartending game on the square and becomes converted through his love for the daughter of the prohibition leader.

Change Release Date of "Old Wives for New"

"Old Wives for New," produced for Artcraft by Cecil B. De Mille, has been set for release on June 16, instead of in May, as originally announced. Pre-release showings were booked by the Rivoli theatre, New York, and the Kinema theatre Los Angeles, and it is reported that the picture played to record-breaking business at both houses and was acclaimed by local newspaper critics as one of the most notable productions ever made.

Toto in "Cleopatsy," Soon on Broadway

"Cleopatsy," Pathe's two-reel burlesque starring Toto and considered the best thing ever done by Rolin studios has been booked to play the entire Loew circuit of theatres as a headline attraction and in addition, it is rumored it will probably be presented at one of the "big three" theatres on Broadway. The comedy is set down for general release June 23.

Program Glances

The first of a series of practical pictures depicting methods that will make a war garden pay handsomely is part of the 122nd release, on June 3, of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "The Magazine on the Screen."

Natural situations arise for the display of the athletic prowess of Douglas Fairbanks in "Say, Young Fellow," his next Artcraft picture scheduled for release on June 16, in which he plays the part of a newspaper reporter.

"Skinner's Dress Suit," in which Bryant Washburn appeared, was a bright story of American youth, love and business. "Kidder & Ko," Pathe's feature for June 16, is also this type of picture, it is said.

"Her Slumbering Hero" is a June 10 release of the Christie Comedy Company. It shows "Smiling Billy" Mason and Ethel Lynne at their best.

Out-door scenes, filmed at Bat Cave, N. C., are a feature in the new World Picture, "A Woman of Redemption," in which June Elvidge is starred. This production will be released by World Pictures on June 24.

The principal action of "Love Loops the Loop," the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy release of June 3, takes place in a cabaret, which has been staged with considerable attention to detail. Mary Thurman appears as a cabaret performer.

Pathe's feature for June 30 will be Bessie Love's new play "A Little Sister of Everybody." Charles Sarver wrote the scenario from a story by William Addison Lathrop.

"The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," the two-reel Interstate Film feature, has been booked in the Atlanta territory solidly from June 1 to July 6, and new bookings are being received daily.

"Cherchez la Femme," O. Henry's story of an incident in the romantic old French Quarter of New Orleans, has supplied Alice Joyce with a Blue Ribbon feature for release June 10, under the translated title of "Find the Woman."

Actual scenes, photographed under fire, showing British destroyers, monitors, drifters and motor launches attacking a German U-boat base, appear in "Destroyer Raid on Zeebrugge," an official British Admiralty feature film, released by Pathe on June 16.

"Tempered Steel," written by George Middleton, author of "Polly with a Past," the latest subject in which Mme. Petrova will appear, is to be released the early part of June.

Bookings on the two-reel drama "Play Straight or Fight," released by Universal for the week of June 10, would indicate that numerous exhibitors feel that the time for a largely diversified program has arrived, according to the sales manager of the Big Laemmle Company.

The date of release by Paramount of "Viviette," with Vivian Martin, is scheduled for June 9. Walter Edwards directed the picture and it was photographed by James C. Van Trees.

Pathe announced this week the impending release of "The Woman Eternal" in which Elaine Hammerstein attains stellar honors. "The Woman Eternal" will have the advantage of Pathe publicity.

Reminiscent of her musical comedy days is the dance performed by Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House," her next Artcraft picture released June 2.

"Smashing Through," according to the producers one of the best westerns that has been offered the exhibitors of the country for some months, is the offering as a Universal Special Attraction for the week of June 17.

Jane and Katherine Lee's newest production, bearing the expressive title, "We Should Worry," is announced from the William Fox offices as the next Special Feature—a June release. The picture is of the comedy-drama type.

"Sophie Gets Stung," in the second series of Snakeville comedy reissues, is released this week by General Film Company. The laugh-making features of this story are said to be increased by the process of re-editing and re-titling the film on new positive stock.

A really notable cast supports Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, in his next Paramount picture, "The Bravest Way," which follows "The White Man's Law" in order of release.

Alma Rubens, Presented By Triangle In "Madam Sphinx"

Yacht Club Setting for Coming Triangle

In one of the Triangle features set for release the week of June 23, titled "You Can't Believe Everything," a fashionable summer colony forms the background. In this picture Gloria Swanson has the support of Edward Piel, Triangle's new leading man.

The production is a picturization of Norman Sherbrook's magazine story, "Smoke," and is being directed by Jack Conway. Gloria Swanson, who appears as Patria Reynolds, a young girl who is initiated into the ultra "smart set," will appear in attractive bathing costume, and a number of smart frocks. In fact, it is said that many of the summer costumes and evening gowns worn by the actress in this picture are a revelation of up-to-the-minute fashions.

Petrova Feature First June Week

"Tempered Steel," Madame Olga Petrova's fourth picture made by the Petrova Picture Company, will be released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit during the first week of June.

This screen drama, which is said to be an unusual example of the art of working up suspense, is the first of the Polish actress's pictures to be directed by Ralph Ince. George Middleton, well known as the author of several successful legitimate plays, wrote the original story, which has been scenarioized by Mrs. L. Case Russell.

Lyons and Moran's Best June 17, 'Tis Said

Universal pronounces "The Knockout," released June 17, to be the best one-reel comedy ever turned out by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

Other comedy releases for the week include the L-KO, "A Blind Pig," and the Nestor, "Passing the Bomb," featuring Eileen Sedgwick.

Short Subjects in Review

Education and Its Connection with Films

FOR close on five years we have been registering our protest against the term "educational film." Not against the class of pictures so designated, but against the use of a word which, when it is not actually misrepresentative of the film itself, has done a great deal of harm by prejudicing both exhibitor and theatre-goer against a type of picture that may be a source of genuine entertainment and enjoyment. After all, what has the exhibitor to do with education, except in the general sense that any entertainment which broadens the mental horizon, enlarges the sympathies, affords opportunity for wholesome and refreshing laughter, is broadly speaking, educational?

But usage has got the better of us. The word, rightly or wrongly used, seems here to stay. And meantime, producers, travelling over a hard road, have learned wisdom. Those who have given thought to the so-called educational picture, and who are putting effort and material resource into its development for theatre use, realize that a picture is suitable for that purpose just in so far as it awakens interest and response. This may be by reason of the bright and attractive manner in which information is presented, or it may be due to the novelty or beauty of the material. Intelligent editing is above everything else necessary. The man who supplies the titles must realize the point at which the knowledge of the spectator stops and at which his own must begin. A sense of humor, the ability to make the most of the words employed, add a piquant touch and character that can enliven even a dull subject. Good photography, appropriate title cards, are as important in the "educational" as in the most expensive feature.

The lesson has been learned. The despised "educational" has become a feature, attractive, interesting, entertaining. Forget your prejudice against a word.

"SWAT THE FLY" WILL HIT THE AUDIENCE

There's not much a husky young cartoon fly, well-primed for trouble, can't accomplish in that line, with Mr. La Cava, stage manager of the Katzenjammers, to inspire his movements. A few flying leaps and double-headers into the milk, with a long drink of the same liquid, and he is all ready to give "Mommer" the chase of her life. And he doesn't even have to run. He just tiptoes slightly ahead of her, lifting his feet high at each step, and the assembled audience giggles hysterically.

But any tricks not taken by the fly are scooped up by the Busy Bees, Inc., of whose establishment we have several entertaining close-ups. "Invited" into the maw of the pneumatic cleaner in the hands of "der Twins," they are let loose in the neighborhood of the "Captain," busily engaged in painting the floor with molasses emptied into his pail by "der Twins" while he slumbered.

Each number of these exceedingly clever cartoons released by the Educational Films Corporation seems an improvement on the last, in conception, in the humorous quality of the many details and in the excellence of the animation. They are farce comedies of the best.

"RULE BRITANNIA"

The toll of the U-boats is decreasing monthly. In "Britain's Bulwarks, No. 5" we have intimate glimpses of the men responsible for striking down the assassin of the seas, who man the mine sweepers that guard England's coasts.

They seem to lead a busy as well as an adventurous life. On shore there is plenty to do in preparing the steel nets that gather in straying [illegible] marauding submarines. There are also the contact mines to be made ready, a work in which the deft hands of women have a part. BEARS AND BANANAS

The current Universal Screen Magazine starts off with an amusing picture showing how life is made tolerable for the fellows in fur coats in the Zoo when the sun climbs up to the zenith and seems to hang there. For all that, they don't seem as grateful as they might, and the efforts of the young bear to escape that dread operation known as "washing behind the ears" are almost humanly pathetic.

There are plenty of good close-ups and quick action in the film showing how the revolver that fires forty-five shots a minute is made. Titling calls attention to the fact that here is one of the items made possible by the patriotism of the 17,000,000 Liberty Bond buyers.

Bananas are so common an article of food that everyone will view with interest the short length of film devoted to their cultivation in Centra' America.

UNCLE SAM'S $25,000,000 PURCHASE

The new series of travelogs announced by Pathe, which are to receive publicity through articles carried in local papers, opens with scenes in St. Thomas, one of the Virgin Islands recently purchased from Denmark by the United States.

We wish that we might praise this picture more highly. The subject, both by reason of its current interest and the excellent material it offers, is deserving of the best of treatment and this it fails to receive. The photography is not up to the standard usually demanded by Pathe, and the camera man had not the discernment needed to obtain results that are satisfying and artistic. However, the many interesting scenes in the film make up, to a certain extent for the defects in its handling. The "Street of One Hundred Steps" is a picturesque bit; "Bluebeard's Castle," the actual home of the story book legend, is cause for a reminiscent thrill; the finer residences, set in deep palm groves, and a panorama of the bay, are pleasing; there is humor in the many smiling black faces of natives, and pathos and interest in the plaintive appearance of a little colony of whites descended from French settlers who eke out a precarious existence in beachcombing.

We hope the succeeding numbers of the series will show improvement.

HOW NOT TO PLANT BEANS

If a certain row of lima beans we planted last Sunday were not about thirty miles from 729 Seventh avenue we should have dug them up, every one, on Monday, after seeing the new Pictograph, and replanted them according to the directions given by Miss Grace Tabor in her "War Garden Hints." For we are quite sure that the roots will come up and the stalks bury themselves in the earth, as per her warning and very interesting pictures. Here is a subject that will be watched by everyone with the closest attention.

Another product of American ingenuity, that will retain its usefulness long after the war is over is a new type of hospital building designed under the personal supervision of William Fairfield Osborn, director of the American Museum of Natural History. A miniature of the hospital, which consists of several separable units, is shown being set up and in its completed state.

It would take a team of "Bill Harts" and "Doug. Fairbankses" to equal the performance of Bobby Bumps and His Dog Fido when they let their imaginations carry them to the land of cactuses and cattle thieves. There were half a dozen men in the projection room when we saw this run off—novices to projection rooms, we judge, and the chorus of laughs they emitted was good to hear.

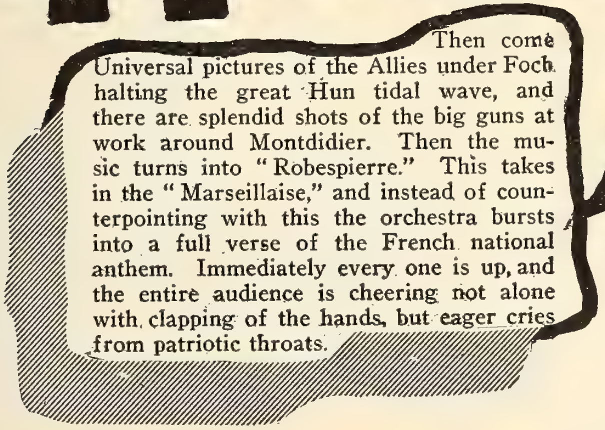
Greeted by Thunderous Applause



Then come Universal pictures of the Allies under Foch halting the great Hun tidal wave, and there are splendid shots of the big guns at work around Montdidier. Then the music turns into "Robespierre." This takes in the "Marseillaise," and instead of counterpointing with this the orchestra bursts into a full verse of the French national anthem. Immediately every one is up, and the entire audience is cheering not alone with clapping of the hands, but eager cries from patriotic throats.

Golden and Alperstein are executives of all three corporations. These men were at the head of the producing companies which filmed "The Libertine," featuring John Mason and Alma Hanlon; "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit and son Russell; "The Law of Compensation," featuring Norma Talmadge, and "Would You Forgive," featuring Holbrook Blinn.

It is announced that Mr. Golden will have personal supervision of the first picture to be produced by the new company. Mr. Alperstein in commenting upon the new organization, said:

"First, we have firm belief in the motion picture industry not only of the past, but the present and future. The only change in our producing plans as conducted in the past twelve years is that we are going to become more active than ever before—that our productions will be more lavish and that each photoplay will be turned out directly from the hand of our president, Joseph A. Golden. By that we mean, that he will personally take over the direction and every detail of actual production on all future releases. Only the best known artists of the cinema world will be featured in our productions, and they will each be surrounded by a cast capable of not only finished support, but of separate box-office attraction and worth. Leah Baird is the first star to be signed. Mr. Golden and she have been busily at work for some time in the Crystal studios on the opening episodes of a serial in which she is to be starred."

Announcement concerning the theme of the serial picture in which Miss Baird is to be featured will be made within the next week.

Leonce Perret Has Own Company

French Director Starts on First Independent Production — Dolores Cassinelli Starred—Lincoln in Support

LEONCE PERRET, who has to his credit the creation for screen presentation, more than four-hundred photodramas, announces that he has organized his own independent company, and has commenced his first production. M. Perret came to this country from France about a year ago, and since his stay in this country has produced among others, "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet, and more recently "The Million Dollar Dollies," featuring the Dolly Sisters. M. Perret has had a long successful career as an author and producer for the stage and screen. He was one of the first directors for the Gaumont Company.

The New York Pathe Studios have been taken over by M. Perret. He is now at work there on his first production, the title to which has not been announced. "America First" was suggested, but M. Perret announces that it has been rejected. The story deals with love, romance. intrigue and war.

Dolores Cassinelli, prominent on the Italian concert stage and at one time starring in Essanay productions, has the featured role in M. Perret's first picture. E. K. Lincoln will be Miss Cassinelli's leading man. Mr. Lincoln will be remembered for his work in the leading role in "The Alias Jimmie Valentine" serial and in many feature pictures. Emmet C. King and Ethel Winthrop have prominent supporting roles.

The method of release for these productions has not been determined. It is unofficially announced that negotiations are under way with one of the large releasing companies, to have this product pass through its exchanges. Adolphe Osso is business manager for M. Perret and the exploitation and publicity is in charge of the Press Bureau Service. An extensive advertising and publicity campaign is planned by the new organization.

Foursquare Launches Service Campaign

An aggressive service campaign has been started by the Foursquare Pictures exchanges in different parts of the country, which points to big things, reads a report from the New York office. The executive heads of the Standard Film Corporation, distributing the Foursquare product in Kansas City and St. Louis territories, and the Southwestern Film Corporation, operating in the Southwest, have gotten their heads together and are boosting for the exhibitors. They have agreed on one point, viz.: that the exhibitor should know in advance the sort of picture he is booking and must receive every aid in getting from the picture the greatest monetary return.

F. J. Flaherty, of Chicago, wrote the following criticism to Foursquare of the movement: "I want to congratulate the Foursquare advertising department on the advertisement on 'Men' which appears in the current issues of several of the national trade publications. It tells a story, a complete story which gives to the exhibitor the kind of facts he is looking for."

Phil Ryan, general manager of the Standard Film Corporation, backs up Mr. Flaherty's statement. "Give us that sort of copy on every ad, and we'll have the exhibitors thanking us for telling them what sort of merchandise we have. It will help to decide, quickly, whether he wants that picture or not because after reading such an ad he knows exactly what's in the picture."

Joseph Horowitz, of the Detroit Foursquare exchange, wrote in a similar vein. So did M. C. Hughes, district manager of the Buffalo and Pittsburgh territories: J. T. Ezell, of Atlanta, and S. M. Sanford, of the Southwestern Film Corporation, in Dallas, which is handling Foursquare product in the southwestern territory.

J. E. O'Toole, of Minneapolis Foursquare, says: "When we get a contract from an exhibitor our work is only started. It is after that point that our real work begins." G. W. Erdmann, of Cleveland, Harvey Gausman, of Los Angeles, and Leon Bories, of Seattle, are of the same opinion as Mr. O'Toole.

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. will add two more branch offices to its list next week, one in Cleveland and one in Indianapolis. Besides the cities mentioned, Mr. Bunn's division will subsequently have branch-offices in Cincinnati and Milwaukee. C. W. Perry, travelling representative for United and formerly with Pathe, is temporarily in charge in Cincinnati.

A far-Western division will be formed soon, with branches in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Butte. A Philadelphia branch will also be opened within a short time.

Other changes in the United sales force are: S. M. Spedon, formerly with Goldwyn, has been made manager for the Borough of Manhattan. Hoyt G. Morrow, until recently with the Dallas office of United, has been made manager of the New Orleans branch. Messrs. Mayberry and Gregg have been added to the St. Louis force.

Hadley's Cinema-Symphony Ready for Release

Hopp Hadley anncunces that his first Cinema-Symphony picture, adapted from Sir Arthur Sullivan's song, "The Lost Chord," is ready for release and will be given the exhibitors through the medium of the Foursquare exchanges.

"I am confident that Cinema-Symphony will have a definite influence upon the relations of music and pictures," said Mr. Hadley, "calling the attention of the public to the large part that music now plays in the presentation of photodramas and causing the musicians and producers to work in closer accord. As to its possibilities: after showing 'The Lost Chord' to a composer of international reputation I am satisfied that there is no limit to it either in the realm of so-called popular music or of classical music."

W. H.'s Production Editor, Elmer McGovern

The man behind the guns of W. H. Productions editing and titling department, is Elmer J. McGovern, who during the past few months has re-edited and re-titled twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystone comedy re-issues, three William Hart feature re-issues and the series of five Bessie Barriscale re-issued features—all released by the W. H. Productions on the independent market. Mr. McGovern edited also, the series of sixteen Shorty Hamilton Western comedy re-issues and the Chaplin series of twenty-six comedy re-issues.

Mr. McGovern, although a young man, is a pioneer in the business. He started on the editorial staff of the Motion Picture News and later was assistant to Adam Kessell, president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation; was general manager of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., and studio and casting director for the Vitagraph Company. Gaumont News and Graphic Gather Timely Subjects for Late Issues —War Subjects Predominate

GAUMONT NEWS and Graphic, the only two news weeklies in the hands of the independent buyers, are gaining in popularity with every new issue, according to the weekly reports received at the offices of the Gaumont Company, in Flushing. With few exceptions, the entire country has been disposed of and the product is in the hands of many of the most prominent independent distributors in the industry.

The late issue of the Graphic, No. 5, carries a full quota of war subjects, chief among which are those illustrating what General Pershing meant when he told General Foch that "everything we have is yours." The subjects show what is being accomplished by our troops on the fighting line. War pictures filmed in the United States show Prominent subjects shown in the late issue of Gaumont News are: Activities throughout the country in the interest of the second Red Cross Drive; Red Cross nurses leaving for France; a fire which destroys a number of airplanes; a wrecked train load of wheat; a Spanish steamer captured by the Germans; portable laundries, a new invention; the work the blind is doing for Uncle Sam; an old-fashioned barbecue given in honor of the soldiers who are guarding a Southern shipyard; Prince Arthur of Connaught's first visit to the White House and other timely subjects.

In furtherance of the desire of the Government to induce the people to purchase their annual supply of coal early, the Industrial Department of the Gaumont Company made, in cooperation with the National Coal Association, a two-reel picture called "A Day in the Coal Fields." This picture, which opens with picturesque scenes in the world's greatest coal fields, shows the complete operation of mining coal, the grading, loading, and shipping; and how necessary it is that there shall be a continuous supply of coal-cars to insure a reasonable production cost. The picture is completed with a realistic animated drawing which impresses upon everyone that Uncle Sam says, "Buy your coal now!"

War pictures taken in the United States show how recruits in a Northern cantonment are making their training a pleasant pastime by fighting dummy Teutons and storming trenches above which German flags have been placed. Benny Leonard, light-weight champion of the world, is shown teaching the Jackies pugilistic proficiency. Just before leaving for France, Army engineers perform a record-breaking feat before French, English and American officers in constructing a portable pontoon 330 feet long in 42 minutes.

In this issue of the Gaumont Graphic is pictured for the first time the new $5,000,000 market recently opened in Los Angeles, California.

Among other subjects in this number are pictures shown of the opening in Washington, D. C., of the campaign to save the lives of 100,000 babies this year.

"Independent Market in Top-Notch Shape"

DURING his recent trip through the country in the interest of Jester Comedies, William Steiner, head of the Jester Comedy Company, made a special effort to sound the different sections as to conditions in the independent field. In the following report submitted to the NEWS, Mr. Steiner said:

"I found conditions in top-notch shape. Yes, there are a few calamity howlers out in some of the western territories but these howlers have no one to blame but themselves. They say that the business has gone to the dogs and claim that the picture game is on the toboggan. If these gentlemen would only look over the class of goods that they offer to the exhibitors they would get their answer. I found a number of places trying to sell pictures that were made five to ten years ago and asking fancy prices for them, evidently thinking that the present day exhibitors are a lot of 'easy marks.'

"The exhibitor of today is after real pictures and is willing to pay a good price for them. The exhibitor is putting up a good program and is each day educating his patrons to look for only pictures that mean something and that are of the highest standard. If the fly by night manufacturers and exchanges think that they can get by with a lot of junk then they must want to throw their money away. It is from this class of men that are in the business that you hear the time-worn phrase, 'the business is shot to pieces.' Instead of being on the decline it is advancing and getting better by the minute. It is up to the manufacturers to keep up the good work of turning out pictures that are worth while. I have talked to many exhibitors on this trip and the stories they tell would fill many books. They all claim that they are willing to pay for the right kind of pictures. The day is here for better pictures. The man with the inferior films is doomed today in the majority of theatres. If a little more intelligent salesmanship would be introduced the problems of the manufacturer would be greatly lightened.

"War-Baby" Doll Modeled After Billy West

King-Bee Film Corporation has placed an order with a large advertising company for a quantity of "war-baby" dolls in imitation of Billy West, King-Bee comedian. The dolls will be distributed to the various exhibitors running Billy West comedies, at a nominal price. The doll is to be given to the patrons as an advertising feature.

"Re-Issues Example of Economy"

Shepard, of W. H. Productions, Likens Re-Issued Film to By-Products of Packing House —Both "Hooverizers"

H. J. SHEPARD, of the W. H. Productions, gives an interesting statement on the value of re-issues in the following interview:

"We believe that we have obtained in the film industry a certain degree of finesse similar to that in the large industries engaging in manufacturing useful commodities, such as the big packing houses of the country which today utilize a great percentage of the various parts of the 'critter' in making useful and necessary commodities from the by-products. In former years the by-products were thrown away, and things which today prove of great value, were then wasted.

"It is admitted by the most critical that re-issues, as re-issues, are good, but they fail to be consistent in their criticism. In the same breadth they say they are good and that they are bad; that they have served their full duty. It is obvious that it must be either one or the other.

"The old adage that 'action speaks louder than words,' is sufficient proof that these self-appointed critics of values and public demands are as wrong as they are inconsistent. W. H. Productions Company has been in the business for a period of less than six months, and has achieved wonderful success in the selling of its re-issues. The re-sales of each subject as it is purchased and released by W. H. Productions Company, bought by the same customers and shown to the same people, would seem to be sufficient proof that a re-issue is a product in demand.

"It is acknowledged that there has been a great overproduction of stories for the film drama. Any over-production of anything is bad economy and oftentimes waste. Dealers in proper re-issues are really the 'Hooverizers.' They are conservers. They are merely re-presenting to the public a desired story value minus a new production cost. Many of these re-issues at the time of purchase by the re-issue distributor have covered only a small percentage of showing territory throughout the country, and an even smaller percentage throughout the world. Through unintelligent distribution, the race to the original distribution seems to have been run, and the distributors are very glad to dispose of their rights.

"It may be lack of ability of some critics to understand the subject which they are commenting upon, which causes them to display their ignorance of this subject. They speak of digging up these subjects from the 'graveyard,' but it does not necessarily mean that because they have become buried, that they are dead.

"That a re-issue should be shown as a re-issue is correct; that its advertising matter, lithographs, slides, in fact all matters of publicity and exploitation should disclose the original from which the renewed story was adapted, is also correct. And this policy W. H. Productions Co. in the exploitation of all its classics has been very particular in disclosing to the exhibitor and the public."

Cromelin Closes Big Deals for Foreign Rights

PAUL CROMELIN, president of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, announces what he says to be a record sale of American film in foreign markets. Within a space of two months the Paralta Plays features have been placed in every South American territory. Louis Brock, Gus Schlesinger and Ricardo Castro, of the Inter-Ocean sales force, are credited with the speedy results attained in this campaign. Mr. Brock also sold, last week, "The Mad Lover" and "To-Day" to Brazil, and "Parentage" to Scandinavia, while Mr. Schlesinger disposed of "The Manx Man" and "The Victim" to Brazil, and Mr. Castro the latter picture to the West Indies. "The Victim" features Robert T. Haines. The latest Speer Carbon sales to be reported by Inter-Ocean are 30,000 to Spain; 17,000 to Cuba; 5,000 to Venezuela. Eugene H. Inter-Ocean reports also the conclusion of a contract for the distribution of World Film Corporation's pictures for Brazil, Argentine, Paraguay, Chile, Uraguay and the Argentine Republic has been renewed.

Wright and Newman Busy on Educationals

GEORGE D. WRIGHT, who is filming Educational Film Corporation's "Mexico Today" series, arrived in Mexico City last week to commence the production of another series of pictures founded upon the same theme. The first of the series of "Mexico Today" pictures, "The Heart of Mexico," was shown at the S. L. Rothapfel's Rivoli last week, and was received with hearty approval by the audiences at each showing.

During Mr. Wright's absence, his interests are being looked after by Wallace Thompson. The latter was formerly connected with Paramount-Pictograph and edited the titles of "Mexico Today." The series has attracted unusual attention on account of its novelty.

News has also been received of the arrival of Educational's foreign commissioner, E. M. Newman, in Great Britain. Mr. Newman cables that he is hard at work filming war conditions throughout the United Kingdom. In about six weeks he will go to France, where he will spend an equal length of time picturizing many of the characteristic American activities as well as the life of the people. His next and last visit will be to Italy, where he will tour the peninsula and bring back in pictorial form a record of how the war has affected the Italians. Releases of these new pictures are promised for next Winter. In the meantime, the E. M. Newman Travel Series will be shown at stated intervals at New York theatres, beginning with "Nature's Curios," a motion picture of the Yellowstone geysers and other wonders of the American National Parks. Broadway pre-releases the first week in June are "Nature's Curios" at one of the Rothapfel houses, and "Wild Goats and Sheep" from the Ditmars Living Book of Nature at the Strand. Madeline Traverse Film Company Formed

J. STRICKLAND announces that the Madeline Traverse Film Corporation is now in the process of organization and that the corporation's plans and the officers of same will be announced within the next week.

Madeline Traverse, the star to be featured, has been seen in "Three Weeks," "The Money Master," "Fruits of Desire," "The Shielding Shadow," "The Closing Net," "The Poor Little Rich Girl," "Sins of Ambition," and other screen successes. Her last work for the screen was the impersonation of Madame Caillaux in Fox's "The Caillaux Case."

Miss Traverse's stage career dates from the time she was twelve years of age. Her initial appearance at that time was in her father's stock company, and at fifteen years of age she was playing leads. She was afterwards sent to Europe to study dramatic expression and her first engagement on her return was in support of Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady" in New York and London. She next appeared in "Joseph and His Brethren" and afterwards in "Seven Keys to Baldpate." After this Miss Traverse took up motion picture work and her success as a screen subject has led to the formation of the corporation bearing her name. Miss Traverse has accepted one scenario for production. The first release is announced for early Fall.

Three Late West Comedies Announced

The King-Bee Comedy Company are working at top speed at the company's Hollywood studio. During the present month the company turned out three two-reel comedies, "Bright and Early," "Straight and Narrow," and "Playmates." In the last two comedies named Billy West is supported by Myrtle Lind.

Last week President Louis Bernstein, of the King-Bee Company, arrived in New York with prints of "Bright and Early" and "Straight and Narrow." He announced that the title for the Billy West comedy just completed at the Hollywood studio is "Playmates," and scheduled for release July 1st. Billy is supported in this comedy by Leo White, Babe Hardy, Budd Rose and Ethel Gibson. Director Charles Parrott makes his debut as an actor in this comedy. He has the role of the dope fiend.

Gaumont Decides Upon Name for Serial

After carefully considering all names submitted for its new serial, the Gaumont Company has decided to call it by the aptly descriptive title of "The Hand of Vengeance."

In many ways this serial differs from all others. The principal character is wounded and deserted on the desert by a trusted friend who appropriates his wealth. Returning from the dead, the hero becomes "The Hand of Vengeance," and, impatient of the slowness of the law, begins, bit by bit, to take back the property of which he has been defrauded. So far the story is not unusual.

But then comes the many contests of wit between the hero and the officers of the law.

"The Hand of Vengeance" has been constructed with the idea of carrying the suspense from one episode to another. So successfully has this been done that no one who sees one episode will want to miss the others. And the episodes get better and better as the story progresses. Each time the hero makes a startling escape, the surprised theatre-goers will wonder if it is possible for him to surpass his feat in the next episode.

Stevens Optimistic About Canadian Market

Charles L. Stevens, general manager of Superfeatures, Ltd., and one of the most prominent exchange men and independent buyers in Canada, came to New York last week to confer with Pierre V. R. Key of Foursquare Pictures on conditions in general in the Canadian territory. Mr. Stevens dropped into the NEWS office and during his stay gave the following digest of picture conditions in the Dominion:

"Canada is carrying its load so far as film is concerned," said Mr. Stevens, "but everyone is making the best of a trying situation. We've got over complaining. We have seen our young men go to the front; we have read of their sacrifices and have come to the realization that the least we can do is to be cheerful.

"The war tax on film is a heavy load for us to bear. It curtails our profits. But we are progressing. Competition is rather stiff, but those of us who are fortunate in having good pictures are managing to get along. We've just got to.

Bailay Career Notable

William Bailay, the well known "heavy," was born in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1884, and has been in motion pictures for eight years. Prior to that he was connected with the stage for eight years.

Mr. Bailay was the German "heavy" in "The Eagle's Eye" for the Whartons, and was cast in a role in "The Pride of New York," a William Fox production. He was also with Mrs. Vernon Castle in Pathe plays, and with Nazimova in "War Brides." In addition Mr. Bailay's screen experience includes two years with Essanay in Chicago.

Alice Brady, Posing for the Camera While Resting During the Filming of "The Ordeal of Rosetta," Select Picture

One day last week Hugo Ballin, art director of Goldwyn, pointed with pride to seventeen separate and complete sets all ready for use at the same time in the big studio at Fort Lee. The players, however, pointed with greater pride to the air cooling device which Mr. Ballin originated and which is already beginning to save them from the heat.

Johnny Hines pulled some of the best of the Red Cross stunts last week. In one picture house, after a short speech, he shouted out, "Anyone who will give me a quarter, stand up." As one man started to get up Johnny whispered to the leader of the orchestra and "The Star Spangled Banner" burst forth. At once everyone arose, and the Red Cross nurses were busy collecting the quarters.

Anthony Merlo has been voted by the whole World studio to have the best grease paint make-up of anyone in the place. He makes no secret of how he does it and tells anyone who wants to know. The chief requirement seems to be time and care.

Evelyn Greeley and her company were such a counter attraction at Coney Island, where they shot scenes for "Hitting the Trail," that most of the side shows lost all their patrons for the time being.

Alec Budd Francis is running the gamut of character portrayals with Goldwyn, and into each one he puts the twist of his own delightful personality. His next appearance will be as a member of the clergy in an as yet unnamed Mae Marsh picture. His studio work has been so exacting of late that he has only found time to run up to Canada over one week-end to see his son who is training there for the Royal Flying Corps.

Mae Marsh paid the price for an excess of enthusiasm in the culinary department of her home. She cut her hand so severely that several stitches had to be taken and her hand worn in a sling for days. At first Director Henly decided to incorporate the bandaged hand in their new picture, but Miss Marsh pointed out that it could not be done with realism. It seems that in the story she lives alone with no servants and so could not dress herself or take care of herself with a broken or cut hand. As a result production was delayed for about a week.

Mabel Normand's new role is that of a country school teacher and as such she is quite the adorablest ever. One scene shows her at her desk on a high platform, a black board in back of her and rows of little desks in front of her at which are youngsters who seem to thoroughly enjoy this kind of school but who nevertheless are quite as hard to keep in order as real pupils.

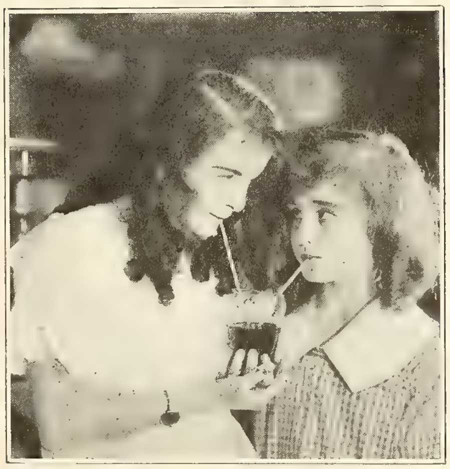
Louise Huff has arrived in the city and has been escorted on her first official tour of the World studio by Studio Manager McIntyre. She is about to begin work on her first picture under Director W. P. S. Earle. From her smiling enthusiasm it would seem that she were glad to be back in New York.

The Solax studio, where Maurice Tourneur is filming "Sporting Life," has quite the appearance of a big riding school as there are always a dozen or so horses lined up around it, saddled and ready for scenes in this Drury Lane picture.

Barbara Castleton is another star who reads "regular stuff" during the many studio waits. George Meredith's "The Ordeal of Richard Feverell" is the most recent little leather-bound book tucked under her arm.

The Palisades do not mean the "picnics" to Pearl White which they mean to so many people. For the sixteenth episode of the "House of Hate" she lowered herself hand over hand on a rope from the top of a 110-foot cliff. The rope was cut when she was about twenty feet from the ground as she is quite used to hurtling through that small amount of space, but an unexpected rock jutted out and made the fall more realistic but more painful.

Belle Seacomb's Latin beauty makes her a splendid type for the mother of Moses in "The Birth of a Race," a Frohman Amusement Corporation picture soon to be released. In "Hitting the Trail," a new World picture, she fits perfectly into a quite different character, a forewoman of a flower factory.



Little Madge Evans and Maxine Elliott Hicks in "Neighbors," World Picture

The co-starring of two former film favorites, Blanche Sweet and House Peters, in "Told in the Hills," is announced by H. I. Garson. This will appease their admirers who have been bombarding the question and answer columns with frenzied inquiries concerning their whereabouts.

Overheard at the Rivoli when "More Trouble" was being shown: "They don't need sub-titles with Frank Keenan's face—on the screen."

Irving Cummings has been having the time of his life this last week, going to a baseball game every day, as he has finished with Kitty Gordon in "The Mandarin's Gold" and has not started on a new picture yet. His enthusiasm about baseball almost rivals William Farnum's.

Anna Q. Nillson, with a new bungalow and a new machine, is perfectly willing to settle down in California until her new Metro picture, "No Man's Land," is finished.

Ben Alexander, the adorable youngster whose work in "Heart's of the World" stands out so well, has just finished quite an important part in Thomas Dixon's "The One Woman" which is being produced by Reginald Barker.

Alma Martin, the blonde little Southerner who played opposite Lionel Barrymore, Holbrooke Blinn and House Peters, some years ago, has returned from a prolonged stay at her home in Knoxville, Tenn., and expects to start work in pictures again.

It seems to be quite fashionable for directors to direct their own wives nowadays. Among the most successful of such combinations are Viola Dana and John Collins, Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips, George Loane Tucker and Elizabeth Risdon.

Emil Stevens has a chance in the first few scenes of "A Man's World," her new Metro picture, to trail around in fascinating tea-gowns as only Miss Stevens, the recent "Madonna of the Future," knows how to trail.

Lawrence Grant, possessor of the title role in "To Hell with the Kaiser" gave an extemporaneous speech the other day in the studio on the stupidity of the working classes. Mr. Grant had experienced this particular trait when the top of a taxi fell in on his head, due to the carelessness of the driver in not tightening the bolts. Wherefore he could be excused for expressing himself rather forcibly.

Nancy Currier, tall, slender, dark-haired, who plays the part of a Belgian convent girl in "To Hell With the Kaiser," has spent eight years of her own life in a convent. As a niece of Frank Currier, the well-known Metro player, a future in picture is expected of her.

In Albert Capellani's capable hands is the direction of Mme. Nazimova's newest picture, "L'Occident." That he will make the most of both star and picture there is no doubt. His French quickness of perception and sense of values will be of the greatest importance in producing this masterpiece.

For his Art Director he has chosen Henri Menessier, which is an assurance of splendid and correct settings.

Leander de Cordova, well known for his achievements on the legitimate stage, is trying his hand as associate director of a new Metro picture, "A Man's World." In Ben Hur, Mr. Cordova won a real triumph in his portrayal of an old, old man.

Alice Brady can always be relied upon to go in for things with all her heart. In her latest picture, tentatively called "The Dance of Death," it is necessary for her to perform a cross between an Apache and a Spanish dance. Instead of calling in a professional to double for her she is taking lessons after studio hours, and will do it herself.

Florence Vidor, attractive young business woman, has eyes extravagantly but fittingly described by one enthusiastic Rivoli patron as "luminously liquid." Her acting was universally commended.

Norma Talmadge is a living example of what fashion journals go to such lengths to describe, a woman who knows how to wear her clothes. Each costume in "De Luxe Annie" is a masterpiece in itself, and sure to please the discriminating movie fan.

The list includes Charles Gunn, Jack Gilbert, Hershall Mayall, George Fisher and others.

Work on the new Bessie Barriscale Paralta play has been held up for a few days owing to the fact that an important setting for the picture has not been completed. This new Barriscale picture is titled "The Rainbow," and is under the direction of Howard Hickman.

Reginald Barker is progressing very satisfactorily with the filming of the Thomas Dixon story for Mastercraft, "One Woman." Prominent members of the cast are Clara Williams, Adda Gleason, Hershall Mayall, Thurston Hall, Joseph J. Dowling and Mary Jane Irving and Ben Alexander, child players.

The Lasky studios has eighty-two men in the service and the funds derived from the dance and bazaar will provide money for the families of the men who go into the service from the studio. Universal Newsettes

Director Joseph de Grasse this week finished the filming of "The Spawn," a Universal photoplay dealing with present war conditions and what will take place after the war is over. Grace Cunard plays the leading role, and the supporting cast contains such well known players as Edward Cecil, Dora Rogers and Herbert Prior.

Harry Carey and his company under the direction of Jack Ford have returned from a few weeks spent at Bear Lake Valley getting snow scenes for "Hell's Neck." The final scenes for this subject are now being made at the studio. The story has to do with the Canadian mounted police, cattle rustlers and whiskey peddlers of the snow country. Director Ford is very enthusiastic over the snow scenes secured while in Bear Valley. Neva Gerber is playing the lead opposite Carey in this Universal picture.

Elsie Jane Wilson is directing Carmel Myers and her company of Bluebird players in a picture adapted from Margaret Widdemer's well known novel, "Why Not?" The company is now at Seven Oaks making the mountain scenes. Thomas Holding, Kathleen Emerson, Harry V. Meter, Philo McCullough and Elizabeth Janes are important members of the supporting cast. The working script was prepared by Fred Myton.

Priscilla Dean is to be starred in another big production for the Universal which will deal with the psychology of life and which will be titled "Should A Woman Tell?" Miss Dean's last big picture was "The Two-Soul Woman." Douglas Gerrard will be in charge of the direction.

Fox Studio Doings

At the Triangle studios at Culver City, four subjects have been put in production this week and as many productions have been completed. Those now in the cutting room are "Flapjacks," a western comedy written by Frank Condon, and directed by William Beaudine with Josie Sedgwick and Frank McQuarrie in the leading comedy roles; "The Heart of Glenister," featuring William Desmond and directed by J. W. McLaughlin; "The Fly God," a Roy Stewart western subject directed by Cliff Smith, and the H. O. Davis Production starring Olive Thomas and directed by Frank Borzage, titled "Prudence Pays the Piper."

The new subjects put in production, several of which are society drama, call for a quantity of beautiful furniture, antiques and rare works of art, and require the entire space of the five large glass-enclosed stages. "Marked Cards" is the working title of a society drama which will have Margery Wilson, Wallace MacDonald and Jack Curtis in the principal roles. Count H. D'Elba is in charge of the direction, and the story is an adaptation from the original one by Adela Rogers St. Johns, well known magazine writer. The photoplay will depict the sacrifice of a young girl who risks honor and reputation to save the man she loves from the gallows. The supporting cast will have Lillian Langdon, Rae Godfrey, Harvey Clark and Joseph Bennett.

Olive Thomas will be starred in the next H. O. Davis Production, which will be directed by Frank Borzage, the temporary title being "Toton." It is a story of life in the famous Latin quarter of Paris with the Apaches playing an important part. Miss Thomas will, in the early part of the story, be seen in a dual role of mother and daughter, and later in the attire of a boy playing the part of a clever pickpocket trained by a master thief. Jack Perrin, who has been specially engaged by the Triangle for this picture, will be the leading man, and Francis McDonald and Charles Dorian have the other important parts.

Live Triangle Items

After a ten days' rest work has been started on another Standard Theda Bara Super-Production at the William Fox Hollywood studios, in which the famous Fox star will be seen in the role of a nurse and later as a woman of the world. Her rise from the underworld follows after she has proven to the man she loves that he was responsible for her downfall. Director-General J. Gordon Edwards is directing Miss Bara, and she will be supported by a cast of well known players. The working title for this production has not as yet been decided upon. Miss Bara has just completed work on "Under the Yoke," which is of a patriotic nature.

Jewel Carmen has started work at the William Fox studios under the direction of Robert Thornby, on a new photoplay adapted from the novel by Gouveneur Morris titled "You Can't Get Away With It." It is the story of an American girl who has been brought up in luxury suddenly being forced to earn her own living, and depicts the temptations which confront her, her downfall and the payment she makes. Miss Carmen will be seen in the role of Jill Cummings, which will afford her many opportunities to display her talents.

"Fame and Fortune" is the title of the new western subject Lynn Reynolds is producing for William Fox with Tom Mix as the star. In the making of a courtroom scene in which Mix and the sheriff were engaged in a fight, Mix received a bad cut when the sheriff, after being hit by Mix, turned a complete somersault and the spur on his boot dug into Mix's face before the star could get out of the way. In the next scene taken Mix was called upon to crash through a plate-glass window, and on getting up it was found his nose had been cut by a jagged piece of glass. The injuries received by Mix during the making of these two scenes required that six stitches be taken. It is promised this western subject will be one of the greatest thrillers Mix has been seen in to date.

Vitagraph News Bits

William Duncan is nursing a regret these days. It dates back to the exhibitors' luncheon of last Tuesday, on which occasion Mr. Duncan was one of the first of several guests to address the exhibitors. He spoke on the making of western serials, since that is his activity with the Vitagraph Company. Later, a visiting film magnate ruthlessly derided the art of serial making and extolling what he called "the real art of the screen," that of the dramatic feature. His particular company specializes in what he calls a "dramatic feature." Mr. Duncan is looking forward to the time when he and the film producer in question will again be on the same speech-making program. But on this occasion Mr. Duncan will speak after and not before, this producer.

Director Paul Hurst tells about a dance which his serial company attended while on location recently in Antelope Valley on the Mojave Desert. They came into the little town of Lancaster on Saturday night to attend the regular Saturday night dance held there. When it was learned that the pretty dark girl in the Hurst party was Hedda Nova the Russian actress, requests for a dance with her were many. Mr. Hurst announced that Miss Nova would raffle off one of her dances and give the proceeds to the Red Cross fund and immediately the bidding started. The dance finally went to a young man whose bid was $50. It later developed that this young man was a drug-store clerk earning $12 a week and that he went around the hall and borrowed money enough from his friends to pay for his honor of a dance with Miss Nova.

Director David Smith has taken his feature company to San Francisco for the making of scenes in the Wallace Irwin story, "A Gentleman's Agreement." Nell Shipman is being featured in this with Al. Whitman opposite.

Here and There

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are now producing a star comedy titled "Give Her Some Gas" for the Universal. The comedy pertains to the troubles of a flivver owner, and is heralded as a sure fire grouch eradicator.

Edward Sloman is busily engaged directing the next Maragrita Fisher production for Mutual at the American studios in Santa Barbara. The story, which is titled "Beauty to Let," was written by Fred Jackson and prepared for the screen by William Parker. A young girl seeks the advice of a prominent lawyer, paying him her last money for his services. The lawyer is attracted by the girl's unusual beauty, and determines upon a scheme of renting the girl out at $100 per hour with the provision that she shall not speak to anyone but himself. The girl becomes very popular, and when the girl proves to the lawyer she has brain as well as beauty by saving him from being swindled of his money, he awakens to his love for the girl, and all ends happily. Director Sloman is accredited with designing some unusually beautiful sets for this production.

"Milady o' the Beanstalk" is being completed at the Diando studios in Glendale, and will be ready for shipment about June 1. This has Baby Marie Osborne in the featured role. Preparations are now being made for the next Baby Marie production which will have a working title of "Dolly's Vacation," which will contain many comedy situations.

Douglas Fairbanks has just finished "Say Young Fellow" for Artcraft under the direction of Joseph Henaberry, and will next work under the direction of Alan Dwan in a picture, scenes of which will be laid in Africa, and in which many players in the make-up of Arabs will take part. The Fairbanks Company has gone to the desert near Oxnard, California, for their exterior scenes for this new play, title of which has not as yet been selected.

Manager of Production George D. Baker, who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, has now sufficiently recovered so that he has resumed his full duties at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

" The Fair Pretender "

(Goldwyn—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

MADGE KENNEDY'S latest picture, " The Fair Pretender," is a melodramatic farce written for her by Florence Bolles and directed by Charles Miller. Those who witnessed it at an afternoon performance at the Strand last week were thoroughly amused at the complications attending the heroine, Sylvia, posing as a widow and falling in love with Don, who poses as a successful author. The laughs were loud and long when Sylvia's supposed dead and supposed husband entered upon the scene. Here Miss Kennedy's expression of bewildered surprise played in a situation just suited for it. The melodramatic line of action is supplied by a rather blundering German spy bent on securing the " papers." No one seemed to mind whether he blundered or not, however. Sylvia's trials and tribulations interested the audience to the exclusion of any thought of the menace.

The final reels of " The Fair Pretender " are so pleasing that the lengthy planting of the plot is only a faint memory. But recalling the first two reels in detail it seems permissible to suggest that either Miss Bolles or Mr. Miller might have developed the plot with further regard for its farcical possibilities. It is true that there are times when one catches flashes of bright comedy in the early scenes, but on the whole they lack the excellent note sounded when the complications begin to pile up. And while of course the comedy of a farce should grow in proportion to its increasing length, it should at least start at par.

Miss Kennedy has a personality that wins and an ability to get the most from any situation that calls for admiration. Tom Moore again plays the opposite lead and gives of his best, which is something truly superlative. Paul Doucet is the spy, while others are Robert Walker, Wilmer Walter, Emmett King, John Terry, Charles Slattery, Florence Billings and Grace Stevens.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sylvia Maynard (Madge Kennedy), ex-stenographer in a theatrical producer's office and ex-lodger in a certain lady's house, who objected to cooking in her rooms, finds other quarters just deserted by Don Meredith (Tom Moore). an unsuccessful playright. Don is in the midst of proving to his friend, Harcourt (Robert Walker), that the idea set forth in his play—viz., that any person can pose as other than what he is and get away with it, is O. K. He is guest at a house party given by Townsend (Emmett King), and is introduced as " the famous author." Sylvia discovers Don's play in a jar, and seeking her one-time employer insists that she can act. He tells her to prove it by posing as a grand lady in society. So Sylvia takes the name of Mrs. Captain Brown, and adds " widow of the late Captain Brown " to explain. She lands at a hotel near the Townsends, and is soon invited to the house party. Sylvia and Don meet, and in short time are desperately in love. Ramon (Paul Doucet), a German spy, also a guest, is after the plans of a new motor engine invented by Townsend. He secures the papers and makes off with them on the evening that Captain Brown (Wilmer Walter) shows up and proves that his death was only a report. Sylvia is in consternation when she meets him, and Don is very sad. However, the captain takes her aside and learns her story and advises her to leave. Don leaves also. Believing himself pursued Ramon drops the papers in the train and Sylvia retrieves them. She returns to her room, and that night Ramon makes another effort to get the plans. This time Don comes to the rescue. The Secret Service agents eventually get Ramon while the picture closes with Sylvia bowing acknowledgment of applause greeting her success in her husband's finally produced play.

" High Stakes "

Reviewed by Clara de Lissa Berg

THOUGH "High Stakes," Triangle's story of Scotland Yard, features that capable actor, J. Barney Sherry, in a role of the accepted Raffles type, the interest centers on the development of the plot, a drama of incidents arising out of the battle of wits between Stanning, gentleman cracksman, and the Inspector of Scotland Yard. The traps set by the Inspector and skilfully avoided by Stanning furnish episodes in which suspense is well sustained and the outcome logical, yet unsuspected. The change of heart and life wrought in Stanning through love for his wife and child win sympathy for him before the picture is far advanced, and renders convincing and acceptable the sacrifice he is prepared to make in the final encounter with his enemy.

Greater care should have been exercised in the "planting" of the story and definition of the characters in the opening reel, and so absurd an episode as a private citizen brushing aside the officer set to guard the door of the Museum in which a robbery has just occurred should not have been possible in this day of intelligent direction.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ralph Stanning, gentleman cracksman (J. Barney Sherry), with a reputation for being able to discover the combination of a safe through his sensitive finger ends, has successfully robbed a London museum of one of its priceless gems, a feat which he tauntingly proclaims to Scotland Yard in an anonymous letter to the Inspector (Harvey Clark). A battle of wits is at once on foot between the representative of the law, and the suave and keen-minded gentleman.

Culvert, the Inspector, who suspects Stanning, contrives to get him to come to headquarters and there arranges a neat little drama in which a young boy, who had previously aroused Stanning's interest, is reported to have been locked in the safe. No one seems able to work the combination, and Stanning is asked if he cannot effect something. His first impulse is, of course, to save the boy, but to do so would reveal his peculiar and suspicious ability, and scenting a plot he refrains. Baffled in this attempt, Culvert is all the more determined to " get " Stanning. But at this point a woman whom he rescues (Jane Miller) comes into Stanning's life, and the love that grows out of his marriage with her leads him to abandon his nefarious practices. As the years pass, his pride and affection are centered in his little son, for whom he jealously guards his good name. But Culvert is still awaiting his opportunity, and when a valuable necklace disappears at a gathering attended by Stanning, he by a contemptible subterfuge gets Stanning into his power. But the necklace had only been lost, and the delighted owner enters to announce its recovery just as Culvert snaps the handcuff on Stanning's wrist. The story hints of retribution awaiting Culvert at the hands of Stanning's faithful body servant.

The running time is fifty minutes.

" When Men Betray "

(Graphic—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AGAIN has Ivan Abramson produced a picture dealing with matters of sex. His seven principal characters get entangled in a veritable whirlpool of sex. The other three in the cast manage to keep fairly straight. One is a child, another a mother with grown sons and the other a respectable young gentleman. But these three suffer too. Every one in the picture suffers. And the picture being at least capable of getting the spectator into its atmosphere, he too is very apt to do a little suffering. The chief trouble with Mr. Abramson's production is its constancy with respect to this note. It has no variety and so many people are sucked into the whirlpool that they fail to maintain a stamp of individuality.

Mr. Abramson, in our opinion, is a much better producer than continuity writer. Several times in the past has it befallen us to call attention to the fact that the spectator gets muddled in watching an Ivan introduction. Too many characters not only spoil the simplicity but create confusion. Here in "When Men Betray" we get all ten characters thrust upon us in quite rapid succession. It creates the identical impression a man gets when he meets a lot of people through the medium of a hasty host. He may remember a name or two and notice pronounced characteristics in each one, but it takes him quite a while to get husbands and wives, fiancees and brothers and sisters straightened out. He will be drawing his host aside and asking him these important things after a while which is the way we felt toward Mr. Abramson.

The picture includes a number of capable performances. Gail Kane, starred, gives a deeply appealing characterization of Marion, the wife. There are times, however, when the edge of her work is dulled by the other suffering characters. Tallulah Bankhead as the foolish girl rudely awakened, plays with sincerity and feeling. Robert Elliott as the husband who fancies himself in love with Lucille is sufficiently weak and Sally Crute is a very good Lucille. There is Stuart Holmes, bedecked in weird garments playing the viper as of yore, and there is Jack McLean doing nicely as the young waster. Inasmuch as Reed Hamilton, as his brother, is the only decent man in the cast he is important, even though it may only be said he looks the part. He doesn't get the opportunity to act. Gertrude Braun was cast as the fiancee of the young waster, which was a mistake as McLean's youthful appearance is not to her advantage. Juliet Moore furnishes the child interest and Dora Mills Adams is effective as the older mother.

Mr. Abramson has included a number of pretty exteriors in the production and the many emotional scenes are well staged. With the less hectic passages he has grouped his players artificially at times. The photography is by Marcel LePicard.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Raymond Edwardes (Robert Elliott) neglects his wife, Marion (Gail Kane) for Lucille Stanton (Sally Crute), a woman well aware of his wealth. Marion's plea that he give Lucille up and stop shaming her is futile. Raymond's business adviser, Barton (Stuart Holmes), is also chummy with Lucille, unbeknownst to the other man and he has his eye on Marion. One night when Raymond is with Lucille, Barton, seeing that Marion is at the breaking point urges her to elope with him. She is on the point of consenting when Raymond's sister, Florence (Gertrude Braun), calls and prevents it. Florence is engaged to Bob Gardner (Jack McLean) who while she is at Marion's home calls to see her. He is received by Florence's younger sister, Alice (Tallulah Bankhead). Bob seeing in Alice only a pretty plaything takes advantage of Florence's absence. Bob asks Barton's advice as to what to do. It is through Barton that Raymond discovers that his sister has been betrayed. He threatens to kill Bob. Bob, however, takes matters into his own hands by threatening Barton with a revolver for telling. A fight ensues and Bob is killed. Raymond has discovered that Lucille has never been faithful to him and is in abject despair until Florence, herself broken hearted, effects a reunion between him and Marion. Dick (Reed Hamilton), Bob's brother, offers Alice his name, a name which he says "is rightfully hers," in marriage and she gratefully accepts.

"For Sale"

(Pathe-Astra—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"FOR SALE," by Fred Jackson, is an average five-reel feature starring Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale. It presents the story of a girl's misplaced love, of the manner in which the love and understanding of the right man finally brings about a happy conclusion. "For Sale" might have been dramatically stronger had it been differently treated. While the plot itself is somewhat original in conception, its development is rather hackneyed and there is no originality shown in the handling of the scenes. Then too the love of Dorothy for the worthless Jim is something difficult for the audience to be deeply impressed by as the picture goes on. He is so worthless that one just sits and waits for the time when she will discover that her husband is far the better man. With this conclusion so evident at all times after the story has been started, there is naturally no very striking element of suspense.

Miss Hulette misses some of the opportunities in the role of Dorothy. She seems just a little too girlish to pass into such a part. Mr. Hale makes a perfectly nice husband and the rest of the cast is adequate though not named. Fred Wright directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dorothy (Gladys Hulette) stenographer in the office of Hamilton (Creighton Hale) is in love with Jim, one of the clerks. Jim appropriates funds of the concern's and loses on the races. Realizing Hamilton's admiration of Dorothy he pleads with her to borrow money from the employer to send him west—in order to cure his "cough." Dorothy consents and Hamilton readily gives her the cash. After Jim's departure he discovers the trouble but says nothing to Dorothy. Her little brother is struck down by an automobile and long and expensive treatment in the hospital is necessitated. Thinking of this and Jim's supposed predicament, Dorothy accepts Hamilton's proposal of marriage. But even though admiring him Dorothy still believes her heart in Jim's possession. Learning of her marriage he returns to the east and upbraids her. She learns from his lips that he never was sick and is astounded when he proposes to blackmail her. He comes to the house that night demanding money for the letters she wrote him. Hamilton overhears them and is overjoyed to hear Dorothy call him to protect her. And finally Dorothy discovers that she loves her husband.

THIS is another one of those Western burlesques with Ben Turpin, Polly Moran and Charlie Lynn taking the principal parts. Turpin is ridiculously funny as usual and there is a fine assortment of business and real thrills introduced. Among the best laughs are the poker game on the train, the episode in which Turpin's head forces the end of a trunk to bulge and the many incidents of the final chase, which closes with a number of thrills that would do justice to the serious Western melodrama. "The Street of Seven Stars"

(De Luxe Pictures—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

UNDER this alluring, romantic title, Doris Kenyon is presented at the head of her own company in an adaptation of a magazine story from the specially gifted pen of Mary Roberts Rinehart. Mrs. Rinehart is without a doubt an especially gifted author. Care was evidently taken to follow out the course of "The Street of Seven Stars" in the manner of its first winding in the columns of the Saturday Evening Post. And regrettably this course was not at all suited to the requirements of the screen. To begin with, romance was the foundation of Mrs. Rinehart's story and the structure was elegant and delighful and thrillingly romantic phrasing. Of course this structure is invisible on the screen. Atmosphere must always supersede such a structure. And while the atmosphere has been generally well communicated to the film by Director Jack O'Brien more than this is needed to furnish a full entertainment.

When the romance itself is delved into it shows itself to be possessed of a heroine who quite evidently evaded the hero for a time sufficient to allow Mrs. Rinehart to run her story the required length and, it must be confessed, for small other cause. Along about the time when one expects Harmony Wells to fall into the waiting arms of Peter, she decides to the contrary for some very trite reason, so it seemed to the writer. She must needs leave the man for a time and so prolong the inevitable. Harmony impresses one as being a rather indefinite young lady, too young in fact to know her own mind. But, as the spectator gains a comprehensive idea of it shortly after the picture starts, her failure to grasp it herself is rather aggravating.

Miss Kenyon is, at least, a very feast to the eye in this role and her playing while possessed of sincerity is somewhat lacking in depth, finished skill and sense of characterization. Hugh Thompson is a genial Peter. Others who appear in roles of prominence are Carey Hastings, Frank Crayne, John Hopkins, George Moss and young Stephen Carr, whose performance is probably the most effective of all. Right in the middle of the picture the principals repair to the Swiss Alps for an outing. They enjoy themselves at great length sporting in the snow for many, many feet.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Harmony Wells (Doris Kenyon) studies the violin in Paris. In time her funds run low, so she readily welcomes the home offered her bv Dr. Peter Byrne (Hugh Thompson), and Dr. Anna Gates (Carey Hastings), two excellent souls, whose lives are taken up in making light the burdens of others. So platonic is the friendship of the three that Harmony overlooks the fact that Peter is in love with her. The attentions of McLean (Frank Crayne), a rich American, prove interesting and diverting. At length Peter tells her of his love, but Harmony's mind is not made up. Dr. Gates is called home to her dying father, and this leaves Harmony alone in the house with Peter. Word of this situation reaches McLean, and while he still respects Harmony, he urges her to marry him to avoid scandal. She refuses. Then she leaves Peter to relieve the situation, and gets a job as model. She returns when Jimmy (Stephen Carr), Peter's ward, a little cripple, is taken fatally ill. She also brings with her the child's mother (Iva Shepard), who had deserted her son for the stage. She plays her violin at the bedside of the dying boy, and succeeds in restoring to the mother the maternal spark so long extinguished by her selfish ambition. When Harmony leaves again, Peter packs up and prepares to return home. But it is the now broken-hearted mother who tells Harmony to give up the thought of a career and return to the man who loves her.

Harriet McConnell, Marie McConnell, Eliza Helen Criswell, Raphael De Mise and Cesare Gravina complete the cast.

"A Broadway Scandal"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

UNDER this title which suggests subtly that the picture's action might transpire in the roaring forties of New York's own particular Broadway, the producers present a pretty story of a little French girl who becomes a renowned actress and of a doctor who thinks her frivolous along with all French women until service on the battlefields of France teaches him the truth. This lesson which the young doctor absorbs should have been emphasized just the least bit more and "Broadway Scandal" would then have been quite a perfect picture. Even as it stands, however, it makes entertainment of a fine type, chiefly because Carmel Myers gives the best performance of her career as Nenette—a performance that ranks with the exceptional ones contributed to the screen. As the light-hearted little French girl who pines under her commonplace existence as cashier in her father's cafe and whose veneer of gayety is taken too seriously by the man she loves, Miss Myers plays with a vitality touched here and there with pathos that is charming.

The story is from the pen of Harvey Gates and is well developed save for the exception already noted. It has received a tasteful production from Joseph De Grasse. Its realism is perfect. Edwin August appears as the young doctor. Andrew Robson, a well known actor on the speaking stage, appears to distinct advantage as Bisson, Nenette's father, Lon Chaney, W. H. Bainbridge, S. K. Shilling, Fred Gamble and Lule Warrenton complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nenette (Carmel Myers) is cashier in a little down town cafe run by her father, Armande Bisson (Andrew Robson). The life does not appeal to her and she sees herself settling down to a long existence of drudgery as the wife of Paul de Caval (S. K. Shilling), the husband her father has selected for her. One night she steals off for a ride with Colby (Lon Chaney) taxi-driver and automobile thief. Returning from a dance in an up town restaurant, Colby is pursued by a motorcycle policeman for speeding. He draws his pistol and shoots, killing the guardian of the law, but not until Nenette receives a shot wound in her arm from the policeman's pistol. Colby takes her to the private hospital of Dr. Kendall (W. H. Bainbridge) where she receives treatment from his son, David (Edwin August). She lies in the hospital for several days and a strong friendship springs up between her and David. On her return home to her father haste is made to marry her off to Paul. But in the midst of the wedding ceremony officers of the law enter and she is arrested on being identified by David as Colby's accomplice. She is broken hearted and thinks that David betrayed her into the hands of the police. But the trial goes in her favor. Her father, however, turns her from his home. A year later she is discovered as a theatrical star under the management of Falkner (Fred Gamble) who often used to patronize her father's cafe. David is serving as a physician in a field hospital in France and from his contact with the French women over there soon learns that his opinion of them was all wrong. He returns to his country and seeks out the old cafe. He is unable to learn anything of Nenette. But that night she comes down with a party. There is a reunion between her and her father and still a happier one with David.

" The Cabaret "

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THERE are Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Montagu Love, John Bowers and George MacQuarrie in this feature, but even such an imposing array of talent as conveyed by these five fails to make a good two-reel story into a good five-reel picture. That is one of those physical impossibilities which even the magic of the picture camera can never accomplish. "The Cabaret" is rich in atmosphere, not indeed with the atmosphere of the cabaret, but of its locale which is Greenwich Village, the picturesque name of New York City's Bohemian quarter. The air of good fellowship, of camaradarie existing in the home of the four artists is truly delightful, but these are not qualities which can project a picture to success by themselves alone.

In much shorter form the pretty love story presented would show to advantage, but as it stands now its fine points are dulled by excess footage which constantly stilts the action.

All of the players give creditable accounts of themselves, Montagu Love in particular bringing out the appealing charm of Jaffrey Darrel. Harley Knoles' direction is good in all scenes save those in the theatre. The dance with which Helene makes such a hit before the New York public would never be countenanced on the smallest vaudeville time. Rene Guissart photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Helene (June Elvidge) sings in a cafe in Greenwich Village accompanied by her grandfather (Captain Charles) who plays the violin. After his death she looks for other work. She applies at the quarters of four artists, Jeffrey Darrel (Montagu Love), Ned Lorrimer (Carlyle Blackwell), Dick Turner (John Bowers) and Stanley Sargent (George MacQuarrie) and after a period under their roof becomes the inspiration of each man. Jaffrey and Ned fall in love with her and it is Ned's foolish jealousy that causes Helene to leave them. She seeks a career on the stage and within a year makes her debut as a star. After the show Ned proposes but she refuses him. The work of the artists with the exception of Jeffery's is accepted for exhibition. His alone is refused because he refuses to sacrifice his art for commercialism. Turner and Sargent invite Helene on a party to celebrate their success but she refuses and, seeking out Jaffrey, tells him that she has come to him.

" Missing "

(Blackton-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

J. STUART BLACKTON chose for his third Paramount release an adaptation of Mrs. Humphry Ward's war novel, "Missing." Through her chief protagonist, Nell Suratt, Mrs. Ward has aimed to portray the suffering of all womankind during the present world-wide war. This she has succeeded in doing to a degree that brings tears to the eyes, and the highly sustaining drama, built upon this theme, serves to emphasize it the more, bringing home each point with doubled force. The adaptation made by the producer, in collaboration with James Young, is particularly meritorious, both in its dramatic exposition of the novel and the artistry with which it has been treated. Mr. Blackton never forgets that in producing a picture he has that most effective instrument, the camera, and he realizes the value of lighting in bringing out the full strength of his every scene. He has demonstrated his art along these lines in his previous Paramount subjects, but the effectual use of the double exposure, together with other novelties of pictorial composition, is the more noticeable in "Missing" than in any of his former works. None of these artistic aims have suffered through lack of good camera work, that which was supplied by William O'Connell being of the best order.

There are three leading players in "Missing," all of whom have been prominent in Paramount pictures of the past. Sylvia Bremer, in the role of Nell, does the part full justice, and in the many emotional scenes allotted her, plays with admirable depth of feeling. Robert Gordon, probably the most versatile juvenile in pictures, has the role of Lieutenant Suratt, Nell's husband, and gives a fine picture of the young soldier. He has the eager enthusiasm generally associated with the men under arms and at the same time always tinges his characterization with the sense of the gravity of the business of war. Thomas Meighan, as Sir William and Ola Humphrey, in the rather artificial character of Hester, Nell's scheming sister, complete the cast of principals. Winter Hall, Mollie McConnell and Kathlyn O'Connor do commendable work in parts of lesser importance.

The work of James Young, in the capacity of director, is open for warm praise. Aside from the realistic note which dominates every scene, there is the distinctly skilful manner in which he has built up a story, simple in the extreme, with the result that it tugs, even yanks, at the heart strings from beginning to end.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nell (Sylvia Bremer) marries Lieutenant George Suratt (Robert Gordon) despite the wish of her older sister, Hester (Ola Humphrey), that she pick a man of wealth. After his departure across the channel to France, Nell is comforted by Sir William Farrell (Thomas Meighan), a rich Englishman, unable to serve his country actively because of his lameness but who nobly rises to his duty in caring for the sick and wounded with his sister, Cicely (Kathlyn O'Connor). At length the report comes from the war office that Walter is missing. A year passes and Nell still hopes that he lives. A telegram addressed to her, saying that a man believed to be Lieutenant Suratt has been found, falls into Hester's hands. She, seeing that Sir William is in love with her sister, makes the journey to the hospital in France and, though she recognizes the unconscious Walter, informs the doctor (Winter Hall) that she doesn't know him. After more weeks have passed, Nell is about to accept Sir William when she receives word that the wounded man is her husband. Sir William escorts her to France. There she sees her husband. His hair has turned grey and there is a far-away look in his eyes. His mind, however, is completely restored when Nell sings to him his favorite melody of other days.

" The Bravest Way "

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE Lasky company has been generally wise in its selection of stories for Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, and "The Bravest Way" might have ranked with the best of these had it not been developed so artificially. Tamura, Hayakawa's latest characterization, is as usual the soul of honor. He makes a sacrifice to protect the wife of his dead friend that paints him very black in the eyes of the girl he loves. Every one appreciates noble self-sacrifice, it is true, but when a few words would clear the whole situation and prevent the sorrow without injuring a single character, the situation becomes plainly artificial while the bid for sympathy quite collapses. Of late several writers for the silent drama have also taken the liberty of depriving certain of their characters of the power of speech when by so doing they saw their way to a situation of dramatic force. It need hardly be added that no situation is forceful unless reached through the paths of consistency. And it seems to the writer that the self-sacrifice of Tamura could have been made a real self-sacrifice by the use of a little imagination. So the whole picture is weakened. There is a minor detail too where the author for the moment forgot. Tamura hasn't the price of a concert seat yet he jumps into a taxi to pursue an automobile, and how he paid the fare or put one over on the driver remains a mystery.

Hayakawa plays the role of Tamura with skill and receives good support from Florence Vidor as the half-caste Nume, and Tsuri Aoki as the Japanese wife, and a large cast, many of the members of which are Japanese. Edith Kennedy is the author while George Melford directed. Paul Perry photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Tamura (Sessue Hayakawa) a gardener lives in a western city of the United States with his friend Watana (U. Aoyama), a clerk in the grocery store owned by Motoyoshi (Coro Kino). Orson (Tom Kurahara), another employe, is caught robbing the cash register by Watana, who forces him to put the money back. In revenge Orson kills him while he prays at the altar. The murder remains a mystery. Watana's wife, Sat Su (Tsuri Aoki) arrives shortly afterwards with her two children and after learning of her bereavement, makes her quarters with Tamura. Gossips of the neighborhood eventually make it necessary that Tamura marry Sat Su. He does this in spite of his love for Nume (Florence Vidor), a half-caste teacher in a Japanese kindergarten. When she learns of it she gives up her position and leaves for Europe to study singing under the patronage of Nason (Winter Hall). After she makes her debut Nason explains to her that he wants his price. She struggles with him and is only saved by Tamura who has followed her home from the theatre. She later visits Sat Su and learns from her lips the sacrifice that Tamura made. Sat Su, still sorrowing for Watana, dies shortly afterwards. Motoyoshi, now bedridden, discovers that Orson has been robbing him and sends for Tamura, knowing his kindness toward the wife of Watana. He makes him his heir. Orson objects to this and accuses Tamura of having committed the murder. His haste, however, results in his own conviction. On Motoyoshi's death, Tamura inherits his business and his bank account. With this he pays off Nason for his expense in sending Nume abroad and so at last he is able to take her as his wife.

" The Red Haired Cupid "

ROY STEWART makes a decided hit as the red-haired Cupid in this photoplay, written by Henry Wallace Phillips and directed by Cliff Smith, and which is really a merry Western matchmaking romance. Roy Stewart is already too well known to need any further eulogy here, but Peggy Pearce, whose name is not so familiar to patrons of the silent drama, is entitled to a word or two of praise for her fine handling of the character of Loys Andres. She visits her uncle on the Oklahoma ranch of which William Saunders (Roy Stewart), once superintendent, is now foreman. They give him a rousing welcome, one well calculated to scare her stiff—this because they had figured in their mind's eye that a niece of Jones must of necessity be a crabby old maid. But on the contrary, being young and winsome, she captures their hearts, much to the disgust of her uncle, who went West to undertake the management of the ranch and tickled the risibles of the cowboys on his arrival with his spats, silk hat, field glasses, monocle, wrist watch and set of golf sticks—the regular make-up of a veritable tenderfoot. The whole cast is well selected and the direction shows great painstaking.

There are several fine illustrations of rough riding and the mountainous scenery and wooded dells are fine specimens of the photographer's art. The film abounds in good subtitles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Not satisfied with the management of "Red" Saunders (Roy Stewart), their foreman, the eastern directors of the Chanta Seechee cattle ranch in Oklahoma sent Albert Jones (Ray Griffith) to act as superintendent.

The boys on the ranch all threaten to resign when word of this move reaches them, but remain at "Red's" request. Jones arrives and makes himself disliked. The punchers are making life rough for him when word comes that his niece, Loys Andres (Peggy Pearce) of Boston, is about to pay him a visit.

Led by "Red," the punchers plan a rousing welcome for "the old maid" only to find her the prettiest piece of femininity in Oklahoma. Kyle Lambert (Charles Dorian), "Red's" bunkie, falls in love with her. Jones moves to break the match by firing Kyle and sending Loys home.

He confides his plans to "Red." The latter, who has been keenly disappointed in love when the much-touted beauty, Lilly, from the East, proves to be a Jersey cow, sympathizes with the lovers. He arranges for an elopement. "Squint-Eye" Lucas (Aaron Edwards) who has been forced on the cow outfit by Jonesy, and is really a rustler, overhears the elopement plans and intercepts the pair at the ford where he shoots Kyle.

In a thrilling race, Loys beats the Mexican to the ranch, Lucas is slain by "Red," and Kyle is rescued. The pair are married before Jonesy returns from his search for Lilly, the cow, and Jones is forced to extend his congratulations.

" Restitution "

IF it had not been for the impressive organ recital that accompanied the private showing of "Restitution" at Wurlitzer Hall, it is doubtful whether those present could have refrained from laughing. Such a weird conglomeration of historical data new interpretations of Biblical records, marvelous though quite plainly mechanical scenic effects, and wildly imaginative, almost childish ideas assembled in the span of any number of reels has certainly never been seen before.

What the producers have aimed to show is that his Satanic Majesty has been responsible for all the wrong in the world. In the guise of the serpent he tempted Eve, with evil intent he whispered in Cain's ear, caused Abraham to disown his wife and get into trouble with Pharoah, brought about the slaughter of the innocents after the birth of Christ, poisoned Nero's mind against the Christians with the result that he burned hundreds of them at the stake and finally severely bit a "Modern Ruler" (a person which one might take for the Kaiser if he but looked like him) and caused the greatest war of the world.

It remains for Columbia, emblem of democracy and righteousness, to break the Devil's spell and push him through the face of the earth down to his own infernal regions to be consumed in the flames. He fell through the surface at a point embracing several of the United States and a number of Canadian territories.

The final windup of the nine reels is the weirdest part of all showing as it does a rejuvenated Father Abraham wandering about Jerusalem healing the sick and wounded. He creates a real millennium when he restores the life of a doctor, dead and buried during the war, and reunites him with his wife. Later their baby is returned to them. Just what type of propaganda this is it is hard to determine but the whole picture leads up to it.

The production furnished by Howard Gaye is worthy of praise in what was striven for but not in results. For instance when some pretentious multiple exposures were tried, they present no continued illusion because of the jerkiness. Some miniature work showing the burning of the Christians is exceedingly good but the eye detects that it is minature. The long shot of Christ on the cross is perhaps the most effective.

The acting is in every instance sincere, but the performance of Frank Whitson as Abraham is the only important one in which impressiveness and sense of character are blended with skill. Amy Jerome as Sarah, Abraham's wife, is very good, and the Virgin Mary as portrayed by Mabel Harvey is spiritual. There are Eugene Corey as Adam, Lois Gradner as Eve, Alfred Garcia as Satan, with Howard Gaye as the Christ, who give of their best. The modern part of the picture is played by Edward Cecil, Vir-

"Prunella"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE charming love story of Pierrot, the worldly wise, and Prunella, the innocent, makes a picture, the poetry and beauty of which has seldom been equaled. Marguerite Clark appears in the title role, the same which she created on the stage just before appearing in pictures for the first time, and gives a delightful and appealing performance in which is revealed again her marvelous faculty for interpreting a part in which youthful innocence is the dominating characteristic. The play, the beautiful creation of a poetic imagination, or rather two, was written by Granville Barker and Laurence Housman, and relied upon its rare lines and fanciful setting, as well as the exquisitely simple love story, as old as the ages. As a consequence, it needed sympathetic treatment during its transformation into a picture. This it has received, first from Charles Maigne, who made the scenario, and who fully realized the necessity of retaining the simplicity of the original work, and secondly from Maurice Tourneur, than whom a better director for this type of picture could hardly be found. Mr. Tourneur possessed of an imagination that carries him far from the commonplace. One is transported from such material things as [illegible] lights, projecting machines and screens, on witnessing "Prunella," that is unless one has no vestige of poetry in his soul. Regrettably, however, it has often been proven that the most typical of picture fans prefers a gun in the top drawer to poetry. The settings designed by Mr. Tourneur are fanciful and form a beautiful background.

Miss Clark receives her principal support from Jules Raucourt, who gives a most creditable performance as Pierrot. Harry Leoni, as Scaramel, is next in importance, and the rest of the cast, never individually prominent, is composed of carefully selected types.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Prunella (Marguerite Clark) is carefully guarded by her three aunts (Isabel Berwin, Marcia Harris and Nora Cecil) lest the same tragedy shall befall her as befell her mother. She is forever kept prisoner in the garden grounds by the three old caretakers (William J. Goss, A. Voorhes Wood and Charles Hartley) and the boy (Arthur Kennedy) who keeps "love and the birds outside." Even when attaining young womanhood she is totally ignorant of life in the world at large. When a travelling troupe of mummers, headed by Pierrot (Jules Raucourt), visits the village, the aunts do the best they can to prevent Prunella from seeing them, but their leader finds his way into the garden, makes ardent love to the amazed little girl and carries her off with him. For a while Prunella, now known as Pierrette, is happy, but Pierrot is fickle-hearted and divides his love with other members of the mummers' band. In sorrow, Prunella leaves them. Not until then does Pierrot realize how much his Pierrette meant to him and back he goes to the cottage to search for her. He finds the little garden, untended and barren, the house ramshackled and deserted. His troupe enters and attempts to make him merry with laughter and song. Prunella also comes back and finding herself unrecognized by her one-time friends, goes to sleep by the statue of Love. When Pierrot walks through the garden he discovers her and believes her the ghost of her former self. He signifies himself eager to take her in death or in life and going to her, discovers to his joy, that she is alive. The two together and once more the garden blooms.

There are some in the course of these comedies, but they are not for the type of audience educated to the best in knock-about comedy. EXHIBITORS' PERSONALS

MAINE

J. W. Greeley has resigned from the management of the Augusta Opera House to become manager of the new Casino about to be erected at Willard Beach, and which will be known as the Willard Casino.

MINNESOTA

It is reported in Minneapolis film circles that Ruben & Finkelstein have purchased the Strand theatre, the last remaining large independent theatre downtown. It is known that Ruben & Finkelstein have been dickering for the theatre for some time and news of the purchase was not a great surprise. Charles F. Branham, manager of the Strand under the Saxe ownership, will continue as its executive and Henry Santrey, who has been singing there about three months, will remain until the expiration of his contract. The purchase of the Strand gives Ruben & Finkelstein an enviable position among the country's theatre circuit owners, and makes Minneapolis' downtown theatrical motion picture business a practically solid R. & F. proposition. Besides the Strand, Ruben & Finkelstein control the New Garrick, seating 2,400; New Lyric, seating about 2,000; New Palace, seating 2,200; New Grand, seating 1,600; New Aster, seating 1,000; New Unique, seating 800 and the Calhoun, a neighborhood house of about 1,000 seats. The Strand seats about 1,300.

NEBRASKA

W. L. Corelius has succeeded W. P. McCall as manager of the Auditorium theatre at Geneva.

NEW JERSEY

W. E. Tracey and Raymond Vanderhoef of Englishtown are now managing the motion picture theatre there in lieu of Herbert Laird, resigned.

The Casino of Bradley Beach has been leased by Rockafeller, Hughson and Falkner, and will be added to their chain of theatres in this vicinity.

The Park theatre of East Rutherford has experienced a change in managers, and a thorough renovation of the house will be commenced immediately.

OHIO

George Ryder, well known in Cleveland motion picture circles, has resigned the management of the Cedar to assume the management of the Gordon Square theatre, a big vaudeville and motion picture theatre on the West Side. He succeeds Harry Du Rocher.

G. O. Dupius, of Lima, who owns the Royal, the Strand and the Dreamland theatres, all in Lima, has taken a lease on the Orpheum, Lima's leading vaudeville house, for the summer, and will show pictures there. He recently opened it under the new policy with " The Kaiser."

Sam Barch and Henry Greenberger of Cleveland have added a second motion picture theatre to their present interests. Last week they bought the Centre theatre, located on West Twenty-fifth street, at the corner of Archwood. This is a thoroughly modern and up-to-date house of about 400 seats. It was formerly conducted under the management of Carl Novak, who is now devoting all of his time to his other house, the Peerless. Barch and Greenberger also own the Market Square theatre.

TENNESSEE

C. H. Townsend has assumed the management of the Palace theatre, Jellico, in place of R. R. Brummett who, after two years in the industry here, has joined the colors.

Anti-Misframe League

The importance of the National Anti-Misframe League is being recognized even outside the motion picture industry. We published last week in the front advertising section of the News a letter from Willys-Overland, Inc., automobile manufacturers, which is worth reprinting here, as the members of the League may not have had it called to their attention or realized its significance.

We have had many complimentary letters from exchanges and others directly connected with the industry but here is a man on the outside who has seen the results of the League activity and realized the vital part which we are playing in betterment of the physical condition of film.

National Anti-Misframe League,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

We notice on a number of our film containers returned after being on exhibition in different parts of the country a poster to the effect that the operator of the theatre showing the film is a member of your National Anti-Misframe League.

As the writer has charge of the Motion Picture Department of the above company he would appreciate an explanation as to the nature of this League and the methods employed by it. We request this information because we find that film is always returned in good condition by the League members who use this sticker.

Thanking you for any information which you can furnish us, we remain,

Yours very truly,
Willys-Overland, Inc.,
E. R. Voorhees,
Willys Knight Division,
Sales Department.

This League which has been under way for some time has had a gradual growth which is a healthy symptom. The pledge which has been signed by approximately nine hundred operators is being lived up to in a way which we little expected. With the new pledges we receive letters from operators who state that they are anxious to become affiliated with an organization which is striving to better the condition of the film. Members are talking of the work which is being done and are bringing in more members, so that the enthusiasm for the organization is steadily growing and its influence is increasing.

It is not our object to increase in numbers unless the proper spirit impels each applicant to send in his request for membership. Unless every man who has enrolled has done so with the full intention of living up to the pledge we do not want him. Mere members count for nothing; it is workers which are needed.

Today the exchanges throughout the country are suffering for lack of proper film inspectors. They are short handed. It is impossible to find competent people to take the places of those who have been called away to serve our country. For this reason we will find film being sent out from some exchanges in even worse condition than in the past. This is a reality now, not a condition to be anticipated. The question is how can it be met? How can exhibitors be sure that the film which they show to the public and upon which their patronage is built is in even passable condition?

There is only one answer and that is by an ever increasing co-operation on the part of the operators of the country. The old idea that by inspecting film, patching, taking out misframes and otherwise putting it in showable shape, the operator is doing the exchange's work must be forgotten. We must all pitch in and co-operate, forget our petty differences and realize that we are all striving for efficiency under very difficult conditions.

This is being done right now by the members of the National Anti-Misframe League as we have had proven to us many times. We feel sure it will be done by others just as soon as they realize what the industry is up against. This realization can be best brought about by every operator who realizes conditions talking about them and impressing upon the minds of others that they must take action and co-operate, forgetting their old petty differences with the exchange and realizing that the country is up against a condition which co-operation alone can improve.

Incandescent Lamps for Motion Picture Service

By A. R. Dennington

[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Rochester, April 9th, 1918.]

ARRANGEMENT OF LIGHT SOURCE

IN the development of an incandescent lamp for motion picture service, it is essential to concentrate the light source as much as possible, because no condensing system can collect and utilize the rays of light from an extended source. The problem which comes up is, therefore, that of getting as much filament as possible within a given area and arranging this filament in such a way that there will be maximum illumination in the direction in which it can be utilized.

There are in general two methods which suggest themselves for the arrangement of the filament. One method consists in arranging the coils in series and placing the various sections close to each other and practically parallel. This series of coils may be arranged either in planes at right angles to the line of projection, or in a more or less complete arc of a circle. Arranging the coils in the arc of a circle has the advantage of placing each element of the filament equally close to the focal point of the optical system. However, it has the disadvantage that no element of the filament can be placed exactly at the focus and therefore no element is operating at the best possible efficiency for the system. The arrangement of the filament sections in a plane or planes perpendicular to the axis of projection has been found to be more satisfactory than the circular arrangement as it makes possible a more uniform field, or beam, than can otherwise be obtained. There are, however, spaces between the filament sections which are not sources of light, and the result of this is that the screen may have light and dark areas corresponding to the filament areas.

The second method of arranging the filament is to connect the sections in parallel with very small spaces between them. This arrangement permits of a larger amount of filament within the given area, but it has the disadvantage of requiring a high current which is liable to cause heating of the lamp seal as well as the wires and contacts. Any sagging of the coils tends to short-circuit to a greater or lesser extent portions of each section, as the current passes from a turn of one coil to a turn of another coil without passing around the helix, thus reducing the lamp voltage and the candle-power as well. If the coils are spaced far enough apart so that there is no danger of the sections short circuiting by contact with each other, there is little or no advantage of the parallel arrangement of coils over the series arrangement.

In order to obtain some of the advantages of practically an unbroken wall of filament and also retain the advantage of series-connected coil sections, an arrangement of the filament has been developed which places the coil sections in two parallel rows, with the coils in the back section opposite the spaces between coils in the front section. This arrangement of the filament presents a solid wall along the axis of projection. However, as the condenser picks up light from angles up to 40° there are certain portions of the condenser which receive light only from the front rows of coils, the rear coil sections being hidden behind the front row. A condition of this kind necessitates that a somewhat larger amount of energy be supplied to the coil for a given screen illumination. This increase in the power necessary is considered of secondary importance, the primary requisite being to get as much illumination as possible on the screen. The two rows of filament are placed as close together as practicable in order that all sections of the light source may be as near as possible to the focal-point. Lamps of smaller wattage can have the filament arranged in a single row or plane.

The useful area of light-source varies with different condensing systems and different projection lenses. Under a given set of conditions, the useful projected area of filament can be determined by testing back from the screen by means of a lamp. A lighted lamp is placed at each corner of the screen after the objective lens has been carefully focused and the condensers adjusted so as to give the best illumination on the screen. The light source is then removed from behind the condenser and a test-plate (or screen) placed in the position of the filament. The lighted area on this test-plate indicates the area which can be used in illuminating the screen. When the test-lamp is placed close to the corners of the screen the lighted area on the test plate shows the cut-off due to the corners of the aperture plate. When the test lamp is moved in from the edge of the screen the spot projected back to the test-plate (by the test-lamp at the screen) is circular.

A number of tests were made on different types of condensers including the usual plano-convex condensers and also the special Corning corrugated lens of the Fresnel type. With a pair of plano-convex condensers having a 5½" focus lens toward the light source and a 7½" focus lens toward the aperture plate, the following results were obtained:

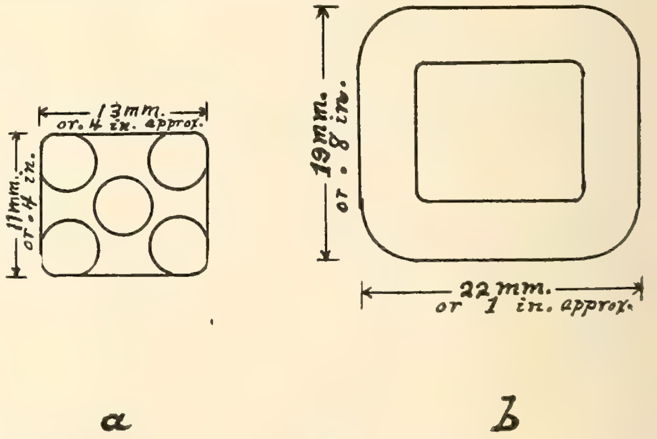

Fig. 2

The light source (a, Fig. 1) was placed 85 millimeters, or 3.4 inches, from the face of the 5½" condenser (b) and the distance from the face of the other condenser (c) to the aperture plate (d) was 234 millimeters, or 9.4 inches. The two condensers were placed so that there was about 1 millimeter clearance between the convex surfaces. Under these conditions the area of the light source as measured on a test-plate is 11 by 13 millimeters, or about .4 in square (diagram a, Fig. 2). The settings given for the condensers and light-source were determined after a number of trials, and were found to give the best results, both from the standpoint of intensity and uniformity of the screen illumination. The total illumination delivered on the screen from a 1,200 watt lamp operating at an efficiency of .477 spherical or .315 horizontal watts per candle was 745 lumens. In testing back from the screen to determine the area of the light-source, the test-lamp was placed close to the screen. When the lamp was placed close to the objective lens, a different light source area was obtained as shown in diagram b, Fig. 2. In this case, the illuminated area on the test-plate consisted of two parts, one part essentially the same size as before but surrounded by an area of lower intensity. This area measured about 22 by 19 millimeters, or about .8 in. square. These tests indicate that the light source would have a useful area of 11 by 13 millimeters, or about .4 in. square. However, it is advisable to make the source somewhat larger than this, hence the dimensions adopted are about 16 millimeters for the horizontal dimension and 13 millimeters for the vertical dimension of the light source, i. e., a source about .6 in. square.

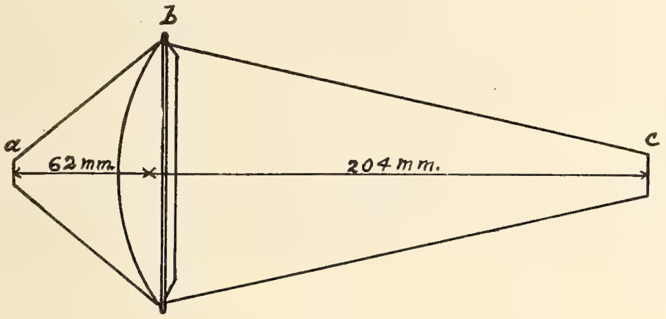

Fig. 3

In order to determine the effect which would be obtained by back-testing through a corrugated condenser having equivalent foci of 2½" and 8", the same method was used as in the preceding test. The lamp was set up so as to give the best possible screen illumination, which condition was obtained when the light source was placed at the 2½" focus and the distance to the aperture plate was practically 8" (Fig. 3). Under these conditions the lamp which had been used in the preceding test was operated at the same efficiency as before and gave a screen illumination of 616 lumens. When the lamp was removed and the light source at the screen was used for back testing, the lighted area on the test-plate was 11 by 9 millimeters, or about .4 in. square (diagram a, Fig. 4). When the test lamp was moved up to the end of the objective lens there was still an area of 11 by 9 mm. brightly lighted on the test-plate, but this was surrounded by a circle 20 millimeters, or .8" in diameter (diagram b, Fig. 4). It was noted that the circles which were projected back from the test lamp were somewhat larger than with the plano-convex condenser, showing that the corners of the screen were illuminated by a somewhat greater proportion of the light source. The test also indicated that the corrugated condenser did not utilize as much of the filament area as did the plano-convex condenser.

EFFECT OF MIRROR ON LAMP RATING

In order to determine the effect which a mirror has on the temperature of the lamp filament, when the latter is placed at the center of curvature of the reflecting surface, tests were made on both monoplane and biplane lamps. The lamp ratings given in Table I were taken without a mirror focussed on the lamp filament. Temperatures were measured both with and without the mirror as shown by the values in the last two columns.

TABLE I—Effect of Mirror on Filament Temperature

Lamp	W.	V.	Amps.	H.CP.	H.W. P.C.	S.CP.	S.W. P.C.	Temp. Without Mirror	Temp. With Mirror
Monoplane	806	26	31.	2560	.315	1480	.544	3200° K	3245° K
Biplane	1192	42.3	28.2	3900	.3055	2500	.477	3275° K	3225° K

It will be noted that the effect on the temperature of the filament is essentially the same with both the monoplane and biplane constructions. This is probably due to the fact that in the monoplane construction the coil sections are spaced as closely together as practicable, so that the distance between coils is considerably less than the diameter of the coil. The reflected image of the coil therefore, instead of passing between the coils comes back on the coils to a greater or less extent. In the biplane lamp, the reflected image of the coil comes back partially on some portion of the coil itself, and partially on the spaces between, so that in the two cases, the temperature conditions are very nearly the same, the test table indicating differences of only 5° with the two coil constructions. If the spaces between the coil sections of the monoplane coil were increased the temperature would probably be somewhat less than indicated, but the screen illumination would also deteriorate because it would show the spaces between the coils.

The effect of a properly focused mirror in increasing the illumination on the screen is indicated in Table II.

TABLE II—Effect of Mirror on Screen Illumination

Lamp	Condenser	Mirror	Lumens
Biplane No. 21–10	Corning 2½" x 8"	None	467
" No. 21–10	" 2½" x 8"	M. E. 8"	584 Gain by mirror 24.6%
" No. 21–10	Plano-Convex 5½" & 7½"	None	544
" No. 21–10	" 5½" & 7½"	M. E. 8"	712 Gain by mirror 30.8%
" No. 21–11	Corning 2½" x 8"	None	556
" No. 21–11	" 2½" x 8"	M. E. 8"	681 Gain by mirror 22.5%
" No. 21–11	Plano-Convex 6½" & 7½"	None	575
" No. 21–11	" " 6½" & 7½"	M. E. 8"	686 Gain by mirror 19.35%

Average Gain by Mirror 24.5%

The mirror in each case was a Macbeth-Evans spherical mirror having an 8" diameter and 5⅝" radius of the reflecting surface. The gain due to the use of the mirror in the tests ranges from 30.8% to 19.3% and gives an average gain of 24.5%. All of these tests were made with biplane filament lamps. Two different lamps were used and two different combinations of plano-convex condensers. A further test was made using biplane lamp No. 21—10 in order to determine how much the current supplied to the lamp could be reduced in order to give the same illumination as was originally obtained with this lamp without the mirror. This test showed that changing the current from 28 amperes on a lamp without a mirror, and giving a screen illumination of 544 lumens, to 27 amperes on the same lamp with a mirror, gave a screen illumination of 564 lumens. This change in current in the lamp is equivalent to a change of about .06 in spherical watts per candle. However, there is a gain due to the use of the mirror which is not accounted for by the change in current and the resulting change in temperature of the lamp filament. This gain is due to the light from the reflected image of the filament which tends to give a more uniform light source so that the illumination on the screen is more uniform and of higher intensity than can be obtained from the filament alone.

Projection Speed

Mr. E. L. Leach, Swift Current, Sask., Canada, inquires: "The old original time for projecting 1,000 feet of film was prescribed as 15 minutes. This, I suppose, was figured from patrons' judgment as well as from the theatre end.

"Several of the best film producers are, however, sending out advertising matter on which is printed 'use 14 minutes only for projecting 1,000 feet.' What is your opinion in the matter? Fifteen minutes per 1,000 feet means about 60 crank-revolutions per minute, and 14 minutes per 1,000 means about 70 crank-revolutions per minute, does it not?"

Comment: Our stand in the matter of projecting speed is, and always has been, that the action in each and every subject exhibited should be interpreted in the most natural and lifelike manner possible, and in carrying this recommendation into practice the operator cannot lay down any definite time in which to project 1,000 feet, because the projecting speed will have to be varied many times in order to properly portray the various scenes contained within that length of film.

It is, however, very easy to determine the rate at which the film passes through the projector if we know the length of the film and the time in which it was projected. By dividing the length of the film (here assumed to be 1,000 feet) by the time (in minutes) in which it was projected, we get the rate of projection in feet per minute, or crank-revolutions per minute (both meaning the same, as one crank-revolution corresponds to the passage through the projector of one foot of film).

We, therefore, have for the screen-time 14 minutes per 1,000 feet, 71.4 feet per minute as the rate of projection, and for 15 minutes per 1,000 feet we have 66.66 feet projected per minute, while at the commonly recommended projection rate of 60 feet (or crank-revolutions) per minute, it takes 16.66 minutes to project 1,000 feet of film. These few examples will serve to show any operator how he can calculate screen-time when any two of the involved factors are known.

The Cruban Solderless Wire-Terminal

WE have received, for examination, samples of a terminal for the lamp leads of motion picture machines which is known as the Cruban solderless terminal and is being marketed by the Autoscope Products Corporation, of 2 Rector street, New York City.

The Cruban terminal resembles somewhat the well-known Bulldog lug, in that the wire, after being inserted into a metal sleeve, has its strands spread out and then bent down around the rim of the sleeve, after which the sleeve is screwed into the body of the lug, which latter is attached to the lamp arm in the usual manner. By spreading out the strands of the wire in this manner a much greater contact surface is secured than when the strands are all bunched together.

The Cruban terminal differs, however, from previous lugs in that the wire is not inserted loosely into the sleeve, B, Fig. 1, but is securely held therein by screw threads with which the interior of the sleeve is provided. Cruban terminals are at present supplied in one size, which takes No. 4, 6 and 8 asbestos-covered cables, and the price of these terminals is 40 cents each.

The Testing of Optical Glass

[Interesting data compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Standards.]

I. Introduction

THE recently increased activity in this country in the manufacture of optical instruments, and the new conditions affecting the supply of glass, have resulted in numerous inquiries for information in regard to optical glass. This circular has been prepared by the Bureau of Standards for the use of manufacturers and consumers of optical glass and gives descriptions of the tests which should be applied to this material.

The requirements with regard to glass for use in optical instruments are so exacting, and the conditions under which it is produced are such, that sorting and testing demand more attention than for almost any other material. Stated in a general way, the requirements are: (1) the refractive index must be, within small limits, of a specified value, not only for one but for several colors; (2) the glass must be thoroughly homogeneous; (3) it must be extremely clear; (4) it must be free from internal strains and stresses (must be well annealed.)

Optical glass is a complex of several constituents which, after being ground and mixed, are melted in large clay pots holding 1000 pounds or more. The mass must be carefully stirred while molten in order that the various constituents may not partially separate, resulting in a non-homogeneous mixture. Moreover, clay is soluble, to a greater or less extent, in the hot glass, and diffuses into it from the walls of the pot. Those parts of the melt which are not affected by the stirring process are worthless for optical purposes and throughout the greater portion of the pot there are irregularities in optical properties which usually render a large part of the gross weight subject to rejection.

Unless the batch materials and the factory processes are carefully standardized, the optical constants will show so much variation from one melt to another that changes will be required in the design of instruments in which the glass is used.

Small amounts of impurities in the raw material are apt to prevent the glass from being sufficiently clear for high grade instruments. Bad effects may be produced by such minute amounts of certain materials that satisfactory control of the purity is difficult.

After a proper quality of glass has been obtained the pot must be cooled properly or it may be ruined by devitrification. Also, the final cooling before the glass is to be worked up into prisms and lenses must be at such a rate that large internal strains are not introduced in the process of solidification.

The above are, in brief outline, the conditions which make careful and complete testing of optical glass a necessity.

II. Index

Light in passing from one medium into another of different density, suffers a change of direction which is called refraction. The amount of this bending is indicated by a constant called the index of refraction.

The index varies with the color, or wave-length, of the light passing through the glass. In all types of glass the index of refraction is less for red than for violet light; this difference in index for different colors is called the dispersion. The indices of a sample of glass are usually given for four standard colors or wave-lengths—the red, green, and violet lines of hydrogen, known as the C, F, and G′ lines, and the sodium yellow line known as the D line is also used for measurement. The mean dispersion is the difference between the indices of refraction for the C and F lines. The relative dispersion, represented by the Greek letter ν, is the ratio where n is the index of refraction for the wave length represented by its particular subscript. The numerical values of the index of refraction and of the dispersion are the essential properties of glass for optical purposes. These quantities vary through a considerable range in different types of glass. The optical designer takes advantage of this variation, by combining glasses of different optical properties to eliminate some of the errors arising from the dispersive effect of the glass on light, and from the form of the surfaces of the lenses. Thus, the variation of index and dispersion with kind of glass assumes the greatest importance with respect to its use in optical instruments. It thus becomes necessary to know accurately the optical constants of the glass to ascertain its usability.

Methods of Measuring Index.—There are several methods of measuring index, depending on the accuracy required. The roughest is that of having a series of liquids of ascending refractive indices, and finding, by immersion, which one the glass most nearly resembles. This method can give results as close as 5 units in the 3rd decimal place.

Index can be obtained by comparing the optical thickness of a slab of glass as measured by a microscope with the real thickness. This method is not more accurate than the preceding. For quick measuring where an accuracy of a couple of units in the fourth decimal place is sufficient, the total reflection method is best. The instruments used are the Abbe refractometer and the Pulfrich refractometer.* Dispersion cannot conveniently be measured by the Abbe instrument, but is easily obtained by the Pulfrich to an accuracy of a couple of units in the fifth decimal place.

The spectrometer method is the primary method of index measurement, and the most accurate. A prism of glass of approximately 60° angle is required. The angle of the prism and the minimum deviations of the various lines caused by the prism are accurately measured on the spectrometer, and the index calculated by the formula

$$n = \frac{\sin \frac{1}{2}(A + D)}{\sin \frac{1}{2} A}$$

where A is the prism angle
D is the minimum deviation n is the index.

For this work, the prisms must be free from striae and strain, and the faces plane and well polished, and at least 1 cm. square.

The accuracy obtainable depends on the spectrometer used. For an accuracy of one unit in the 5th decimal place, which is generally required by designers, the prism angle and the deviation must be known to within 3″ of arc. The spectrometer should read at least to 6″ of arc.

Glasses vary in index from 1.49 to 1.90, and in ν values from 29 to 66. The variation in index in one pot of glass, from one portion of the pot to another, may be 2 or 3 units in the third decimal place, but by sorting, several portions of different melts can be picked out with the same index to several units in the 4th place or better. The ν values in different melts of the same type of glass are very much closer, a uniformity to 2 or 3 units in the 3rd significant figure being the general case.

The designer, in the case of a high grade lens or instrument, requires the glass to follow specifications to several units in the 5th decimal place in index, and to one unit in the 3rd significant figure in the dispersion. A greater variation is allowable for small instruments of lesser precision.

III. Striae

The most serious defect in optical glass with which manufacturers and consumers have to deal, is the lack of optical homogeneity. This may be present as a gradual variation of the refractive index throughout the melt, or it may be strongly localized along streaks or thin sheets of the glass. The first case is determined by index measurements of samples from different parts of the melt and has been discussed in Section II of this circular. The second case, which is by far the most troublesome, and results in the rejection of great quantities of glass, may be detected through the use of suitable apparatus, by the irregular deviations of light rays introduced by defects in the glass which are called "striae," "veins," "cords" or "waves." These may occur in threads or sheets, or in wide diffuse bands, either straight or curved and sometimes looped and twisted. At present it is out of the question, due to difficulties in the process of manufacture which it is impossible wholly to avoid, to produce a pot of glass entirely free from striae; it is usual to obtain only about 20 per cent of the melt in satisfactory glass. Moreover, the good and the poor glass are often so intermixed that every bit of the central portion of the pot must be carefully inspected and sorted. The outside portions and the bottom can usually be rejected without the loss of any usable glass.

*See "Refraktometrisches Hilfsbuch" by Roth and Eisenlohr, Leipzig, 1911.

Unless careful attention is given to testing the glass in the raw state for striae, these defects may first become visible in the finished optical system after much work has been spent and perhaps wasted in polishing the lenses and prisms. For certain purposes, such as condensing lenses, cheap short-focus photographic lenses, and low-power binoculars, glass containing a few striae can be used, as their presence will cause no appreciable harm. This is particularly true of striae which lie in thin sheets provided the light passes at right angles to their plane, even though they may be fairly conspicuous when viewed in other directions. Glass for use in prisms should be free from striae, since in prisms light rays are passing in more than one direction. Optical parts of instruments intended for precise measurements must be quite free from striae.

It is evident that every piece of optical glass must be carefully inspected to determine the intensity and exact position of the striae, so that, if necessary, they can be sawed out, or the glass broken in such a way as to avoid them. This inspection may be made by various methods, depending on the accuracy desired. The heaviest striae can be seen directly in a block with clear surfaces, even in the irregular pieces as first broken out of the melting pot, but other methods are required to detect less conspicuous striae. The principles generally employed in striae testing are as follows: (See (a) Fig. 1.) A beam of light from a small source, S (pin-hole), passes through the block of glass and is brought to a focus by a concave mirror or a positive lens L. If the eye is placed at or near the focus the striae will appear either as dark streaks on a bright background or as bright streaks on a dark background, according to the position of the eye. It is an aid to have a keen edge at the focus as in the Foucault test. There are several arrangements which will answer these requirements. The simplest source of light consists of a pin-hole opening placed before a ground glass electric bulb. After passing through the block of glass to be examined, the rays are brought to a focus by a lens, or by a concave mirror which sends them back through the glass to a focus near the source. For some reasons it is desirable to have the rays parallel as they pass through the glass. This may be accomplished by placing the source in the focus of an additional lens which renders the light parallel before reaching the glass, a second lens being then required to bring it to a focus. (See (b) Fig. 1.) The effectiveness of the test depends upon the fineness of the pin-hole and upon shutting off as much stray light from other sources as possible. It is better to have achromatic lenses or to use monochromatic light, but neither is essential. For these tests it is necessary to have two opposite surfaces ground and polished plane and parallel; the more perfect the surfaces the more delicate and complete the striae test, since defects of grinding or polishing interfere materially with the inspection of the interior. Poor grinding and polishing will cause a hazy appearance throughout the piece, while scratches appear much like striae of a common type.

Deviations of the surface from flatness may give the glass a wavy appearance similar to that caused by wide diffuse striae. It is possible, however, for an observer to distinguish between defects of the surface and those in the body of the glass. Turning the block during the examination is a great aid in doing this and a little practise will enable the observer to locate the defects very closely. Accordingly, provision should be made for a convenient method of manipulating the block while in test. This is also important for another reason, namely, that striae may be visible at one angle and not at another; in fact this is characteristic of certain types of striae.

Unfortunately, it is expensive to put first-class surfaces on blocks of glass, and it is not practicable for glass factories to test all of their product in this way when much of it will be defective on account of striae. The method in general use is to eliminate as many striae as possible by preliminary examination of the rough pieces before moulding, and then to put a quick polish on the edge of the moulded slabs for tests similar to those described.

Fine grinding and polishing may be avoided by the use of liquids whose refractive index is similar to that of the glass. A rough ground surface can be put upon the slabs cheaply and rapidly by blocking them together in plaster and grinding with crushed steel of about 90 mesh. The slabs are then separated and each ground surface carefully cleaned. If each surface is covered with a film of oil of the same index as the glass, and a thin well-polished piece of glass, such as a lantern slide cover, is pressed over the film, the ground surface disappears and the slab apparently has optically flat well polished surfaces, allowing a good view of the interior. The complete disappearance of surface defects can be accomplished only under certain conditions. Since the dispersion of the oil will not be the same as that of the glass, it will be possible to get an exact match in index for one color only. It is therefore necessary, for the best results, to use monochromatic light. The index of the oil must not differ from that of the glass by more than 5 units in the fifth decimal place. On account of the difference in the dispersion of the oil and the glass, this accuracy can readily be obtained provided a monochromator is available to supply the light of the color needed. A simple form of monochromator will be described in a later paragraph. The surfaces of the slab must be clean and after a thin film of oil is spread over the ground surface and the inner surface of the cover-glass, the cover-glass is to be pushed across the surface of the slab from one edge. This avoids air-bubbles which will be present if the cover-glass is merely laid down on the slab. Various difficulties will be experienced at first in applying this method, but a little practice gives sufficient manual dexterity to overcome them. The slipping of the cover-glass on the surface of the block can be avoided by making the cover-glasses a little longer than the slab and stretching rubber bands over them. They may also be made wider than the slab so that a narrow flange of glass can be glued along each edge of the inner surface. The careful use of the cover-glass method, as outlined, will give surprisingly good results and approximately as much accuracy as if the blocks were finely polished, while the rough-grinding requires scarcely one-tenth as much time. For the liquid, any non-volatile oil of suitable index may be used. A mixture of cinnamon oil (index 1.61) and of castor oil (index 1.48) has been found satisfactory. Cinnamon oil may be obtained for $2.50 and castor oil for 20c per pound; a pound of mixture will test 2000 blocks of glass. Neither oil is very volatile so that evaporation is not troublesome.

Our Fighting Allies

A Grand Selection Introducing the National Airs of Serbia, Russia, France, Belgium, England, Italy and the United States of America in the Order of Their Entrance Into the War

By M. L. Lake

MUSIC as employed for descriptive purposes stands unequalled in the sweep and power of its emotional appeal and its importance as an expressive factor for illustration of either the simplest or most dramatic problems, has long since been an acknowledged fact. Particularly as the stirring events of the present world-war are brought home to all humanity with pitiless and ever-increasing realism, has music qualified as an absolute necessity in every nation's daily life, more vitally than ever before.

The possibility of illustrating such a colossal war of nations, through means of their patriotic airs, symbolical as it were of their efforts and ideals in behalf of liberty and democracy, of presenting a musical history, so to say, of the entrance of each of the important belligerent powers into the war, offered tempting opportunities, all of which have been successfully realized in the present Grand Selection of Our Fighting Allies, a veritable paean of victory for the Allied Nations.

THE BATTLING NATIONS

The opening movement of the selection (Maestoso) introduces the War Theme, which gradually increases in volume and sonority until, with the aid of sweeping chords, it develops into the National Anthem of Serbia, the first country to enter the war, July 28, 1914. This is followed by a repetition of the War Theme at full strength and gradually develops with diminished volume into the Russian Hymn, first in quartet form, then with full force for the entire ensemble. Russia entered the war August 1, 1914.

The next movement opening with a terrific crash of tympani, followed by trumpets and the whole ensemble, gradually develops into the Marseillaise with powerful effect. France entered the war August 3, 1914.

Then follows a tearful Adagio, with the pleading, plaintive sounds of a French horn, depicting sorrow, devastation and the miseries of war; suddenly a crash of trumpets dispels this picture of gloom and despair and ushers in the National Anthem of Belgium. Belgium entered the war August 4, 1914.

Presently the sound of approaching drums is heard from afar; then faintly the air of the British Grenadiers is recognized, played by the wood-wind and drums. England has heard the cry for help and is coming to the rescue. This develops into an overpowering Maestoso, in which the flurry of battle is vividly depicted with trumpet calls against Rule Britannia in the basses and with a final climax of God Save the King. England entered the war August 4, 1914.

Again the sombre "War Theme" is heard and this time it gradually develops into the Marcia Reale. Italy entered the war May 23, 1915.

Then follows an elaborate paraphrase of the above-described material in which the National Anthem of Belgium is used as the predominating melody, played in a sustained, plaintive manner, and simultaneously interwoven (one against the other) with suitable parts of God Save the King, Marcia Reale, Marseillaise and the Russian Hymn for the wood-wind. This entire material gradually develops into a realistic battle scene, and finally culminates in a tremendous climax.

After a short pause the drums roll—starting almost inaudibly and increasing to a resounding fortissimo, then diminishing to pianissimo again and dying away. Another short pause and then comes the final climax, mighty, over-powering and all-encircling in its grandeur, the patriotic and exalted symbol of liberty and freedom, The Star Spangled Banner of the United States. The United States entered the war April 6, 1917.

While conceived as one continuous selection, each and every one of the National Airs included therein can be effectively rendered separately. This applies in particular to the Star Spangled Banner, which has been printed in the exact form authorized, and which in this way will not interfere with the prescribed ruling for public performance.

" Viviette "

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

VIVIAN MARTIN comes into her own in her portrayal of the title role of William J. Locke's excellent story, " Viviette." Miss Martin can do more than the light comedy parts which have fallen to her lot in the majority of screen vehicles furnished her by Paramount, and in this, her late picture, she demonstrates that when her work is divided between smiles and a flash, now and then of real dramatic exposition, she can step up to the plate and knock out a single or a double, and if we remember rightly, she cleans the bases at one time to bat—every time.

All of the credit for the success of this picture is not due Miss Martin, however much one will try to give her credit for the finished work which she does. Eugene Pallette comes in for his share and it lacks only a little of being the lion's share. He is entitled to all the credit usually accorded a co-star. Mr. Pallette gives one of his best performances in " Viviette." He has been given a part that calls for strenuous work in portraying. He hits the mark every time and leaves no room for doubt in the minds of his audiences as to his ability to put over a scene enacted before the camera. We learn that Mr. Pallette is expecting a call to the colors soon. We hope that he does as finished work at the front as he does before the camera. If he does —— help the Kaiser.

" Viviette " represents a photodramatic offering that will be grasped in both hands by a motion picture audience. Every line of the story affords excellent support for dramatization, and excellent support has whipped the author's ideas into perfect contour for dramatic presentation.

The author has pitted against one another brothers, having aroused all the fires of jealousy, by introducing charming little Viviette. It nearly leads to the murder of the one by the other, which in itself may appeal to some, as not the best material for reproduction on the screen. But the author has so cleverly emerged from this situation, and Director Walter Edwards has so ingeniously reproduced the change that none will find in the development of this story the slightest feeling of regret for having witnessed the picture, or heard the story of the two brothers.

From the start events move in logical sequence and there is never a moment that one feels that there has been a tendency on the part of the producer to stall—or in other words—that he had to shoot superfluous action in order that five reels of pictures might be obtained. With a full quota of dramatic material and with a corking good story to reproduce, Director Locke has forged ahead with this production and emerged from the studio with something to his credit that will stand as an example of efficient, capable, entertaining work.

Harrison Ford, as one of the brothers, does good work but his role has none of the high lights, seen in Mr. Pallette's characterization, nor was he given the opportunity that Mr. Pallette was, to demonstrate his ability. Clare Whipple is the leading feminine light in support. She has little to do. Donald Blakemore and Kate Toncray have minor roles. The photography is excellent. " Viviette " represents Miss Martin's best work in some time.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dick (Eugene Pallette) and Austin Ware Harrison are brothers of entirely different natures, impulses and tastes. Dick is impulsive and of the primitive brand. Austin is full of business, more reserved and refined. Viviette (Vivian Martin) is the adopted daughter of Mrs. Ware, the mother. Kathryn Holroyd (Clare Whipple), a young widow, friend of the family, pays them a visit. She is fond of Austin. Austin has a lucrative law practice in London. He arrives home on a visit.

Dick loves Viviette, but she pretends to be indifferent to his proposals. She wants Dick to get out in the world and make a success of life as his brother Austin has done. She asks Austin if he cannot persuade Dick to enter some sort of business. Austin and she plan to have Dick go to Vancouver, to take charge of timber lands, owned by a wealthy friend of Austin. The two keep their intentions a secret. Dick sees them together often and becomes violently jealous. He believes that Viviette loves his brother Austin.

Dick is a lover of hunting, and has in his room many old relics, among them a set of dueling pistols. He shows Kathryn Holroyd his collection, and while they are in the room Viviette and Austin enter. In a spirit of deviltry Viviette suggests that the brothers fight a duel. Dick has previously loaded one of the pistols. The brothers consent to satisfy Viviette. Dick sees a chance to avenge his jealousy, and tells Austin to choose his pistol Dick gets the one that is loaded. They turn back to back, step off the necessary paces, turn, and shoot. No other pistol discharges. Then it is discovered that Austin's pistol is loaded. He suspects his brother of attempting his life. The incident brought both brothers to the realization that the matter was serious. Dick's attitude is changed from that time on. He consents to go to Vancouver and Viviette consents to go along as his wife.

" A Square Deal "

(American-Mutual—Five Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

UNDER the mask of higher thought, many samples of lower morals are portrayed in " A Square Deal." Here is a story of a country girl carried away by the high toned phrases of a faddist, and who is led to believe she should spread her wings as does the mighty eagle, and soar over mountain tops. Her parents, a wonderful old couple—give in to her whim to go to the city and study the ologies, isms and theories and carve for herself a career in the world. Here is where Margarita Fisher shines. She becomes involved with a highbrow professor with lowbrow morals. His preachings of a square deal between man and wife make such an impression upon her, that even when she does fall in love with a worthy young lawyer, she insists that their marriage vow be in the nature of a contract, to be declared null and void at any time.

And hereupon hangs the story.

It is an interesting theme and Miss Fisher is to be commended for her conception of the part she portrays. Jack Mower too, as the young husband, acquits himself creditably—in fact the whole cast is well selected and each member gives a good rendition of the part allotted.

The so-called " Bohemianism," and the orgies carried on under its guise, are given full scope, and every feature of the film is convincing in its unfolding.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Alice Gilson (Margarita Fisher), the idol of her parents and happy in her home life, joins a highbrow Culture Club, of which Peyton Le Moyne (Val Paul) is the shining light. Although her parents (Louis M. Wells and Nanine Wright) do not approve of her new theories, they allow her to join the Bohemian colony in the big city.

She meets Thurston Bruce (Jack Mower), a young lawyer not of the Culture set, who becomes the rival of Le Moyne for her favor. Le Moyne preaches mental companionship, while Bruce woos her in a direct way. She finally consents to marry Bruce on the basis of a square deal, which insures each of them the liberty of absolute freedom, with the understanding that the marriage is to be dissolved if either finds that love has ceased to exist.

Their apartment immediately becomes the rendezvous of the " Serious Thinkers," and Bruce, longing for relaxation, is compelled to listen to their wild theories and watch Le Moyne make love to his wife under the guise of " mental companionship." As time goes on the newly-married couple drift apart, Bruce being occupied with an important lawsuit, and Alice engrossed in " new thought." Alice has now become Alys. Having occasion to go to Bruce's office of an evening, she finds him and his secretary, Marion Hamilton (Constance Johnson), in interested discussion. She becomes jealous and convinced that Bruce is in love with Marion.

Their relations becoming more and more strained, Bruce resolves to take a radical step. He tells Alys they must terminate the arrangement, according to agreement, and Alys is forced to see the justice of his attitude. She tells her troubles to Le Moyne, who reveals his true nature when he scoffs at her marriage vows and makes advances. Bruce enters during the interview, gives Le Moyne a beating, and throws him out, then leaves, telling Alys that he is going to the woman who will make a home for him.

Disillusioned and heartbrokken, Alys returns to her parents' home. As she is entering she hears Bruce's voice inquiring of her mother if she is sure the game will work. The truth dawns on her, she rushes into Bruce's arms, and the " Square Deal " ends.

Grand Theatre One of Handsomest

M. MARCUS, formerly manager of the Colonial theatre, Columbus, Ohio, has just assumed the management of the Grand theatre, Pittsburg, the new million dollar house owned by Harry Davis and unquestionably one of the very finest motion picture institutions anywhere.

The design for this theatre, which is shown here in a number of illustrations, was made by C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, and one of the foremost architects of the country. Expense was not thought of in constructing this house and the result is a reflection of the last word in elegance, comfort and safety.

The house, which was opened on March 7, occupies a plot 100 by 122 feet and seats 2,600. It is located in the heart of the business section and is built of reinforced concrete and steel. The general exterior design is French renaissance and the general interior, Italian renaissance with gold, blues and ivories used as the main color scheme. In some portions of the interior design the theatre resembles the Rivoli, New York, especially in the arrangement of the proscenium arch.

All of the lighting of the theatre is indirect, there being a main lighting system in the dome by which various tones of color can be given the whole house and similarly with the proscenium arch. In fact the lighting system is one of the most mobile in the country and all sorts of effects are produced with the presentation of pictures.

The house is ventilated with washed air and the vacuum system is used for heating.

Simplex machines are used and these have a throw of 130 feet to a Velvet Gold Fibre screen. The operating room is located at the back of the balcony and has every modern equipment. Series of loge seats are also provided in the balcony.

One of the most notable features of the theatre is the lobby arrangement. In the first place the front of the house offers ample space for display. All of the paper is placed in handpainted gold frames. The interior of the lobby is 25 x 85 feet, and here there is provided probably the most spacious ticket booth that is in any theatre. It is equipped with Automatic Ticket Selling machines and change makers. The decorations of the lobby are elaborate with the ceiling panelled. Flowers are used liberally in adding tone to the lobby.

Music is one of the biggest features of the new house. One of the largest and handsomest Bartola De Luxe instruments has been installed and it is easily one of the most popular features of the house. In addition there is a large symphony orchestra.

The Grand changes its bill once a week and gives eight shows of eight reels each day, the admission being fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five cents with the war tax additional.

ARIZONA

Harry L. Mace, owner of the Lamara theatre, Phoenix, and Jo E. Rickards, known more familiarly by his pen name, "Art Rick," owner of the Hip, have formed a co-partnership, under whose management the two theatres will be conducted. Harry Nace, who has a host of friends locally, won by his attention to patrons of his popular little house, will have charge of the booking of the pictures for both theatres, and will personally superintend the conduct of the houses proper, while Rick will extend himself along the lines that he has followed for many years, that of publicity. He is recognized by the motion picture trade from Coast to Coast as the dean of publicity men in this section, and has earned a reputation locally as a space bandit of rare attainment. This combination brings under one head both branches of the business, and on paper, looks as if the team really meant to give Phoenix something worth while in motion pictures. It is also their intention to remodel both theatres in the fall, and incidentally they are laying plans for the erection of a big modern picture theatre in the very near future. Of this latter project fuller details will be given in these columns as they develop.

CALIFORNIA

Ye Liberty Playhouse, at Berkeley, which was originally opened in 1903, but which has been dark for many moons, was formally reopened a week ago under the management of J. J. MacArthur and J. W. Jackson.

Work has already been commenced on Camp Kearney's Liberty theatre at Los Angeles, which is to have a 3,000 seating capacity. The theatre entrance will be at the end of Center street, in the Civic Center, and the natural slope down the canyon of the camp will save the Government time, labor and lumber, as the tiering of seats thus will be made simple.

The contractors estimate that the building will take about 200,000 feet of lumber, and that the theatre will cost about $30,000 when completed.

ILLINOIS

That Peoria is to have a new motion picture theatre is assured by the recent consummation ot a real estate deal whereby Vernon C. Seaver gains control of a plot of land on the northeast corner of Main and Madison streets. Mr. Seaver, who built the Mippodrome, Apollo, Duchess, Princess and Empress theatres, secured a ninety-nine-year lease on this property from Tom Webb, the owner ,and announces that he will start construction as soon as material and labor are obtained. The lot is 78 by 145 feet, thus affording room for a splendid building. The new theatre will be under the control of the Seaver Amusement Company, which now operates the Hippodrome, the Princess and Duchess theatres. It will be modeled after the new Howard theatre of Chicago, which was built by Mr. Seaver and opened only two weeks ago. It has a seating capacity of 1,800 persons.

Harry and Max Ascher, who, under the firm name of Ascher Brothers, operate a number of motion picture theatres in Chicago, have purchased, or leased, the Inter-Ocean Building at 55-59 West Monroe, and will convert it into a moving picture theatre to seat 3,000 persons, according to information received by the "Tribune." This will make it the second largest house in the loop, the Auditorium ranking first and the Orchestra Hall third. No details of the deal could be obtained either from the Aschers or from members ot the Adsit family, the Adsit estate owning the land on which the building is located. James M. Adsit and Charles C. Adsit, brothers, are bond brokers, with offices at 209 South La Salle street. Twenty years ago another theatre stood on the site of the Inter-Ocean Building—the Columbia theatre. It was destroyed by fire in the late nineties, and the site stood idle for some time. Then the Inter-Ocean Building was built.

INDIANA

The H. T. Trueblood barn on East Main street, Washington, near Meridian, is to be converted into a motion picture theatre. Remodeling plans are now being prepared by B. W. Clawson. The playhouse will be under the management of A. R. De Voe, who is now managing the American theatre in the Third Ward.

IOWA

Will Stewart opened his new Princess theatre, at Eagle Grove, recently to capacity business.

MISSOURI

B. E. Hatton has opened the Hippodrome theatre, at Columbia. This theatre has a portable roof, and can be changed to an airdome in the summer time.

MONTANA

A seven-story building is projected for Missoula, which contains many novel features and which will be one of the most talked of structures in the Northwest. It will contain a natatorium, theatre, gymnasium, soft drink parlor and two store rooms and offices. The Simons-Smead Syndicate is behind the project, and it is hoped to put the foundation in this summer. The second floor will have two store rooms, and the theatre, with main entrance from Higgins avenue. The theatre will have the largest seating capacity of any house in Montana ,and will be thoroughly equipped with all modern devices for heating, lighting, ventilation, etc.

NEW YORK

The opening ot the Plaza theatre, at Nassau, which was scheduled for Decoration Day, had to be postponed on account ot the inability of the contractors to complete the alterations. Contractor Fred Hornell, however, promises an opening at a very early date.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Frank Hyde opened his new theatre at Sioux Falls last week to good business. The Watertown orchestra furnished the music.

WASHINGTON

A $165,000 theatre building at the northwest corner of Lincoln and Sprague, Spokane, on the site of the Denver Hotel to house the Hippodrome shows, is being considered. Plans for the building have been drawn by Francis P. Rooney, and the location is arranged for. Owners of the circuit will be in Spokane soon to investigate the proposition.

"No announcement is to be made at this time except that Ackerman and Harris, of the Hippodrome Circuit, are to be in Spokane shortly, and are coming chiefly to go over the building situation," said Walker C. Smith.

"It is no secret that our present location is entirely inadequate in size and facilities ,and we could be doing a better business in Spokane if we had improved building advantages."

Eugene Levy, manager of the Orpheum theatre at the corner of Third avenue and Madison street, Seattle, announces that motion pictures are to supplant vaudeville at this million-dollar concrete, steel and marble playhouse. "There are several important reasons for the change," said Manager Levy. "First, from my viewpoint, while the Orpheum has prospered as a vaudeville house, it will do even better with its large seating capacity utilized several more times a day under the continuous operation plan followed by all picture theatres."

A new theatre is soon to go up at Sunnyside according to Robert Barnett, under whose management the new playhouse will be conducted.

Before the summer is over Tacoma will have a new motion picture theatre, to cost more than $50,000 when completed, on the site where the Melborne theatre is now in operation. Plans have been drawn up and filed with the city building inspector and permits for the erection ot the new building taken out. According to Manager Christie, of Christie Brothers, lessees of the Melborne, who will erect the new theatre, when completed the new theatre will be one of the best and most modern in the city. The Melborne which at present is showing first-class pictures and will begin to go up seats only 350 persons. The new theatre will accommodate 1,100. The lower floor of the showhouse will be enlarged to seat 800, and a spacious balcony with seating capacity for 300 more will be built. For the building of the balcony a storeroom above the present theatre facing on Commerce street, will be torn out and the upper floor of the new motion picture house put there. It is planned to have the theatre closed little more than one month for the changes, which will make it a new building. The actual changes in the building will be the lengthening and widening of the lower floor and building of the balcony, and will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000. Seats upholstered in leather will be put in all over the house at a cost of more than $8,000. A great organ, which is being manufactured especially for the new playhouse by an Eastern firm, and will be delivered late next tall, will cost many thousands more. The Melbourne will run for more than a month longer without any change to the present theatre, though work of preparing the store above for the change has already begun. Dolph Jones is handling the construction work.

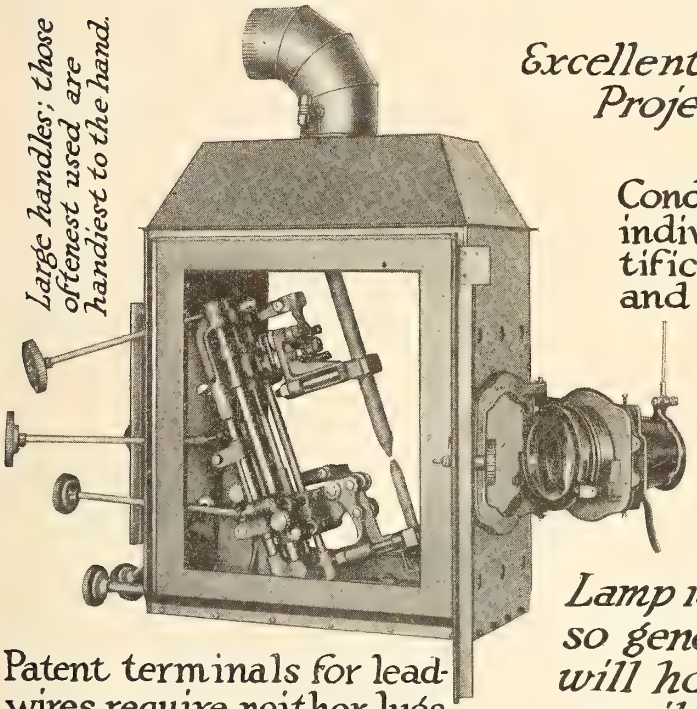
Simplex

Why the Operator is so fond of the Type "S" Simplex Lamphouse

Excellent ventilation. Double doors. Projection Room kept cool.

Condensers quickly accessible, and individually held in rings scientifically designed to expand and contract same as the lenses, reducing breakage to a mininum.



Large handles; those oftenest used are handiest to the hand.

Patent terminals for lead-wires require neither lugs nor solder, and yet provide carrying capacity ample for the most extreme needs.

Lamp is built like a machine, and so generously designed that it will hold a larger arc than can possibly be required. Can draw 150 amperes or more.

These are only a few of the reasons. In every detail this outfit is one that makes the Operator dissatisfied with any other. And it can be had only on the Simplex Projector.

The Simplex Mechanism insures projection of unequaled steadiness
The Type "S" insures clear-cut pictures, unequaled in brilliancy
It's a combination that produces profits for you—if you use it

We Thank You!

Additional Expressions of First National Appreciation will appear in this space of issue dated June 29th.

Indianapolis, Indiana.

"I want to congratulate you on the excellent quality of the work that you have been doing for us and not only has the work been satisfactory, but the promptness with which you have been attending to this printing and your attention to details has been thoroughly commendable."

(Signed) ROBERT LIEBER, President,
First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Chicago, Illinois.

"I used my best endeavors to secure for you a contract with the First National Exhibitors' Association.

From the class of work you have turned out since then I feel that my recommendation was correct, and I know from conversation with a great many other members that they are thoroughly satisfied with the work you have done. Your central location for shipping facilities is also a big help, especially with the present condition of the railroads."

(Signed) AARON J. JONES,
Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

New York City.

"I wish to add further, Mr. Rothacker, that it is a pleasure to know that we are doing business with a concern that is alive to our needs and who is capable in every way of fulfilling these needs.

We have yet to receive a complaint as regards to the printing of any of our releases received from the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, but on the other hand, have received many complimentary remarks from our trade as to the work that you have done for us."

(Signed) R. H. CLARK,
First National Exchange, Inc.

Des Moines, Iowa.

"Not only is every film that comes from your plant a credit to you, but there is a spirit of co-operation and friendliness, and a desire to please that is in evidence throughout every branch of your business. On several occasions we have had to wire quickly for prints and have never been disappointed and there has always been a cheerfulness about the way in which you have gone about taking care of our orders that causes us to rely implicitly on you at all times.

So far as I am personally concerned, if every manufacturer in the business would turn his negatives over to you to have the positive prepared for the market, the industry would be greatly benefitted, and better general film would result."

(Signed) A. H. BLANK,
A. H. Blank Enterprises.

New York City.

"Turning out over two hundred prints of a three reel picture in the short time that you have done this work certainly establishes a new record for speed, particularly when the fact is taken into consideration that the development and photography is up to the highest standard in every way."

(Signed) H. SCHWALBE, Secretary,
First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

St. Louis, Missouri.

"We feel that the service you have rendered is highly satisfactory, and personally we are very well pleased."

(Signed) WM. SIEVERS.
Grand Central Film Company.

Detroit, Michigan.

"It affords me great pleasure to be given an opportunity to express my appreciation of the high standard of the work rendered by you in the production of prints of the various photoplays supplied to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and of the prompt and efficient service that you have been rendering in connection therewith. With the modern, up-to-date, completely equipped plant such as you have, I presume that you could not help but turn out first class work; but the personnel of your organization is such that it is a pleasure to do business with it, not only because of your efficient, prompt treatment, but because of the friendly, courteous treatment accorded."

(Signed) JOHN H. KUNSKY,
John H. Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises.

Seattle, Washington.

"It gives us great pleasure to inform you that we have been more than pleased with the work and the efficiency of the service you have given The First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

We wish to especially thank you for your promptness in forwarding our prints on "A Dog's Life," the first Chaplin comedy. The quality and the finish of the prints you are sending us are all that can be desired and during the recent Stockholders' Meeting of The First National Exhibitors' Circuit in New York, every member of the Circuit with whom the writer has come in contact, spoke in the highest terms of your concern."

"Missing"

Picturization Personally Supervised by J STUART BLACKTON

A Paramount Picture

AN INSPIRATION to the WOMEN AT HOME

"MISSING" is one of the finest of all the war plays, for it is first of all a tremendous drama of love and sacrifice. Mrs. Humphry Ward's famous novel uses the great war as a setting for a story as big and as vital as the war itself.

Your patrons are going to welcome this J. Stuart Blackton production, for it brings a definite message to the people back of the line—the message of solace that every wife and mother is vainly groping for.

"Missing" is the motion picture of the hour, the very play America needs—a comfort and an inspiration to the women who have to stay at home.

THE Motion Picture News conducts a splendid service bureau—"run by the exhibitors whom we have selected as representatives of the industry," The News announces. "They are all exhibitors, men whose chief interest is the prosperity of the showman."

The News itself emphasizes the last sentence.

The advice you get from these men is for only one purpose—to help you make more money.

Twenty-six of the most successful exhibitors in America tell you why they prosper.

It is significant that, almost without exception, these men are Paramount [and Artcraft exhibitors.

Read what some of the members of the Motion Picture News Volunteer Board say about these pictures

EDWARD L. HYMAN, Victoria Theatre, Buffalo (Member of Advisory Board Exhibitor's Service Bureau.)—"Paramount and Artcraft Pictures have proven in every sense to be money-makers as well as patron-makers. The uninterrupted presentation for three years of Paramount Pictures and the exhibition of Artcraft productions since their inception, in the Victoria Theatre, is one of the most flattering testimonials as to their true merit. I never have hesitated to use the Paramount and Artcraft trade marks in my advertising matter and upon the screen. They seem to serve as advance guarantees of merit and satisfaction."

SAM. W. B. COHN, Secretary and General Manager Liberty Theatre, Spokane (Member of Advisory Board Exhibitor's Service Bureau.)—"The Paramount and Artcraft combination is making 'em sit up and take notice here in Spokane—and that's going some! Every Paramount and Artcraft release sends the fans out of the house boosting! And when I say 'every' I mean it!"

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, Manager Shea Hippodrome Co., Buffalo (Member of Advisory Board Exhibitor's Service Bureau.)—"Your organization has, to our mind, kept faith with the exhibitor when you promised us Great Stars, Fine Plays and Splendid Direction."

FRANK L. NEWMAN, Pres. and Manager Royal and Regent Theatres, Kansas City, Mo. (Member of Advisory Board Exhibitor's Service Bureau.)—"I attribute the success of my theatres to Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. We have had a consistent policy of showing Paramount and Artcraft Pictures exclusively. An exhibitor who is not using Paramount and Artcraft Pictures, I feel, is under a handicap in making a success of his theatre and is not giving the people what they want."

H. M. THOMAS, Strand Theatre, Omaha (Member of Advisory Board Exhibitor's Service Bureau.)—"Paramount and Artcraft Pictures represent the very best standard of features that can be obtained to-day."

E. V. RICHARDS, Jr., General Manager Sænger Amusement Co., New Orleans (Member of Advisory Board Exhibitor's Service Bureau.)—"All good things speak for themselves and in this instance Paramount and Artcraft Pictures hold their own among the hundred million souls of the U. S. A."

GEO. E. CARPENTER, Manager Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City (Member of Advisory Board Exhibitor's Service Bureau.)—"A Famous Players-Lasky contract is our biggest asset for continued prosperity."

"THE SOAP GIRL"

A Whimsical Love Drama of High Society Life

by Louis Allen Browne

Directed by Martin Justice

Her father was a millionaire. Yet she had never been admitted to Society's inmost circle.

For her father, with all his millions, was just a soap manufacturer.

And then—just as she was "breaking in" to the charmed circle, just before the announcement of her engagement to Richard Van Ruhl, nephew of Society's dominating dowager —then—

Father Soap Manufacturer exploded a bombshell.

He launched a national advertising campaign for his famous Sanford Soap. And the face of the bathing model on the posters that screamed from thousands of billboards all over the continent, was the face of the daughter whom he had meant to boost into fame.

Nice for the girl, wasn't it? Was her woman's wit sharp enough to cut through all the ridicule that her well-meaning father had created?

"The Soap Girl" tells a real story. It's human—it's intimate—it's appealing. And you'll find it a box-office picture.

The hardest thing to destroy on a battleship is the fighting mast, because the steel strands of its framework are so interwoven that every strand braces every other strand.

By uniting exhibitor and producer in a framework of mutual interests, the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan has created a business structure equaling in strength and durability, the fighting masts of the American greyhounds.

Like the fighting mast, each factor of the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan, contributes to the well being of every other, to the end that the investments of all are protected and perpetuated.

TRIANGLE

DAMMING THE CURRENT

ONE of the impossible things in nature is to permanently dam a running body of water.

ALL the engineers in the world with all the forces at their command could not stop the flow of the Mississippi River.

NEITHER can progress in the motion picture business be checked.

TRIANGLE saw that the fabulous prices being paid to large numbers of so-called motion picture stars could never be sustained because the enormously swollen rentals of films could not be successfully met by exhibitors.

THESE outrageous rentals acted like a dam to the stream of profits which motion picture exhibitors should have been, but were not making.

THE waters of opposition rose higher and higher. The pressure on the dam became terrific.

TRIANGLE got to the dam and split it wide open. At first the crack only permitted a small volume of water to flow through. But the Triangle policy of higher profits for exhibitors gradually widened the opening.

BUSINESS began to pour into Triangle. The stream of profits for exhibitors began to run through in an ever widening channel.

TRIANGLE tore aside that part of the dam given over to "secret agreements and secret diplomacy." The Triangle policy was a fair and square one, open and above-board and based on the principle of making the exhibitor a success.

ANOTHER huge hole in the dam.

ENORMOUS success has crowned the efforts of Triangle and Triangle exhibitors as a whole.

SO if anybody is damming your business with unreasonable rentals, poor service, or unfair business methods, just turn your business into the Triangle channel and watch that dam disappear.

Starring

Carlyle Blackwell Kitty Gordon
Montagu Love June Elvidge

Directed by Harley Knoles

What New York Critics Say:

TIMES:
"Crowd gets thrill in 'Stolen Orders.' It provides a succession of thrills. Stirring scenes."

HERALD:
"'Stolen Orders' is filled with action. Such was the interest in the picture that the playhouse was crowded to capacity, notwithstanding the heat. 'Stolen Orders' on the screen is twice as exciting as on the stage."

TRIBUNE:
"It is seldom indeed that one finds a picture so entirely satisfactory in every detail. The story is interesting from the first foot of film, and never for one instant is interest allowed to flag. It is all very exciting."

MORNING WORLD:
"It should have no difficulty in capturing popular approval with its thrilling story and exciting situations, all of which are very well suited to the needs of the movies."

TELEGRAPH:
"Decidedly entertaining, besides being good propaganda."

EVENING MAIL:
"Goes over the top successfully. A large audience fanned and perspired for two hours without one spectator leaving the auditorium. At the end of the picture there was a genuine and generous tribute. If it receives the support it deserves it will be running for a long, long time."

GLOBE:
"Some new thrills are given the people in 'Stolen Orders.' It is an interesting and thrilling production."

EVENING SUN:
"A masterpiece. The action is continuous throughout the picture. The picture's most thrilling moments centre about a Zeppelin in midair. The illusion is perfect."

MORNING SUN:
"Thrilling."

EVENING TELEGRAM:
"Exciting thrills."

JOURNAL OF COMMERCE:
"'Stolen Orders' is full of excitement. The picture is a better show than the speaking version. A thrilling tale of the American navy and German spies."

P. S. Harrison in MOTION PICTURE NEWS:
"This is a good production. It is the kind that will offer your patrons entertainment worth their money. The story is very interesting. It is a picture that will appeal to all classes."

VARIETY:
"A corking, suspensive melodrama dear to the hearts of the picture patrons. A series of hair-raising episodes that hold one grippingly."

PLANNING THE FUTURE

A Long-Arm Reach

¶ Having covered the trade field—maintaining, always, a minimum of waste circulation—MOTION PICTURE NEWS is now reaching the public through a novel and important enterprise.

Arrangements have been concluded with the well-known King Features Syndicate of 37 West 39th Street, New York City, whereby a weekly news service from the reading columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be retailed with timeliness to the leading newspapers of the country.

¶ Important happenings within the trade and studio will therefore be given a public circulation running into the millions.

Our objects are:

To help build up the photoplay sections of the newspapers so that the exhibitor may be brought adequately in touch with the greater motion picture public.

To make more prominent and through authentic news to give the public a correct impression of the motion picture and its great industry.

So far as we know this is the first step of this kind ever taken by a trade paper in any field; the first extension of trade news beyond the trade and to the public through the public prints.

PERSHING'S
CRUSADERS

OFFICIAL U.S. WAR FILM RELEASED BY COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION
GEORGE CREEL, CHAIRMAN

First U. S. Official War Feature

The United States is at war with Germany. Its preparations are stupendous, its achievements great.

All Americans want full and accurate information concerning these activities. More important, the motive and purpose of this conflict should be better understood by all the people of this country.

The Government will use motion pictures to convey this information. These films will be shown in theatres everywhere from the metropolitan city to the rural village. They will be released regularly in various forms, from news service to special features. The first of these is showing not only General Pershing and our boys at the Front, but telling graphically how Uncle Sam is feeding, clothing and transporting these sons of America.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS"

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" has already played some of the largest cities of the United States with unusual success. At Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee and at other points the public has registered at the box office its intention to see this film.

What the Newspapers say:

New York Times: "'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS' is far and away the best compilation of war pictures exhibited here since the beginning of the European struggle."

Washington Herald: "It is a picture that makes the cheeks tingle with pride, and the graphic portrayal of America's coming might is a thing that tightens the throat."

St. Louis Dispatch: "The pictures are . . . extremely thrilling in the realism with which they show what it means to be a soldier in the world's greatest war."

Cleveland Press: "Scenes of staggering immensity."

Chicago Post: "There is a break in the voice and a sob in the throat when we mention 'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS'; there is so much that should be said and so little that can be said adequately."

The Milwaukee Wisconsin: "'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS' registers enough facts to have done credit to the United States if three years instead of one had been consumed."

Buffalo Times: "Applause was thunderous."

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" was taken by the U. S. Signal Corps and Navy Photographers and the French General Staff

Democracy's Weapon and Defense

SOME very important statements are made by Frank J. Marion, president of Kalem, who has just returned from an intimate experience with warring and neutral Europe.

They are of particular importance at the moment, in view of the fact that Washington will shortly judge the industry as an essential or non-essential one.

He says, with emphasis, that the motion picture is a factor of tremendous importance at the battle front in building and maintaining the morale of the American and Allied troops; and that military authorities so are agreed.

Secondly, and of equally great importance to world freedom and this country's salvation, the motion picture is obviously the leading agent today in undoing the poison of German propaganda in neutral countries; in saving the day for the cause of civilization; and in telling the truth in neutral countries about the often badly misrepresented United States.

On the two foregoing counts alone can there exist any justification for viewing as non-essential the industry of the motion picture?

We are speaking now, of necessity, of the American motion picture and of the American picture industry, since the world's output of pictures is very largely of American make.

We feel very strongly on this subject.

And we are writing not as one commercially interested but as an American and as a journalist—and as indeed several journalists have written.

There are many who believe—we are one—that Russia could have been saved from its relapse to savagery and kept to the Allies' cause through the adequate use in time of propaganda, the chief agent of which is the motion picture.

And there are many who say that had Russia been saved in this manner the war would have been shortened to the extent of saving millions of lives.

In fact these two beliefs, it seems, are scarcely open to argument.

Is then, the making of the motion picture a non-essential industry during this war?

We fear it is true that in some minds the motion picture stands only as an amusement hall device.

Perhaps there are some of these minds in Congress.

If so the light should be let in.

The light should be let in, in the cause of humanity, in the cause of the country, in the cause of the lives of the millions on the battle line, in the cause of civilization itself.

The motion picture is a new medium of expression—and the greatest of all.

The motion picture is right on a par with the newspaper.

The mere fact that the newspaper is read by one person and that pictures are seen by groups does not change the parallel status of the two mediums of expression.

If the making of pictures is non-essential in war times then, too, is the printing of newspapers non-essential.

But why stop the most powerful of all agents of propaganda when it is freely said and widely known that propaganda in this war does the work of millions of soldiers and saves or destroys millions of lives?

Let the truth be known.

If action is taken, with the truth unknown, then, certainly, one of the highest and most regrettable blunders in the world's history will have been committed.

All of which, as we state, is the heartfelt belief of a journalist viewing a situation too grave and too great to countenance a suspicion of commercial bias.

The Issue Seems Settled

WE are publishing this week four very important letters from Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Food Commissioner Hoover, Coal Commissioner Garfield and Chairman Creel of the Committee on Public Information. They reach us through the courtesy of Charles S. Hart, Chairman of the film division of Mr. Creel's Committee; and to these two gentlemen the industry will feel grateful for their interest in the industry's best interests.

The industry's best interests right now are the Government's best interests, and the Allies' best interests and the best interests of the greatest cause ever at stake; and we have no doubt but that Messrs. Creel and Hart feel quite this way in this very important matter.

It would be paradoxical indeed for the Government to maintain a film division of its Committee on Public Information if the motion picture and its continued production were non-essential to the Government at war.

And Mr. Hart's untiring activities to tell this country through film, what the United States is doing and will continue to do are non-essential if the film is non-essential. "Pershing's Crusaders," it is just announced, is to be distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of theatres and exchanges. Are the mechanics, then, of the film industry non-essential?

The question is so well answered, on the face of it, and by the frank statements of official Washington that further discussion seems unnecessary; and we may, we believe, consider the matter settled.

"Non-essentials," says Mr. Hoover, "are all relative to our necessities." Labor, he says, of mechanical or agricultural training should get back into these callings. But these labor demands of course need not close down to comparatively small machinery of a great agent of public information.

Mr. Creel says he believes in the motion picture as he believes in the press.

Here is the big point. Herein lies the big truth about the motion picture. And we reiterate in the Government's behalf alone too much insistence cannot be laid upon this fact in the minds of those who as yet have not grasped the distinction between an entertainment hall device and what inherently is the newest and greatest medium of expression.

Those Re-Titled Re-Issues

IN the June 8th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS the First National Exhibitors' Circuit protested against the reissue of old film under new titles as misleading to the public and destructive of the best interests of the producing and distributing industries.

A committee of the picture industry was asked for by J. D. Williams to decide the issue.

In our following issue, of June 15th, the W. H. Productions Company, which has sold territory on the Hart and Chaplin reissues, stated that certain of Mr. Williams' associates owning or operating exchanges had purchased reissues from the W. H. Productions Co. and were using the advertising literature sent out with the reissues, etc.

Since the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, as is well known, is now handling the new Chaplin pictures, this announcement of the W. H. Productions Co. might be construed as referring to Chaplin reissues.

Telegraphic replies from the exchanges indicate they have not purchased Chaplin reissues. We are informed by the W. H. Productions Co. that all of these exchanges did purchase the Hart reissues and one only purchased the Chaplin reissues.

The advertising statement of W. H. Productions Co. was incorrect in that it referred to Jake Wells, Inc., as a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Jake Wells, Inc., was a member of this Circuit, but sold his franchise some months ago.

The Virginia franchise is now held by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Virginia, Frank Ferrandini, president.

Also T. E. Larsen, Oklahoma City, may not be properly called a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. He is, we are informed, Manager for Oklahoma for E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, Texas, member for the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

The issue of the controversy still stands as before; and in this connection MOTION PICTURE NEWS wishes to go on record, and emphatically, on the following important points.

First, we believe that reissues under new titles—unless the old name is published with at least equal prominence—is very apt to mislead the public.

Misleading the public will serve to destroy its valuable confidence in the motion picture and the industry back of it.

The existing statutes may define this style of advertising as fraudulent.

Furthermore, and of great importance, it is obvious that new pictures of famous stars cannot profitably be produced if old pictures are allowed to compete with them under what the public construes as a new name and therefore a new picture.

This, it is equally obvious, is destructive of the industry's normal and necessary development.

Secondly, and with equal emphasis, we point out that this controversy does not apply whatsoever to pictures properly reissued.

We believe and have often stated that reissues—wherever logical—are a fine, healthy thing for the industry.

The public wants them; and they go far to offset that huge waste to the industry caused by the daily change and the hasty and imperfect distribution necessary to meet it.

Thirdly, we believe it a sensible suggestion that an issue so important to the entire industry be put into the hands of a competent committee to be settled. We have little doubt that they would settle it and thereby avoid a confusing controversy, of which this publication has been made an innocent member and in a manner unfair and unfortunate.

As we go to press we are glad to receive the announcement from W. H. Productions Co. that with the desire to protect the best interests of the Exchanges which have purchased their reissues, they are sending out strips with the words "formerly known as ———" and then giving the old name of the reissue to be added to all posters, whether the latter does not carry the old name at all or carries it in smaller type.

Wild Rumors

SCARY rumors are in the air that the industry's heavy war tax may be increased. We believe they are "scary" and "in the air" only—or else mysteriously inspired.

So far as any one knows the figures of this industry it is self evident that a further tax burden would automatically and seriously reduce the present revenue to the Government, by closing up part, if not all, of the business.

We make emphatic, however, a suggestion made before: that if anyone has to be sent to Washington to be an accountant with a full set of figures—and not a lawyer, nor any committees of the separate or allied branches of the industry.

If the industry can be taxed further it should be; if not, it should not be.

Figures alone will answer this simple question.

And Washington wants only—figures!

Doing Their Bit

TWO weeks ago we published an announcement of the remarkable showing of long runs made by "The Unbeliever."

This and other successful specials of a patriotic nature deserve high recognition by the industry. First and foremost they are doing for the country and our Allies an amount of good that is inestimable. Secondly, by setting the pace of longer runs they are helping smooth out the industry's greatest economic wrinkle.

A Good Idea

PHILADELPHIA lays claim to a remarkable exhibitor—Manager Fuhrman of the Imperial theatre. He pays an employee five dollars for every new and good idea on improving house service.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

LISTEN—we know you are busy. We know that you have to go into "a conference" in a few minutes. We know that the rest of the day will probably be taken up in the projection room. And that it will be five-thirty and your desk will still be loaded up with letters that should have been answered and work that should be done to-day.

But—don't skim through your MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week. There are a couple of news stories that you must read—and read closely—despite the fact that it doesn't leave you time to even skim over the rest of the book.

First—read what Secretary McAdoo and other high Washington officials have to say about the motion picture as an essential industry. These statements are important now—and they are going to be more and more important with each day that passes, with each drop of Uncle Sam's blood that is shed on Europe's battlefields.

You can't afford to be on the defensive—you don't have to be if you meet any argument that comes, either in a personal or business way, with an answer in the words of officials at Washington.

So prepare for the months that come by reading and noting in memory now the letters on Page 3677.

Extry! Extry! Another addition to the Fillum Athletic Club!

Benny Schulberg has a bare inch or two of excess avoirdupois which is causing him considerable worry, and he confessed to us the other day that his application is in for membership in our little Fillum Athletic Club. Al Lichtman prescribed tennis but Benny thinks more of the gymnasium idea.

Without knocking we hazard a query—if Benny is worried over an inch or so what will he do when he attains the proportions of his boss, Hiram Abrams?

TO continue where we started: After you have read those letters from Uncle Sam just flip the page and come to the interview with Frank J. Marion, of the Kalem Company, telling of his trip through Spain and the battlefront.

Prepare to pat yourself on the back, to feel a thrill of pride run down your spine—for the message that Mr. Marion brings back from the battlefront regarding the motion picture only confirms in first hand evidence every word that the Government officials have said.

And another point:

Regard for the character of the man and reasons of State prevent us from spilling over this page a lot of superlative adjectives that our spirit prompts in a note of congratulation to the motion picture industry on its good fortune in having had Frank Marion on its European mission—but, gosh, how we would like to!

But Frank Marion wouldn't like it, and—well, the whole blamed industry knows it is darned lucky to have had Frank Marion on the job, so what's the use of shouting the obvious?

If we were sure that Watterson Rothacker were back in Chicago where he couldn't strike back we'd like to write a paragraph of some kind here that accidentally brought in a description labeling him "The Boy Wonder."

But as we are not certain—and we do know that phrase would make him sore—we'll merely mention the fact that he was up and down Broadway last week leaving in his wake his usual bundle of effervescence, optimism, good cheer, smiles, and what not.

Watterson R. is a mental tonic—and a walking advertisement of his own goods.

SPEAKING of Rothacker reminds us that the National Association held a meeting last Wednesday. We know it because the trade paper members of the Association were favored with an official flimsy of the proceedings on Saturday—one non-member on Friday—and the account appears on Page 3676.

Rothacker's name reminded us of the meeting because that entergetic person has been appointed chairman of the membership committee. After listening to a half hour oration as to the need of a National Association and all the good that it could do—with all of which we agree heartily—we warn you to watch his trail. He'll pull new members in about as fast as they can sign their name on the dotted line.

Jack Flinn, Jerome Beatty and Pete Schmidt were hosts to the bulk of MOTION PICTURE NEWS last Thursday at a belated May party.

A good time was had by all.

Chateau Thierry papers please copy.

A GLANCE through the producer news of the week would give you the impression that this is going to be a "Re-Issue Summer."

Which isn't a bad idea when you consider the class of subjects which the producers are offering in re-edited productions.

Fox, for example, has picked the six winners that made the name of Fox and also many exhibitors. A list of productions headed by "A Fool There Was" certainly does speak for itself.

Then Metro offers "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman"—that well-remembered Anthony Kelly story that arrived in the Metro program unheralded and left with a trail of success. Another Metro success brought up to date is "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Re-issues of such class need not be afraid to show their heads.

If there isn't an anti-yellow dog club in every city of the country before Summer wanes, Nat Rothstein will probably be mad enough to go over and lick the Kaiser himself. For the vigorous Universal advertising director is just eating, sleeping and dreaming "The Yellow Dog" these days.

And he threatens to put any trade paper editor who fails to do likewise in the "Yellow Dog" class.

Brady Appoints N. A. Committee

Hotel Astor Meeting of National Association Plans Greater Unity in Dealings with the Government Authorities

PLANS for greater unity in dealings with the Government and the appointment of various committees were the results of the meeting of the National Association at the Hotel Astor last Wednesday. While it is understood that the large attendance of film company executives, exhibitors and others present also discussed the industry's attitude on possible coming taxes no mention of this was found in the official statement made to the trade press following the closed meeting.

An interesting feature of the meeting is the recognition by President William A. Brady in the appointment of one committee of the American Exhibitors' Association, though that body received a curt snub when it some months ago made application for membership in the National Association.

Watterson Rothacker supplied the other high light of the meeting when he reported as chairman of the membership committee for the middle west a bigger membership gain than the association has made at any single meeting since its inception two years ago. After showing how to get new members Rothacker was rewarded with appointment as chairman of a national membership committee.

The new members rounded up by the live wire Chicagoan as mid-west chairman include the Haworth Pictures Corporation, of Los Angeles; the following organizations from New York — Educational Films Corporation, Art Laboratories, Inc., Baumer Films, Inc., and one Chicago representative — the Mutual Film Corporation.

William Fox was invited by President Brady to take the chair at the opening of the meeting and set forth in vigorous manner his views regarding the present state of the industry. Others who took part in the discussion that followed include: President Brady, P. A. Powers, Walter W. Irwin, Samuel Goldfish, Arthur S. Friend, J. Robert Rubin, Lee A. Ochs, Ernest H. Horstman and Alfred S. Black.

A Committee on Ways and Means intended to provide closer relationship with Government activities was named as follows: Producers, Arthur S. Friend; Distributors, Walter W. Irwin; Supply and Equipment, Edward Earl; Laboratories, Watterson Rothacker; Exporters, David P. Howells; National Exhibitors' League, Lee Ochs; American Exhibitors' Association, H. B. Varner.

A Finance Committee to "provide adequate funds to carry on the work of the association," was named as follows: P. A. Powers, Arthur S. Friend, William Fox, Ricord Gradwell, J. E. Brulatour and James M. Sheldon.

President Brady announced that members of the industry had taken ten million dollars' worth of Liberty Bonds, and that one hundred million dollars' worth had been sold through the work of the industry. He also stated that meetings of each of the five branches of the association would be held during June to nominate directors to be elected at the annual meeting in Boston during the week of July 13-20.

The following were among those present: W. E. Atkinson, Metro Pictures Corporation; Ben Atwell, representing C. F. Zittel, International Film Corporation; William A. Brady, William A. Brady Picture Plays, Inc.; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; J. A. Berst, United Picture Theatres, Inc.; J. R. Bray, Bray Studios; B. N. Busch, World Film Corp.; Benjamin Burton, Art Films; A. S. Black, of Maine; J. R. Brophy, Craftsmen Film; S. Brown, Charter Feature Films; R. H. Cochrane, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Willard Cook, Pathescope, Col. George I. Cooks, Alpha Litho. Company; Paul Cromelin, Inter Ocean Film Corporation; C. D. Chapman, Art Film; Edward Earle, Nicholas Power Company; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association; Felix Feist, World Film Corporation; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; N. H. Friend, Bray Studios; William Fox, Fox Film Corporation; W. R. Greene, Artcraft Pictures Corporation; Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Sam. Grant, Boston, Mass.; E. W. Hammons, Educational Film; David P. Howells, First National Exhibitors' Circuit; Ernest H. Horstmann, Boston, Mass.; F. J. Hawkins, Hawworth Pictures Corporation; Walter W. Irwin, Greater Vitagraph Company; L. L. Innerarity, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Albert Loew, Paragon Films, Inc.; Gus Mohme, Biograph Company; Lee A. Ochs, National M. P. Exhibitors' League; A. E. Selig, Selig Polyscope Company; Emil Shauer, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; William Wright, Kalem Company.

Red Cross Carnival for Staten Island

A great display of motion pictures, the appearance of artists of the screen and stage and of operatic soloists are expected to mark the big Red Cross Carnival at Midland Beach, Staten Island, Friday and Saturday, June 28 and 29.

One of the novel features of the carnival will be a great picture screen built like a solid wall in the water just off shore. On the screen will be presented war pictures and the newest screen productions. The screen, projection apparatus and operators will be contributed by William L. Sherry.

The proceeds of the carnival will be for the benefit of the Red Cross, the entertainments being under the direction of committees of the Staten Island Chapter, headed by Mrs. William G. Wilcox, chairman of the chapter, and Borough President Calvin D. Van Name.

Paramount Gets Flagg New Series

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces the signing of a contract whereby James Montgomery Flagg will provide a series of comedies to be released soon under the Paramount trademark.

The theme of the series will be "Sweethearts and Wives," and each release, which will be in two reels, will appear under a distinctive title, the first of which will be "It's Greek to Us," and the second "Romance in Brass Tacks." There will be sixteen separate subjects to the series, which will be released on dates which will not conflict with Paramount-Mack Sennett and Paramount-Arbuckle comedies.

Ohio Court Holds Sunday Shows Illegal

Sunday motion picture shows are illegal in Ohio, according to a decision of the Supreme Court, rendered May 28th in the case of William Sanden, an exhibitor of Medina County. The decision sustains an opinion of a lower court from which the exhibitor had appealed.

Ohio exhibitors are of the opinion that the decision will make little difference in those cities of the state where Sunday shows are now regularly given. Mayor John Galvin, of Cincinnati, speaking of the decision, said:

"As an affirmation of the lower court's decision of the law the Supreme Court's verdict is, of course, of value. But it will probably be just as difficult to secure a conviction now as it was several years ago when we tried strenuously but without success."

Mutual Co-operates with Tobacco Fund

Strong co-operation with the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" has been volunteered by the Mutual Film Corporation in connection with the release of the one-reel Strand comedy, "My Lady Nicotine."

Arrangements by which the exchanges of the Mutual Corporation will facilitate the distribution of subscription blanks and posters boosting the Tobacco Fund to theatres showing "My Lady Nicotine" were handled by D. J. Sullivan, assistant general manager of the Mutual and Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the fund.

It is expected that exhibitors using the patriotic advertising in connection with the comedy featuring Billy Rhodes will be able to report large contributions from their patrons. MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which has been of material assistance in consummating the arrangements, will publish a weekly record of the contributions received through the theatres.

Nation Pays High for Theatres

A detailed report of taxes derived from various sources for the upkeep of the war, made public last week, shows that the tax collections indicated the nation's theatre bill for April was nearly $40,000,000. This amount is said to be under the figures reported for March. Ordinary and war taxes collected in April totaled $93,700,000. The nation's war bill for one day is nearly $50,000,000.

General Makes Kelley Manager

James B. Kelley, otherwise known as "Smiling Jim," has been appointed branch manager at Dallas for General Film Company, according to an announcement made this week. He has been serving as special representative for General Film product out of the Dallas office, where he served as a salesman several years ago. He is one of the best known film men in the southwest and south.

"Don't Hamper Screen"—Uncle Sam

UNCLE SAM, in the person of four of his most important workers, has come to the front to say "the last word" on the question concerning the motion pictures necessity in war time.

Thanks to co-operation by George Creel, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information and Charles Hart, Director of the Division of Films, the following letters were secured. They should put an effective quietus on the move to class the motion picture as a non-essential and in many communities to discourage attendance at picture theatres.

Exhibitors should be certain to preserve this page. Use of these letters in advertisements and programs cannot fail to prove valuable.

Mr. Charles Hart,
Director, Division of Films,
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Hart:

This is an acknowledgment of your letter, calling my attention to the growth of a movement against the continuance of the motion picture theatre on the theory that it is non-essential. As you know, my own views are not only definite but a matter of record. I believe in the motion picture just as I believe in the press, and in my work it plays just as powerful a part in the production and stimulation of an aroused and enlightened war sentiment. The motion picture industry as a whole has put itself squarely behind the Government and at the disposal of the Government, and I cannot speak too highly of the importance and effectiveness of its services.

Because I do not wish to speak out of my own experience entirely, or in any manner to run counter to the policies of other governmental divisions, I took the whole matter up at once with Secretary McAdoo, Doctor Garfield, and Mr. Hoover, and I enclose you copies of their letters.

Believe me,
Very sincerely,
(Signed) GEORGE CREEL,
Chairman.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION
Washington, May 25, 1918.

Dear Mr. Creel:

I would say that at the present moment there is no necessity to close the moving pictures as non-essentials. To me, non-essentials are all relative to our necessities. I believe it is essential to get all of the labor in the United States who have mechanical or agricultural training back into these callings. This does not at all imply that the moving pictures should be closed down; in fact they are educational and they have great value from a moral point of view. War does not imply the abolition of recreation—so long as it is not wasteful of national resources.

Long before the movies are closed, they should be given ample opportunity to engage women for such of the work as is now carried on by men who can be replaced. That is, all such people as ushers, ticket-selling people and so on, can quite properly be replaced by women. So far as I know, none of the countries at war have found it necessary to go farther than this.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) HERBERT HOOVER.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY
Washington, May 25th, 1918.

My dear Mr. Creel:

I have your letter of the 23rd of May, informing me that a movement is sweeping over the country to close moving picture theatres on the ground that they are non-essential.

I am amazed that such a movement should gain any headway. While there have undoubtedly been many harmful moving pictures displayed in the past, and while it is probable that some of this kind of pictures are still being displayed, I consider the influence of moving pictures, particularly during the war, a beneficial one. The people of the country who are working at high pressure to win the war need some form of recreation, and to a vast number of our people moving pictures are the only form of recreation within their means. The majority of the moving picture theatres of the country have placed themselves unreservedly at the disposal of the Government for the furtherance of Liberty Loans, War Savings, and other Government movements, and deserve the thanks of the country for their patriotic attitude. I should look upon it as a misfortune if moving pictures or other clean forms of amusement in America should be abolished.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) W. G. McADOO,
Secretary.

George Creel, Esq.,
Chairman, Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1918.

Mr. George Creel, Chairman,
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Creel:

So far as I have any personal conviction in the matter, I am frank to say that I consider the motion picture, properly controlled, as having distinct educational value, and as well being a legitimate amusement which I see no present need of the government curtailing.

Yours very truly,
H. A. GARFIELD,
United States Fuel Administrator.

Pathe Pays Bonus to Employes

Presentation of Two Productions on Broadway Followed Also by News That Other Big Pictures Are Forthcoming

INDICATION of the prosperity of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is found in the announcement this week by that organization that a big bonus has been paid to employes. This, together with the presentation of "More Trouble" and "The Yellow Ticket" at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, is taken as proof of the company's intention to progress steadily under the guidance of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager.

"No words could better show the prosperity of this company," said a Pathe official in discussing the trend of the industry, "than the single statement: Pathe has just declared a bonus.

"Nothing could more clearly indicate the great organization Pathe is building."

Among the Pathe employes who received the latest bonus are the following: W. E. Raynor, B. Sanford, M. Marsh, A. M. Holah, Henry Laws, D. C. Stearns, E. A. Helouis, R. Shrader, Paul McDaniels, C. B. Haskett, F. W. Gebhardt, Leo Adler, A. Reinlieb, Miss M. Dougherty, M. Kohn, A. Goodman, J. W. Fuller, L. Lowe, E. E. Heller, Thomas Lark.

F. C. Quimby, sales manager, is now on a tour that will take him to the following cities: Chicago, Minneapolis, Spokane, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Denver, Oklahoma, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte, and his long trip is taken for the purpose of furthering the efficient co-operation between home office and branches in accordance with the policy outlined by Mr. Brunet.

One of the first official acts of the new chief executive was to establish the Pathe Selective Service Method of booking features and it is this policy which is considered responsible for the big results Pathe is now getting with its features.

In the immediate future the company will release in all exchanges the seven-reel Pathe Special Feature, "Moral Suicide" with John Mason, Leah Baird, and Anne Luther, written and directed by Ivan Abramson.

Another six-reel special on the way will be "Common Clay," the A. H. Woods stage play starring Fannie Ward. "A Japanese Nightingale" is another coming Ward play. Pathe will also release "The Woman Eternal," a Ralph Ince picture.

First Nat'l Gets "Crusaders"

United States Official Film to Be Distributed Nationally Following Run at the Lyric in New York City

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, under George Creel's Committee on Public Information, that the contract for the national distribution of "Pershing's Crusaders," a Government picture, has been awarded to First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

In speaking the arrangement, Mr. Hart said: "In placing this film, the first official U. S. feature, for distribution through the regular motion picture channels, our purpose is to have it reach the largest possible number of people.

"While the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will handle this picture nationally, it has been necessary to withhold the states of California, North Dakota and Michigan, because of contracts which already existed to handle United States war pictures through their State Councils of Defense. Exhibitors in these three states will apply to their State Councils for bookings.

"The circulation of 'Pershing's Crusaders' to the public, reaching as it will peoples of all nationalities within the United States, should have, and without doubt will have, a most beneficial effect.

"The primary object of the United States Official Films is to publish information of our Government's war activities. Hardly a home in the land but has sent at least one boy to the front; then they have contributed money to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., bought Liberty Bonds, and in other ways supported war enactments. Naturally these patriotic citizens want to know how their boys are being cared for and what is being done with this money.

"United States Official War Films tell the complete story. They depict more graphically than words the actual facts. In 'Pershing's Crusaders,' for example, we see the details of selecting names for the draft, the boys going to camp in citizen clothes, next drilling in their new uniforms, then engaging in various activities necessary to preparation for service.

"Screen a War Necessity"—Marion

Head of Kalem Organization Returns from Spain and Tour of Battlefront—Enthusiastic Over Screen's Aid to Fighters and in Exposing Enemy Propaganda

FRANK J. MARION, president of Kalem, has just returned from Spain enthusiastic over American motion pictures as a forceful factor in modern warfare and as a great educational force in a neutral country such as Spain, where Mr. Marion has been for the past seven months.

Coming simultaneously with the publication of letters from George Creel, Secretary McAdoo, Herbert Hoover and H. A. Garfield regarding the necessity of the motion picture in the Government's work, Mr. Marion's observations given in an interview with a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS take on unusual interest.

Rather a Picture Than Eats

At Verdun Mr. Marion saw the Poilus from the front-line trenches file into a motion picture theatre five stories below the fortress to relieve the terrible tension of the battlefront by viewing a Charlie Chaplin film. After this they are given an opportunity to bathe and to take their food; but motion pictures come first.

Through the assistance of the Y. M. C. A., the Red Cross, the Knights of Columbus, etc., this sort of picture entertainment is now provided along the entire battlefront. American motion pictures are shown for the greater part and the enterprise is to be credited to this country. Military authorities now agree that the motion picture is the greatest factor in obtaining morale ever devised.

It is of particular value with the American troops who are not able to revisit their homes like the French and British soldiers. It is conceded that homesickness is one of the worst things for a soldier to bear, and it is true that seeing American pictures, with their scenes of American home life, etc., have the greatest effect in warding off homesickness from the American soldiers.

Motion pictures are shown on all of the transport ships. The De Vry machine is used. Generally there are five or six meeting places with a picture show going on in each one.

Screen Gains Ground in Spain

Mr. Marion is enthusiastic over the advance of the American motion picture in Spain. Mr. Marion found a very friendly feeling together with extreme courtesy throughout this country. They like American films.

Just as Mr. Marion left an extensive movement was started to show motion pictures in the bull rings throughout Spain. At Seville the first audience numbered fully 4,000. Pictures are used extensively in the schools and colleges, comprising also those of the Jesuit order. Not only that but a royal decree has gone forth that hereafter pictures are to be made a regular part of the school and college curriculum. Through these various avenues a very large percentage of the entire population of Spain has been reached with films showing American industries and American life and democracy. Triangle dramas are very popular. Charlie Chaplin is the ruling comedy favorite. Many Keystones are shown.

FOREIGN MARKET THREATENED

A RULING of Government officials that all export shipments must include one reel of an industrial nature to every five reels of dramatic subjects threw film exporters into a panic Saturday, June 8.

Exporters spent Sunday and Monday looking up old reels of an industrial nature, and the market price of these is now jumping sky-high.

Shipments are held up, and in many cases the exporters declare that the value of their shipments is not sufficient to meet the cost of the industrial subjects that must be purchased. In addition they declare that there are not enough industrial subjects on the market to carry exporters over a month or two.

Conferences with the Committee on Public Information, Customs officials and others were on all day Monday, June 10, in an effort to secure a modification of the ruling.

Mr. Marion makes an emphatic point, first of the fact that more patriotic and democratic American films should be sent to Spain, and secondly, that the business can be made a profitable one. The distribution of American film through the regular commercial channels has not been of the best. Many of our prominent stars are unknown there. Much junk film has been shipped in through Barcelona. Mr. Marion recommended the establishment there on the part of the American manufacturer of his own renting agencies. The open market booking plan is preferred by the Spanish exhibitor. He will pay well for the best pictures. The average Spanish show generally opens with a comedy followed by a drama and then by five acts of Spanish dancing. The prices of admission are high.

It is interesting to note that Western films are the most popular at the battlefront. William S. Hart is the ruling favorite. Sex and society dramas are not popular. The former are generally loudly and coarsely ridiculed by the soldiers.

Mr. Marion asked the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to make emphatic the tremendous importance of the American film to the American Army abroad and to the common cause of the Allies and world freedom.

Milwaukee Theatre Gets Vote of Thanks

In the lobby of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, is a glass bowl beneath a sign which reads: "Drop a smoke for the Sammies." Very few of the men who patronize this picture house pass up this bowl, in fact, men who are known not to smoke buy cigars and cigarettes expressly for this receptacle.

Last month the Alhambra management sent to the boys at the front twenty-one pounds of "smokes." In answer to this gift, Manager George Fischer received the following letter from Capt. A. A. Mitten, M. C. N. G., Ambulance 125, American Expeditionary Force:

Dear Mr. Fischer:

Stationed in what must be the least part of France away from the Y. M. C. A. screen, the men of the Milwaukee National Guard Motor Ambulance are enjoying the movies—no they don't see Doug. Fairbanks or Vivian Martin—they'd give a handful of francs for a dime ticket any day—but they are enjoying the delights of the Alhambra program with the patrons who think of them every time they pass a certain box you tell us of. The package of smokes reached us O. K. We admire the way these French men fight but their idea of a smoke is awful. The men used to get full of work, French dirt and cussedness, and at such times deprived of even a nickel movie, they probably wished all theatres out of existence, but now I can safely say they are glad there are theatres, particularly the Alhambra. A hundred boys send you thanks and greetings.

Sincerely,

CAPT. A. A. MITTEN.

Hodkinson Denies Interest in 'Frisco Company

Confirming the statement in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, W. W. Hodkinson later issued a definite denial that he was in any way interested in the proposed six million dollar San Francisco producing organization headed by Frank Ward and Carl Anderson.

The San Francisco dailies and some trade papers had published the incorrect statements. The emphatic denial continues:

"Mr. Hodkinson wishes to have it known that should he enter or make connections with other business organizations complete and full announcement will always come from his home office covering the subject."

"How Is Your Bookkeeping?"

Joe Brandt Asks the Question and Issues Warning After Trip for Universal—Finds "Special" in Strong Favor

"EXHIBITORS who are lax in their methods of bookkeeping are going to have a sad awakening when Uncle Sam gets around to the checking up of income tax returns," declared Joe Brandt to a Motion Picture News representative on his return to New York last week from an extensive trip through the country.

The Universal General Manager declared that he was amazed at the number of exhibitors entirely without records of their receipts and expenditures further than those made necessary by the tax on admissions.

"The question is more serious than you would imagine," he went on. "For from my superficial investigation it would seem that there must be thousands of exhibitors certain to meet trouble unless they start now to put their house in order."

As an example of the opposite type Mr. Brandt cited the case of Exhibitor Blackwell, of Eldorado, Kansas. His books are in such condition that at the end of each day he can tell the exact amount of his profit and loss and by carrying the total forward from the first day of the year he knows exactly where he stands. Another efficiency feature used by Mr. Blackwell is a special bank check that is a perfect receipt and record through blank spaces for the name of the feature, price paid, poster cost, advertising cost and war tax.

In the course of his trip Mr. Brandt took occasion to act as a roadman through many of the small towns in Omaha. He declares that his experience impressed him with the fact that the day of the big star is passing and that the "special" now holds the favor of the exhibitor.

With a smile, the Universal executive confessed that there was one object of his trip that he found difficult to bring home to exhibitors. "I refer to the practice of judging film solely by its age," he says. "My argument is that if a picture has been released for ninety days but has not been shown in a certain territory its rental value in the uninvaded territory is still exactly the same as on the day of release."

Changes in the exchange forces announced as a result of Mr. Brandt's return include the appointment of L. H. Coen in charge of the Minneapolis Exchange in place of Elmer Pearson, now with First National; and the appointment of Messrs. Frisch and Roderick, the former to handle Jewel productions from the Des Moines office, the latter in charge of the Milwaukee Universal branch succeeding Fred Myers, who resigned on account of ill health.

Irwin Calls Summer Conference

Vitagraph Sales Chiefs Discuss Plans for Fall—Duncan New Serial Occupies Big Portion of Attention

A SPECIAL conference of Vitagraph sales chiefs was called in New York the week of June 10 by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing organization, to discuss plans for the summer and fall work. The conference was attended by A. W. Goff, assistant general manager; E. Auger, Eastern division manager; H. D. Naugle, Western division manager, and J. Lawton Kendrick, sales promotion manager.

A number of important questions arising from conditions now affecting the whole industry were discussed, but the chief business of the conference, which was held at the home office of the distributing organization, 1600 Broadway, New York, had to do with the completion of plans for a big campaign on "A Fight for Millions," the forthcoming Vitagraph serial featuring William Duncan; the distributing of "Over the Top," and other important plans of the company.

The division managers, who came to New York after tours which embraced the United States and Canada, reported conditions generally in the exhibition business better than they have been at this time of year for years past and were optimistic for one of the biggest summers in the history of the industry. Fewer houses will be closed during the summer, they believe, than has been the case in past years.

Mr. Irwin received reports that "Over the Top," which, with few exceptions, has been shown only in big cities of the country thus far, is exceeding expectations of exhibitors wherever it is shown, and that every print in every branch of Vitagraph is booked up for weeks in advance. A striking instance of the appeal which "Over the Top" is making was reported by Mr. Naugle, from Ogden, Utah, the birthplace of Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, star of the picture. The crowds were so great at the house where the war special was shown that the theatre had to remain open until 2 o'clock in the morning to accommodate them.

Mr. Irwin announced that plans for "A Fight for Millions" have been perfected and assurance is given to every exhibitor that he will be able to see a major part of the serial before it is released. Prints on the first six episodes were shipped to all Vitagraph branches last week, Mr. Irwin stated, and should be in all offices for viewing by exhibitors not later than the tenth or fifteenth of June. The latter is thirty days ahead of release date, the serial being scheduled to start on July 15.

Kenneth Webb, Playwright

Kenneth Webb, Vitagraph director, who also writes plays and playlets, was receiving congraulations the week of June 9 on the fact that three of his works were appearing simultaneously in Broadway theatres.

A Tale of a Whale—Not a Whale of a Tale

When the Florida Exhibitors' League held its convention at Daytona, C. D. Cooley, the manager of the Strand in Tampa, was elected president. Cooley felt so good over the honor conferred upon him, that he issued an invitation to his brother exhibitors to come to Tampa and he would show them SOME fishing.

When a party of three dropped in on Mr. Cooley the other day, and told him they were here for the purpose of seeing what kind of fish could be caught in Tampa Bay, it was up to Mr. Cooley to make good.

He chartered a launch, loaded her up with all the good things to eat, plenty of bait, and away they sailed for the fishing banks.

No need telling how many fish they caught and how fast they caught them, for every one who has fished in these waters know that you really don't have to use bait, at least on the hook, in order to get a string, but finally the "big one," that usually gets away, was tugging away at the line.

It was one of the visitors who had the line and as he wasn't used to such rough stuff, he let out a yell for help. The others got busy quick, or the gentleman from the north end of the State would have taken a high dive from the after deck.

The line slackened a little, and they managed to make it fast. Then it straightened out again, and the launch headed for the deep sea.

"Great lord," yelled the visitor, "I've hooked up with a submarine."

However, it developed, after a two-hour fight, that it was only a nine-foot shark. They brought it back, too, had their photos taken, with Mr. Shark in the headline position, and now, ask the man from the north what he thinks of getting the "big 'uns" in Tampa.

Hiller and Wilk Sell Gerard Territory

Sales of "My Four Years in Germany" were announced by Hiller and Wilk early this week for the following territories:

Argentine, Chile, Peru, Paraguay, Uruguay, Cuba, Porto Rico, Santo Domingo, Panama and the British West Indies, Hongkong and the Straits Settlements, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Interest is added to the sales by the fact that many of these countries are listed among the neutrals. It is felt, however, that because of the picture's basis on facts and its statement of America's position in the war, the respective Governments will permit the showing.

Brunton Makes Changes

Robert A. Brunton, head of the Brunton studios, which he took over from Paralta Players, announced this week that elaborate changes would be made at the Melrose avenue plant in Los Angeles. An administration will be built, quarters for the scenario department will be rushed to completion, and two new glass-enclosed stages will soon rise out of the earth.

Fox Convention Brings All Managers

Nine Countries Represented at New York Meeting from June 3 to 6, Inclusive—Marked Fourth Annual Event of the Kind Within Fox Organization

WITH nine countries represented, the fourth annual convention of the managers and representatives of the Fox Film Corporation was held from June 3 to June 6, inclusive, at the Biltmore Hotel, New York. About 150 managers and other representatives of the corporation were in attendance at both the business sessions that were held throughout the convention and at the entertainments at which the visitors were guests of William Fox, president of the corporation.

Speaking at the opening of the convention Monday, Mr. Fox brought the assemblage to its feet when he stated that a greater business must be done this coming year so that the Government will be able to take more money in war taxes.

William Fox Speaks

Close on the heels of his successful efforts as captain of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team in the Red Cross campaign, and his successes in the Knights of Columbus and Jewish War Relief drives, Mr. Fox enunciated the policy of the Fox Film Corporation in the following speech:

"The only job in the country today is the winning of the war. To bring this war to a successful conclusion the Government needs money, and lots of it, and the only way the Government can get this money is through taxation.

"Therefore it is up to the business men of the country to expand and push their businesses with greater energy and vigor, so that when the Government comes to collect its war taxes — whether they be 5 per cent. or 95 per cent.—it will find more money to levy on.

"It doesn't matter a continental whether we, as a corporation, have a nickel left after these taxes are collected. The point is that we have got to make enough money so that the Government can collect more money. That, gentlemen, is our job this coming year."

Sheehan Holds Chair

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, presided at all the business sessions. The countries represented, besides the United States, were Canada, Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay and Paraguay. After the opening business conference Monday afternoon Mr. Fox was host to the visitors in the evening at the Winter Garden.

The second business session was held all day Tuesday at the Biltmore, following which Mr. Fox entertained his managers and the others attending the convention at a beefsteak dinner at Murray's, in Forty-second street. Harry F. Campbell of Boston, New England district manager, was toastmaster, and the evening was enlivened with humorous speeches and anecdotes by the various guests. Several vaudeville acts also were given, under the direction of Jack Loeb, and a jazz band dispensed music throughout the dinner. Flashlight photographs were taken of the diners, who were garbed in aprons.

The program Wednesday was a screening in the morning at Wurlitzer Hall, and another business conference in the afternoon at the Biltmore. In the evening the visitors were again guests of Mr. Fox, this time at the Eltinge theatre, where they saw "Business Before Pleasure." Later Mr. Fox took them to "The Midnight Revue" at the Century Grove.

Patriotism Is Keynote

Thursday morning saw another screening at Wurlitzer Hall, and a conference was held in the afternoon at the Biltmore. The convention closed with final instructions by Mr. Sheehan at the home office, 130 West Forty-sixth street.

Throughout the entire convention the sessions were marked with patriotism and a desire for national service. At the opening meeting Mr. Campbell, of Boston, in a short speech, expressed the pride of the whole Fox organization in the war relief work Mr. Fox has been doing. In his response Mr. Fox announced that 312 employees of the Fox Film Corporation throughout the country are now in their Government's service for the war.

On their arrival at the convention the managers were presented with small gold American flags, which were worn in their coat lapels.

Those attending the convention besides Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan, were as follows:

District managers—Harry F. Campbell, Clyde Eckhardt, George F. Mann, Vincent C. McCabe and Paul C. Mooney.

Managers—Sam Dembow, Jr., and G. Hoffman, of Atlanta, Ga.; W. D. Shapiro, of Boston; Thomas Brady, of Buffalo; William Jenner and Harry Willard, of Chicago; Lester Sturm and Rudolph Knoepfle, of Cincinnati; C. A. Browne, of Cleveland; E. H. Wachter, of Dallas; R. CHOOSE DELEGATES

THE New York State branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, through Sydney S. Cohen, president, issued last week the following proclamation:

To all exhibitors of the State of New York: Please take notice that a meeting will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Friday, June 14, 1918, at 11.30 a. m., for the purpose of electing delegates at large to the National Convention to be held at Boston, Mass., from July 15 to 20, 1918.

(Signed) Samuel I. Berman,
Secretary.
By order of Sydney S. Cohen,

Hoffman Buys Exchange

Ill-health, which forced him to enter a hospital for an operation late last week, is stated by M. H. Hoffman as forcing him to dispose of his interest in Four-Square Pictures and withdraw from that organization. The arrangement includes the purchase by Mr. Hoffman of the New York exchange of Foursquare, which will continue to be actively conducted by Hy Gainsborg.

"I hope, however," said Mr. Hoffman in making his announcement, "that my health will soon permit me to return actively to the harness and then the exchange will be a smaller part of my operations. In conjunction with Mr. Gainsborg I shall be open to the acquiring of feature pictures and will probably have other interesting announcements to make.

"Had I been well I should not have sold my Foursquare interest but have bought in further. The exchange which I now own will be conducted under the name of the M. H. Hoffman Exchange."

Honor Roll

Coincidental with the news that American marines are carving a name in history for themselves by their gallant deeds on the battlefronts of Europe, comes the report that the motion picture industry is considered an essential industry to the proper conduct of the war. We have long had that same impression, and if anything were needed to strengthen it — just take a look at the following of our men who are going to war:

Al Attora, chief operator at the Princess theatre, Springfield, Ill., has enlisted in the army. He has gone to Jefferson Barracks.

Jeff Dolan, salesman of the Maytrix Film Corporation, has enlisted in the medical corps of the United States Army.

Nat Lefkowitz, Pathe salesman in Detroit, figures on going to camp in June.

Virgil R. Hilly, for the past eight years with the Strand and Wonderland theatres at Fremont, Ohio, has gone to Camp Taylor, Kentucky.

F. Flarity, manager for General Film at Buffalo, has been called to join the colors, as has also C. D. Hill, acting manager at the Indianapolis office.

Arthur Bates, for years one of Essanay's leading character players, has been called to Camp Wheeler, Macon, Ga.

Jacques D. Mohr, recently sales manager for Clune's production, "Ramona," joined the National Army a few days ago and is stationed at Camp Upton, L. I.

E. C. Jensen, who for some time has been Western manager for World Pictures in San Francisco, is among the other World men now in the service of the nation.

Bernie Fineman, who resigned from Famous Players-Lasky three months ago to conduct a special advertising campaign for the Ordnance Department of the Government, recently came to New York and enlisted for service with the "tanks." He has gone to Gettysburg.

George Hallett, booker at the Buffalo exchange of Fox Film Corporation, is now in training at Camp Dix, N. J. Phillip Gentilli, shipper, is a quartermaster, third class, in the navy, and Paul Baron, officer manager, is a first class yeoman in the navy.

Gerald B. Speiro, who has been in the publicity department of Fox Film Corporation for the past two years, has been sent to Camp Wadsworth, S. C.

The draft has made many changes in the exchange offices of Cleveland. Among the latest recruits to leave are Henry Fosbender, shipper for the Select Pictures; Harry Goldberg, also of the Select retinue; Jack Hays, Paramount's crack salesman, who is in the aviation corps down in Dallas, Texas, having left here on Saturday, the day he received his orders; Jerry Krupka, shipper for Paramount; Frank Elliott, of the poster department in the Paramount local exchange; John Newman, also from Paramount's shipping department. Mutual's toll included four of Manager Moran's best men. They are Jake Fried, assistant manager of the exchange; Ralph Swain, salesman; W. M. Grabe, shipping clerk, and Frank Lemberg, also from the shipping department.

There are five stars in the service flag of the Victoria theatre of Rochester, N. Y., which was recently placed in the lobby of the theatre by Manager John J. Farren. The five who have gone are: Lieutenant P. Harry Farren, aviator, Camp Dick, Dallas, Tex.; Corporal Al Florack, Jr., formerly operator, Camp Dix, N. J.; Private Russell Fishbaugh, Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C.; Private Harry Gardner, Camp Dix, N. J.; Private Morris Spies, Camp Dix, N. J.

Two theater managers already have been summoned by the draft, and one of them, Clarence Stage, of the Princess theater, left town last week for camp. The other, Paul Fenyvessy, manager of the Strand theater, expects to be called any time.

J. D. Williams Issues Statement

First National's Manager Reviews Question of Issuing Old Films Under New Titles

J. D. WILLIAMS, manager of the First National Circuit, stepped to the bat last week with another wallop at the practice of reissuing old subjects under new titles in the course of a letter to Motion Picture News, concerning advertising appearing in our last issue.

The letter, dated June 5, is here published in full:

Mr. William A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

To say the least, I am surprised to read the advertisement that appeared on page 3520 of MOTION PICTURE NEWS dated June 15, in which a concern that is making a practice of reissuing old pictures under new titles indulges in personal reflections upon the motives that have actuated the executives of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and myself in protesting against this unfair method of trading upon the reputations of stars who have been largely responsible for the growth of the moving picture business into the fifth industry of the United States.

When we first gave this matter attention through the advertising and reading columns of your paper in the issue dated June 8, you will recollect we attacked the practice purely on general principles, without mentioning the names of the parties engaged in the business.

Charlie Chaplin's name was used simply as an example of a great star whose prestige was being seriously threatened by reproductions of his old films gotten out under new titles calculated to mislead the patrons of theatres into the belief that they would, for instance, see a new Chaplin picture when they paid their money to witness "The Jazz Waiter," instead of discovering when it was too late that they were being shown the old film, "Caught in a Cabaret."

We tried to point out the far-reaching harm of such methods, as we believed and still believe that the encouragement of this sort of thing will cast a shadow of reproach upon the whole film industry that will keep honest people from patronizing it as liberally in future as they have in the past.

If stars who have, through years of conscientious effort, succeeded in building up loyal public followings are forced to compete unfairly against themselves so that their patrons are not sure that they will see them in fairly advertised productions, then, I ask, why boil our brains and spend our money for new and better productions?

Why not declare the whole film business wasted effort and go into some less hazardous game where we can feel reasonably safe that the accomplishments of yesterday will not be used to desaroy and discredit the achievements of today and tomorrow?

I have already placed in your hands telegrams from members of the circuit mentioned in the advertisement you carried for the company getting out these re-issues, which should prove to your own satisfaction and the satisfaction of your readers that the imputation that these gentlemen had themselves booked Chaplin re-issues bearing new names is without basis.

I am still at a loss to understand how a trade paper like MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which has always borne a reputation for square dealing and reasonable conservatism could let copy of so objectionable a nature get into print without at least making an effort to verify the statements which are on their face of a highly improbable nature and palpably designed to create dissention in our organization.

Outside of all personal considerations, however, the actions of the men responsible for these practices against which we are fighting, are exceedingly ill-timed.

To float their proposition, they have chosen an hour when the minds of the American people are taken up with the most serious problems that have ever faced a free nation.

With thoughts upon the struggle that our boys are waging on the blood-stained fields of France, and waiting in apprehension for news of fresh outrages that have been visited upon fellow citizens by the Kaiser's cruel tigers of the sea at our very gates, film fans have neither time nor inclination to pursue their amusements with a search warrant entitling them to look into the history of every Chaplin picture that invites their attention so that they can be assured that they are not being invited to spend their money to see an old story under a new title.

Truth and decency in advertising is not only good business today—it is good patriotism.

Yours very truly,
J. D. WILLIAMS,
Manager
FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT.

*Editorial Note.—As indicated editorially this copy is not, upon the face of it, misleading, except as stating that Jake Wells. Inc., and T. E. Larsen are members of the First National Exhibitors' circuit.

Furthermore, it is impossible for any publication to visé late advertising copy, whatever claim may be made to the contrary. Every publication is compelled to some extent at least to rely upon the ethical cooperation of its advertisers.

New York Theatregoers in the Dark

Theatregoers of New York City and adjoining cities and towns on the ocean have for the past week been attending the motion picture theatres without the customary electric signs in front of the buildings to guide them. This is the result of new regulations growing out of the U-boat campaign in Atlantic waters, which gave rise to the belief that an air raid is proable at any time on New York City.

Exhibitors, as a whole, have not complained of ill results of the new regulations, but a few have declared that their business has been below the average. Ths is attributed not so such much to the lightless theatres and streets as to the timidity of the people, who fear to venture out.

At Coney Island the well-known glare of the electric lights which for years have illuminated that famous resort was missing last week, and showmen were exerting every influence to have them turned on again.

It is said by officials that the lightless nights in New York will continue.

Select Calls Conference of Exchanges

General Manager Arthur S. Kane of Select, June 8 issues a summons to conference of branch executives, to be held in the home office June 12 and 13.

This meeting will be attended by branch managers whose exchanges are situated within proximity of New York. It will be followed by a similar conference held with Chicago as its central point, and this will be followed by other conferences to be held in other parts of the country, which will in the end have embraced all of the Select branches.

The New York conference will be attended by the following branch executives: Henry Siegel of the New York Exchange; Max Milder, Philadelphia; Charles R. Rogers, Boston; S. S. Webster, Buffalo; V. P. Whitaker, Washington; Leo F. Levison, Pittsburgh; Sam E. Morris, Cleveland, and T. O. Tuttle, Atlanta. J. S. Woody, field manager, will come on from St. Louis, and for the home office, besides General Manager Kane, President Lewis J. Selznick, Treasurer Morris Kohn and others will attend the conference.

This is the first occasion since the organization of the company that the Select Corporation has brought its branch officials together for a confab.

Stephens Returns to New Orleans Office

S. T. Stephens, southern supervisor of the Mutual Film Corporation, has returned to his headquarters at New Orleans, after spending a week at the executive offices in Chicago in conference with President James M. Sheldon and members of the Mutual executive force.

Mr. Stephens' territory has been enlarged and the New Orleans exchange, which has long been under his personal management, has been placed in charge of Al Durling, to give Mr. Stephens more freedom in the supervision of his large territory.

J. M. Cummings has been appointed manager of the Mutual branch at Washington, D. C., one of the exchanges under Mr. Stephens' supervision.

George Kann Stays in New York Offices

George Kann, chief assistant to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, will not go to Universal City as has been persistently reported in the trade for several weeks. The rumor was that Mr. Kann would be the personal representative of Mr. Laemmle at the production plant.

This rumor was stifled recently at the New York offices of Universal by the announcement that Mr. Kann's duties in New York are far too exacting and his knowledge of the organization detail too comprehensive to think of sending him to the Coast permanently. It may be that he will be sent West for a short time to look over the big plant of which he formerly was in charge.

PRAISE FROM AN EXHIBITOR ORGANIZATION

What the Theatre Owners Association, of Los Angeles, Thinks of the News and the Harrison Reviews

"The members of the Theatre Owners' Association, Inc., of Los Angeles, desire to compliment the MOTION PICTURE NEWS upon the inauguration of the new department entitled, 'Exhibitor to Exhibitor Review Service.'

"The straightforward and honest criticisms contained therein have proved most effective, and the exhibitors here are fully aware of the inestimable value of same.

"Let us compliment you upon the wide-awake spirit in which you are conducting your paper."

Importers and Exporters Unite

Talk of Uniting with National Association—Permanent Organization Hinted—Unite to Preserve Trade Interests

REPRESENTATIVE men of the importing and exporting end of the industry, convened at Hotel Astor, Thursday afternoon, for the purpose of taking steps toward organization that they may act as a unit in furthering the interests of this branch of the industry. More than sixty prominent exporters and importers were present at the meeting over which David R. Howells presided as chairman.

The exporters and importers have acted independently heretofore and have not had either a temporary or permanent organization. In order that favorable legislation might be enacted and the proper steps taken to preserve the stability of the export and import business in films, it was thought not only advisable but imperative that they get together as a unit and bring such influence as they can command to bear upon the furtherance of successful operations in this line.

The first action taken was to pass upon a motion, made and seconded that "this body resolve itself into a permanent organization for the general welfare of importers and exporters." The motion was carried, but not before several objections were made on the grounds that the importers and exporters should ally themselves with the National Association and act in conjunction with this body. It was thought by some members present, that it would be inadvisable to form a separate organization since such action would only bring into existence one more unit to act separately and apart from the National Association and hence lessen the chances of the industry to act in a concerted manner when presenting its grievances before the authorities in Washington.

As a result of this objection the motion was made and seconded that the Chair appoint a committee of five members to take up the matter of joining the National Association, with Frederick Elliott, secretary of the National Association, and report at the next meeting of the importers and exporters. The five members appointed by Chairman Howells are: S. S. Krellberg, C. L. Chapman, Sidney Garrett, Joe Miles and Mr. Howells, himself.

W. E. Atkinson of Metro addressed the meeting favorably on the suggestion that its members should act with the National Association, explaining that the administration is already being hampered with numerous petitions, and that if the importers and exporters were to act with the National Association, they could do so to a better advantage and without the necessity of adding another petitioner to the thousand and one who are now in Washington petitioning President Wilson for this and that assistance.

At the next meeting which will be called sometime this week, the committee appointed to take the matter of joining the National Association up with Mr. Elliott, will make a report and following the report definite action will be taken as to the organization, and the steps to be taken to avert any legislation or action on the part of the officials at Washington, that will obstruct or hinder in any way the carrying on of the export and import business in film.

Representative men of the import and export branch who were present at the meeting were:

William M. Vogel, William Vogel Productions, Inc.; Sidney Garrett, J. Frank Brockliss, Inc.; F. H. Knocke, Medal Film Company and Cuban Medal Film Company; Carl Hamburger, Piedmont Pictures Corporation; C. L. Chapman, North American Motion Pictures, Inc.; S. S. Krellberg, Trans-Russian Film Corporation; W. E. Atkinson, Metro; H. G. Kosch, John Olson and Company and Reginald Warde interests; C. P. York, John Olson and Company; John M. Milander, American Film; L. H. Allen, L. L. Hiller, Hiller and Wilk; Joe Lee, Reginald Warde, David Russell, Jacob Wilk, Hiller and Wilk; M. Schlessinger, International Variety and Theatrical Agency; R. P. Martin, Cuban-American Films; J. H. Hallberg, E. S. Manheimer, Joe Miles, Miles and Manheimer; L. Auerbach, Export and Import Company; John Carlson, Manuel Zeno, Medal Film; A. L. Godoy, Merida Export Company; J. M. Aragon, Gillespi Bros. and Company; B. Herrera, Paivoa and Herrera Company; Fred Thomander, A. B. C. Film Company; Joseph Lamy, Piedmont Film Company; R. W. Linn, Universal; L. R. Thomas, North American Motion Picture Corporation; David R. Howell, chairman of the meeting, and Louis Burstein, King-Bee Films Corporation.

THE READER HAS HIS SAY

Do Sub-title Experts Go Too Far in Cultivating Patriotism? Quinn Thinks So

[Ed. Note: It has been the belief, since America entered the war, that anything "goes" in sub-titles providing the spirit of patriotism is always uppermost. But our mail brings a letter from San Diego, Cal., in which the writer, Exhibitor C. J. Quinn, of the Plaza, declares the zealous sub-title manipulators are going a bit too far. Read what he says.]

May I count upon you to give space to the following in your journal?

In a news reel which we are showing this week, in conjunction with our feature, we are treated to the following in sub-titles: "The best trained men in the world," and "The most efficient body of fighting men in the world."

I have NEVER HAD any patience with such jingoistic utterances, but it seems incredible that any sane, intelligent person should make use of such utterances at a time like this, when such heroic, herculean things are being done—and have BEEN done during these four, long, heart-breaking years of this terrible struggle for civilization—in every war-torn, allied country, and when WE are but "learning to walk" as far as our part in the struggle is concerned.

I believe that the showing of such things as the above quoted are a reflection, not only on the intelligence of the INTELLIGENT public, but upon the intelligence of the American people and, more particularly, upon those connected with the motion picture.

By way of adding to the injury the following appears in the reel: "The best trained men in the world is the West Point cadet," and it seems to me that the exhibitor is almost more to blame than any one else for allowing such things to get by.

Trusting you will be able to find space for the above, thanking you in advance for same, and with very best wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,
C. J. Quinn,
Mgr. Plaza theatre, San Diego, Cal.

English Writer Reveals Self as Author of Revue, "Chase Me Charlie"

Langford Reed, 21 Christchurch Road, Hampstead, N. W. 3, London, has written Motion Picture News, revealing himself as the author of the revue, "Chase Me Charlie," an Essanay picture. Mr. Reed also writes interestingly on other subjects, as follows:

"With reference to the notice in your issue of April 13, about the revue 'Chase Me Charlie,' will you allow me to point out that the 'clever Britisher' you refer to as the author is myself.

"I know that it is not your custom to support the unmoral practice of ignoring the 'scenario writer' and, therefore, as the Essanay Company in London (for whom I wrote the lyrics and compiled the revue) have now cabled out to Chicago that I am to have full screen and advertisement acknowledgment, may I ask you to give the usual credit you accord to American writers. Though there are few picturegoers in Great Britain who do not know my name, I know, of course, that it counts for nothing in America, but nevertheless I am sure you will think my request reasonable in desiring to have the credit for this new departure in the 'picture' world—the first film revue. And it was a very much more difficult task than writing a strictly original revue, or photoplay, for I found myself handicapped and limited in every direction. The London newspapers made a great fuss about it and I enclose some of the notices which they gave it, also an old copy of the souvenir program.

"I would have written to you before, but have only very recently been invalided from the army, after a year's active service in France. It may interest you to know that at the 200 odd military kinemas out there, one hardly sees anything but American films. Charlie Chaplin's Essanay subjects are everywhere, while among the ladies I noticed more films featuring Norma Talmadge than anyone else.. For some reason there are difficulties in the way of Mary Pickford pictures being shown out there, although the Tommies clamor for them. Perhaps you could induce Miss Pickford to use her influence to rectify matters? Not one of her films has been shown yet in this way.

"I saw many American soldiers in France and they seemed full of confidence and ginger. There are many others in London and their good behavior everywhere makes them popular with everyone. I am sure that while in this country they are having a good time.

"This afternoon I attended a packed trade show, at the London Opera House, of 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' and there is no doubt that it has scored a big success. Rupert Julian is 'great.' A few weeks ago I was a guest of the American Officers' Club, in London, where a special performance of official naval films—which, of course, I must not describe—was given to Admiral Sims and a distinguished gathering of Americans.

"I hope to visit your great country when the lazy angel of peace has awakened.

"Very truly yours,

"(Signed) LANGFORD REED."

Hurrah for Tilton! Exhibitor Riva Sends Total of Receipts for Red Cross

Tilton, N. H., does not occupy much of a place on the map, when it comes to the matter of magnitude physically, but when you consider the important place it holds in our nation's scheme of things—well, that's different. Tilton raised its quota—and then some more. Two-thirds of the town's quota was raised in the Pastime theatre.

Exhibitor Riva said: "Complying with your editorial request in your issue of May 25, asking that each theatre participating in the Red Cross Drive send you a total of receipts collected, am inclosing a statement of same from this little town. The drive started here Sunday evening, May 19, with a meeting in the theatre, the ministers with one accord stating that the motion picture theatre was THE place to start things going.

"Tilton's quota was $3,000, but this figure was passed early in the drive, and the final totaled a little over $5,000. Of the quota of $3,000, the meeting at the theatre on Sunday raised $2,146. The children's matinee brought $10.60, and the benefit on Friday drew an additional $129.30. The total amount raised in the theatre was $2,285.90.

He's Sore! Takes Exception to Advertising Reels with Rental Charges

From the Theatre Princess, in far away Superior, Wis., Motion Picture News has received a hot shot at advertising reels in the guise of scenics or educationals, and for which the exhibitor is charged the usual rental price. Frank G. Buckley, the Superior exhibitor, is apparently acquainted with the fact that these reels are paid for twice—once by the exhibitor and once by the company for which they are filmed—thus bringing in a double revenue to the producer or distributor.

Mr. Buckley in his letter to Motion Picture News, said: "As a subscriber to your magazine I expect you to name an advertising reel when they try to put it over as a rental proposition. That is what you are taking our money for and why we are reading your publication."

Incidentally, Exhibitor Buckley dropped a letter to Pathe, and this is what he said: "You have a lot of nerve putting an advertising reel for the Bell Telephone Company entitled 'Whispering Wires of War,' and charging theatres for running it. If you have doubt about your working both ends from the middle, talk to the independent telephone people who may see it."

Mr. Buckley sent a copy of each of the above letters to the People's Telephone Company, Superior, Wis.

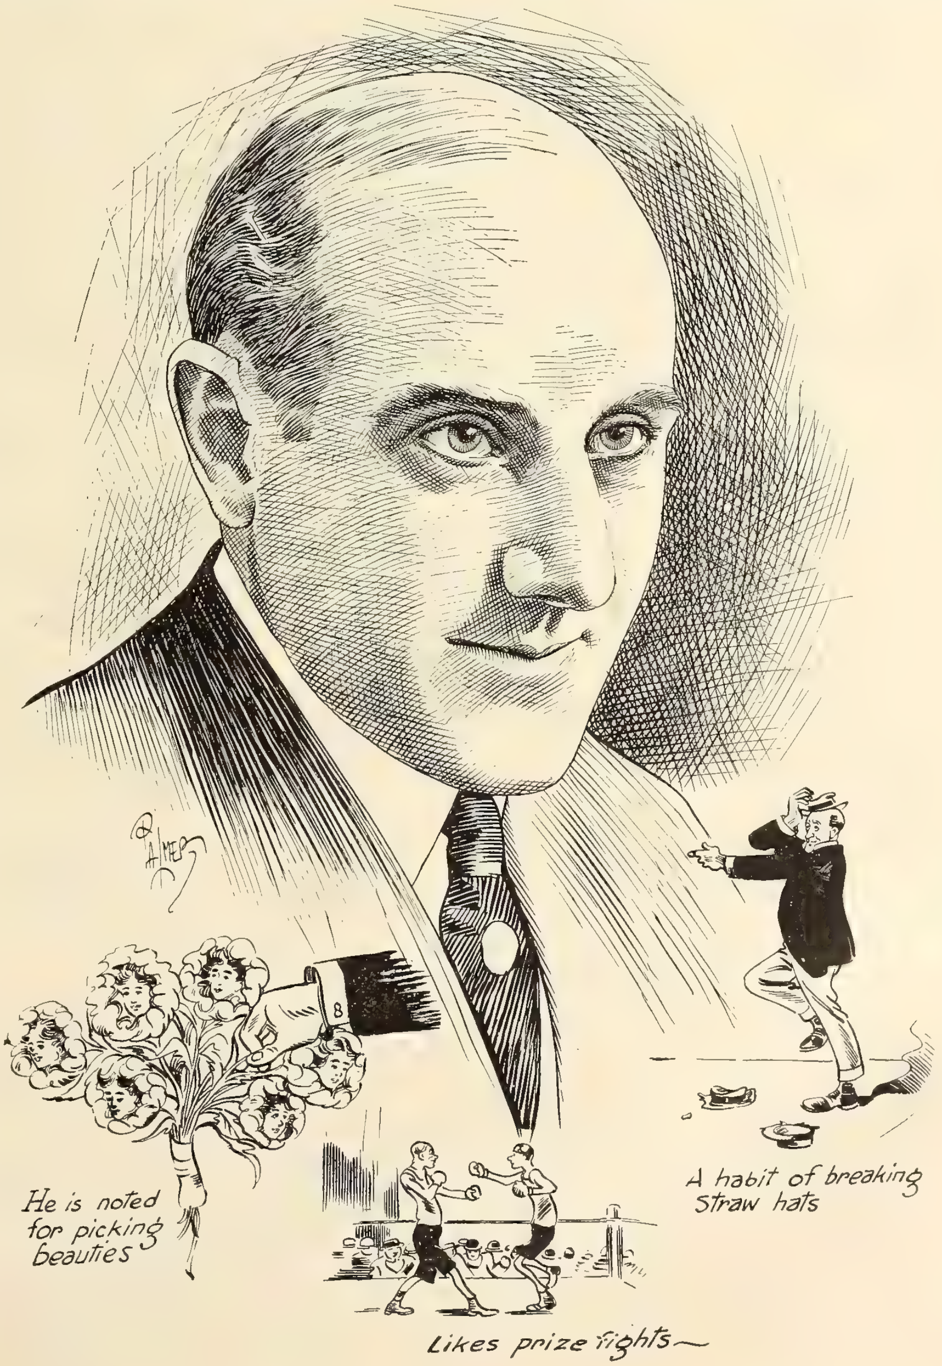
What Kind of a Fellow Is—Christie?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

AL E. CHRISTIE might easily be termed a "pioneer" of the film industry, but that word is tabooed in this series. However, he is a real old timer just the same, commencing the production of comedies over in Bayonne, N. J., when David Horsley first turned his attention to the production of pictures. That was so long ago that to give the date would be to betray Al's age.

He commenced his rapid climb to fame at Universal just about four and a half years ago—perhaps five, when he took hold of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran and made comedies for the Nestor brand. Hundreds of these he produced. We remember once that a story was sent out stating that he had passed the three hundred mark. He must have doubled this record before he finally gently broke the ties that bound him to Universal, and with his brother, Charles, inaugurated the Christie Film Company to produce comedies for the independent market.



He is noted for picking beauties
Likes prize fights—
A habit of breaking straw hats

Again in so doing did he prove himself the pioneer—that word again. It required a great deal of courage to put one-reel comedies on the state rights market, but the deed was done and today the thousand-foot lengths of comedy, embellished by the prettiest little ladies on the Pacific Coast, are making a big splash in the picture business.

"The prettieset little ladies on the Pacific Coast," as applied to the results of Mr. Christie's selections may make Mack Sennett jealous. It has been a toss up for a long time which is the better connoisseur of feminine pulchritude. Mack Sennett's girls say that he is. Al Christie's girls say that he is. And no one likes to contradict the ladies.

However, we have seen with our own eyes. Witness the amount of loveliness that Al has uncovered to the waiting film fans of the world. There are Betty Compson, Ethel Lynne, Eleanor Field, Dorothy Dane, not forgetting Victoria Forde, who acted as the foil of Eddie and Lee these years since. Even Mr. Sennett would have a difficult time matching any one of these.

The casual visitor to the Christie studio might be afraid of approaching Mr. Christie at close quarters. It may be a characteristic peculiar to the Scotch-Canadian, but we were totally unprepared for any such characteristic when we first saw him direct. He looked very ferocious and forbidding standing behind the camera and smashing his straw hat. When he smashed one he procured another and jumped on it. Charles Christie says that the bill for each comedy is usually augmented by the price of several of the best Los Angeles straws.

But this is only one of Al's little touches. His treatment of hats is not indicative of his attitude toward his fellow men. He takes his comedy directing, his comedy writing and his comedy producing as a serious business which, they tell us, is the only way to take it. He works hard and works his people hard, which has been said of others too, but the inevitable conclusion to reach after such a statement is that his people respect him.

In the evening, or at such time when the day's work is done you might find Mr. Christie sitting in the front row of the Vernon A. C., somewhere between Tom Ince and Wally Reid, cheering the battlers in the ring, or right next door at the Vernon C. C., in the midst of all Los Angeles studio folk. Probably there is not a more popular man than Christie on the slopes of the Pacific Coast.

And by the way wasn't Christie the first comedy producer to take his company to the beach and put his pretty girls in pretty bathing suits?

And a last word: He's Scotch!

Who said the Scotch have no sense of humor? What about Harry Lauder and —Al Christie?

Hoot, mon! ye said somethin'.

A. E. A. Position is Outlined

In Letter to F. H. Elliott, Secretary Rembusch Tells Why Talk of Amalgamation with League Now Is Futile

IN order clearly to set forth the position assumed by the American Exhibitors' Association in the matter of the proposed amalgamation with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Frank Rembusch, national secretary of the former body, sends MOTION PICTURE NEWS a copy of a letter he addressed to F. H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Along with his suggestion that the letter be published, Mr. Rembusch says: "There is no reason for us to compromise. Our A. E. A. is growing every day in numbers. We have the good will of the exhibitors. We are protesting against side issues by attending to our own business."

The letter to Mr. Elliott follows:

May 15, 1918.

National Association of Motion Picture Industry,
Times Building, New York City.
Mr. Elliott, Secretary.

Dear Mr. Elliott:

Your letter of April 27 received. Same was referred to the directors of the American Exhibitors' Association who have instructed me to answer as follows:

The A. E. A. is anxious to co-operate with any and all activities for winning the war and for the best good of the industry. This has been better evidenced by our work within the last year than any words on the subject.

There was some talk of holding both conventions of the two national exhibitors' organizations at Boston, but the A. E. A. has never received a communication or proposition of any character unless your letter is such, and this was very indefinite and unofficial. Therefore we have arranged to hold our convention at Chicago in August as we first planned.

We agree with you on both of your statements that expositions are expensive, on the one hand, but at the same time provide the financial herewithal to carry on the work of organization, so we feel sure that you also concede us the right to hold meetings that help carry on our work, and if we had joined in the Boston affair would expect to realize a just proportion of the profits. HOWEVER, THERE ARE SOME THINGS THAT WE WOULD BE ASSURED OF BEFORE WE COULD TAKE OUR CONVENTION TO BOSTON.

"The idea of organization of exhibitors is to protect ourselves not only from evils without BUT FROM EVILS WITHIN THE INDUSTRY."

The men who left the League and formed the American at Chicago last summer were compelled to do so on principle. We were opposed to Mr. Ochs because he used the national organization to further his personal affairs. Instead of building up the League he used it to start a trade journal. (No doubt to force producers to take his space).

To continue in this office last July, Mr. Ochs used the lowest kind of methods. Let us refer to a few:

He discarded all the precedents and traditions of the League. He allowed no one to enter the convention hall at the Coliseum without a badge and it had always been the rule to welcome all exhibitors to our national convention whether they were members or not.

He required all delegates to receive their credentials at the Hotel Morrison and provided badges for his pledged delegates and those that were doubtful, and refused badges to many who were opposed to him but collected the per capita tax from all, which is taxation minus representation, an American principle worthy of defense at all times.

He stationed police at the Coliseum door to enforce his methods.

He refused the floor to many of our best [illegible].

He took the appointment of committees out of the delegates' hands.

He finally electrified his hearers after we had left the convention (proving the justification of our action) by his famous speech of acceptance and threat, "I'll get them babies," etc., etc.

These are all facts well known and WE WOULD BE TAKING QUITE A CHANCE IF WE PLACED OURSELVES AGAIN IN A POSITION OF TRUST WITH MR. OCHS.

Now, with reference to amalgamation let me say this:

The committee who were interested in this have done nothing, for obvious reasons.

We cannot amalgamate as long as the organization is in the hands of Mr. Ochs. Our organization is only a few months old but is growing very rapidly. We have in our membership those who first work to protect our industry. We are without any entangling alliances, and desire to remain so. We have been to a great expense in organizing. Our work against the evils from without the industry on the Censorship question and on constructive measures, such as Sunday opening, speak for themselves. WE HAVE NOTHING TO GAIN TO JOIN MR. OCHS AND WE TAKE A CHANCE TO LOSE MUCH.

We are opposed to those who use office for their own purposes and while on the subject, let me say, our general manager. Mr. Pettijohn has again presented the A. E. A. his resignation, insisting that it be accepted because he has taken a position in another institution in the industry. In accepting same we do insist that he remain with us as a general counsel, because of his splendid work. So we at least try to be true to our principles.

WE BELIEVE THAT IT IS BETTER THAT THERE BE TWO NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' ORGANIZATIONS. Exhibitors comprise by far the largest portion of the industry and it is not possible, not practical, and experience has shown that it is not good policy to have one man in control of exhibitors' activities.

In deference to your date at Boston in July, and showing our good will, we have postponed our meeting until the week of August 20, one month later.

There is no dissension among exhibitors. Many members of the League and the American are working in perfect harmony on matters more closely associated than the national organizations have ever presented to exhibitors. Many in both organizations welcome the time when all exhibitors' organizations will be free from side issues. It must go through the melting pot.

Under the circumstances, the American Exhibitors' Association will continue their efforts toward the highest possible good for exhibitors and the entire industry, and will also give our efforts to keep it worthy of the respect of all.

We invite the entire industry to participate in our gathering and can assure all that come a hearty welcome, a most interesting, profitable and enjoyable week, and we hope to see everybody in Chicago August 20.

Yours truly,
AMERICAN EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION,
Frank Rembusch, National Secretary.

Elyria Theatres Patch Up Differences

At a meeting of the Elyria Theatres Company of Elyria, Ohio, the stock holders agreed to forget the differences that have divided them for the past six months, and to proceed amicably in their task of managing all the motion picture theatres in Elyria. This reconciliation affects Melton Phelos probably more than it does any of the other members of the organization. Shortly after the company was formed the stockholders took exception to the way Phelos handled the affairs of the Strand theatre. Phelos claimed the privilege of operating his own house to suit himself. He was outnumbered, however, and not only was ousted from the organization, but was forced to close his theatre.

Phelos is back again on the board of directors since the reconciliation, and the Strand is once more ablaze with electric lights. Frank Stetson and County Clerk Williams are the only two names no longer appearing on the list of board members. They have disposed of their holdings to John Pekras and L. T. Fay, the latter of whom was elected secretary. The other directors are Henry Worst, Melton Phelos, Owen Bannon, Chris Neufer and Charles Chisholm.

Zukor's Appeal Helps Red Cross Work

The total amount of the subscriptions made by the employees of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to the Red Cross Fund is $14,544.20, which is the answer to the appeal made by Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation, on behalf of the work.

Of this amount, $11,544.20 was donated by the New York offices and studios, and $3,000 by the Pacific Coast offices and studios. This gift to the Red Cross is in keeping with the patriotic work performed by the employees of this film organization in subscriptions to the Liberty Loans as well as the personal assistance rendered by officials, employees and stars along these lines.

In the recent drive for the Red Cross meetings were held in the various offices, and Adolph Zukor himself addressed the people and impressed them with the policies of the officials of the corporation.

The amount of $14,544.20 as a free gift to the Red Cross is no doubt a more patriotic expression than the subscription of many times that amount for Liberty Bonds, with the money absolutely secured and returned with interest by the Government.

Affiliated Promoters Bring Optimistic Reports

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, and Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State League, and the Exhibitors' Booking Association, returned to New York last week from organization trips for the Affiliated with optimistic reports.

Pettijohn's journey was through the Middle West where he reports a welcome sentiment on the part of exhibitors towards the Affiliated proposition. "In Buffalo, Detroit, Philadelphia and other cities also," he declared, "the foremost houses as well as the smaller theatres have lined up with us."

Sydney Cohen's organization work was done in eastern Pennsylvania where he told exhibitors of the success attending the New York exhibitors' try-out of the co-operative scheme on "An Accidental Honeymoon" and "The Struggle Everlasting."

Announcement was made that a meeting of the Affiliated's national board of directors will be held in New York this week when the selection of the first pictures for release through the organization will be made.

Pearson Leaves Universal in Minneapolis

Under date of June 5, E. R. Pearson gave official notice to the motion picture industry that he has resigned as Universal manager in Minneapolis to devote his entire time to the interests of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of the Northwest. He stated the resignation became effective June 8. The First National, it is understood, will maintain a separate office on the Universal premises at 719 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis.

War Service Association Makes Headway

Rapid progress has been made this week on the organization of the Motion Picture War Service Association, which points to an early campaign for memberships throughout the nation.

Slight delay in the membership drive was caused by the necessary legal steps for the formation of such an Association, but this work has now practically all been taken care of by the Board of Directors and officers, and already the work of enrolling Los Angeles people of the industry in the membership has been commenced.

Membership stations have been opened at several studios, including Universal, Fox and Lasky, and while no report has been made by those in charge, it is understood several hundred names have been added to the initial roll.

At the bi-weekly meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, a membership drive was instituted, and forty-seven became members, a number of these being exchange men. Herman Bosley, of the Alhambra theatre, was named as chairman of a committee to complete the drive among theatre owners, and their employes, and Harvey Gausman, of the Foursquare Exchange, was named as chairman of a similar committee to work with the exchange men.

It is anticipated the organization will be perfected completely within the next week, and then the general work will be commenced.

Willets Returns East from the Coast

Gilson Willets, novelist and scenario writer of the Pathe forces, returned to New York last week from Los Angeles, where he had been preparing the story of the new serial, "Hands Up," starring Ruth Roland. The first episodes were filmed while he was there.

"We had a lot of trouble in buying horses suited to our needs and in obtaining extra people of the necessary types to represent the Inca Indians," said Mr. Willets. "George Fitzmaurice as director general in charge of Pathe-Astra activities on the coast gave a great deal of personal attention to the arrangements as did Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra. We built a very elaborate reproduction of an Inca city where some of the episodes were centered."

Mae Marsh Makes Thrift Stamp Record in Buffalo

Close to eighteen thousand dollars' worth of Thrift Stamps sold at two personal appearances is the record set by Mae Marsh on Saturday, June 1st, at Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo. The appearance was the result of a promise made by the star three months ago to Mike Shea and Manager Harold Franklin, and was made in connection with the showing of Miss Marsh's Goldwyn picture, "The Face in the Dark."

The exact sum netted in the sale was $17,629.

Notorious Barbary Coast Filmed

Dr. Paul Smith, Instrumental in Its Destruction, Makes Propaganda Picture—W. L. Shallenberger Handling Sales

DR. PAUL SMITH, Methodist minister, whose parish is close to the famous Barbary coast district, San Francisco, and who gained national publicity about a year ago because through his efforts this vice district was closed for good and all, is in New York with a seven-reel propaganda picture which depicts the various incidents leading up to the closing of this famous district and showing in detail the good that has come about because of this action.

"The Finger of Justice" is the title of this propaganda picture. It has received the endorsement of the mayors of all the important cities on the Coast and through the country, some of the most influential men in public life, and has received not only the endorsement but the co-operation of the leading societies working in the interest of moral uplift.

W. L. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has taken over the distribution of this propaganda feature and announces that it is offered on the independent market and that territory is now open. Dr. Shallenberger, who has been one of the most prominent operators on the open market for many years, and still is actively engaged in the distribution and production of independent features, in commenting upon the acquisition of this feature, said:

"I have been in the distributing and producing end of the business for years and have yet to witness the screening of a more interesting picture than Dr. Paul Smith's propaganda film, "The Finger of Justice." It is a marvelous exposition of the events leading up to and following the closing of the most notorious vice centre in the United States—the famous Barbary coast district, of San Francisco.

"Dr. Smith's Methodist parish is in the very heart of this district. When he started the agitation every newspaper in the country took up the cause. When it was learned that the district must go, hundreds of the women who had spent their lives in vice came to him and asked what was to become of them. In order that they might receive full justice, Dr. Smith, whose church was small and unable to receive these women, rented a public hall where he received them and counciled with them.

"In order that the people of this country might know of the great work which Dr. Smith has accomplished, and in order that the terrible vice in which these hundreds of young girls and women lived, might be exposed, a picture was produced under the direct supervision of Dr. Smith, and the camera has registered for the public, the important events leading to the greatest single victory ever won over vice.

"'The Finger of Justice' does not contain a foot of film that is offensive. It depicts in a straightforward and dramatic manner, incidents in the lives of the women who inhabited this vice district, events leading to the vice raid; the part which corrupt politics played in the episode, and the tragic scenes following the ousting of hundreds of women who knew no other homes than the home of vice and corruption."

Dr. Shallenberger announces that he is arranging for a private showing of the picture to the trade and press after which the picture will open for an indefinite run on Broadway. Crane Wilbur has a prominent role in this production.

Rothacker Has Showy Letter Collection

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, is showing no little pride over the unusual collection of letters of praise on his concern's laboratory work received from members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Practically every member of the circuit, including the most prominent exhibitors in the country, has gone on record with an unsolicited letter of commendation to the Rothacker organization for the quality of laboratory work on the Chaplin and other First National subjects.

William Oldknow Weds

Announcement was received by his friends in New York last week that William Oldknow, of Atlanta, Georgia, had taken Mrs. Olive May Jacobs, of New Haven, Conn., as his bride in the latter city, June 3.

Congratulations are pouring in at the Oldknow home on Cherokee avenue, Atlanta, as the bridegroom, a pioneer in Southern distributing circles, is among the most popular of film men.

Cleveland Claims Only Girl Booker

Manager C. A. Thompson of the Cleveland World Film Exchange, says he has broken in as many bookers since he has been here, as is consistent with the state of mortal nerves, and he is going to break in one more and only one more. This one, he says, will not be called in the next draft. He is sure of it because this booker answers to the name of Myrtle Wormser.

"There's no reason why a girl can't do the work," Miss Wormser said. "Girls are doing all sorts of work formerly done by men, and although I find it quite difficult, I'm sure that I can do it."

Miss Wormser is the only girl booker in Cleveland at the present time.

Benjamin Chapin Dies

Benjamin Chapin, well known in motion pictures for his characterization of Lincoln, died at the Loomis Sanitarium, Liberty, N. Y., on June 2, of tuberculosis.

His series of ten motion pictures built around the life of Lincoln, and called "The Son of Democracy," marked Mr. Chapin's final efforts in the motion picture field.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

"City of Tears"

Carmel Myers in a Bluebird Certain to Entertain

(Bluebird—July 8. Director, Elsie Jane Wilson)

YOU have got to take your hat off to a woman director when it comes to directing a woman. She understands her ways better than a man does, therefore she is able to get better values out of her to the benefit of the entertaining values of a picture.

"The City of Tears" was directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. The director has increased the heart appeal of the story by inserting certain little touches that usually cannot be put into a script. They must always depend on the imagination of the director. They form the little trimmings that in many a case have saved a picture.

This offering will please your patrons as it is full of little situations that will appeal to the human emotions.

The story was written by Olga Printzlau and tells of the troubles and temptations of a young girl, member of an Italian Opera Company, but now out of employment, and who wanted to remain good. She met Tony, a kind-hearted Italian, who was the only person that had been kind to her and fell in love. Later she helped him find his long lost little sister who had run away from him and become a young artist's model. She persuaded the artist to marry the girl, and when she found out that there was no other girl that absorbed Tony's thoughts, she consented to become his wife.

Miss Myers looks very sweet in this picture. She fits her role to perfection. Edwin August, as Tony the Italian, is very human and wins your sympathy. He is thoroughly convincing in his role, at no time overdoing it. The story in places is slightly suggestive, but as it does not concern any of the characters that win your sympathy and as those situations are put over very cleverly, I am sure they will get by even among critical audiences.

On the whole the picture is interesting and will appeal to all classes.

"Hit-the-Trail Holliday"

George Cohan Hits the Real Cohan Stride in Latest Artcraft

(Artcraft—June 16. Directed by Marshall Neilan)

WITH the element of self-sacrifice forming its basis, "Hit-the-Trail Holliday" is a corking good comedy-drama, containing not only genuine comedy situations, but human interest as well. It is the product of an unusual combination of talent, of the star, who is also the author, director and scenarioist. The sub-titles were written by Anita Loos, who is unique in the field. She has had the good thought of inserting hits against the Kaiser and the German spy system, which will help make this picture more popular especially among patriotic Americans. These insertions will surely get applause every time.

The story is taken from the stage play of the same name written by Mr. Cohan, a satire on the methods used by Billy Sunday. It tells of Billy Holliday (George M. Cohan), a young bartender and the best drink mixer in the country, who lost his job on account of refusing to sell drinks to minors, because he wanted to play the game square. He was offered a position in a new bar in a little town up the state. It was opened with the purpose of putting the old hotel out of business because the proprietor had discontinued selling intoxicating liquors. Upon learning the facts, he gave up his job and sided with the hotel proprietor, preferring to exploit the qualities of "Vevo," a new non-alcoholic drink, and incidentally cultivate the friendship of the proprietor's pretty daughter. Eventually he succeeds in converting the entire town to the temperance cause, makes the new drink known and marries the girl.

Owing to the similarity of name, "Vevo" and a non-alcoholic drink called "Bevo," that is now being manufactured by a certain concern, some of you might object on the grounds that it might imply advertising for that drink. The same objections were raised by some exhibitors when "His Picture in the Papers" with Douglas Fairbanks was produced some years ago, due to the fact that it was more or less an advertisement of the fifty-seven varieties of pickles. However, no kicks were raised by the picturegoers then, as the picture proved to be very entertaining. I am sure no objections will be raised in this case either.

ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS.—This picture is pro-temperance to the bone, but the moral is presented in the form of an excellent entertainment and not as a preachment. The picture theatre has proved the deadliest enemy to the liquor interests which in turn have fought hard against the theatre. We might just as well get reconciled to the fact that the saloon sooner or later must go, the sooner the better for the picture industry, therefore I would suggest your fixing your advertising so that the moral this picture conveys may be exploited to the fullest extent, provided, of course, the biggest part of your audience is not composed of "Wets."

You may seek the co-operation of the temperance societies, women's clubs, parent-teachers' associations and the churches. You could certainly arouse their enthusiasm to a high pitch if it were possible for you to show the picture to the heads of these organizations privately about a week in advance.

For your newspaper advertising you may use catch phrases denouncing liquor. The theme offers a great field for freak advertising.

You may also exploit another incident in the story, where Billy Holliday proposes to the girl in the form of a speech. You may use the following catch phrases: "Are you in line for a wife? Do you want to learn the new way of proposing? See 'Hit the Trail Holliday.'"

"Social Quicksands"

Bushman and Bayne in Another "Better Than the Last" Offering

(Metro—June 10. Directed by Charles J. Brabin)

YOU can stand at the door of your theatre and face your patrons with a smile while you play this picture. It seems that every Bushman picture is better than the previous one. He has been doing very efficient work lately. However there is good harmony between the two and the results are very apparent.

The scenario was written by Katharine Kavanaugh and tells of Phyllis Lane who exchanged her identity with a burglar in order to bring to her feet a young wealthy bachelor, who had snubbed her by refusing to meet her because he thought she was after his money. She won in her purpose but incidentally lost her heart to him.

On the whole it is a clean romantic drama containing several wholesome comedy situations. The direction is very intelligent and the selection of types successful. There are several beautiful outdoor scenes in it.

It should appeal to all picturegoers, especially those of the better class.

ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS.—You can go strong on this picture. Lay stress on the fact that it is a very pleasing comedy-drama with plenty of outdoor scenery in it.

If you cater to a large number of young ladies, the following catch phrases may be appropriate to use in your advertising campaign:

"Young ladies take notice. If a young wealthy bachelor has refused to meet you because he thought you were after his money, what would you do? How would you go about it in order to bring him to your feet and make him beg forgiveness? See 'Social Quicksands.'"

"Find the Woman"

Alice Joyce Portrays O. Henry's Heroine in a Pleasing Drama

(Vitagraph—June 10. Directed by Tom Terriss)

THIS is a good dramatic offering produced in fine atmosphere. It will hold the interest well to the end.

The scenario is based on the O. Henry story "Cherchez la Femme," a French adage meaning "Find the Woman," which is usually applied in tracing a crime. It tells of the unjust accusation against Madelein Renard, a young member of a French Opera Company, as having illegal relations with a jeweller, who had just died, because money placed in his trust could not be located. She was so shocked that she decided to enter a convent to spend the rest of her life. Eventually the money was found in the form of bank notes pasted on the wall hidden behind a picture. The mystery and her name thus cleared, she is again sought by her sweetheart, and she again finds happiness.

This offering will appeal to a high-class patronage more strongly than to the masses.

"Kidder & Ko"

No Excitement, But Fair Satisfaction in Washburn's Latest

(Pathe—June 16)

THIS is a light comedy-drama which will please your patrons only fairly well. It will not create any excitement, however.

The story tells of a young man, and an excellent pool player, but too poor at any other undertaking, who was told by his father to go and not to come back until he made good. He went away, posed as an inventor of a perfect can of somebody else's invention, got backing to finance it, won success and a wife. Eventually he returned to his father and was made the head of his dried codfish factory.

It is a clean picture and will carry an appeal rather to the high-class element.

"The Firefly of France"

A Story of German Espionage That Gives Wallace Reid a Good Chance

(Paramount—June 23. Directed by Donald Crisp)

THIS is an entertaining offering. It is a war subject though it does not deal with actual fighting, but with the German espionage system. The element of mystery prevails throughout which makes the picture interesting.

The story was written by Marion Polk Angelotti, a prominent novelist and a magazine writer, and was published in the Saturday Evening Post in serial form. It tells of a young American, who decided to join the ambulance corps in France, and his experience with German spies.

The action is swift, direction good, and the photography of the best. The cast is also good, Mr. Reid being just the right type to portray this particular character.

It is a clean picture that will appeal to any audience.

"The Eleventh Commandment"

An Average Dramatic Offering Presenting Lucille Lee Stewart

THIS is a fair dramatic offering which will help to make up your week's bill. The story is somewhat slow and could be speeded up considerably by proper re-editing and eliminating some of the excessive padding.

The scenario was written by the director himself and tells of a girl who had turned down the man she really loved in order to marry another whom she thought wealthy but who was making his living by his wits. He forced her to steal and later deserted her but rather than give him away she went to the penitentiary for one year. After her release she married the man she first loved and whom she met again by chance.

The direction is fair, but the photography and interior settings are excellent.

Time—70 minutes.

"Her Final Reckoning"

The Sex Plot Moulded Around Pauline Frederick Once More

(Paramount—June 9. Directed by Emile Chautard)

DRAMATICALLY this is one of the best Pauline Frederick pictures that has ever been made with the exception of "The Eternal City." There is plenty of heart appeal in it. Some of you, however, might offer objections on the ground that it is a sex play, pure and simple.

The story is based on the book, "Prince Zilah," by Jules Claretie, member of the French Academy and director of the Comedie Francaise. It tells of Marsa (Pauline Frederick), the daughter of a Russian nobleman and a gypsy from a love union. She met Count Menko in Paris who induced her to bestow her affections on him. She was shocked when later she found out he was married, and therefore she deserted him. Prince Zilah met her at a reception and fell in love with her. They married. Angered by jealousy, Count Menko discloses to the Prince her past relations with him. The prince scorns her and tells her to go and spend the rest of her days with Menko. Thereupon he leaves the house. She loses her reason through sorrow. Later at the supplication of the doctor, Prince Zilah returns and helps him restore her reason. In the end Menko is killed in a duel by a bosom friend of Prince Zilah and a reconciliation takes place.

The action is interesting, direction excellent, photography and interior settings splendid.

It is not to be considered as an entertainment for young folks.

"The Claw"

Clara Kimball Young in a Story Not Up to Her Standard

(Select—June 10. Directed by Robert Vignola)

THIS is a poor subject for Clara Kimball Young. Its chief asset is physical action. It contains no heart interest whatever.

The story tells of Mary Saurin (Clara Kimball Young), a young Irish girl, who went to her brother in South America. There she was attracted to two men, one of whom she learned to love. She promised to marry him upon his return from an expedition, undertaken to subdue some natives. During an attack by the natives, the band was exterminated, he being made a captive. His rival deserted them before the attack, went back and falsely informed her that her sweetheart was killed, and that his last wish was that he marry her. Believing in his sincerity, she consented to marry him. Word was received later that he was still alive and a captive of the natives. Realizing how she was duped, and learning of his true character, she decided to brave the danger and go alone to his rescue.

Remorse stricken, the husband begs to be allowed to atone. He rides off to the hills, rescues his rival, but in coming back is shot by one of the natives. He dies in his wife's arms, begging forgiveness.

You will be able to just get by with this picture, but it will not please as well as some of the previous attractions of this star.

"The Man Hunt"

Ethel Clayton, a Charming Man Hunter in This World

(World—June 17. Directed by Travers Vale)

THE splendid acting of Miss Clayton will help this offering. The story, however, is not only improbable but also one of those that no woman picturegoer will accept as a bona fide entertainment. It tells of a young wealthy girl who fell in love with a strong man and wanted to marry him but he pretended he didn't want to. All through the five reels she is shown as trying to make him marry her by intimidation, begging and all sorts of schemes.

With a good story to work in I am sure Miss Clayton can present us with a fine entertainment.

"Her Body in Bond"

A Title and Subject That Don't Get Much Praise

(Bluebird—July 15. Directed by Robert Leonard)

THE story of this picture is based mainly on a man suffering from tuberculosis. He continually coughs as an indication of his suffering. The creation of an entertainment around such an incident I consider unwise. In actual life it only arouses our pity, therefore it could not form the basis for a successful picture entertainment. I am sure no one wants to see a human being suffering from such disease.

The story was written by H. Sheridan Bickers, and tells of a young married couple who were struggling to make an existence as vaudeville artists. The husband contracted tuberculosis and went to Arizona to get cured. The wife (Mae Murray is in the role) worked doubly hard to supply him with funds. During his absence the villain, a young man, was professing disinterested friendship for her while he was actually planning to force his attentions upon her. After an absence of several months the husband returned completely recovered just as the villain was attacking his wife, as mild persuasion proved of no avail. A struggle ensued in which the husband was worsted, owing to his still weakened condition. At that moment a shot was heard and the villain dropped dead. It was fired by the girl's father, a drug fiend, who was induced by the villain to further his plans, promising him the drug as a remuneration.

As the story shows the villain how he was planning salaciously against a good woman, it can hardly be considered a picture fit for a family theatre. Another point that never adds to the entertaining values of a photoplay is the showing of a drug fiend and the act of supplying him with the drug. It is too repulsive to be incorporated in a picture.

This offering is not for the better class of theatres.

"The Empty Cab"

Mystery and Comedy in Franklyn Farnum's Latest Bluebird

(Bluebird—July 1. Directed by Douglas Gerrard)

THIS is a very interesting and entertaining mystery story containing several pleasing comedy situations.

The story was written by F. McGrew Willis and tells of Henry Egbert Xerxes (Franklyn Farnum), the son of a wealthy father, who knew how to spend money but very little about how to make it. His father enjoined him to get a job. He secured one on a newspaper as a reporter and was assigned to apprehend a gang of counterfeiters whom the police could not get. After some exciting adventures with the gang in a lonely house he went back to the office to write the story. He was amazed to see the familiar faces of the gang occupying different desks. Then it dawned on him that it was all made up at the suggestion of his father. However, the girl member of the gang was too pretty to escape his attention. Being now the owner of the paper, his father having bought it, he fired this girl from her job, but hired her for life as his wife, thus putting one over on father.

The picture is clean and will appeal to all classes.

"Madame Sphinx"

The Familiar Cuff Button Solves Another Mystery Entertainingly

(Triangle—June 9. Directed by Thomas N. Heffron)

THIS is a very interesting and entertaining detective drama produced splendidly. The story was written by Raymond L. Shrock and is based on the detection of a murder through a clue furnished by a cuff button which the murderer had dropped. Thus an innocent man was cleared of the charge and he and the heroine are united in marriage.

The picture is clean and, owing to the nature of the story, will appeal to a large number of picturegoers. Alma Rubens is featured.

"The Only Road"

Viola Dana Satisfies in a "Mother and Daughter" Story

(Metro—June 10. Directed by George D. Baker)

THIS is just a little above the average Metro offering. It will hold the interest fairly well.

The story was written by the director himself and tells of a woman who had married secretly but was unable to prove her marriage to her parents because her husband was killed shortly afterwards and the marriage certificate destroyed. She had given birth to a daughter. In order to avoid slurs against her character, she placed her in the custody of a Mexican couple through a lawyer. Later the lawyer informed her falsely that her baby died. When the baby grew to womanhood she met a young man and married him, thus wrecking the plans of the unscrupulous lawyer who had schemed to have her marry his son and thus inherit her fortune. Later the mother and daughter were reunited.

The construction of the story partly on Mexican atmosphere hurts rather than helps the picture. It could have been left out to good advantage. Mexican situations are not popular with the American public at the present time. In fact, they never have been.

The work of Miss Dana is very pleasing. With good stories there is no reason why she should not become a very good drawing card.

"The Eagle"

A Typical Salisbury Subject with a Few Gruesome Touches

(Bluebird—June 17. Directed by Elmer Clifton)

THIS is a regular Salisbury contribution, strong and interesting, with the action swift throughout. It also contains plenty of heart interest.

The story was written by Ethel Hill and tells of John Gregory, nicknamed "The Eagle," from an eagle-like mask he wore in his hold-ups. He had turned highwayman in order to rob a mining company because the president had, by crooked means, dispossessed him and his mother of their home, thus causing her death. He met Lucy, a pretty girl, and fell in love. One night he held up the main office. He found the guard had been killed and then discovered another highwayman in the place. He was surprised to recognize in him Lucy's brother, who, in attempting to escape on a horse given him by "The Eagle," was caught. Lucy, believing in her brother's tale of innocence, went to Gregory for help. She found him unconscious from a shot he received in the encounter and was shocked to recognize in him "The Eagle." Upon hearing of her brother's arrest and trial he rode to the courtroom, took the blame upon himself, and gave himself up. He was tried and convicted to hang, but as the noose was being placed around his neck Lucy, riding wildly, arrived, bringing a written confession from her brother, who had just committed suicide, admitting his guilt, just in time to prevent the execution. Lucy now realized that "The Eagle" had almost sacrificed himself for her sake. She embraced him and told him she was his for life.

I am afraid that on the one hand the details of the suicide—it shows how the trigger was pulled by aid of a stick—and those of the hanging on the other, will prove too strong for some audiences, especially the women. The details of the hanging are too gruesome and agonizing, and although they add to the dramatic, they make the entertaining values suffer correspondingly.

Mr. Salisbury's acting is excellent. The direction and photography are of the best. It is a clean attraction.

"The Last Rebel"

Belle Bennett in a Drama Up to Triangle Standard

(Triangle—June 9. Directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton)

"THE LAST REBEL" is a fairly entertaining offering. It starts in the Civil War days, without showing any of the military side of life, but only that of society, and comes down to our days. It tells of a feud between two different families that lived through three generations in the end to die out with the marriage of Floribel Batesford to Jim Apperson, the last descendants.

It is a clean picture and an average Triangle.

"The Eternal Woman"

(Produced by Advanced Motion Picture Corporation. To Be Released Through Pathe. Directed by Ralph W. Ince)

THIS is a very intelligently produced clean picture containing plenty of human element. It will hold the interest and will entertain.

It is a feud story taken exclusively out doors. The scenery is very beautiful.

There is one little slip which the author has overlooked in it. Although "Bad Anse" is supposed to be an illiterate, still he is talking in perfect English in the subtitles. This should be easy to remedy.

Owing to the nature of the story which necessitates a great deal of shooting, it will appeal mostly to the middle and lower classes.

Seattle Sets a New Record

One Issue of the Times Shows Possibilities Growing Out of Co-operation of Paper and Theatres

WE pause this week in the midst of our studies on the co-operation between newspapers and motion picture theatres to show you what we believe is a world's record in regular advertising in an average issue of a Sunday newspaper. It is a bulk of advertising that is not due to any special event, any unusual period of prosperity or any freak state of affairs. It is advertising that has been developed by the policy of advertising of the pioneer publicity men and the co-operation that has been accorded by one of the papers.

By this time you have probably guessed that the city is Seattle and that the paper is the Times. And while we are making these general statements we want to say right here that Jensen and von Herberg, owners of a chain of houses on the coast, are responsible for the first of this big advertising, and that they are the pioneers in the whole industry in the use of great quantities of newspaper space. And it has been G. F. Fullerton — better known as "Hundred Per Cent" — who has achieved the splendid type of advertising that these houses are using. It is to the distinct credit of the other theatres that they have appreciated the value of this large advertising and that they have followed in the footsteps.

There is no question in the world that today there are more top notch advertising theatres here than in any other city. Enterprise and co-operation has done the work. And any city in the country can do what Seattle has done — when the exhibitors make up their minds to spend real money for publicity and the owners of the newspapers realize that they have to show the motion picture managers how to advertise and how to get real results for every nickel that they do spend.

At a later date we are going further into the situation in Seattle, as we have done in the case of other cities, but for this discussion we want to consider this single issue of the Times, and to show you how good the advertising is and why.

Each Sunday the Times devotes a separate section to motion pictures, including the legitimate and vaudeville, but practically all of the space is given to film matters and the theatrical relegated to the back. Generally this section runs six pages, but in this last issue to reach us there are eight of them. We recall that the New Orleans Item at one time issued an eight-page motion picture section, but this included three pages of motion picture serial matter and the amount of advertising could not be compared with that of the Seattle Times. In this section there is one syndicate page used as a filler, but as this is about Nazimova, now in pictures, it is good stuff.

Now on the first page of the Times there always appears a picture of a star in colors and a short sketch of her. New matter occupies the rest of the page and the full four columns at the left are always used by either the Liberty or the Coliseum, which, together with the Mission and the Strand, are the Jensen and von Herberg houses.

We have mentioned to you so often the methods of advertising followed by Fullerton that comment here is repetition, except that it does good to repeat that he always uses big space, always a smashing cut display, and the fewest number of words possible. Either combinations of half tones and line work or all line work are used. The first thing that Fullerton strives for is to have the display, at the very first glance, suggest to the reader some big, dominating idea and the small amount of reading matter that he does use simply drives that same idea home—merchandises it to you.

Now the girl and the revolver immediately suggests a crime story to the reader, but if it were offered merely as a crime story there would probably be a lot of regular patrons that would stay away. And so the reading matter is devoted to the charm of the story and the sympathy that the audience will immediately feel for the character. The one dominant idea is retained, but it is twisted around into an appealing argument.

The Orpheum has just recently gone in for pictures and it is a splendid house that is doing things on a big scale. So it uses page displays, this week advertising Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket." Here one of the advertising suggestions sent out by the Pathe publicity department is used, and there is an unusually large amount of white space and the least possible wording. Liberty theatre occupies the advertising space on the third page and the same style of advertising as that of the Coliseum is used. Now on these inside pages the Times gives each of the theatres that does big advertising a story with one of the larger headings, and fills in with shorter news matter about plays and the players. Each of the big feature is also given a single or two-column cut, no regular layout being used.

The fourth page contains an advertisement on "The Eagle's Eye" at the Palace Hip, and then the display at John Hamrick's Rex theatre. Hamrick is another big advertiser and here he features "A Dog's Life" all through his display. He uses this style of borders almost exclusively, employing heavy black type for a lot of his lettering and the few descriptive words that he uses. In this case both of the cuts on Chaplin are those furnished by the First National.

Strand theatre occupies the fifth page. There's a picture of Bill Hart's ball for the soldiers and a lot of other news matter. The Times has a splendid feature that it uses every Sunday in "Who's Who in the Films," this giving the casts of all the principal features that are being shown in Seattle that week for the first time.

The sixth page is the syndicate article on Nazimova. Mission theatre uses somewhat smaller space than the other houses of the same chain, but the same style. Clemmer theatre, another of the leading houses of Seattle, varies its styles of advertising, but the example reproduced here is one of the favorites that is used. Now note that on this page are two displays of the smaller houses and that while they use smaller space, it is all good advertising, all with cuts and all with the name of the theatres brought out and the minimum of words.

We reproduce the last page to show how comparatively little the theatres and vaudeville houses do in comparison with the motion picture.

There is certainly one lesson to all of this. The spirit of good advertising will spread and Seattle shows it. And not alone has Seattle benefited, but the same spirit has spread to many other cities. In fact, we could name you manager after manager that uses the Fullerton advertising in his own city at a later date. And we believe that instead of being blamed for doing this that he should be given credit, so long as he does not claim the work of another, for adopting a good thing when he sees it.

Let us say that in the period that the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has been in existence there has been fully a hundred per cent improvement in the quality of motion picture advertising all over the country, and we believe that a great deal of this has been the result of good advertising that has been reproduced in these pages.

Any person who undertakes to sit down and give you a series of rules for advertising and who lays down to you hard and fast "Don't" and "Do This," is handing you the BUNK. Good advertising is a thing largely absorbed from what others are doing. Criticism is the best aid, but there must be careful study of each picture and careful use of every lead that will tend to attract unusual attention.

Now here is the important part that every newspaper ought to play in helping the exhibitor, which would result in quadrupling the income of the newspapers from these sources. The average motion picture theatre manager knows nothing about advertising

These pages illustrate the acme of newspaper and theatre cooperation. They represent a Sunday section from the Seattle, Wash. Times and show you what can be accomplished when the leading theatres determine to use big space and when they get the full aid of the daily papers. There is something more to this than the mere amount of reading matter printed. Read the article on the opposite page and you will begin to understand why Seattle has set an example for the rest of the country and why so many other cities have adopted the "Seattle idea."

Simplicity Stamps Displays Made by Laurie at Midway Theatre

HERE are two more of the simple, but highly effective lobby displays arranged by A. J. Laurie, publicity manager of the Midway theatre, Montreal.

For the opening of the Vitagraph serial, "The Woman in the Web," on cardboard was used with the design painted on it. The entire display was fourteen feet high and thirteen wide. There are two portions of the display, one forming the walls from which suspends the human bridge on which were placed the cut outs of the two figures. The back plan includes the clouds and the reading matter carrying the title of the pictures and the name of the star.

Only the central portion of the display on "A Dog's Life" is shown, carrying out one of the funniest scenes in the picture—where the dog, concealed in the star's trousers, beats the drum with his tail through a hole in the selfsame trousers. It was found impossible in the display to arrange things so that the tail would strike the drum so a tom-tom was substituted. Of course the tail was movable and the drummer's hand worked in harmony with it. These were cutout figures, and in the background was the cotton frame with the decorations and lettering.

Both of these displays are simplicity themselves, but they show what publicity can be secured when a manager sits down and figures the possibility of each picture. There is not a film, long or short, that will not suggest some striking design.

MORE ABOUT MUSIC

Fuller Accounts of Way that Pictures Are Played

HEREAFTER the accounts of the presentations at the Rialto and Rivoli will give additional music suggestions. It is not practicable to give Mr. Rothapfel's music cues, as a great share of the parts of selections that he uses are simply known by numbers and indicate certain parts taken out of various selections for certain kinds of action. However, these accounts will indicate more fully special music used at special times.

This is in response to the hundreds of letters received about these articles. Only two weeks ago the manager of one of the handsomest houses in the Middle West told us that he clipped three copies of these articles, sent one to his musical director, another to his production manager and filed the third for himself. Similar letters have come from exhibitors everywhere. This department has been running nearly a year now. and it has occupied a place of its own in the field.

Chicago Theatre Delights with "Unbeliever"

Garfield theatre, under the able management of Charles H. Ryan, made a record with the showing of "The Unbeliever" for one Sunday and his presentation was one that would do credit to many larger houses [illegible] longer runs.

The program opened with a xylophone [illegible] then one of the Four Minute Men made his appearance. Following this a soloist sang "A Soldier's Rosary," which was accompanied by a picture carrying out the story of the song.

Then as a prologue for the picture the house was darkened and blue flood lights were thrown on the stage. Descriptive music was used hailing the break of day with birdcalls and the crowing of roosters and the Reveille sounded in the distance together with the sentry's cry of "All's Well." Then the brighter blue flood was used and the bugles sounded "Assembly." The Marine Hymn was then used.

Duluth Paper Stirs New Interest by Contests

Constructive work is being done by the photoplay department of the Duluth News-Tribune. That paper has just concluded a popularity contest in which each of those voting for the wining star was offered a photograph of the player. Miss Marguerite Clark won with a lead of eight votes over Vivian Martin, and thirteen more than Pearl White. Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Mae Marsh, Dorothy Dalton, Constance Talmadge, Olive Thomas and Ann Pennington followed.

The News-Tribune. now announces a second contest for the selection of the best photoplay presented in Duluth during June. In making this announcement, the advance bookings of the various theatres are given and each person is asked to write a 200-word review of the picture selected as the best.

This is good work on the part of a newspaper. It renews interest in the pictures and it is bound to benefit

"The Spy" Forbidden by Kaiser's Edict

Box Office Attractions Co., which handled the Detroit office of the Fox Film Corporation, used a unique stunt in connection with "The Spy" and "Chasing the Kaiser, or the Pride of New York" in mailing to exhibitors proclamations signed in the name of the kaiser declaring that a boycott had been put on the two pictures and urging that loyal servants of the Hun refrain from showing the picture.

The circular was printed in German script type. It was purely a sales talk to theatres and managers were advised not to use it publicly without the full consent of the local authorities.

Harrisburg Theatre Makes Serial with Amateurs

Majestic theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., is making a big hit with a plan that has been followed in some other cities—making motion pictures on the stage and showing them at a later date. Local talent is used exclusively. All of the work is done before the audiences.

On-the-Ground Views of Pictures

HERE are the views of two Californians who are "right on the ground" and in a position to tell the producers of pictures and even the directors themselves what is the matter with picture productions. And according to the stories we hear in New York they do not hesitate to do so. Both of them went the unnecessary padding left out of productions.

Sid Grauman, manager of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, is right on the scene of making pictures and is in close touch with their production. Eugene H. Roth, manager of the Caelifornia, San Francisco, makes frequent trips to the studios and tells the directors what he wants in features.

The views of these men are highly interesting. They are presented without others this week that exhibitors may see the ideas of the men who are in closest touch with production.

EUGENE H. ROTH, manager of the California theatre, San Francisco, points out the ideal program for a high-class house. He declares that the most suitable picture would be one about 4,000 or 4,500 feet. He declares that in America to-day everything is bright and snappy and full of vim, and that he wants to see the same thing in the pictures that he shows at his house:

I firmly believe that every manager endeavors to give the very best possible form of entertainment that can be given. Some of us make great effort featuring music, others make a greater effort in singing, or other forms of entertainment to add some individuality, as well as novelty, which unquestionably has a tendency to help the feature picture on the program.

These side issues—and I might add sometimes strenuous efforts that we make—can only be done when our feature picture is only five reels, because it must be plain to every exhibitor that it is necessary to round out a show to consist of not over two hours. Of course, the ideal show is the feature picture, a good weekly, a five-hundred-foot scenic or educational subject, and a thousand feet of good comedy (if such a thing is possible), with whatever added feature in music, or otherwise, is offered. This can be very nicely done, without crowding the show, in two hours.

I notice with a great deal of pleasure that the Artcraft-Paramount footage of features are, in most incidents, running a little shy of five thousand feet. Personally, I believe that four thousand, or forty-five hundred feet at the outset, would be ideal, featuring the big stars and devoting the entire picture to the "milk of the cocoa," without camouflage or padding.

We cannot deny the fact that the public are too well educated, by reason of the constant and consistent patronage that they have given us in the past, and as such, are indeed ideal critics, and will not stand for padded pictures. Of course, I can only speak from a standpoint of a manager of continuous performances. I presume, however, that there are a great many theatres that only run one show in the evening, or the afternoon, and they would prefer the eight to ten-reel feature.

Today in America everything successful is bright and snappy and full of vim, and there is no reason why this should not be applied to feature pictures, as well as to the fillers in scenics, comedies or special offerings. I, for one, would recommend the featuring of stars in less than five thousand feet.

SID GRAUMAN, manager of the new million dollar Grauman theatre, Los Angeles, thinks that the whole question of the length of pictures simmers down to the story and the direction. He declares that if the story can be told in three or four reels so that there will be kick and pep in the production every minute it will certainly go bigger:

I have reviewed picture productions consisting of ten reels which did not seem one foot too long. Then, on the other hand, I have seen one-reelers that bored me.

I think the point simmers down to the story and the direction. The proper story, the proper direction, and the story properly cast, I have seen five-reel stories which when finished I would have been satisfied to look at five reels more of.

I think the making of pictures is more or less a gamble until the feature is entirely completed and placed upon the screen. The same goes for the spoken drama or the big musical shows produced by the brainiest men in that line.

There is no doubt in my mind but that a great many of the program and state right pictures are padded to a large extent. Of course, if the story can be told in three or four thousand feet, eliminating all padding and dragging, and give that production kick and pep every minute it appears upon the screen, I am quite sure it will go bigger with audiences.

I have seen corking good stories dragged out to five, six and seven reels which should have been condensed to four and would have gone big with the public instead of tiring them.

I think that in this case a patron might return to see that same picture again the second time while he would not care to see it again while in a padded and lengthy condition.

Have you ever witnessed a vaudeville act that appeared four or five minutes and went over big with the audiences? In most instances this act would do twelve or fourteen minutes when first presented before the public, but in a short time discovered that the act went over much bigger with the audiences when cut in half. Have you ever witnessed a vaudeville act that did ten or twelve minutes of dragging, tiresome dialogue and then at the last minute of the act finished with some novel stunt.

This is being done in a great many instances with pictures. A long drawn out story and then in the last reel some punch injected in the picture with the intent of saving the picture.

I think that one of the most valuable assets to the motion picture is a first-class director. A good director can take a fair picture and a fair cast and make a good picture, but a bad director can butcher the best book or scenario regardless of the cast even if it includes a star. The length of the production to my way of thinking should be determined by the director, that is, if he is a real director and uses his head.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

CERTAINLY, with the news from France, nothing could be more timely than the showing of the first of the marine pictures made by Lieut. S. L. Rothapfel on his recent trip to various marine posts. They form a striking part of the Animated at the Rivoli, yet Mr. Rothapfel declares that these are the poorest of the pictures that he made, and he promises a real sensation when the best of them are shown. However, Sunday they got cheer after cheer from the audiences.

In fact, the thing that strikes one about the entire bill at the Rivoli this week is the Americanism of the entire presentation. Now, you who have been following this department for the past year and have become familiar with the way that Rothapfel does things know that it does not happen by accident that the single theme, or spirit, is carried entirely through the bill. They are carefully planned to get, not only the spirit, but, if the expression may be permitted, to get the tones of the spirit all through the bill.

Now the marine pictures as well as the whole of the Animated is full of the kind of Americanism that calls for cheering, and the feature is one of those hip-hip-hooray affairs with speed and punch every minute, and so it was quite fitting that the rest of the bill should be in a quieter spirit. Let's go through this bill and see how the theme is worked out. But before we do that let us call your attention here to one cut that Mr. Rothapfel made in the feature, "Hit the Trail Holliday." There is one point in the story where Holliday calls on the audience to sing the "Star Spangled Banner." The manifest result of this would have been playing the national anthem in the midst of the feature.

In the first place it would be very bad taste and lowering the dignity of the anthem. And in the second it is confusing to make an audience stand in the midst of a picture. The answer is that Mr. Rothapfel cut this out, and instead, almost the whole of the incident was retained, with the title, out, and Cohan's "Grand Old Flag" was used in its place. The picture gained by making this change. In the film the words of the anthem appear, and these will probably be thrown on the screen in most theatres as they will fail to take this portion out.

"Merry Wives of Windsor" is the overture, and this is played with the lights all gold. Then follow the second installment of "Mexico To-Day," the highly interesting George D. Wright pictures released by Education. This one shows the immense power plant at Nexaca, where the electricity for a great portion of the nation is created. There are some unusual shots, especially of the pipe in their drop of a quarter of a mile to the generators. "La Feria" suite is played for this.

Here comes a pretty touch. With only the dome in dark blue and the rest of the house dark a few bars of "My Old Kentucky Home" are played on the 'cello, and then the curtains part revealing the interior of a cabin with the lighting effect in red and the spotlight on Miss Gladys Rice, seated beside a cradle. Then she sings "Mighty Lak a Rose." The curtains come together again just as the last words are dying away, and the audience breaks into tremendous applause. It is one of the biggest hits that could be used, a simple use of old songs.

Rivoli Animated opens with Universal pictures of the launching of a destroyer at Sydney, N. S. W., and then follows the launching of a new submarine in France, the latter picture coming from Gaumont. "We Are Coming" is played once through for these numbers and then follow Gaumont pictures showing thousands of American sailors swaying back and forth in rollicking sea songs under the direction of Y. M. C. A. leaders. There are some splendid shots of the men through the trees, and there is constant applause as the picture is shown to "Liberty Bell," the chorus being used. Hearst-Pathe supplies pictures of the 143rd Artillery on a record march at Pomona, Cal., and there is more enthusiasm as the orchestra plays "It's a Long, Long Trail." From the same source come pictures of testing the new tractors at Washington, which climb over trees and do all sorts of stunts. "Happy Yankee," in which "Yankee Doodle" is counterpointed, is used here.

Universal follows with pictures of the destroyed dam at Hill, N. H., an unexpected work of Hun spies, with "Coralanus" the music. This continues through Gaumont pictures showing the effect of the visit of U-boats to American waters. Now this music has a plaintive, yet threatening motive through it, and it is well suited for such pictures where impressiveness is desired. There is not even a ripple of applause during any of these pictures.

Rothapfel astounds his audiences at the opening of the marine picture by throwing on the screen a German word. It's "Teufelhunden," and you are inclined to get peeved until you find that it is the German word for "Devil dogs," a name that they have given our victorious marines. At the same moment that this title comes on the screen twin spots are thrown on American and Marine flags crossed over the proscenium arch and, before there is a flash of the picture, the audience bursts into a roar of enthusiasm. First of the scenes shown are of thousands of marching marines, splendidly drilled men. There is a most unusual fade in here that brings the color guard right up into the front rank. Here, of course, is another big burst of applause. Now, with the introduction of a fife and drum effect, "Semper Fidelis" is played until the title of the official marine march is thrown on the screen, showing the color guard and then the music changes to "Marine Hymn" which is played, without the introduction once through. Then comes another title, "If You Don't Know You Get Killed," showing the motto that has been adapted in training the men, and with this the music changes to "Go Get 'Em." Under this heading there are shown some wonderful pictures of the training stunts and the earnest reality in which the feats are performed. These scenes show vividly what the Marines are doing to the Huns now.

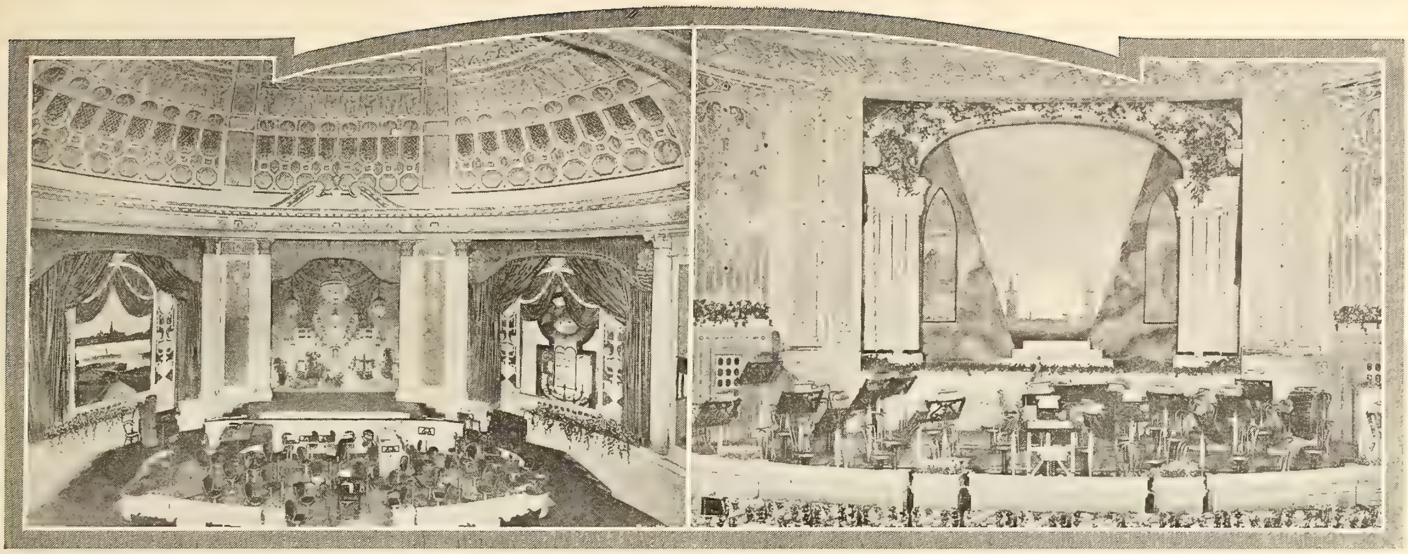
Now comes another striking title quoting from Gen. Pershing's report, which quotes a high official of the French ministry of war as saying that the American marines are the finest body of men that he had ever seen in the war, and here the music again turns to "Marine Hymn," which is played once through to the title, "We Are Coming, Uncle Sam, 75,000 Strong," and here the music comes back to "Semper Fidelis." The scenes which follow are taken at the head of the marching column, and toward the end the troops break into double time, coming right on at the camera and the audience simply goes wild.

Since Mr. Rothapfel took and titled these pictures himself, and since they will go out in this shape to other exhibitors, they will do well to retain this musical score for use when the pictures are shown in their theatre.

Now watch this new effect. The audience sinks back into its seats after a constant pouring out of enthusiasm. The lights at the top of the house become blue, with the borders of the inner dome in red and the orchestra bathed in red. Of course, this gets the effect of the national colors. There are a few bars of "Over There," and then the curtains part. There is a new effect here showing a room with a huge circular window through which the outline of the Eiffel Tower can be seen. Greek Evans is a blinded French soldier, in uniform, and Miss Gladys Rice, his daughter. All in song, the Frenchman asks who are the marching troops, and the effect is that the daughter replies that they are the Americans and then the officer replies with the words that all is well now. This number is called "The Americans Come," and it is most effective. It brings a tear to every eye, but at the end leaves the audience almost frantic in enthusiasm.

Then the feature. There is a brilliant music score for this plenty of Cohan and other popular music. The theme for the love scenes is "Oh, You Wonderful Girl," and the theme for Holliday is "Yankee Doodle Boy." Now there is a clever arrangement for the introduction of this picture. First we are told that there is a place which everyone sees in Rome and here "Funiculi" chorus is played once. The second place is the Sphinx in Egypt, and here there are four bars of "Egyptian Ballet." Then there is a place in London and for this "London Bridge is Falling Down," and finally the man in America, and here "Yankee Doodle Boy" is used, followed by "Sidewalks of New York," and then a repetition of "Yankee Doodle Boy." It is an introduction with a smash, due to the music.

Some of the selections used in the course of the feature are "Old Town Pump" at the first scenes in the New York state



After having read so much here about the Rialto and Rivoli theatres there has been a natural desire to know how some of the stage settings at these theatres look. Here are specimens. Of course, it must be taken into consideration that a large part of the beauty of these sets comes from the lighting employed, and that the colors are not brought out here. At the left is a setting that was used at the Rialto when a special musical number was sung as a prelude to "The Yellow Ticket," and in the center is the Byzantine set often used at that house. The three are shown together, but only the two side panels appeared for the number in question. At the left was the entrance to New York Harbor and at the right a Jewish effect carrying out the points in the story. At the right is a Rivoli setting that was used two weeks ago when Miss Jeanne Gordon sang "O Divine Redeemer." The singer was kneeling on the dais in the center when the parting curtains revealed her to the audience. These designs are by John Wenger town, "He's a Devil in His Own Home Town," "Yankee Prince" for one of the earlier scenes showing Cohan, and "Mother" when his mother is shown. "Little Mother" and "Girl of Mine" are also used for other scenes showing the mother. "Listen to This," "Cousin Jasper," "A Little Bit of Sunshine," "Sooner or Later," and "Happy Go Lucky" are some of the others. At the end where the couple start for the Quaker City "Philadelphia" is used.

There is more of the American touch with a medley of songs by Stephen Foster which come to an end with the full orchestra playing "Old Folks at Home." This number, played with the lights red and gold, gets as much applause as any of the most pretentious numbers. It seems to fit right in after we have had a lot of modern popular music and enthusiasm. It affords a striking contrast while still retaining the American spirit.

"The Honeymoon Baby" is an amusing Christie comedy that gives the orchestra a chance for catchy music and brings a scream when the cries of the mixed-up kiddies are heard.

Now there is just as much of a theme through the presentation at the Rivoli, where the feature is Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House," and where the Norse spirit runs through, starting with the overture, "Norwegian Rhapsody," which is played with the lights all gold except for the green center of the main dome.

Then come views in St. Croix, the second of the Pathe-Post travel pictures. Now there is a timely punch in this picture. The first music is "Twilight Sketches" and then are shown pictures of the American marines on duty and a title tells us that they want to get to Europe to fight. Here the music changes to "Semper Fidelis" and the audience applauds the marching men frantically. "Meditation" from "Twilight Sketches" and "Tales by Moonlight" are used for the remainder of the picture.

With all the lights red except the center dome lined with green the curtains part on the Byzantine settings after three bars are played and Carlos Mejia appears and sings "A Furtive Tear."

"Rialto March" is played for the opening of the Animated and when Universal shows pictures of Lord Reading, Secretary Lansing, and other noted men being awarded degrees, "Columbia" is used. From the same source come pictures of the wonderful drill of high school students at Chicago and here "High School Cadets" is played. Then come Universal screen vaudeville pictures, showing trained roosters. This is introduced with a single loud crow and then "Chanticleer" follows. Pictures of Ralph De Palma winning the auto race follow with "Electric Galop." Gaumont shows some striking pictures of the new tractor at Washington and gets a laugh when Secretary Baker gets down when the hill is too steep. "I'm Going to Follow the Boys" is the music.

Universal presents pictures of Anzacs in Australia preparing for the front and "Tommy Atkins" is played. Then comes the big punch of the Animated.

Universal pictures show the crew of the torpedoed Edward H. Cole and then follow old pictures showing the way that the "Deutschland" was welcomed on its visit before the country got into the war, and then follows a scene showing the wake of a torpedo. Next is a Hearst-Pathe shot of the collier "Cyclops" with the title, "The Cyclops, Where Is She?" with the scene immediately changing to views of the "President Lincoln" recently torpedoed. Now see the inference that is given about the missing collier. Then follow other Hearst-Pathe pictures declaring that the Americans are ready for the U-boats, showing scenes on shipboard. Now up to this time "Finlandia" has been the music, but it is a special arrangement. It is one of the most effective that we have heard and one that is impossible to describe. At the end come Universal pictures showing General Pershing's bridge across the sea, a string of ships with the flag in the foreground. For this smashing finish "Stars and Stripes" is used and there is cheering, after the period of tenseness that might be heard for blocks.

With the lights all blue and the singer never appearing before the audience, Miss Annie Rossner renders "Solveig's Song," which is the theme for the feature which follows. Side curtains part showing at one side waterfalls and at the other a stream running through a canyon, all in dark blue. This, of course, works right into the feature and here such musical numbers as "Norwegian Scenes," "Eked Fra Norden," "The Last Spring," "Repose of the Forest," and various symphonies and mysteriosos are used.

Immediately after this the orchestra turns to comedy with the rendition of "An Operatic Nightmare" and there is more done to banish the solemnity of the feature picture, a Mack Sennett comedy, "Two Tought Tenderfeet," which has a laugh every minute.

Here are two bills that are entirely different, but each worked out with a theme. It shows how the spirit of a feature may be carried out through a bill and at the same time variety given without disturbing the symphony.

Both of these features, put on in the ordinary way, probably wouldn't cause anyone to talk so much about the presentation, but given the sort of settings that they have at the Rialto and Rivoli—well, that's the reason why we are telling you of these presentations each week.

Your Idea and Ours

PROBABLY the most remarkable exploitation campaign that has been conducted in the brief history of motion pictures is that of J. A. Quinn, of the Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, for Monte Katterjohn's "Carmen of the Klondike."

Two months before the picture was to be shown Mr. Quinn started using big newspaper space in announcing that this picture was coming to the Rialto. During the same period he showed on his screen about a hundred scenes from the production and four weeks before the opening of the picture he started a billboard campaign that covered the entire city. Two weeks later he followed this up with three sheets and window cards.

The display shown here is one that was used the day before the opening. It occupied a space fourteen inches deep across six columns and the great reduction that is necessary here does not give a good idea of its effectiveness. There is one change that we would have made, and that is to have taken the "Greater Than the Spoilers" out of its slanting position and to have put it on the grey at the right of the bottom of the display. The figure of the star should have been made larger and there would have been relief from the large rather than serving any purpose.

Some people confuse conservatism with the spirit of those who laughed at the first railroad train.

HERE is an advertisement that analysis proves very bad, yet it is just the sort of a display that is most apt to bring business. As a general rule we would not pick anything worse than the series of boxes in odd shapes that are made to fit in with the oblique display carrying the name of the picture.

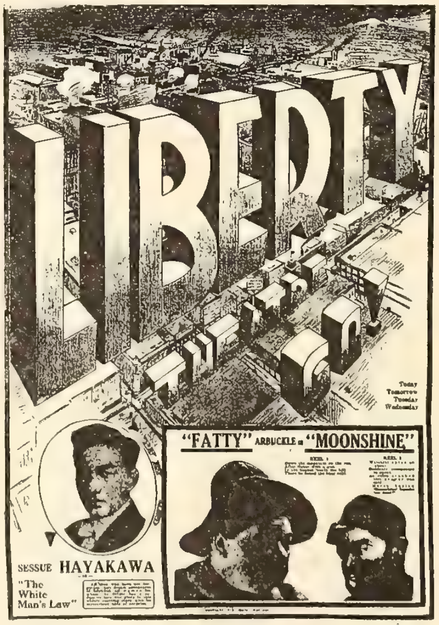
It's a display that is hard to read and we believe that the ordinary newspaper purchaser won't read it, yet it centers the main idea with the name of the picture, and the two identical cuts of the charging Empey. When you consider that this occupied the top half of a page and that the name of the theatre and the title of the picture were printed in red, you appreciate the smashing power of it.

Space used makes a large amount of difference in whether a display is good work or merely a freak effort.

A smile is worth a dozen arguments.

Here is something novel—and it comes from Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., one of the best advertisers in the whole country. The name of the theatre is always played up in its displays with the command "Go" generally used in small type.

But this week practically all of the space was devoted to advertising the theatre itself. It's a mighty good thing once in a while. Fifteen inches of space across five columns was used and more than two-thirds of this was devoted to a sketch showing the main street of Portland dominated by the blocked letters, "Liberty theatre." Ralph Ruffner, who designed this advertisement, also copyrighted it, so other exhibitors will use care in the manner in which they adopt the idea.



It is always desirable to keep the theatre the main thing in the public eye. It is the thing that you have got to sell every day. You may change services or this or that star may leave the program that you are using, and dozens of other things may happen, but the theatre remains the thing.

YES, there are times and places for the circus bills and here is one example of good use of them. Manager William Woods, of the Keystone Opera House, Towanda, Pa., saw that "The Kaiser" was just the sort of a picture for this, and as he wanted to advertise it in the surrounding towns. There is nothing that will attract quicker attention to special events in rural communities than the handbill, but they must be used judiciously and with a purpose.

A "dodger" is a strange sort of a creature. The more it violates the rules of ordinary good newspaper advertising, the better it is likely to be in this form.

Keystone has localized the appeal of the picture by having a "Bradford County boy" as the one who did the smashing. This is a little bit of fake stuff that can be done and gotten away with.

Courtesy will never be out on the list of the Government's "useless occupations."

RECENTLY a critic of advertising characterized a display of Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, as "good, but eccentric." If this is the case, let us hope that all exhibitors will quickly become "nuts."

On account of the large number of newspapers and the high rates for advertising, Mr. Franklin is compelled to use smaller space than that employed in some other cities. But he evens up for it by making his advertising distinctive. There is no one who has ever seen two copies of a Buffalo newspaper that will not immediately recognize the displays of Shea's Hippodrome, even if the name of the house were hidden. He always holds to the name design of his theatre and always uses hand lettering with plenty of white space and an attractive drawing.

In this instance the picture of Miss Talmadge and the silhouette of the orchestra are in Ben Day effect, the remainder being in black. There is the minimum of word matter.

Yes, if Franklin's advertising is eccentric let's all get that way.

The man who is busy telling his people how much better his show is will generally be found too busy to improve it.

THIS week we are printing a little bit of all sorts of advertising, and the issue wouldn't be complete unless we included one of the splendid "picture displays" of Mrs. Joseph Grossman, of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. Two different advertisements were used in the two Sunday papers. One of them showed the man and woman in the figure of a heart. The other is reproduced here.

We consider this going to the limit in simplicity of display and it is remarkably effective advertising when you have the co-operation of the newspapers in reading matter and cuts. Where there is not such co-operation we would not recommend it, for the first thing that a Cleveland reader does after seeing this display is to turn to the reading notices and find out what the picture is about. It is a display that is designed to catch the eye in the midst of a lot of others and it will certainly do it every time.

There's just one thing that we want to mention in connection with advertising of the Standard. You never catch this theatre saying that this or that picture is stupendous, astounding or anything of that sort. It simply puts over the big central idea and lets it go at that.

Advertising is the umbrella that turns the rain of depression.

WHAT do you think of a theatre in a town of 2,247 that uses page advertisements in each issue of the local weekly paper? That theatre is in Rayne, La., and the theatre is showing that it pays, even where the facilities are most limited.

We happen to know Rayne and conditions among many of the Louisiana weeklies, and so we are not surprised to find that about all of the old type of Civil War days is still in existence there. The type is very unattractive, but the theatre has probably used the best that was available. At least he has the right idea. He is using the same border on all of his displays and he is advertising the attraction for the entire week. He is using a cut with each picture, ones that he gets from the various exchanges. In other words this man seems to be doing one hundred per cent with all the facilities he has. Just one thing: It would cost him little to have a name play made for his theatre, and that would improve the appearance some.

We would have devoted more of the space in this particular one to "The German Curse." If the picture is worth booking for two days where the usual run is one day, the advertising should be arranged accordingly. We fail to see the reason why Fairbanks' name should have been put in the largest type.

But, any way, Rayne, good work and a good example to others.

Prunes are not so bad in themselves. It is their daily appearance on the table that sickens. It's the same with the theatre's bill of fare.

HERE is a page from the Sunday Selma, Ala., journal. It is paid for entirely by the Academy theatre which, of course, prepares the reading matter that goes in. Even in cases of much larger cities we have urged that the ideal arrangement would be for the theatre to use the maximum space that it could pay for, and the newspaper to offer reading matter co-operation. Our usual objection to such pages as that reproduced here is that the average reader knows that it is all paid matter and that it does not carry the conviction that would go with stories printed in a regular photoplay department.

But you have to figure that Selma is a city of only 15,000. "Successful Exhibitor," who started a new theatre against the opposition of four other houses in a city of similar size recently told you in the NEWS how he went about getting the co-operation of the local paper and how it brought him success. But he was exceptionally fortunate. This piece of work we consider to be easily the best of the page affairs that we have seen in any daily, large or small. Fine judgment has been used in the choice of type, so that the reading notices look like actual news matter. And the content is well selected, well illustrated and should be generally read.

Stage setting at Shea's Hippodrome when Mae Marsh sold War Savings Stamps

Mae Marsh and Patriotic Selling Get Big Sum for W. S. Stamps in Buffalo

MAE MARSH, combined with the splendid arrangements of Manager Harold B. Franklin, made a big hit on her appearance at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, in the interest of War Savings Stamps. It was a regular W. S. S. jubilee with the popular screen star, Mae Marsh, as the center of interest. Miss Marsh came to Buffalo to boost the local stamp campaign. She appeared on the stage at Shea's Hippodrome at both afternoon and evening shows, auctioning her photographs to the highest bidders. Several offered to buy $1,000 worth of stamps for a photograph. A large bunch of American beauty roses, presented to Miss Marsh by her Buffalo admirers, was presented to a movie enthusiast who bid $1,000 for them and as many stamps.

Throughout the audience members of Uncle Sam's navy took the subscriptions and before the excitement died out almost everybody had purchased at least one dollars' worth of the little green stickers.

The event was started off by the big Hippodrome orchestra, playing Victor Herbert's "American Fantasia," at the climax of which the stage setting was unveiled, showing a life size painting of the famous "Spirit of '76" trio. As the orchestra reached the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," which closes this number, the audience rose and cheered and a large red banner with the words BUY WAR SAVINGS STAMPS upon it was lowered to one side of the setting.

After this stirring opening, Miss Marsh was introduced to the audience, which numbered over 3,000. Miss Marsh, who is not accustomed to stage appearances, was taken with stage fright, at least from a speaking viewpoint, as she said little except to encourage the bidding, led by a Buffalo orator. However the audience just wanted to look at her and was just as well pleased to have her stand while observations were in order. Eight thousand dollars was netted for the local stamp quota at the evening show and almost as much at the afternoon gathering.

Miss Marsh arrived in town Saturday morning and was met at the station by a committee representing the local W. S. S. committee. It was headed by Harold B. Franklin, manager of the Hipp. Miss Marsh stopped for the day at the Iroquois, where she received members of the press and got in return some front page publicity in all the local papers. The star was accompanied by her sister, Marguerite Marsh.

Singing Holds Audience While Lights Are Off

Manager Joseph Stoffel, of the Plymouth theatre, Rochester, N. Y., has just experienced a successful lesson in meeting an emergency.

One night recently the city power failed. The house was crowded and for awhile the patrons sat patiently waiting to see whether it would be turned on or not. Directly there began to come cat calls and shrieks from the small boys, but when they began to whistle and sing that gave Mr. Stoffel an idea. Going to the stage he suggested that his patrons try to amuse themselves for awhile and asked the boys if they would not sing something. They struck up "Over There," and after that a group of girls started song after song. The lights were off a total of nearly two hours, but every one stayed and had the time of their lives.

Rita Jolivet Scores Hit in Washington and Cleveland

ALL Washington records were broken by the crowds which attended Tom Moore's Strand theatre, Washington, when Miss Rita Jolivet appeared there for three days during the run of "Lest We Forget."

It was particularly appropriate that Miss Jolivet was in the capital city on Memorial Day, for it has been the custom since the sinking of the Lusitania to hold memorial services at the junction of the Anacostia and Potomac Rivers, opposite the U. S. War College, each thirtieth of May, and Miss Jolivet was permitted this year to participate for the first time.

Wreaths of flowers were set adrift on the Potomac at 10:30 in the morning of Decoration Day. The launching of the wreaths was from the decks of the U. S. Naval tug "Wicomico" and British cruiser "Warrior." The wreaths were the gifts of Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, whose husband was lost on the Lusitania; Mrs. President Wilson, and the Cunard Line. As the memorial tributes floated down the river Lieut. Vernon, Navy aviator, dropped cut flowers from his hydroplane, circling over the scene of the ceremonies.

Miss Jolivet spoke briefly on the subject of the tragedy and obviously was deeply touched by the tribute paid to the heroic dead whose dying struggles she witnessed, and the number of which includes her own sister and her brother-in-law.

A few days later Miss Jolivet appeared at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, at two performances and scored a big success in the sale of Thrift Stamps. Then she auctioned off each of the flowers of a bouquet with which she had been presented, selling some of them for $25 each, until the supply was exhausted. Naval reserve boys helped in the work.

Following Miss Jolivet's intimate talk, she was shown on the screen in "Lest We Forget." For this production, H. L. Spitalny, director of the orchestra, introduced a most stirring musical score which he had arranged in honor of Rita Jolivet. It was descriptive of the picture, and acted as an accompaniment to the picture. Beginning with a very dignified, almost symphonic introduction, there was suddenly a loud report, as from a big cannon. The lights dimmed, and the music indicated that the roar of battle was on. One could vividly hear and see the fighting in all its ferocity. Gradually the fury of it ceased; light began to dawn, and way off in the distance you could hear the faint strains of the Marseillaise. As it grew plainer, the tune shifted to "Coming Through Georgia." Louder the music became, and nearer, as it shifted quickly from "Dixie" to "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean." Then with a loud crescendo came the Marseillaise triumphant, quickly followed by "Yankee Doodle."

The theatre manager who is always boasting about what he DID is generally promising his patrons a MEMORY.

How Eddie Weisfeldt arranged a novel and artistic lobby effect at the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, during the showing of "The Blue Bird." The scene, which was beautifully illuminated, showed Tytyl and Mytyl, hand in hand, wending their way through the forest in search of the blue bird at the start. He has probably come from some other business. And as a matter of fact motion picture advertising is comparatively new and it is a field that is shifting so rapidly that it requires one that is up to the moment.

Seattle Sets New Advertising Record and Shows Fruits of Real Cooperation

Every one of the newspapers in the larger cities ought to employ a man whose business it is to honestly advise the theatre manager how to advertise and how much space to use. With the average advertising solicitor we know that the temptation is strong to get the most possible space out of the exhibitor each day, but the man who launches a motion picture department along these lines is playing bad business.

For instance, we know of one case where a theatre in a city that had a splendid motion picture department in one of the newspapers had changed hands. Most of the bigger houses were using about quarter pages in the Sunday issue. The house in question was strictly a neighborhood house, some three miles from the heart of the business section. The new owner decided that he would advertise on the same scale as the big downtown houses and the motion picture newspaper man in question advised him to use much smaller space. He pointed out that the theatre could not afford to spend as much as the bigger houses for the territory from which he had to draw was limited. The manager in question was offended with the advice. He took his advertising to another paper and used big space there. We say he used space for that was literally all he used. The second newspaper encouraged him to use this big space and never made a suggestion to him on how to utilize the space to the best advantage. The exhibitor filled it up in any way he desired. There were often names of players spelled wrong, some times incorrect titles and many other bad things. But Newspaper No. 2 couldn't see why it should go out of its way to help. It had the space to sell and it was selling it, and that was all there was to it.

The answer is that four months later the theatre was under different management. We'd hate to say how much of the space is still on the wrong side of the newspaper's ledger.

We know of another case in which the owner of a neighborhood theatre who could not see how advertising would help him, finally, out of friendship for the newspaper man agreed to spend a certain amount and let the newspaper man handle it. A ridiculously small amount was made at the start and it was gradually increased, but there was not an increase until there was a margin that called for it. In other words the man who knew newspaper advertising made the benefits to the theatre pay for the increasing space. The answer to this second case is that the theatre manager now owns three prosperous houses and that he advertises in every paper in the city. You couldn't keep him out of them. But now he knows how to advertise.

That's what we mean by cooperation by the newspaper. It is something more than merely giving each theatre that advertises a certain amount of reading matter, certain cuts and the like. It means more, too, than merely editing an interesting photoplay department. It means giving real help in every way and in helping to build up each theatre.

If we were again in the advertising department of a newspaper we would collect regularly the best advertising from the best theatres and we would show those that applied to each theatre manager regularly, and give him suggestions from them. We know of at least one photoplay editor who does this most successfully, and the result has been a doubling of the amount of advertising in that city. The individual exhibitor hasn't the facilities for gathering this sort of matter, but the photoplay editor, by using the office exchange table, can gather much of this matter.

We point out just a few of these methods of cooperation here and what they mean in the end to the exhibitor and the newspaper.

Seattle has shown what can be done. Some of the smaller cities are showing the same thing. Soon we will tell you the story of a city of 25,000 that today ranks among the leading advertisers of the country.

Seattle Gets Big Thrill with "Over There"

Strand theatre, Seattle, and one of the Jensen and von Herberg houses, has just completed a successful four days' run of the Select patriotic spectacle, "Over There." Some out-of-the-ordinary exploitation stunts were used in connection with the big newspaper advertising. The fact that the picture embodies the spirit of the Red Cross was strongly played up inasmuch as the drive was then on.

But this was only the beginning. Some of the many things which the management did were:

They secured through Major Boutells, an army officer in Seattle, the establishment of a recruiting station in the lobby of the Strand theatre, with two shifts of twenty men in khaki each, on duty during both afternoon and evening performances.

They secured an exhibition of the new Browning machine guns at the theatre entrance, with an expert to explain the working of this newest piece of American ordnance to the spectators.

An exhibition infantry and machine gun drill was held twice daily in front of the theatre—during which two hundred rounds of ammunition were fired.

The theatre employed a fife and drum corps, all of whose members were veterans of the Civil War, to play twice daily at the theatre.

Speeches to the audience were made by Master Raymond Foy, an eight-year-old boy scout, who has proved to be a sensation as a Red Cross speaker.

George M. Cohan's song, "Over There," was sung at each performance of the picture. This was cleverly arranged in such a manner that when the title "All Aboard for Berlin" was flashed upon the screen, the singer started Mr. Cohan's masterpiece, the rendition of the song ending at the same moment that the picture ended upon the screen—making a thrilling finish.

The girl ushers at the theatre wore Red Cross uniforms throughout the week, and the house was especially decorated in a beautiful manner for this occasion.

By three o'clock on the first day, the street in front of the Strand theatre held a que a block long, and no time after that was there not a line in front of the theatre.

How Y. M. C. A. Runs Successful Theatre

ONE of the most remarkable theatres in the world is the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa. It is conducted by the Y. M. C. A., the Auditorium being located in the rear of the main building. For more than two years it has been under the direction of Walter H. Brooks, who has become one of the best known figures in the field of motion pictures. While the Auditorium is hardly to be classed as a commercial undertaking, it has, at the same time, been a great financial success. The methods followed in Coatesville will be of interest to exhibitors everywhere, even though the situation there is distinctly unusual. Other articles by Mr. Brooks will follow this. This first article deals with the manner in which the Auditorium selects its pictures.

THE average exhibitor or exchange manager usually jumps at the wrong conclusion just as soon as he realizes that our Auditorium is owned and operated by the Young Men's Christian Association. Nine people out of ten immediately conjure up visions of educationals and scenics as soon as they hear films mentioned in connection with the Y. M. C. A. To provide three programs per week of the quality we demand IS difficult, and we do have our little problems, but our situation is not one whit different than ANY exhibitor that thinks anything of his patronage or his place in the community.

There is only one standard to apply to any film program, and that is THE BEST, first, last and always. There is never any real excuse for anything else. We cater to the general public, all classes and all ages, and furthermore we please them right along. Within the natural limitation of our ability to provide spectacular music, our programs, every one of the three-per-week, will compare favorably with any "entire-week" program in any of the best theatres in the land. We don't copy the style of any particular great manager, for the simple reason that there is but one BEST way, and that is not under anybody's copyright.

Probably the first thing in importance is to keep the show CLEAN, and here again we emphasize the fact that it is not only because we are under Y. M. C. A. auspices that we abide by this. No manager who is a gentleman, or who intends to cater to ladies and gentlemen, will tolerate anything unclean. Filth is NOT humor, nor is it drama, and in every case where filth is present the subject would be better without it, or the program better without the subject. The greatest disgrace the moving picture industry bears is the occasional filth film, and the greatest success financially is the clean film. We believe in the work of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors and approve of 90 per cent of the eliminations they make. We have just one argument to make along this line—they have never harmed a film we were especially anxious to run. We would like to see the MOTION PICTURE NEWS print, every week for at least four weeks, the complete list of their eliminations, verbatim, and then see what exhibitor would rise to justify some of the stuff that is rightfully condemned.

Saturday Programs Strong

Recently we saw in the NEWS a criticism of Paralta's production, "Humdrum Brown." He said "it was hardly good enough to even run on Saturday." And right there is another of the corner stones on which we have built our success. Saturday is normally a day when the crowd is big, with nearly every exhibitor. How foolish is the presumption that "anything will go if the crowd is there anyway." We devote more attention to our Saturday programs than to any other. They are selected to please SURE, and then to BRING THEM BACK AGAIN. The real success of any attraction is 25 per cent "pleasure at the moment" and 75 per cent "desire to get more of the same kind." We seldom use "big" drawing cards for Saturday programs, but the bill is built up of the type of show certain to please but lacking in drawing power. There are lots of this kind available. Taking the market just at this moment, we have almost an oversupply.

Setting aside the "average-good" production for this Friday and Saturday use, there remains two other classifications. The "big" stars and specials, and the mediocre stuff which is undesirable. The former we use at properly spaced intervals —regardless of release date, in order to get the best possible effect of that particular star or that particular subject. We take elaborate pains to avoid productions of similar nature in the same week, or even in the same month. Variety is largely a question of "mixing them up," and this applies to the parts of a single program as well as to the three programs in one week, or the twelve programs in one month. The mediocre material is the greatest problem of all. "To get rid of it" is the logical thing to do, and a successful fight to accomplish that purpose will help the industry as much as it will your program. Our plan is this—we select the back-bone of our program from one concern. We, from choice, prefer these productions to all others. To these we add just what we want from the market. And, in passing, the most extensively advertised are not always the best value. It is a question of taste with each audience, and we cater to the taste that we have created.

Influence of "Talkers"

Too many exhibitors are influenced by the few who stop to visit early and often about the films, and who are "fans" in every sense of the word. Ten talkers will say more than ten hundred who keep their comments to themselves. That seemingly foolish remark is in truth one of the exhibitor's greatest problems. The vast majority in any audience holds one opinion and "keeps still," where the minority are cranks along some special line, and talk it. Long ago we decided what we wanted to run. The actual announcement of the releases of the month does not alter the situation once in a hundred times. We know our system of eliminating the mediocre will produce a program that will please 99 per cent of our audience, and when one of our patrons asks for some particular production, we explain with our best grace, but privately we know that if it does not measure up to the standard demanded by the 99 per cent—he will have to see it elsewhere. The Auditorium is operated FOR our numerous patrons, but not BY them.

McCORMICK

His Articles in the Motion Picture News Start Next Week

FIRST of the articles from S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, one of the leaders in advertising in the nation, and one of the country's pre-eminent exhibitors, will be published next week in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Hereafter these articles will be regular features of this department.

This is one of a number of innovations that are to be made. Announcements of them will be made from time to time.

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau is not a flash in the plan. It aims to do more and more each week. Months ago it established a new record in the history of any industry. It intends to keep smashing that record month after month.

Mr. McCormick's first article will be entitled "Advertising to the Heart."

Mr. McCormick believes in merchandising his pictures. He uses large space in the Indianapolis papers, but every line of it he makes serve a purpose.

The day has unquestionably come when motion pictures must be merchandised. Sooner or later even the smallest exhibitor will realize that.

Mr. McCormick is one of the pioneers.

You cannot afford to miss these articles.

Generally we do not approve of return showings. Nothing can be overdone easier than this practice. Once a year, or probably not quite that often, is plenty often enough. Serials are taboo, and for the same reason: We want everyone of our people to know and depend on the FACT that a new program is NEW, and GOOD, and that their enjoyment of the program is only dependent on one thing—their presence, not last week or the week before, but THEN. Serials are a crutch with which a

A. S. Kolstad, manager of the Liberty theatre, Hood River, Wash., declares that "The Kaiser" is the only picture that he has ever run where he had the full co-operation of the business element. This is one of the window displays that he used. On one side is the Statue of Liberty and on the other the waste of the battle front, with its shell holes and dismantled guns

Zorn, of Toledo, One of Nation's Leaders in Using Big Space for His Advertising

RECENTLY, in the course of our talks on co-operation between newspapers and theatres in various cities, we discussed Toledo, which we pointed out as one of the leaders of the whole country. The editorial offices of Goldwyn Pictures in its series of accounts of the activities of various managers in exploitation this week points to the efficiency shown by the management of two of the Toledo houses. It says:

"Beyond question the most alert advertiser in Toledo is Edward A. Zorn, manager of the Temple and Alhambra theatres—(Edward A.) as a literary courtesy and "Eddie" Zorn in point of fact. Zorn is of the size and dimension that make great infielders in baseball—nervous, full of vitality, rangey and covering much ground rapidly. He has the newspaper temperament and agility of mind. He plays with the plot of a motion picture as a newspaper editor plays with news. To him a picture possesses plot for the sole purpose of being transmitted to the public via the newspapers. In other words, he handles his shows as if they were news, which is of course the correct way of exploiting an amusement.

"Zorn knows, of course, that humanity is interested first of all in itself and secondly in others. He knows that personality is the biggest and greatest human interest power in the world. He knows that Mae Marsh or Bill Farnum, or Madge Kennedy or Mabel Normand are known to more people individually in Toledo than any citizen of Toledo is known to his fellow citizens. The Mayor of Toledo might walk down his city's main thoroughfare unrecognized by more than a hundred people, whereas Mabel Normand or Bill Farnum would be followed by sixty per cent of all available pedestrians and require the services of the police for protection.

"Knowing all of these things, Eddie Zorn and H. C. Horater, his co-manager, advertise on a large, liberal and able scale to the people of Toledo whose patronage they seek. In the Toledo Blade on Saturday—almost every Saturday—you find the Temple carrying 200 lines deep by five columns wide or 225 lines deep by five or six columns wide. In the Toledo Sunday Times you will find this space duplicated and in the Toledo News Bee space of large dimension. There are three papers in the town, and Zorn and Horater use them all. On the same days the Alhambra carries as large or larger space, not as an occasional departure, but regularly.

"Since the development of the Zorn advertising other showmen of Toledo have been stimulated into carrying big space and into selling a show according to the best of modern merchandizing methods. From the moment that the Valentine theatre passed under the Marcus Loew management it took rank with these other two houses, and today it is the most liberally advertised of all the houses owned by Mr. Loew—on a scale even larger than his Stillman theatre, Cleveland. The other houses in Toledo that are big users of newspaper advertising space are the Princess Paramount theatre, the Colonial and the Hippodrome. . . .

"Zorn and Horater have had great value outside of their home city. They have been pointed out to exhibitors elsewhere for several years, and their skilful exploitation has influenced many other exhibitors in other towns to sell a motion picture to the public as Toledo sells it. These two men have attained, through working together, a remarkable co-ordination of thought and action. They constitute in their field a team as skilled as were Alexander and Killifer in baseball. The one has watched the advertising and exploitation unceasingly and the other has shown the greater interest in house showmanship and management. Two remarkably successful houses pay tribute to their skill."

How Y. M. C. A. Scores Great Success in Pictures House

lame exhibitor limps through the week. Those of us who manage to get along without them should return thanks.

Comedy is a question—serious. Out of ten comedy films, or rather let us say ten comedy producers, probably one will really measure up. Frequently we are obliged to run a bill without more than a short cartoon, simply because the right kind of stuff is not being made. A poor comedy is decidedly worse than none, regardless of the old theory that "every bill must have a laughing subject. We economize on exclusively-comedy subject when we are running a feature with comedy mixed with the drama, and hold back our slapstick for heavy dramatic subjects that require a lightening effect.

Theatre Kept "The Thing"

No producer of films is permitted to enjoy any special publicity at our expense in our own little territory. It is the Auditorium that is popular, and the Auditorium program, not Whoosit Films or anything of that kind. Our patrons draw but one conclusion if they attempt to sum up our program, or compare it with others. "If they saw it at the Auditorium, it was good, and if it is good, they will see it at the Auditorium." Three years of this intensive education has firmly convinced a majority of our patronage that "something must be the matter" with any comparatively well-known subject that goes, by any chance, into another theatre. And usually there is.

Educational, travel and topical subjects have a very, very important place on any bill. The exhibitor who does without them makes a mistake. The exhibitor who thinks his people will not stand for scenics should realize the fact that he should know more about this than his audience, or why does he call himself an exhibitor? Perfect balance of a film program is dependent on something of this nature. We usually follow a proportion of one in eight.

The summing up is the same as the introduction. Nothing but the best will go. The average exhibitor may not be a musician, or be able to read a note, but he can KNOW good music from bad, and judge his music before his audience judges for him. He may not be a scenario writer or a director, but he does enjoy a privilege mighty few scenario writers or directors seem to avail themselves of—a study of the good, bad and indifferent as it passes by. Here again he must judge first, and pass on to his audience only the best. Nine times out of ten, to accomplish these things, and the hundred and one things that must be watched up daily around the successful theatre, requires constant and personal supervision. Usually to get it done well, you must do it yourself. Hours of study and careful thought plans out the successful program, just as sure as the same formula will build the successful theatre, the successful film or the successful producing concern.

Ready-Made Ad Talks

Fox Baby Grands, Jane and Katherine Lee, in "We Should Worry"—Gloom Chaser

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

Well—Fox's Baby Grands are back with us again. Who are these Baby Grands? The Lee Kids—Jane and Katherine—two little children who have delighted millions where greater screen luminaries have failed to get a smile. It is said that Jane and Katherine are the champion gloom-chasers, and the management of the ——— theatre, for one, second the motion. These children are not merely kids—they are actresses in front rank with the child actresses and actors of the screen. In fact, they are in a class by themselves, for there are not two other children of the tender ages of these two who have the distinction of being the featured players in feature picture productions. But—get the title of Jane and Katherine's latest work—" We Should Worry " —and take notice of the strong support which Kenean Buel, the director, has given them. There are Ruby De Remer, a former star in Ziegfeld's " Midnight Revue," and featured woman in Rex Beach's " The Auction Block "; William Pike, Henry Clive, Edward Sturgis, Tammany Young, Charles Craig, George Humbert, Henry Hallam, Sarah McVicker, and Ann Egleston. Jane and Katherine are " on the job " every minute and their antics before the camera is the best prescription that the management of the ——— theatre can offer for a case of the blues. The Baby Grands are batting close to Big League percentages in this one. They will meet you on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in " We Should Worry."

Alice Joyce in O. Henry's " Cherchez la Femme" (" Find the Woman ") Typical Henry Work

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

Alice Joyce, with the featured role in a screen adaptation of O. Henry's " Cherchez la Femme " (" Find the Woman "), will be seen at the ———theatre on ——— of ——— week. The majority of O. Henry's works have been adapted to the screen in two reels. The Vitagraph Company has produced a few running to five reels. This late one in which Miss Joyce is featured, is the latest five-reel feature and accept the endorsement of the management of the ———theatre, testifying as to its entertaining value. No other author could write in the same style or sustain the suspense in his plot as well as O. Henry. No other author can give to his works the human, heart-interests that O. Henry could. He was in a class by himself and his works which remain as an immortal monument to his ability, are in a class by themselves. " Find the Woman," in which Miss Joyce and a capable Vitagraph supporting cast is seen, is typical of O. Henry's distinctive style. The role of Madeline Renard, a French prima donna, whose relations with a pious old gentleman are interpreted as being indiscreet by her lover, gives Miss Joyce the distinction of portraying O. Henry's most lovable character creation. Tom Terriss directed and Walter McGrail, Henry Houry, Jessie Stevens, Jean Paige, Arthur Donaldson and Martin Faust are seen in support.

A five-reel O. Henry feature, with Alice Joyce in the feature role. At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Bushman and Bayne in "Social Quicksands," Love, Romance and Adventure—Strong Support

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-starred in " Social Quicksands," a five-part Metro production under the direction of Charles J. Brabin. This team, so popular with the millions of motion picture lovers, is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. And accept the word of these millions, that Bushman and Bayne are artists in their portrayal of leading roles. But this assurance is not necessary. Patrons of the ——— theatre have seen this team on the screen a number of times and you all have left the theatre satisfied that you have received a full quota of screen entertainment. Their late vehicle, " Social Quicksands " is a romantic drama and deals with the love and adventure of two prominent young people, Warren Dexter and Phyllis Lane. Phyllis' mother, a social climber, desires her daughter to marry Warren, who is a prominent clubman. Warren has never met Phyllis nor does he care to for he is not in sympathy with the plans laid by the scheming mothers of debutantes who seek a profitable match. Phyllis is hurt because Warren ignores her and refuses even to meet her. She plans to humble him. Her plan is so cleverly laid that she is surprised to find that it is not revenge that she is seeking but that she actually is in love with Warren and vice versa. Mabel Frenyear, Leslie Stowe, William Dunn, Lila Blow, Rolinda Brainbridge, Elsie MacLeod, J. B. Hollis and Armorel McDowell. At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Bushman and Bayne in " Social Quicksands."

Margarita Fisher Featured in " A Square Deal," the " Higher Thought " Idea Exposed

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Margarita Fisher, supported by Jack Mower, Val Paul, Constance Johnson, Louis M. Wells and Nanine Wright, has the role of Alys Gilson, the idol of her old-fashioned parents, persuades her parents to allow her to go to the city and join the colony of society people who are ardent disciples of Professor LeMoyne, advocate of the " Higher Thought " idea. Thurston Bruce, a young lawyer, falls in love with Alys and she consents to marry him on " a square deal " basis—that is, that each shall have his or her personal freedom and if at any time either shall tire of the other, that one may declare the marriage at an end. This is agreed by both parties. LeMoyne, under the guise of a mental companion to Alys, makes love to her and wins her affections. Bruce finds that he is not wanted and that his home is invaded by an irresponsible clique of the so-called " higher-thought " element who also believe the same principle applies to love. Alys tells her husband that according to their agreement upon marriage, she is free. He is obliged to accede. She then confides in LeMoyne, who proves to be a man of no principle and little character. But—we are telling you all the story. To properly enjoy its revelation you should see Margarita Fisher portray the leading role in " A Square Deal," coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Vivian Martin's Best Work for the Screen in "Viviette"—Locke Author

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

In all of Vivian Martin's years of success on the screen you have never seen her in a photodrama that did not please. The story might not have been to your liking but the vivacious, girlish ways and mannerisms of the little star always counterbalanced any defects in the story or plot. Her late work for the Paramount program, "Viviette," written by William J. Locke, one of our best writers of contemporary fiction, and produced under the direction of Walter Edwards, is, without a doubt, her best work in pictures. First, because she has an excellent story to work in and secondly, because she is given an opportunity to display real dramatic ability. In support is seen Eugene Palatte, whose work was praised by every critic of screen work when the picture was shown for review. The story deals with a little orphan girl who, upon returning from boarding school, goes to reside with a wealthy family, the mother of which has taken a deep inteerst in her. In the family are two brothers, of entirely different natures. The one has gone forth in the world and has risen to the height of his profession—law. The other's ambitions go no further than the stable where his constant companions, thoroughbred horses, live. He falls in love with Viviette. His brother visits home and he, thinking that his brother has won Viviette, in a mad rage plans to kill him. How the little heroine works out her own destiny and the happy ending of the trouble between the brothers is told in five most interesting reels. Vivian Martin at the ——— theatre ——— week.

WHAT TWO DID

Turn to "Your Idea—and Ours" Now and See What You Can Do

TURN back to "Your Idea—and Ours" and you will find there a page from a small city paper and another from a country weekly. These pages carry the advertisements on the theatre and then reading matter about the plays and players.

This is the sort of matter that keeps the public interested in motion pictures, that widens the field of appeal. A great deal of this matter, short paragraphs about coming productions, can be taken from these Ad Talks. Take out little squibs and run them a few weeks before you show the picture, and then use the whole thing for your reading notice just before you show them.

The meat of all the publicity matter that is sent out by the various publicity departments is boiled down here. It is in convenient form. You don't need to even add the hot water to serve them.

(World Five-Reel Production)

Filmed in the beautiful country surrounding the spot which all tourists traveling into the heart of the mountainous district of North Carolina visit, "A Woman's Redemption," featuring June Elvidge, the beautiful World star, presents one of the most fascinating photodramas ever released by the World Film Corporation. Most of the scenes were filmed in the vicinity of Bat Cave, one of the beauty spots of America. Miss Elvidge has the role of a mountain girl living in this section. She is supported in her work by John Bowers in the leading male role. Charles H. Martin, Alec Shannon, Albert Hart and Marie Pagano. Miss Elvidge has the role of the mountain girl whose influence over Tim Stanton, son of a wealthy lumberer, reforms him and saves him from the vice of drink. Tim has been sent to the lumber camp in the mountains to reform and his regeneration is brought about by the girl of the mountains.

George M. Cohan—Greatest of Musical Comedy Stars in "Hit-the-Trail Holiday"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

George M. Cohan, the idol of the musical comedy world and whose work in "Broadway Jones" will never be forgotten by the million along Broadway and throughout the U. S. A., is seen in his own creation in which Fred Niblo, husband of Enid Bennett, made such a decided hit. What is it? One guess—you're right—"Hit-the-Trail Holiday," in which Billy Sunday, the famous evangelist, is imitated in his work of making them "hit the trail." In the screen version, the famous musical comedy star, dramatist and producer, appears in the role created originally by Fred Niblo, and he sure is "some" bartender. If you have seen the stage production you know that a bartender figures as the star of the production. Marshall Neilan, familiarly known as Mickey and the one who has directed Mary Pickford in some of her most decided successes, "Stella Maris" being the best example, was back of the megaphone when the scenes for "Hit-the-Trail Holiday" were shot and Mickey has turned out a job that he may well be proud of. The stage play ran for an entire season on Broadway and was represented by two companies on the road for another season. It was one of the most successful musical comedies ever seen on the Gay White Way.

Bryant Washburn, Hero of "Skinner" Stories in "Kidder and Ko"—Best Yet

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Remember the hero of "Skinner" stories, among them, "Skinner's Dress Suit?" And do you remember how motion picture audiences throughout the United States praised the work of the hero? Bryant Washburn is the man and he is due to arrive at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, in "Kidder and Ko," his latest work for Pathe. It's something along the same lines as "Skinner's Dress Suit" so that it is bound to please. In the supporting cast with Mr. Washburn are seen Harry Jenkinson, Gertrude Silby and Wadsworth Harris. "Kidder and Ko" is "some picture"—accept the word of the management of the ——— theatre. His business is to provide entertainment for his patrons and he is not going wrong. Cuthbert Kidder, impersonated by Mr. Washburn, is the champion pool shark of a New England college. His father is engaged in the dried codfish business in Maine and hasn't much faith in his son's ability to accomplish much in the business line. He has the right dope on his son, at that. Then Cuthbert meets the most beautiful girl in all New England. He decides to cut out the frivolous life and settle down. He gets into the fried codfish business and—well, he does some business.

Ethel Clayton Seen in a Most Unusual Photodrama, "The Man Hunt"—Mountain Scenes

(World Five-Reel Production)

Ethel Clayton, supported by Rockliffe Fellowes, one of our best character actors; Henry Warwick, John Adriznoia, Herbert Barrington, Fack Drumier, Al. Hart and John Dungan present "The Man Hunt," a late World picture which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. You have all seen examples of Miss Clayton's work on the screen and you have never found her wanting in natural grace, ability and dramatic expression. In this, her late work for World, she has the role of Betty Hammond, a thoroughly modern girl, who looks until she finds the man she would like to marry and then proceeds to make him marry her despite his objections to the contrary. Much of the action of the story is laid in the mountains and some beautiful exteriors have been registered by the camera. The time is the dead of winter and the snow-capped mountains afford a most beautiful background for the story which Miss Clayton so cleverly tells in pantomime. This is not a melodrama, as the title would lead one to believe, but a light drama with some fine bits of comedy sprinkled here and there throughout the run. Some of the most exciting adventures ever recorded by the camera precede Betty Hammond's decision to make the man she loves marry her against his wishes.

Metro Re-Issues Two Dramas

"Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman" and "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," Expected to Get Big Welcome Throughout Country

METRO Picture Corporation this week made known that it has decided to reissue two of its features which created a favorable impression when first shown to the public. They are "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman" and "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." It is expected by Metro that these re-issues, which the company classes among its best features, will be received with open arms not only by exhibitors but public as well.

Concerning the first named picture, Metro said in its announcement: "Emily Stevens is the star of 'Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman.' Her recent Metro and Screen Classics pictures have stimulated popular interest in her earlier pictures, notably in 'Destiny,' which has been considered by many the strongest feature in which she has ever appeared. The patriotic Screen Classics, Inc., picture, 'The Slacker,' made the name of Emily Stevens popular wherever motion pictures are known, and this good impression has been strengthened by such productions as 'Daybreak,' 'A Sleeping Memory,' 'The Wheel of the Law,' 'The Wager,' and 'Alias Mrs. Jessop.' 'Destiny' is an allegorical screen spectacle by Anthony Paul Kelly, who also wrote the Screen Classics, Inc., feature, 'My Own United States,' starring Arnold Daly. It opens with the Three Fates, Clotho, Lachesis and Atropos, weaving the strands of life."

Emily Stevens, Metro Star, In "A Man's World"

In regard to the second re-issue, Metro said: "Edmund Breese is the star of the second re-release, 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew.' This is a screen version of the poem of the same name by Robert W. Service. Magnificent snow-scenes form the background for most of this five-act feature, which was directed by Herbert Blache, who has directed the Metro star, Emily Stevens, in her forthcoming picturization of Rachel Crothers's play, 'A Man's World.'

"Great stretches of the snow-clad fields of the Yukon district, superb fights on the cold Alaskan wastes, between men matched in muscle and strength, perilous avalanches that threaten the lives of men and dogs on the trail to the gold country—these are a few of the screens shown in 'The Shooting of Dan McGraw,' which recreates for the spectator the splendid, virile life of the north country. Romance, tragedy and bitter revenge give force and beauty to this pictured epic of the Yukon as unraveled in 'The Shooting of Dan McGraw.'"

World Centres Its Publicity in New York

WORLD PICTURES announced this week that it has laid plans to place under the supervision of the company's general publicity director in New York its branch office departments of local publicity.

In connection with this statement, it was also announced that the Service Bureau established by World in all of its branch offices two years ago has, by its success and increasing popularity, justified the new move in every way.

In line with its policy, covering several years, to afford the exhibitor of World Pictures every possible aid in successfully promoting his business and securing box office results, World Pictures has inaugurated, in connection with its publicity department, a bureau that will no doubt prove of inestimable value to exhibitors who cannot afford a press agent.

This idea grew out of the apparent necessity for showmanship among the exhibitors who seldom edit the advertising and press matter sent out by the distributing companies. This is said to be plainly apparent by analyzing a large number of local newspapers throughout the country, carrying advertisements and press notices for the local exhibitors.

The service bureau of World Pictures will be placed at the beck and call of those who screen the World Program and if they desire special ideas to excite interest in their offerings, it will be theirs for the asking.

Hodkinson Sees No Cause for Pessimism

Returning, after a trip of over four months, W. W. Hodkinson expressed himself very optimistically last wek at his offices, 527 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"I see no reason for the pessimism expressed by some members of the industry," said Mr. Hodkinson.

"My observations and results obtained while in the field have brought to me a sense of optimism and confidence, not only in our own success, but also in the future welfare of the entire industry.

"As everyone is already aware, the Hodkinson co-partnership plan has embraced practically the entire western half of the United States, and the biggest and best exhibitors of that territory are with us heart and soul.

"While compared to the mushroom (so-called) growth of some new schemes in the market this may not appear in its true perspective, but experience teaches us that any project of merit built on principle and right, is slow rather than swift in its advance, yet, with all its development, just as with our plan, is sure and steady."

Anna Luther in New General Release

A screen event, considered of great importance by General Film Company, is the early release of a special feature production, "Her Moment," in which Anna Luther is the star. Negotiations, it is understood, were closed this week with General for the distribution of the film.

Miss Luther's first appearance in pictures was with the Reliance Company. Her most recent picture is "Moral Suicide," in which she was featured, and in which her work identified her as one of the most magnetic players of the period. An effective sales campaign will be placed back of the Anna Luther "Her Moment" production.

Universal Engages Bradley Barker

Bradley Barker has been engaged by Universal to appear in feature leads. He will leave for Universal City in a few days and will begin work immediately.

It was produced under the direction of Martin Justice, and in addition to the star there is a cast of Vitagraphers including Julia Swayne Gordon, Ed. Burns and Frank Norcross.

The actress, in the role of a rich man's daughter, is presented in more attractive surroundings in "The Soap Girl," it is declared, than in any of the previous pictures in which she has appeared.

Paramount Engages Lila Lee

New Star Was Formerly in Vaudeville with Gus Edwards Song Act—Lasky Announces Her as a "Find"

LITTLE LILA LEE, the little girl with the raven tresses who for several seasons past has been prominent in a Gus Edwards act in vaudeville, has been engaged for motion pictures, according to an announcement last week.

This will mark the first appearance of Miss Lee in the silent drama, under the Famous Players-Lasky banner. Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players, is said to consider the little actress a "find," and intends to give her national exploitation in an attempt to make her among the prominent stars of the day. Her age is given as fourteen years.

In making his announcement through the Paramount publicity department, Mr. Lasky said in connection with Miss Lee's engagement: "The published rumor that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was about to announce a young star of unusual talent is confirmed in our engagement of little 'Cuddles.' For more than a year, our organization has been searching all branches of the entertainment world for just such a young woman and our hunt has finally been rewarded in the person of Lila Lee, widely known as 'Cuddles.'

"Little Lila was first 'discovered' by Gus Edwards, some eight years ago. It was the time of the first 'kiddie' show in vaudeville, when a certain song 'Look Out for Jimmy Valentine' demanded a cute tot to properly express the humor of it.

"Brought up under the personal care of Mrs. Edwards, who is always with her, Lila Lee has been reared as a daughter. Her general education has been received from Mrs. Edwards and a personal tutor, who will continue the care of their charge in this direction along with her enlargement in the dramatic art as expressed in motion pictures under the best directors of Paramount films, for Lila will be a Paramount star in photoplay that will strike a strong human appeal.

"We have signed Lila Lee for a period of five years. She will be surrounded in her work by the best artists of the film world in its every branch and nothing will be overlooked to make her name the household word of the motion picture patron. Lila is now in New York preparing for her sojourn in the West as a motion picture star. She will leave for the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Cal., shortly, to start work on her first Paramount picture."

Lois Weber Completes Harris Production

IT was announced last week by Universal Film Company that the final scenes have been taken for Lois Weber's latest super-production, made under the title of "The Forbidden Box" from the story by E. V. Durling. It is described as a tale of a modern Pandora and twentieth century Epithemus. It is also said the woman producer has given a decidedly new twist to the old Greek legend of the maid who brought much trouble on the world because of her great curiosity.

Mildred Harris, Miss Weber's protege who recently ascended to stardom, has the stellar role in "The Forbidden Box."

In her support are Harry Woodward, Priscilla Dean, Fred Goodwin, Bruce Delameter, Kate Toncray, and others. The production was staged on a lavish scale, it is said, and even the most minute detail given the personal attention of the "Belasco of the screen," as she is known.

Lois Weber believes she has never cast Mildred in a better part. The star, hailed as the actress "who puts her soul in every role," is seen as a soulful country maid.

Titles are now being written, and the picture cut for six-reel preservation. As soon as these details, which are being personally supervised by the woman producer herself, are attended to, the picture will be given a private showing for members of the profession on the West Coast.

Adda Gleason Engaged

Adda Gleason, who had the title role in "Ramona," has been engaged for the leading feminine role in Thomas Dixon's "The One Woman," which is now being filmed at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles for the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation.

Campbell Directs "Yellow Dog"

Picturization of Henry Irving Dodge's Patriotic Story to Be Released by Jewel—Comes at Early Date

COLIN CAMPBELL, considered in the industry one of the most successful of directors, has been engaged to direct " The Yellow Dog," the picturization of Henry Irving Dodge's patriotic story which is in the making, and which will be released by Jewel Productions at the earliest possible date.

The Dodge story first appeared in the May 4 issue of the Saturday Evening Post and since has been issued by Harper & Brothers in book form. Harper & Brothers are marketing it in two forms, the library edition in cloth binding and the popular edition in paper binding which will be in great demand as soon as the Jewel picture is released.

That Colin Campbell has been engaged to direct the picture seems an assurance in itself that the production will be a masterpiece.

Some of the pictures credited to Director Campbell and which are known to motion picture patrons throughout the country are " The Spoilers," " The Garden of Allah," " The Brand of Cain," " Who Shall Take My Life? " " The City of Purple Dreams," " The Smouldering Flame," " The Still Alarm," and " Beware of Strangers."

In directing " The Yellow Dog " Director Campbell will endeavor to create a wonderful boy star. He must be a regular boy, something between the babies of the screen and those players known as juveniles.

" The Yellow Dog," as Mr. Dodge explains in his story, is the unpatriotic dweller in the United States who repeats every wild, vaporing war rumor tending to make loyal citizens pessimistic and leave them as weak-kneed, snaky back-boned individuals licked before they get into a fight.

That the message as carried by " The Yellow Dog " has sunk home is evidenced by the fact that more than nine hundred individual newspapers throughout the United States of their own initiative, have made arrangements to start local branches of the " Boy Detectives of America," the organizations to be used in every locality to curtail immediately and eventually stamp out all of " The Yellow Dogs."

Fox Prepares New Exchange in Buffalo

THE office staff of the new exchange of the Fox Film Corporation at 209-211 Franklin street, Buffalo, is busy making arrangements for the formal opening of the exchange the latter part of this month, the manager, Thomas A. Brady, and his force having got settled in their new building after moving from Syracuse.

New methods, better equipment and additional employes, have made it possible to reorganize the office on a more efficient basis. This is especially true in the inspection room, where six young women are busy taking care of films. The correspondence department also has been strengthened through the addition of extra help, and special racks have been installed by an efficiency expert in the shipping and paper department, so that the other day it was possible to take a complete inventory of the departments in thirty minutes.

Manager Brady is working on an arrangement to make all shipments by special delivery parcel post, as it has been found that express service is too slow. Daily motor service between Buffalo and Rochester also will give added speed to shipments to communities between those two places.

A private telephone exchange will make it possible for exhibitors to get into touch with any department of the exchange. Another feature of the plant, which by the way occupies a whole building by itself, is the largest fireproof vault in the city for films and documents.

Pearl White Comedies Through General

General Film Company, during the past week, contracted for the distribution of several additional motion picture products, it has been announced, at the head of the list being a series of comedies featuring Pearl White.

The Pearl White releases are the productions originally issued by the Crystal Film Company and total six one-reel subjects. They will be released one a week.

From the same company there is also a two-reel burlesque of " Romeo and Juliet." From the Higrade Film Enterprises, Inc., two two-reel comedies featuring Billy West are taken over for distribution by General. The titles are " Bunco Billy " and " Billy in Harness." A two-reel comedy, " Billie in Society," featuring Rae Hughes, also comes from Higrade.

Mabel Normand Meets President's Wife

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson asked that Mabel Normand be brought to her box at Crandall's Knickerbocker theatre in Washington that the first lady of the land might speak to the star of " Joan of Plattsburg." It happened on June 4, when Goldwyn's patriotic comedy-drama was presented in aid of the Children's Year Campaign Committee of the Council of National Defense, an organization devoted to the welfare of babies. Miss Normand was in Washington at the direct invitation of this organization, of which Mrs. Wilson is the chief patron.

Rolin Makes Burlesque on the Kaiser

Pathe has received a wire carrying the news that the Rolin Film Company has completed a burlesque on the Kaiser. Hal Roach, president and director general, said: " We are calling it ' Kicking the Germ Out of Germany.' It is a very good picture and we will rush it through to you as fast as we can."

Tom Mix Lends a Hand to Henry Lehrman

While working on "Fame and Fortune," his next release, Tom Mix took a dip into comedy recently to help Henry Lehrman, director of the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies at the Hollywood studios, according to information received at the William Fox offices.

The comedy was "Who's Your Father?" and the plot called for an actor who would typify the Western cowboy and who could ride a horse as one to the saddle born. After a prolonged search among his companies for a player with such qualifications, Mr. Lehrman was in despair, when he happened to mention his trouble to Tom Mix.

Not only did Mix allow himself to go to Lehrman's assistance; he jumped at the chance of getting into a rapid-fire comedy.

Madame Petrova Begins Stamp Tour

The final arrangements have been completed between Madame Olga Petrova and the War Saving Stamps Committee of Washington, D. C. for the personal speaking tour which the Polish actress will make in behalf of this patriotic nation-wide movement.

As a preliminary to the actual tour which she will make, Madame Petrova visited Philadelphia last week, where a Liberty Booth was especially erected for her work in the public square of the City Hall.

Following her appeal in each city to the public, relative to the purpose of Thrift Stamps, Madame Petrova will visit as many motion picture theatres as time will permit in order to still further impress on the minds of photoplay audiences the necessity of giving the United States Government their utmost financial support.

General Takes Over Selig Ten-Reeler

Announcement is made this week by General Film Company that it has taken over the distribution of "The Ne'er Do Well," the Selig ten-reel production of the Rex Beach story.

"The Ne'er Do Well" was filmed for the most part in Panama with the canal as the location for many of the scenes. Wheeler Oakman and Kathlyn Williams appear in the leading roles. The story recounts the efforts of the scapegoat son of a New York millionaire to make good in new surroundings, and has a strong element of romance.

"Cleopatra" Held Over in Cincy

One week of Theda Bara's "Cleopatra," the William Fox production, was not enough for Cincinnati, and the Grand Opera House management continued the picture for another week after it had finished its first seven days.

Six shows daily were on the program, beginning at 11 A. M. and continuing until the same hour at night.

Goldwyn Films Bring Praise

Exhibitors in Various States Write Their Opinions of Drawing Power and Excellence of the Service Given

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION this week made public excerpts from several letters which the company has received from exhibitors in various states, and which indicate that Goldwyn service, coupled with Goldwyn pictures, are making a great hit both financially and artistically.

"Goldwyn Pictures are the best I've ever played," writes Bert C. E. Silver, owner of the Family theatre, Greenville, Mich., as well as several other theatres throughout the state. Out of seven profitable productions played at the Family theatre in the last six weeks, four of them were Goldwyn Pictures, Mr. Silver reported to the Goldwyn Detroit branch.

"We are all glad when Goldwyn night comes around at this theatre, because of good treatment, good pictures, good films and good everything." That is the praise showered on Goldwyn and its productions by Al Trahern, manager of the American theatre, Kansas City, Mo. Capacity business ruled at the American during the engagements of "The Cinderella Man," "Thais," "Fields of Honor," and "Dodging a Million," it is said.

In praise of "The Auction Block," A. E. Jarboe, manager of the Opera House, Cameron, Mo., writes: "'The Auction Block' drew bigger than any production ever shown at the Opera House." "The Beloved Traitor" also proved a winner for Manager Jarboe.

Thomas F. Roddy, owner of the Majestic theatre, Hibbing, Minn., speaks in this vein of Goldwyn productions: "There is no film service that gives me such consistent box-office and artistic successes as Goldwyn. Your 'For the Freedom of the World' put me on the right side of the ledger after three weeks' showing of pictures that failed to draw." Though Hibbing is not large enough to permit of more than two-day picture runs, Mr. Roddy played "The Cinderella Man" to big business for four days.

Another Goldwyn exhibitor in the Northwest who has been unusually successful is Frank L. Workman, manager of the Best theatre, Brainerd, Minn.

New Lead Appears in Normand Film

Rodrique La Rocque will make his first appearance with an Eastern producing company when he appears with Mabel Normand in the Goldwyn picture, "The Venus Model," as the star's leading man. It is said he is but nineteen years of age, but his stage and screen experience has been varied.

Nadia Gary, six years of age, is cast in a prominent role in this production, which Goldwyn confidently expects will be the best which Miss Normand has made since she joined the company. Others in the cast are: Una Trevelyn, Alec B. Francis, Edward Boulden, Alfred Hickman, Edward Elkas and Albert Hackett.

Pathe Gets Publicity on Broadway

Pathe's entrance into Broadway the week of May 26 with "The Yellow Ticket" and "More Trouble," at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres respectively, was backed by a strong publicity campaign. The Pathe press department this week announced that it secured in New York and Brooklyn dailies four full columns pertaining to the two pictures and their presentation.

"More Trouble" has been placed on the Pathe schedule for release on July 14.

Vitagraph Plans Unusual Casts

CASTS of unusual dramatic power and box-office value will be an important asset of the Vitagraph features, scheduled for release within the next few weeks, according to a Vitagraph announcement.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, now has in course of production at least four stories, two of them screen versions of plays made popular on the stage by Billie Burke, and the other two adaptations of widely read magazine stories.

Anita Stewart is in the latter stages of "The 'Mind-the-Paint' Girl," the Pinero satire on class prejudice which is planned for the first of the special series of Anita Stewart productions in which Vitagraph's star is soon to be presented. She is working under the direction of Wilfrid North, who directed "Over the Top," and her supporting cast includes Conway Tearle, Vernon Steele, Templar Saxe, Virginia Nordon, Katherine Lewis, Hattie De Laro and others.

Alice Joyce, working under direction of Tom Terris in Florence Morse Kinksley's romantic drama, "To the Highest Bidder," has in her support Walter McGrail, Percy Standing, Jules Cowles, little Stephen Carr and Mary Carr.

Richard Barthelmess, frequently seen opposite Marguerite Clark, has been engaged as leading man for Gladys Leslie in "Wild Primrose," which will be produced under the direction of Frederic Thomson. Mr. Barthelmess, who appeared with Nazimova in "War Brides" and with Miss Clark in "The Valentine Girl," "Bab's Burglar," etc., is considered a splendid lead for Miss Leslie. In addition to Mr. Barthelmess, President Smith has engaged for Miss Leslie's cast Claude Gillingwater, one of the best known actors on the legitimate stage, who is making his first appearance on the screen. Charles Kent, Vitagraph's old star; Eulalie Jensen, Bigelow Cooper, another fine actor, and Arthur Lewis also will appear in the cast.

Corinne Griffith, working in "Love Watches," under direction of Henry Houry, has in her support a cast which includes Julia Swayne Gordon, Florence Deshon, Alice Terry, Denton Vane, Edward Burns and Charles Stevenson. All of these players are well known to screen patrons and constitute a cast of exceptional strength.

In addition to these productions, Vitagraph also is nearing completion of a number of other strong features which will most likely make their appearance on the summer programs of the company.

Farnum Begins Zane Grey Picturization

William Farnum, according to a telegram received at the William Fox offices from the Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., has begun work on the picturization of "The Rainbow Trail," the novel of Zane Grey.

"The Rainbow Trail" is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," also written by Zane Grey, and recently completed for early release by Mr. Farnum. It is being directed by Frank Lloyd, who also guided the work on "Riders of the Purple Sage."

The "Climax of "Riders of the Purple Sage" came when Lassiter, the terror of the Utah border, rolled a huge stone into a narrow canyon, blocking pursuit by Mormons and at the same time sealing himself and a woman and a child up in a small valley. "The Rainbow Trail" takes up the life, in the lost valley ten years later, when the child, now grown to womanhood, is spirited out of the canyon by Mormon agents.

Russell-Mutual Picture Takes Well

Mutual Film Corporation this week announced that bookings for the first week of "Hearts or Diamonds?" the first picture of the William Russell Productions, have exceeded all previous bookings for the same period of Russell pictures. "Hearts or Diamonds?" has had more first runs than any Russell picture to date, and reports from exhibitors indicate big box office returns, it is said.

The second release in the Russell series, "Up Romance Road," has been completed and will be released by Mutual June 24. Miss Charlotte Burton, who played the lead in "Hearts or Diamonds?" will again do the heroine.

Select Announces Four Films for June

SELECT Pictures Corporation announces that in addition to Marion Davies' picture, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," three Select Pictures will be released during the month of June. These are: "The Claw," presented by Clara Kimball Young and her own company; Constance Talmadge, presented by Lewis J. Selznick in "Good Night Paul"; and Alice Brady in "The Whirlpool."

"The Claw" is a story of the African veldt, from the pen of Cynthia Stockley, the author of "Poppy," another African tale, the star of which happens to have been another of the Select luminaries, Norma Talmadge.

True to the predictions of those who have closely followed her work, that Constance Talmadge could play anything from high farce to tragedy and "get away with it," Miss Talmadge appears for the first time in pure farce in "Good Night Paul."

"Good Night Paul" is based on a stage piece of the present season. There are five reels in "Good Night Paul."

"The Whirlpool," Select's June release starring Alice Brady, is said to be a clean drama of the school of "Within the Law" and "The Witching Hour." Miss Brady is seen in the role of a girl with high ideals, who is unknowingly made to aid her guardian in his gambling pursuits. How this girl retrieves herself from the false position in which she is thus placed, and works side by side with a judge on the bench to encompass the regeneration of one of her victims, makes the fascinating photoplay which has been adapted by Eve Unsell from the unusually successful novel of the same name by Victoria Morton.

Christie Closes Distributing Contract

C. H. Christie, business manager of the Christie Comedy Company, the day of his leaving for the East, May 31, closed a contract with the Quality Film Corporation, Inc., 404 Ferry Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., for the handling of Christie comedies through this exchange in western Pennsylvania and western Virginia. H. A. Lande, of the Quality Film Corporation, has watched the growth of popularity of Christie comedies and is enthusiastic over the prospective box office receipts which he is confident will accrue to him through his handling of Christie comedies.

Enid Bennett has a new leading man in the person of Jack Holt, recently seen in the Sessue Hayakawa subjects. Holt will make his initial appearance opposite the Australian star in the Ince-Paramount offering, "A Desert Wooing," scheduled for June 23.

Donald MacDonald, John P. Lockney, Charles Speare, and Elinor Hancock are others in the cast, while Jerome Stren directed, and J. G. Hawks wrote the story. It tells of the taming by Miss Bennett, in the role of a sophisticated society girl, of a lover of the "cave man" type.

Fox Keeps Thirteen Companies Busy

Announcement from the Fox offices is to the effect that thirteen of the Fox companies are now busy making pictures, both in the East and at the Hollywood studios.

William Farnum has begun work on "The Rainbow Trail," which Zane Grey wrote as a sequel to his other novel, "Riders of the Purple Sage."

J. Gordon Edwards, the Fox director, has got a good start on "The Message of the Lilies," which is the tentative title for his latest super-production, and Jewel Carmen is progressing on her picture, "You Can't Get Away With It." Gladys Brockwell, also at Hollywood, is busy working on "Kultur," an expose of how Germany went to war, and Tom Mix is busy on "Fame and Fortune." The other Fox workers at Hollywood comprise three Sunshine Comedy companies under the direction of Henry Lehrman.

In the East Jane and Katherine Lee have completed "Doing Their Bit" at the Biograph studios. Virginia Pearson, at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn, is nearing the completion of "Her Price," and June Caprice has "Miss Innocence" in work at the Victor. A play which has for its tentative title "The Sleep-Walker" is keeping George Walsh on the jump at the Kalem studio, and another production is under way at the Biograph studio in the Bronx under the direction of R. A. Walsh. Peggy Hyland is resting after having completed "Other Men's Daughters."

Goldfish Turns Reviewer

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, had the chance of reviewing one of his own productions in Chicago recently, when the critic on one of the dailies invited him to express his opinion of "All Woman" through the public press.

Mr. Goldfish did not take undue advantage of the opportunity, and went sparingly on the adjectives, but declared that "All Woman" is the best picture, bar none, Mae Marsh has ever done. "Besides," said Mr. Goldfish, "it is a great story."

New York Likes "Stolen Orders"

Newspaper Reviewers Warm in Praise of Brady's Spectacular War Drama, Which Runs Successfully at Park Theatre

WILLIAM A. BRADY feels a bit of pride over the warm reception accorded the premiere of "Stolen Orders" in New York at the Park theatre.

Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montague Love, and June Elvidge are the four stars heading the cast in this Brady successor to "The Whip." Like that other special, "Stolen Orders" is a screen version of a Drury Lane success, Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton being the authors.

Following are excerpts from the newspaper reviews following the initial showing:

"The most interesting melodrama we ever saw on the screen," wrote Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune. "The story is interesting from the first foot of film and never for one instant is interest allowed to lag. It is all very exciting."

Stephen Rathbun in Evening Sun: "A masterpiece, 'Stolen Orders,' an eight-reel thriller. The action is continuous throughout the picture and the illusion is perfect."

Globe: "Interesting and thrilling. The fight in the dirigible, the pursuit by hydroaeroplanes and a tumble into the seething ocean, no producer of melodrama has yet been able to show on the stage. New thrills are given the people who see it."

T. E. Oliphant in the Evening Mail: "Goes over the top successfully. At the end of the picture there was a genuine and generous tribute. If it receives the support it deserves it will be running for a long, long time."

N. Y. Herald: "Filled with action. 'Stolen Orders' on the screen is twice as exciting as on the stage."

N. Y. Times: "Crowd gets thrill. Succession of thrills. Stirring scenes."

Evening Telegram: "Exciting thrills. An engrossing finish."

Journal of Commerce: "Full of excitement. A better show than the speaking version. A thrilling tale of the American navy and German spies."

Morning Telegraph: "Decidedly entertaining, besides being good propaganda."

Metro Promises Air Battle in New Film

A THRILLING feature promised in the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., patriotic production de luxe, "To Hell With the Kaiser," will be the battle royal of two air-armies. Each of the opposing forces is said to be represented by forty planes in close view in the fury of attack. The air is literally black with planes just previous to the engaging of the rival aerial squadrons in the contest, and the actual bombardment between the two forces of air-artillery is probably the most splendid spectacle ever shown upon the screen, says Metro. Government aid and co-operation was necessary in order to secure pictures of these manoeuvres. This feature is now almost completed and will have early release.

The air-battle in "To Hell With the Kaiser" has an important bearing on the story, and precipitates the climax of the action. At its close the American girl, Alice Monroe (played by Olive Tell), is rescued by the aviator-hero, Winslow Dodge (played by John Sunderland), and the Kaiser, having been abducted, is borne by airplane above the Belgian lands he has sacked and ravaged, into the presence of the American commander, General Pershing, there to await the judgment of the Allied forces.

Americans in the front-line trenches are shown in some of the most exciting scenes of "To Hell With the Kaiser," which has been directed by George Irving, assisted by Albert H. Kelley and Alfred Raboch, from the scenario by June Mathis, and produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. In one of the most vital incidents of the action, the first American prisoners are brought before the Kaiser at his field headquarters.

"Cleopatra" Makes Chicago Hit

Four-Week Engagement of William Fox-Theda Bara Feature at Colonial Brings the Crowds—May Run Longer

HAVING opened a four-week engagement May 27 at the Colonial theatre, Chicago, "Cleopatra," the William Fox-Theda Bara super-production is smashing all house records, according to reports received from Chicago at the Fox offices here. In the first week "Cleopatra" did a business of $15,000, and the picture has scored such a triumph that the four-week run may be lengthened, if the heat holds off and if arrangements can be made with the theatre.

Except for one or two productions, the Colonial theatre has never got more than fifteen or twenty-five cents for admission in all its history. "Cleopatra" prices range from twenty-five cents to $1, and the seating capacity of the house is declared to be too small to accommodate the crowds.

Not only is the production of "Cleopatra" in Chicago considered a triumph for the picture, but it also is a personal victory for William Fox, over Major M. D. C. Funkhouser, Chicago's late motion picture censor, in temporary retirement.

"The granting of a white permit to 'Cleopatra,'" says a Fox official, "signalizes an important decision in which the entire trade and industry will rejoice, because every gain of this kind by a producer is slowly undermining the autocratic power that is being exercised in Chicago."

A strong newspaper advertising campaign has been conducted with "Cleopatra" in Chicago. J. R. Crainger, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, who is in charge of the engagement, had big, dominating advertisements in all of the Chicago newspapers. These were changed daily. It is estimated that more than $5,000 was spent on advertising alone, and "Cleopatra" was boosted from 800 billboards.

Effective methods also were employed in presenting the picture. An orchestra of twenty-five pieces played elaborate programs at each of the two daily performances. One of the novelties introduced was a large oil painting of Theda Bara. This was hung in the lobby, being backed by a beautiful oriental rug, with amber spotlights playing on the paintings. The lobby display also was notable for its good taste. All lights were colored a deep magenta.

Mutual Releases Outing-Chester Pictures

IT was announced this week from Chicago that Outing Magazine's adventure pictures, one-reel travel classics, produced by C. L. Chester in collaboration with the editorial board of Outing, will be released through exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation, one a week, commencing June 30. The first release will be "Ex-Cannibal Carnival," a Fiji Island picture.

Announcement of the consummation of negotiations for the release of the Outing-Chester series through the Mutual Film Corporation was made following the return last week of James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual, to the executive offices in Chicago from a trip to New York. The negotiations were conducted by Mr. Sheldon and C. L. Chester.

The first six of the series and their release dates follow:

June 30—"Ex-Cannibal Carnival," a story of the camera's search for the head hunting savage of the South Sea Islands.

July 7—"Kaieteur," an interesting journey through the strange wilderness of British Guiana, two weeks from civilization, to the famous waterfall, five times as high as Niagara.

July 14—"Mountaineering Memory"—a trip along untraveled trails in the mountains of British Columbia.

July 21—"Zuni Kicking Races"—a unique race, older than history, one of the strange customs of the Zunis of New Mexico who live still in the pueblos of their prehistoric forefathers.

July 28—"A White Wilderness"—the Mount Columbia ice fields of British Columbia, 200 square miles of glaciers, towering mountain peaks and unexplored wilderness.

August 4—"A Coorial on the Orinoco"—a trip by native logboat through a tempest of seething waters, to the heart of Venezuela where Spanish buccaneers, three centuries ago, filled their treasure chests.

Neilan Directs Miss Clark for First Time

Marguerite Clark, it was announced this week, has begun the production of a new Paramount picture. For the first time, Marshall Neilan, who recently completed an Elsie Ferguson subject, will direct the star. The company has gone to Pennsylvania for exterior shots.

Pauline Frederick has transferred her activities to Fort Lee in the filming of "A Daughter of the Old South," a Paramount picture being produced by Emile Chautard. The exterior settings were completed last week, and work begun in the sets this week.

Bluebird Announces "After the War" Film

Bluebird is anticipating ante-bellum days with the release of June 24 of the five-reel feature, "After the War," the working title of which was "The Spawn." It is a thrust into the future which shows the aftermath of German atrocities as practiced at present on defenseless women in the territory they have conquered.

Grace Cunard as Gerve, prima donna of the Opera Comique, is the heroine of the story.

The picture was directed by Joseph de Grasse from a story by Kingsley Benedict, author of many successes.

Douglas Fairbanks, In Artcraft's "Say, Young Fellow"

Artcraft Draws Attention to "Doug"

In reference to Douglas Fairbanks' new Artcraft production, "Say Young Fellow," the following was issued this week through the publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky:

"The prominence of Douglas Fairbanks as a screen favorite, coupled with the novel theme and delightful photographic effects, make "Say Young Fellow," the Artcraft release of June 16, an exceptional subject for exploitation. The Fairbanksian athletics and methods are largely in evidence, and can be made the subject of liberal publicity. In the role of a newspaper reporter, Douglas Fairbanks should prove interesting to the newspaper men throughout the country, who will no doubt be amused by the extraordinary efforts this young man puts forth to accomplish his purposes."

Trio of Stories Bought for World Pictures

Forrest Halsey, Elizabeth Carpenter and E. Forst are three authors of prominence whose names were on stories purchased by the World Pictures scenario department last week.

Halsey, well known in the short story field, is the author of "The Crook of Dreams," now being prepared for early filming. In addition to his short story work five of Mr. Halsey's plays have been produced on the stage.

Miss Carpenter is represented by the purchase of the screen rights to her story, "The Quickening Flame." E. Forst had a banner day, in the morning placing a play with Al Woods for early production, and in the afternoon selling a scenario to World.

Cites Exploitation Chance

Paramount this week declared that exhibitors who book features of that trademark will profit by the fact that "The Firefly of France," to be released June 23, starring Wallace Reid, supported by Ann Little, was a serial in the Saturday Evening Post. The tremendous circulation of this weekly and the class of readers—which embraces almost every sort in every part of the country—is one of the best assurances that the picture will be known long before it reaches the screen, and sought after.

Dorothy Dalton Finishes "Green Eyes"

News from the West Coast this week carries the information that Dorothy Dalton has completed her newest Paramount picture, "Green Eyes," which was supervised by Thomas H. Ince. R. William Neill directed it. Miss Dalton, it is said, expects to make a trip Eastward after this picture, visiting New York and Chicago.

It is announced Enid Bennett is completing her new picture which has not yet been given a title. Charles Ray is still resting, but expects to get busy on a new feature very shortly.

A film has been made by the Ince studio which includes the special pictures of Mr. Ince at San Diego when scenes were obtained for "The Claws of the Hun," etc., and also showing Dorothy Dalton at Camp Kearny when she was chosen as sweetheart of the company of Engineers.

"Stories Hard to Get," Says Apfel

Oscar C. Apfel, director of World Pictures, this week in a statement to Motion Picture News said that the securing of good stories is the hardest part of the business, as far as the director is concerned. This fact, he believes, works a hardship on the motion picture industry as a whole, to a certain extent.

"These are tense times," said Mr. Apfel, "and the creators of motion picture drama must learn that audiences care more for wholesome, sane, human little things of everyday life than for so-called spectacles and distorted glimpses of life as it isn't.

"As for adapting 'best sellers,' how many do we have at the present time? Six, or possibly eight. We need a new story every week."

"Tinsel" is the title of Director Apfel's second World picture, with Kitty Gordon; "Merely Players" his third, and "Mandarin Gold" the fourth. "To Him that Hath" will be his initial production.

De Mille Finishes New Artcraft

"We Can't Have Everything" Is Special Production with All-Star Cast—Story Combines Comedy and Drama

According to an announcement this week through the Artcraft publicity department, Cecil B. De Mille has completed the work of producing his latest Artcraft special picture, "We Can't Have Everything," and is now engaged in cutting and titling the feature. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is said, confidently expects this picture to surpass "Old Wives for New" in point of novelty, interest and elaborateness of investiture.

The featured players in the picture are Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley and Theodore Roberts. Others who are prominent in the cast are Sylvia Breamer, Thurston Hall, Tully Marshall and Raymond Hatton.

There are said to be many unusually effective scenes, including the "Cascades," the Biltmore roofgarden, with a company of fashionable guests and a specially engaged troup of ballet dancers affording entertainment; then there is the studio fire scene, wherein the blaze at the Lasky plant was employed; the harem scene when the supposed picture company is making a picture; the roadhouse and the broken bridge, a night picture, said to be exceptionally effective and the convalescent ward in a base hospital in the European war zone.

Comedy, it is said, will reign supreme in the picture, though there will be plenty of real drama as well. However, there will be, it is declared, more laughs in this production than in any former film directed by Mr. De Mille, and the burlesquing of a motion picture company at work is said to provide unparalleled amusement. In these scenes Tully Marshall as the "director" proves that as a comedian of the most unctuous type he is a past master.

Raymond Hatton is a young English Marquess, an aviator in the Royal Flying forces.

The story was by Rupert Hughes, while William C. De Mille wrote the photoplay. Alvin Wyckoff was cameraman and Cecil B. De Mille has, it is asserted, exerted all his genius at direction to make this new production exceptional in every sense of the word.

Hundreds of beautifully gowned women, soldiers, Red Cross nurses, dancers and others contribute to the general excellence of the ensemble scenes, according to the Artcraft press agent.

Metro Acquires Myrtle Reed Story

Screen rights to Myrtle Reed's novel, "Flower of the Dusk," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, have been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of Viola Dana. A five-act feature picture will be made of "Flower of the Dusk" under the direction of John H. Collins, who is also adapting the novel for the screen. Mr. Collins will be assisted in the direction by Albert H. Kelley, and John Arnold will handle the photography. Work on the new Dana production will be begun at the Metro studio on the completion of "Opportunity," the picturization of Edgar Franklyn's novelette which appeared originally in the All-Story Weekly.

"Flower of the Dusk" is the second Myrtle Reed novel acquired by Metro for Miss Dana's use. "Weaver of Dreams" was produced on the Pacific coast recently with the same combination of star and director.

Hollywood Prepares for Stars from East

IT was learned last week that great preparations are being made at the Hollywood, Cal. studios of Famous Players-Lasky for the reception of the new stars from the East who are expected to arrive this week. They include Fred Stone and the unnamed feminine luminary who is said to out-rival most stars in point of beauty and talent.

Ethel Clayton is already in the West and motored out to the studio the other day for a glimpse at her future "workshop." She was said to be delighted with the completeness of the plant, and the uniqueness with which it is laid out.

Vivian Martin is soon to take a vacation at Banff, in the Canadian Rockies. She has just completed "Her Country First" for Paramount, under direction of James Young.

Wallace Reid is to leave shortly for location in the mountains with Ann Little and company under direction of George Melford, to film "The Source," a lumber camp story by Clarence Buddington Kelland.

Work is progressing splendidly on the new structure to replace the burned portions of the Lasky plant, foundations having been completed. It will house all the departments rendered homeless by the blaze and will also accommodate other things including a special studio for publicity photographic work.

Vitagraph Cites Record of Empey Feature

VITAGRAPH this week declared, through its publicity department, that in addition to being one of the sensational war pictures on the market, "Over the Top," produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, has established a number of unique records since its release a few weeks ago.

Vitagraph cites the following as facts in connection with the bookings of the Empey production:

"It started out with advanced bookings of 2,500 days to be played within a space of forty days, the largest pre-release write-up ever accredited any picture.

"It was the first attraction of any kind to play two weeks in the history of Syracuse, New York.

"Was the cause of riots at San Diego and Salt Lake City by crowds seeking to force their way into the theatres.

"Caused a theatre in Ogden, Utah, birthplace of Empey, to be kept open until 2 o'clock in the morning to take care of the crowds, the first time in the history of the place such a thing occurred.

"Broke the record at the massive Academy of Music, Philadelphia.

"Caused police reserves to be called out at Memphis, Tenn., where it established new records at the Majestic theatre."

Vitagraph also claims additional records for the picture.

Rialto Uses Keystone

The Rialto theatre, New York, according to an announcement this week by Triangle Distributing Corporation, will use sixteen former Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies which are being re-issued by Triangle. The first was used the week of June 2 at the Rialto, "Ambrose's Cup of Woe," featuring Mack Swain.

Kerrigan Returns to Work for Paralta

J. Warren Kerrigan, the Paralta star who has been absent from the studios for a number of months owing to a fractured leg, has returned to the Brunton studios and is now engaged with the filming of his third Paralta Play, "A Dollar Bid," adapted from Credo Harris' novel, "Toby."

The locale of the story is laid in the Kentucky hills, that picturesque part of the United States which has afforded so much excellent material for song and story. "A Dollar Bid" is a typical Kerrigan story, which gives the star opportunity to be seen as a dashing young American hero. Miss Lois Wilson, who appeared as leading woman with Mr. Kerrigan in his two former Paralta Plays, will again be seen in the leading feminine role of this production which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation immediately upon its completion.

Mason-Truex Production to Begin in July

Production work will be commenced early in July, it is announced, on the first Shirley Mason-Ernest Truex pictures of the John Emerson-Anita Loos series for Paramount release. Miss Loos has gone to the Coast to confer with Jesse L. Lasky on the initial scripts.

John Emerson will personally direct the pictures, which will be produced at the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos will collaborate on these productions in the same manner that they did for Douglas Fairbanks, when on the producing staff of the comedian.

Adequate support will be provided the star players, the cast for the first picture being given considerable attention by the author and the director.

Pickford Subject Nears Completion

Work is said to be progressing rapidly on "Capt. Kidd, Jr.," Mary Pickford's new Artcraft production from the stage play. The scenario was prepared by Frances Marion. William D. Taylor is directing the picture and expects to complete it in record time.

The Artcraft publicity department declares this will be one of Miss Pickford's most amusing and original subjects, affording every opportunity for the star to display her talent.

Select Makes Changes in Exchanges

This week brought the announcement from Select Pictures of the installation of several new exchange managers in various cities.

Beginning June 3 Select Pictures St. Louis Exchange came under the management of J. C. Ragland. Mr. Ragland was installed as the St. Louis Branch Manager by Select's Field Manager, J. S. Woody. Mr. Woody is spending some time at the St. Louis branch inducting Mr. Ragland into his new office.

Another important shift in Select's branch executives places C. R. Rogers in charge of Select's New England territory, with headquarters in the Boston branch. Mr. Rogers was branch manager for Select in Buffalo, and it is in recognition of the splendid abilities which he has displayed in building up Select's business throughout the Buffalo territory, that he is now being given the greater opportunities presented by the Boston and New England field.

Sherman S. Webster succeeds Charles R. Rogers as branch manager of Select's Buffalo Exchange.

Nan Christy with Lasky

About New Pictures

Mary Miles Minter's next feature for American-Mutual, "The Eyes of Julia Deep," is already under production, with Lloyd Ingraham directing. The story promises to be the best Minter subject yet made by American.

Vandalism and destructiveness of the Germans on the western front are said to be shown in "Fighting the Hun at St. Quentin," seventh picture in the "Britain's Bulwarks" series, released by Pathe June 23.

"Tempered Steel," the fourth special production in which Madame Olga Petrova is the leading figure, is said to be marked by a number of unusual stage sets of massive character. The story calls for considerable theatrical atmosphere.

In "No Man's Land," Bert Lytell's forthcoming picture under the Metro banner, there is said to be a scene in which four dramatic happenings must be timed perfectly in order to get the situation over. These were rehearsed four times.

William S. Hart and his company of players departed for the desert last week, to shoot the first scenes of his new picture to follow "Shark Monroe" in the order of release. The new feature is called "Riddle Gawne."

Despite the fact that Gloria Swanson was called upon to do many daring feats in the water, just after she had learned to swim, she declares that she was only scared once during the filming of "You Can't Believe Everything," Triangle play.

William "Smiling Bill" Parsons is said to be a different kind of comic lover in "Matching Billy," another of the series of Capitol Comedies distributed by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

A fight that violated none of the boxing regulations of New York State was "pulled off," it is said, at the Metro studio recently, in connection with Viola Dana's picture, "Opportunity," shortly to be released.

"The Danger Game," Goldwyn-Madge Kennedy production, is said to have scored an instantaneous hit at the New theatre in Baltimore, when it was presented there recently. Miss Kennedy is well liked there.

"As the Sun Went Down," Edith Storey's newest Metro production following "The Demon," "Treasure of the Sea" and "The Claim," is said to be rapidly nearing completion at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. E. Mason Hopper is directing it.

"Riddle Gawne," William S. Hart's newest Artcraft picture, is being directed by Hart personally, with Joe August at the camera. The cast includes Katherine MacDonald, Lon Chaney, Gertrude Short, Leon Kent, Mary Jane Irving, George Field and Gretchen Lederer.

Director Will S. Davis is said to have encountered many difficulties in the filming of "No Man's Land," new Lytell-Metro picture. But he managed to get it finished, and it is expected to be a big winner.

Director Dell Henderson of World Films is completing "Hitting the Trail," the Roy Sommerville story which co-stars Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley and brings Joseph Smiley again to the front.

In "The House of Gold," a Metro production in which Emmy Wehlen is starred, an educated monkey is dressed as Charlie Chaplin, and is made to perform some of the tricks of this comedian. This he does in an almost human manner.

Lois Meredith is playing the leading feminine role opposite Jack Barrymore in the Paramount picture, "On the Quiet," which is now being produced at the Fifty-sixth Studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under the direction of Chet Withey.

A scene in silhouette is one of the striking features of "The House of Gold," the forthcoming Metro production starring Emmy Wehlen, which will have early release.

The photographic effects in "Her Final Reckoning," the Paramount picture starring Pauline Frederick, released June 9, were attained by Jacques Bizeul, a well-known photographer, who has been doing the camera work for Emile Chautard.

Mabel Normand, In Goldwyn's "The Venus Model"

Metro Star Finishes New Film

Bert Lytell has finished work in "No Man's Land," his second picture as a Metro star, which follows "The Trail to Yesterday."

The story is one of love, adventure and deep intrigue. Its denouement is out of the beaten track, and introduces dramatic material said to be entirely new to the screen.

Anna Q. Nilsson, who played opposite Mr. Lytell in "The Trail to Yesterday," again is his leading woman. The cast also includes Eugene Pallette, Charles Arling, Edward Alexander and Mollie McConnell. Will S. Davis directed and the photography was done by Robert B. Kurrle.

"Shame" Claims Good Share of Attention

"Shame," the John W. Noble special feature distributed by General Film Company, continues to score wherever shown, according to reports received by General Film Company.

K. Moreland, proprietor of the Majestic theatre, of Missouri Valley, Iowa, is one of the latest of the large number of exhibitors who has proved his showmanship with this production. Mr. Moreland conducted an aggressive campaign, using full page display advertisements in the Missouri Valley papers, exploiting "Shame" as the Memorial Day extra attraction.

Other reports received by General Film tell of similar records established by "Shame" as a box-office attraction.

Spoor Selects Cast for "Young America"

It was announced this week that the cast for "Young America," the forthcoming George K. Spoor feature, has been selected and production starts at the Essanay studios this week. Ebony Eliminates Dialect in Sub-Titles

THE Ebony Comedies Productions, with all colored casts, released regularly through General Film Company, have recently been undergoing an experimental process in the matter of sub-titles, according to an announcement this week from General. As a result it is made known that dialect in the sub-titles of the Ebony pictures has been dropped, and in the future the productions will use only English as "she is supposed to be spoke." The fact that the inserts will not be in the negro dialect is expected by General to bring forth a chorus of approvals from exhibitors who are using the pictures.

L. J. Pollard, president of Ebony, said in an announcement concerning the decision: "We had very good reasons for eliminating dialect. First, all dialect is hard to read and understand on the screen, where there is such limited time allowed for inspection by an audience. The simpler the wording of a sub-title or insert, the easier it is to read and grasp. Second, dialect is not necessarily representative of the speech of the race, and has really no standard, since the cleverest of writers disagree as to its predominating peculiarities. Thirdly, the humor of the negro is mainly in his mannerisms and his actions, and he makes these inimitably humorous when he tries. This is demonstrated in the Ebony comedies, because nine-tenths of the spectators, after seeing one run off are not able to say whether dialect was used or not. Those who have heard colored people talk are led by the screen action mentally to translate the words, not into dialect, but into the habitual tone and inflection of the negro, which is really inimitable in cold type and which is entirely apart from occasional mistakes in pronunciation and grammar. For this reason, therefore, we decided to utilize plain English only."

Goldwyn Assigns Irving to Normand Films

GEORGE IRVING, the well known director, who was recently added to the Goldwyn staff, and who has strengthened that end of the organization considerably, according to reports, has been assigned to production in which Mabel Normand will appear. This was contained in an announcement made by Goldwyn this week.

It is understood that a new picture has already been put under way, but as yet no title has been chosen.

From his recent work in "Daughter of Destiny," admirers of George Irving look back on his successful career as a motion picture director and, before that, his thirteen years in Charles Frohman's stage productions.

His first undertaking in this direction was the picturization of Booth Tarkington's "The Conquest of Canaan" and after a few more productions he scored his greatest success in visualizing Augustus Thomas' play, "The Witching Hour." His status as a director of unusual delicacy, keenness and strength was at once evidenced, and since then he has given additional proof of these qualities.

Diamond Presents Pearl Shepherd

The Diamond Film Company, whose product is released through General Film, last week announced that Pearl Shepherd, a screen player who has appeared in some of the Commonwealth and other comedy productions, will be featured in the forthcoming Diamond comedy pictures.

Baby Osborne Helpful, Says Her Director

Many who have felt a natural interest in the methods followed by directors of child stars will find the following statement from William Bertram, director of "The Daughter of the West," Baby Marie Osborne's recent Pathe offering, of interest.

"A child star, especially a girl, will prove helpful to a director," declares Mr. Bertram, "if he knows how to infuse the spirit of play into every scene and benefit by the remarkable imagination possessed by children.

"When starting a scene with Baby Osborne, the first thing I do is to arouse her curiosity and get her imagination working. Then I direct the general trend of her thoughts until the exact shade of meaning is attained.

"The first thing a director must learn is that 'a little child shall lead him.' Baby Marie enters into the work with astonishing enthusiasm and time after time creates scenes which neither the author, the scenario writer, nor myself ever thought of.

"Many times I have been 'stumped' at an important and difficult point in the progress of a production. Always, in an emergency of this kind, I chat with Baby Marie, and in a spirit of play draw her out, getting her point of view on the scene in question.

"Sooner or later her vivid imagination suggests the solution. Sometimes she expresses it in words, but more frequently in actions."

Mabel Banyea Returns to World Films

Mabel Banyea, who returned to New York six weeks ago, after spending two years in France, has been cast in a role in Director Dell Henderson's current World production, "Hitting the Trail," the Roy Sommerville story co-starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley.

Miss Banyea is of French and Danish descent and is well known in theatrical circles here and abroad. She played an engagement with David Belasco's "Years of Discretion" before going into vaudeville and, following the New York run of the piece, she formed her own company of twelve and toured the various European countries, including Egypt, China and Japan.

World film has announced that "Hitting the Trail" will be an early release.

Unusual Praise for "Fatty" from N. Y. Times

The New York Times, most staid of Gotham's newspapers, went out of its way in a recent review of the week's screen offerings on Broadway to praise Roscoe Arbuckle's Paramount release, "Moonshine."

In the course of a three hundred and fifty word review the Times writer told of the many laughs in the two-reel offering and closed with the statement, "'Moonshine' was made to make spectators laugh and it certainly succeeded yesterday."

Coming Program Offerings

Triangle Releases Dual Role Picture

A romance of the West, "His Enemy, the Law," by Lillian Ducey, featuring Jack Richardson and Irene Hunt in dual roles, is the first release on the Triangle program for the week of June 16. A theatrical story, "Station Content," is the second release of the week, featuring Gloria Swanson and Lee Hill.

Raymond Wells directed the first-named production, which was photographed by C. G. Peterson. "Station Content," the second release of the week, deals with the love and heartaches of the theatrical profession. In the cast are: Gloria Swanson, Lee Hill and Arthur Millett. Catherine Carr wrote "Station Content" from the scenario by Chas. J. Wilson.

A Keystone comedy, "Isn't it Warm?" with Harry Depp, William Dyer and Claire McDowell concludes the week's program.

Sennett Animals Again to the Fore

Animals are said to be again much in evidence in the latest Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Two Tough Tenderfeet," scheduled for release June 17.

The only thing that doesn't do a bit of acting in this comedy is a chicken, but as it makes its appearance properly roasted it was not afforded an opportunity to display its talents.

The cast includes Polly Moran, Ben Turpin, Charlie Lynn, Bert Roach and Laura LaVarnie. Richard Jones directed.

World Picture Renamed

The new World Picture in which Madge Evans and Johnny Hines are starred has been re-named "Neighbors" in place of "Clarissa," the working title under which the picture was known. July 29 has been set as the date for publishing this attraction. "Neighbors" was written by Maravene Thompson.

Baby Marie Heads Pathe List

"Voice of Destiny" Principal Offering Week of June 23—Variety in Other Productions

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, in a subject said to be more of a dramatic nature than her previous releases, heads the list of Pathe program offerings for the week of June 23. "The Voice of Destiny," a five-reeler, is the subject.

The plot concerns Baby Marie's success in freeing her father from a charge of murder by clever detective work.

A two-reel episode of "The House of Hate," in which Pearl White saves Antonio Moreno from death by poisoning is also among the week's offerings. This is the sixteenth episode of the serial.

"Cleopatsy," said to be the most elaborate Toto comedy yet offered, and which has received much advance publicity, has finally been given a release date in this week. As might be guessed from the title this two-reel comedy is a burlesque on the historic incident of Cleopatra and Mark Antony, with Toto in the latter role.

"Are Crooks Dishonest?" is the title of a one-reel Harold Lloyd comedy released in this program presenting Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels.

Part seven of "Britain's Bulwarks" is entitled "Fighting the Hun at St. Quentin" and shows the Germans blowing the crossroads, villages, manufacturing plants and churches in their effort to raze as much of France as they can.

The Post Travel Series picture of the week is "St. Croix," showing intimate views of life in what were the Danish West Indies till they were recently purchased by Uncle Sam.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 52 is released Wednesday, June 26, and No. 53 on Saturday, June 29.

Mary Pickford Film Presents Strong Cast

ARTCRAFT is authority for the statement that the cast of "How Could You, Jean?" June 23 Mary Pickford production, includes a round half-dozen players of unusual skill in screen representations.

"First among these," said Artcraft, "is Casson Ferguson, who has the juvenile lead.

"Herbert Standing and Spottiswoode Aitken, who also appear, are screen players who are famous for their many characterizations of old men types, and in this latest Pickford-Artcraft Picture they have important parts, Aitken playing Rufus Bonner, a kindly and unworldly old scientist who is engaged in writing a life history of the moth, and Standing assuming the role of Burton, Sr., a dyspeptic old millionaire who is won back to smiles and a good disposition by the simple life under the tutelage of Jean, portrayed by Miss Pickford. Fanny Midgely has the role of Mrs. Bonner and she is especially well suited to the part. Larry Peyton, the fifth member of the big six, is a character man who has a long list of successes, one of the foremost of these being the part of the cowardly Gaspard in 'Joan, the Woman.' He appears as Oscar, the Bonner's Swedish hired man, in this latest picture, and he has a number of very comic situations with Miss Pickford. Zazu Pitts, the little girl with the funny name, who will be remembered for her unusual work in 'The Little Princess,' rounds up the list employed in this Pickford latest.

In addition there are seven child actors who appear: Emma Gerdes, Burwell Hamerick, Wesley Barry, Althea Worthley, Dorothy Rosher, Jack Herbert and Valeria Traxler.

Variety Keynote of Bennett Film

"Certainly there is no lack of diversity," said Paramount this week, "in the scenic backgrounds afforded for the next Ince production for Paramount starring Enid Bennett, for it opens in New York and then travels westward to the desert where the culmination is developed through a series of highly effective incidents. 'A Desert Wooing' is the title, and it is to be released June 23.

"Jerome Storm directed Miss Bennett's new starring subject. J. G. Hawks wrote the story and Thomas H. Ince supervised the production. Jack Holt supports the star and a strong cast appears in the other roles."

It is declared a winner.

Brockwell Feature Comes This Month

A delineation of life in New York's Bohemia is given by Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road," which is announced from the William Fox offices as the next Special Feature for June releases. The play shows how a young girl of Puritan training is enmeshed in the free, unconventional life of the art studios, and how she emerges from the maelstrom of temptation with a clean soul.

"The Scarlet Road" was written by Charles Kenyon and directed by Edward LeSaint.

A strong cast supports Miss Brockwell in this production, the other players being Betty Shade, L. C. Shumway, Charles Clary, and William Scott.

" Social Ambition " Makes Bid for Success

" Social Ambition," the Selexart drama which is being distributed by Goldwyn, is declared by that company to be a notable achievement in the art of the Cinema.

The picture is described as a virile drama of a man's redemption and a woman's steadfast faith, its action shifting from an Alaskan mining camp to the sophisticated society of an Eastern metropolis. Howard Hickman enacts the role of Vincent Manton, financially ruined because of his wife's social ambition and the expenditures necessary to satisfy her. To Rhea Mitchell is entrusted the highly sympathetic part of Rose, a dance hall girl in a mining camp.

Bluebird Changes Title of Myers Film

The title of Carmel Myers' next release has been changed from " A Penny's Worth of Love " to " The City of Tears." It will take its place on the Bluebird release list on June 24 in place of " After the War," which has been set back until July 8.

In " The City of Tears " Miss Myers picturizes the prima donna of an Italian Opera Company, which has closed after a financially unsuccessful season, leaving the members to shift for themselves to the best of their ability.

Other members of the cast are Earl Rodney, Beatrice Joy and Lottie Krause.

General Releases New Ebony Comedy

" A Reckless Rover," said by the producers to be the best of the Ebony Comedies produced to date, is released this week by General Film Company. The company of negro players, reinforced by a number of new faces, succeeds in introducing some of the liveliest comedy ever seen in a production of this character, General Film reports, with its slapstick humor developed to the highest pitch of sustained interest.

Program Glances

Goldwyn plans to present Madge Kennedy on June 30 in " The Service Star," in which the comedienne will have a straight dramatic role. The story is built around the emotions of several people involved in the national draft.

" The Midnight Flyer," the third of Universal's two-reel dramas, will be released, it is announced, during the week of June 24. It is a combination between a western and a railroad drama. Helen Gibson is the heroine.

Ned Finley, hero of many screen battles, appears in another sympathetic role in " The Man from Nowhere," the current Blue Ridge drama, released by General Film Company. Marion Henry and Harry Hamill are in the cast.

" Heart of the Sunset," distributed by Goldwyn, has been doing very nicely, it is reported. In Minneapolis it was presented a week at the Metropolitan, and was accorded good patronage and fair praise.

Since its release in March, the Paramount version of Maeterlinck's " The Blue Bird " is said to have received much favorable comment from the press of the entire country. Boston papers treated it best.

The June 10 release by Bluebird had much trouble in getting a title. It was finally decided to release the picture under the name of " Which Woman? " Priscilla Dean is a vampire in the picture.

Judging by the reported fast work of Pearl White and Antonio Moreno in the sixteenth episode of " The House of Hate," released by Pathe June 23, the thrills are coming faster than ever in the minds of Director Seitz and Bertram Millhauser, scenario writer.

Artcraft publicity department says some of the most exquisite examples of the art of the modiste ever shown in pictures will be noticed in the new Cecil B. De Mille special Artcraft feature, " Old Wives for New," scheduled for release June 23.

The O. Henry story, " Sisters of the Golden Circle," in picture form is on the General Film release list for this week. This is the sixty-first O. Henry story in the Broadway Star Features series.

Vivian Martin's newest Paramount picture was released June 9 under the title of " Viviette." It is a picturization of the novel by William J. Locke. Julia Crawford Ivers wrote the scenario.

Slippery Slim, well known in Snakeville comedies, is presented this week by General Film in what that company says is a new role. The picture is called " Slippery Slim, Diplomat." The next release is " Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent."

Motion pictures have made it possible for the two heavy feminine roles in " Prince Zilah " to be interpreted by the same person, and this is accomplished by Pauline Frederick in her Paramount picture released on June 9, under the title of " Her Final Reckoning."

In the 123rd release of Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue, on June 10, he takes you to all the places of interest in the Samoa of today.

Following upon the heels of the release of Pathe's " The Yellow Ticket " at the Rialto in New York, comes the news that the picture is booked solid in New York this week in addition to establishing records elsewhere.

The first motion picture to be written by Maravene Thompson, " The Heart of a Girl," will be released by the World on July 1. Barbara Castleton and Irving Cummings are the stars in this production.

" Blue Blood," which Goldwyn describes as a gripping Selexart drama, possesses the answer to the age-old question: Should a physician tell? According to the picture—he should.

A great part of the location work of " True Blue," Wm. Fox-Wm. Farnum feature, was done on the Bixby cattle ranch in Southern California.

Emily Stevens is to be starred by Metro in " Kildare of the Storm."

Pauline Curley is the latest actress to become leading woman for Douglas Fairbanks.

" On the Quiet " is the first picture that John Barrymore is making to mark his return to the screen.

Walker Whiteside, Who Will Appear in Pictures Under Ernest Shipman's Management

Shipman Gets Big Orders from Abroad

Ernest Shipman announces that he has completed arrangements with Joseph Fisher, prominent distributor in South Africa, with offices in Capetown, to act as his purchasing agent in this country. Mr. Shipman will distribute in this country Mr. Fisher's eight-reel feature, "The Rose of Rhodesia." He announces an early showing in New York.

Mr. Shipman announces also that Frederic Shipman, prominent distributor in Australia, has cabled him for information on feature pictures offered on independent market. Mr. Shipman operates in Australia and the Orient.

Ernest Shipman announces that he has arranged with Walter Whiteside to take the leading role in a seven-reel picture, title not announced, the theme of which deals with the activities of a Japanese secret service agent in America.

Tourneur Not in Favor of Vamp Type

Maurice Tourneur goes on record as stating that "The vamp is psychologically all wrong." "The idea that a vampire can make a slave of a man by merely rolling the eyes is as far from the natural course of things as the Kaiser is from success," he concluded.

Mr. Tourneur has organized recently an independent company. His first production is "Sporting Life" which is announced for trade showing, soon.

M. H. Hoffman Leaves Foursquare

George Backer Purchases Holdings of Former Vice-President — Backer and Wildberg Assume Full Control

A RE-ALIGNMENT of financial interests in Foursquare Pictures, Inc., was effected yesterday. The holdings of M. H. Hoffman, who has been vice-president and general manager of Foursquare Pictures, were purchased by George Backer, Mr. Hoffman resigning from the corporation.

Mr. Backer, president of Foursquare Pictures, now assumes active control of the organization and, with his business associates, will proceed to extend its endeavors. In conjunction with Jacob Wildberg, treasurer, Mr. Backer will not only direct the operations of the entire Foursquare organization but, also select the pictures to be acquired for distribution.

From this time forth, Foursquare will secure for distribution, through its twenty-six exchanges and affiliated distributing companies, one feature photoplay each month—making twelve every year. Eight of these "specials" will be produced by the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, which is confining its efforts solely to that number of photoplays each year. Arrangements have been concluded with another high-class producing firm for four or possibly six features a year.

It is the purpose of Mr. Backer and his associates to apply to the conduct of the enterprise the sort of constructive methods which have been and are now followed by large commercial institutions.

Establishing and maintaining quality of film merchandise, and efficiency of distribution and service to exhibitors, will be the principal aims of Foursquare Pictures, Inc., under its new management. Already a factor among the large independent national distributors, there is reason to believe that its fortunes will thrive to a degree that should be eminently satisfactory.

"Mr. Hoffman leaves us with every good wish for his success," said President Backer, of Foursquare. "He has purchased from us the New York Foursquare Exchange, the terms of the contract specifying that he shall distribute in this territory our product. Mr. Hoffman, I am sure, will endeavor to operate the exchange upon a basis of serving the needs of exhibitors to the end of increasing the business and making it one of permanence and worthy of the good will of its patrons."

Mr. Hoffman is one of the most prominent figures in the independent distributing field. He has seen the industry climb from the smallest to one of the big six of the country. His long experience makes him admirably fitted to enter most any branch and conduct it successfully.

Pittsburgh Committee Indorses United Plan

A COMMITTEE appointed by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania to investigate the project of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has sent out a letter to all its members officially indorsing the project and recommending its adoption to every exhibitor desirous of taking out a franchise in his city or district.

The committee was composed of R. Solz, George Schweitzer and M. Feitler, managers of the Majestic, Century and Elmore theatres in Pittsburgh. During the investigation, enrollments in the Pittsburgh district were many, says the report.

Pittsburgh is one of three cities in which lists of the exhibitors who have enrolled with United have been published locally. The other cities are St. Louis and Kansas City. In each case between fifty and one hundred "days" were recorded for the district. With the endorsement of the state league behind it, the Pittsburgh district management hopes to place that city in a good third place in the matter of enrollment.

President Berst stated recently that there was no longer the slightest question but that the United project would "go over the top," as the schedule for enrolling exhibitor-members was being exceeded at a rate that would win a working quota of "days" by the middle of August.

As the result of a tour of western New York by C. R. Seelye, secretary of United Pictures Theatres of America, Inc., numerous enrollments from that section have been reaching the United home offices during the past few days. Among the new recruits to this movement are the Regorson Company of Rochester, managers of the Piccadilly, the Regent and the Gordon in that city. Buffalo also responded by enrolling the Palace, which is under the management of Howard Mosher, one of the foremost exhibitors of his section, and the Elmwood.

Lloyd Carleton, director and executive head of Carleton Attractions, Los Angeles, arrived in New York last week, with a print of his latest production, the title to which has not been announced.

Gaumont's Serial, "Different"

"The Hand of Vengeance," New Ten-Reel Serial, Said To Be "Unique"—Big Advertising Campaign Waged

GAUMONT'S new ten-reel serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," is said to contain dramatic situations never before registered by the camera. An official of the company refers to it as "unique." It is announced that the serial will be distributed to the exhibitor through the biggest and most reliable independent exchanges throughout the country. An extensive advertising campaign is being carried out in the trade papers and press of the country and every effort is being made by the Gaumont Company to place the serial before the public so that the way may be made clear for the exhibitor when he runs these ten episodes at his theatre.

The story centers around a man whose life has been attempted and whose fortune has been stolen by one upon whom he swears revenge. In order that he might get this revenge, he joins a band of confederates and after recovering his property, little by little, goes to the assistance of others who have suffered the same fate as himself. It is said that many startling thrills develop from the dangerous situations in which the hero finds himself while being hunted by an officer of the law. In each episode the hero comes dangerously near capture but is saved each time by a trick invented by himself. These tricks are said to be cleverly registered on the screen and are sensational in their revelation.

The cast is composed of prominent dramatic actors of many years' experience. Notable among them is a mysterious personage, known as "The Grey Lady," said to be the daughter of a prominent statesman, to whom the avenger of wrong loses his heart while engaged in acting as her champion. Additional interest is added to this photo-serial by the fact that even before the last episode was completed "The Grey Lady" sailed for France, and is now nursing wounded soldiers in the battlefield hospitals.

An official of the company said: "The element of suspense is held from the first reel to the last and no matter how many photoplays the spectator may have seen he will be unable to figure what is going to happen next. And this is why the Gaumont Company calls this serial "unique."

Buyers Testify as to Re-Issues Value

NUMEROUS letters received by the W. H. Productions from independent buyers who have purchased territory on the re-issues which the W. H. company are releasing, verify the fact that re-issues are meeting with the approval of the public. Among those who have written W. H. to this effect are:

M. Wieland of Wieland Film Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., who says: "Have noticed the various comments as to the merits and demerits of re-issues. I want to state emphatically that W. H. Productions Company re-issues we are handling are bringing satisfactory business to us and to the exhibitors we are booking."

Consolidated Theatres Company of Cincinnati, Ohio write: "The Keystone Comedy re-issues are going over exceptionally well, and we are very much pleased with the returns."

Harry Segal of Globe Feature Film Corporation of Boston, states: "The business on the re-issues is very good, and we have no complaint to make."

Max W. Herring of Pittsburgh, Pa., states: "The Hart re-issues which I am handling are going over nicely, and I am pleased with the business to date. Exhibitors have reported capacity business on these productions."

W. E. Drummond of Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., states: "Your re-issues are very satisfactory to the exhibitors in this territory. They are getting more business than a number of newer productions."

Phil. Goldstone of Omaha, Neb., says: "If it had not been for the re-issues, a number of exhibitors in this territory would have been obliged to close down their theatres for the summer months."

Standard Film Corporation, Kansas City, Mo., state: "Good re-issues are very much alive, and we are satisfied with the business we are doing on same."

W. High of Baltimore, Md., Superpictures, Ltd. of Canada, Standard Film Service, Cleveland, Ohio, and Greater Features Company of Seattle, Washington, all praise the re-issues which they have handled.

Golden Commences Work on Baird Serial

Work on the opening episodes of the serial in which Leah Baird is featured, is well under way, says Joseph A. Golden, director and executive head of the Western Photoplays, Inc., the company producing the serial. Messrs. Golden and Alperstein, of this company, announce that they have received communications from independent exchanges throughout the country, asking for details on the method of release for this serial when completed. The method of release is not officially announced, but it is understood that the product will be placed on the open market.

Mr. Golden will personally direct Miss Baird in this serial. After the completion of the first five episodes, these will be given a pre-release showing to the trade and critics.

Frank Brockliss, Inc., will serve a buffet luncheon daily, commencing June 20, to foreign buyers, in the projection room where these buyers are looking at the company's product. Mr. Garrett announces that he will make this innovation for the convenience of buyers who find that they have only a limited time at their disposal. "It is a time-saver," said Mr. Garrett, "and sure to be appreciated by my customers."

Affiliated Organizes Unit in Cleveland

Charles C. Pettijohn was in Cleveland on June 4 to put the finishing touches to the contract which makes Ohio the latest state to ally itself with the Affiliated Booking Corporation. Ohio has been flirting with this proposition for the past six months, but there have been several stumbling blocks to the consummation of its adoption. These have all been removed, however, and the Ohio unit is now a fact. At a meeting held in the Republic Building, June 4, the organization was affected, and 1,000 shares of stock were subscribed by the eleven members present. As a further proof of the earnestness with which the exhibitors of Cleveland have entered into this proposition, the five directors, which are allowed each unit, were elected at the initial meeting. They are Henry H. Lustig, David Schumann, W. J. Slimm, John Kalafat and Max Schachtel. The national directorship was unanimously given to Sam Bullock, and Max Schachtel, a veteran exhibitor and old exchange man, was appointed manager of the unit. Mr. Schachtel will start out at once on a tour of the state, to get the necessary quota of 125 days signed up for, as soon as possible. These 125 days may come from any portion of Ohio with the exception of Cincinnati. In order to grant a charter to Kentucky, it was found necessary to include Cincinnati in the Kentucky unit, so as to guarantee to the parent organization the quota required to form an independent unit.

Officers of the Ohio unit were also elected at the same meeting and are Henry H. Lustig, president; David Schumann, vice-president; M. B. Horwitz, secretary, and W. J. Slimm, treasurer and trustee of the local organization.

Just how the formation of the Ohio unit under the Affiliated Booking plan will affect the recently organized independent booking company, known as the Ohio Exhibitor's Film Exchange Company, has not been determined.

Sherry Gets De Luxe Product

William L. Sherry to Distribute Doris Kenyon Pictures — "Street of Seven Stars," First—Deitrich Makes Arrangements

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, head of the William L. Sherry Service, and Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., have entered into an agreement whereby all of the Doris Kenyon pictures will be distributed by the new Sherry organization. These pictures are being produced by Miss Kenyon's own company, De Luxe Pictures ,of which Mr. Deitrich is president and general manager. "The Street of Seven Stars" will be the first release. It is by Mary Roberts Rinehart, from her story of the same name, which ran in the Saturday Evening Post. The picture was produced under the direction of John B. O'Brien.

In a recent publication a well-known reviewer refers to "The Street of Seven Stars" as an "unprecedentedly beautiful photoplay," and declares that it "should be booked all over the country." She is said to be the youngest star at the head of her own company. She has been in pictures for four years.

"The Street of Seven Stars" is to be released for the last week in June. It will be followed by "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance. In this picture De Luxe Pictures, Inc., creates a precedent in the film industry by reversing the customary process of taking a screen story from a printed story. He contracted with Mr. Vance, for a large sum of money, it is said, to write a scenario to be published later as a magazine story. The fictional rights have already been sold to one of the best known magazines in the country.

Under the terms of agreement between Mr. Deitrich and Mr. Sherry, a minimum of four pictures and a maximum of eight will be produced each year, for an extended term of years, with Miss Kenyon as star. Mr. Deitrich now has the motion picture rights to stories by half a dozen of the foremost authors. Mr. Deitrich, according to his own statement, selected Mr. Sherry "not merely because he is a man of absolute integrity but because he is a live wire, with a splendid record of results behind him."

"I am convinced that Mr. Sherry will not merely make a success of the Kenyon pictures," said Mr. Deitrich, "but also of his new distributing agency. He has wide experience to build upon, and he is getting together a force of men well versed in all the details of the marketing end of the business.

"Ever since I decided to organize my own distributing agency I have been looking around for the highest grade of pictures," he says, "and I am confident my selections up to date will amply justify the wisdom of my course. The Kenyon pictures and the Calvert pictures are not merely first class in all the details of production, but also have a real box-office value."

Seek New Title for Perret Feature

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week that the title "America First" originally selected for the coming Leonce Perret propaganda feature has been entirely done away with.

No statement regarding the new title is forthcoming, though it is speculated that the producer probably has a title up his sleeve on which he desires to take no chance until the production is complete.

Work on the production of the feature is rapidly nearing the "Finis" stage. Concerning the story it is stated that the action carries the characters from America to England and France and back again, with touches of love, war and mystery.

It is said that Mr. Perret has enjoyed unlimited financial backing in the staging of this latest production, and while the names of the playing cast are being kept secret its strength may be judged from the presence of E. K. Lincoln and Doris Cassinelli in the leads.

One of the principal aims of the screen drama will be to cement even more firmly the growing bond of friendship between the United States and France as disclosed in Mr. Perret's introductory title:

Oh! France!
Sit tight!
Fight!
Victory's in sight.
A Giant has come
From over the sea
To fight for thee,
To set thee free.
With banner and gun
They'll avenge thy slain
They'll drive this Hun
Into Hell's Domain.

Educational's "Fighting Navy"

Marine Picture Ready for Release—Navy at Work and Play—Animal Picture and "Happy Hooligan" in Program

"YOUR FIGHTING NAVY AT WORK AND AT PLAY," the multiple-reel educational produced by the Educational Films Corporation, is completed and is announced for a Broadway showing before the last of this month. It is said that six weeks were taken in perfecting the sub-titles. An official of the Educational Company in making this announcement said: "I consider the sub-titles of a picture and especially an educational, are of equal value as the picture. Good sub-titles—sub-titles that mean something and at the same time have a touch of subtle humor—are a form of satisfying entertainment in themselves. In view of this fact, I have personally seen to it that the titles on this marine spectacle are the best that can be conceived by an expert subtitler."

For six weeks the titling of "Your Fighting Navy" has been slowly perfected until it is now in shape. It has had the official authoritative aid of Lieutenant Henry Reuterdahl, U. S. N. R. F., together with the labors of half a dozen other titlers of journalistic and motion picture experience. The complete result has been passed and approved by the navy expert. Masters of shipcraft, naval practice, gunnery authorities, explosives technicians, and aviation and submarine experts have pronounced it correct both as to word of fact and picture of faithful interpretation.

The spectator can visualize what has happened on the Atlantic a few score miles off the Jersey coast resorts. The sowing of the sea with deadly bombs; the stealthy attack of the submarine; the spying of hydroplanes upon battleships and smaller craft; the destroyers' successful convoy of transports aided by smoke screen—these and many other phases of the current defense against the overseas invader are accurately represented.

A clever combination of amusing zoological fact and "kidding" cartoon comedy is effected in the latest Ditmars Animal Picture issued by Educational. The first half of the reel is Professor Raymond Ditmars' depiction of "Wild Babies." It shows the evolution of the tiny tadpole into the frog, the training and guarding of the baby porcupines by mamma, the education of infant turtles and how the aoudad (a rare species of goat) teaches its young to climb.

Anspacher, Lecturer, Author and Dramatist

Louis Kaufman Anspacher, author of "The Unchastened Woman," the screen version of which was produced by Rialto De Luxe Productions and offered on the market as an independent attraction, is one of our best contemporary authors and playwriters. He was born in Cincinnati and educated in the public schools in Rochester and New York, College of the City of New York, and Columbia University. Subsequently he completed the course in the Law School of Columbia.

Mr. Anspacher was secular lecturer at Temple Emanuel, New York. He married the American actress, Kathryn Kidder. Since 1906 he has been on the permanent lecture staff of the League for Political Education, New York; and since 1907 on the staff of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. In 1908 he was appointed lecturer for the University Extension Center at Normal College, New York.

Mr. Anspacher has contributed many poems and articles to current magazines, among them "Tristan and Isolde." His drama, "The Embarrassment of Riches," was produced at Wallack's theatre, New York. In 1907 his historical drama, "Anne and the Arch Duke John," was produced by the Shuberts. In 1909 his modern play, "A Woman of Impulse," was produced at the Herald Square theatre, New York. His play, "The Glass House," was successfully produced in Chicago during the Spring of 1912, and is shortly to be produced in London.

Amongst the latest works of Dr. Anspacher are "Our Children" and "That Day."

Whartons Produce Feature for War Chest Fund

Theodore and Leopold Wharton, of Wharton, Inc., Ithaca, have completed the filming of "The Making of the War Chest," a patriotic feature, the contribution of the Whartons to the War Chest Fund. The picture was presented recently to the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, but the feature was received so enthusiastically that plans were completed for national exploitation of the picture as propaganda for the various war chest funds. King Baggott and Marguerite Snow, stars of Whartons' "The Eagle's Eye" serial, took part in the War Chest picture. The picture describes the work of the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus, the Salvation Army and various other fraternal organizations working at the front. All these derive their money from the War Chest Funds. Battle scenes have been reproduced and the explosion on Vimy Ridge has been reproduced before the camera's eye.

"War Makes 'Mickey' Timely"—Western

"BLOODSHED and battle are on the wane in popularity—laughs and good cheer are the needs of the hour," said an official of the Western Import Company last week in discussing that company's expectations for the Mack Sennett comedy featuring Mabel Normand.

"The war is coming closer every day," he continued. "And there is a sort of suspense and apprehension which makes the public seek relief and entertainment—not gruesome bloodshed—in the motion picture theatre.

"Changes in public sentiment come gradually and imperceptibly, but we feel that 'Mickey' has foreseen the transition and thus becomes a most timely attraction. There is no battle, there is no bloodshed in this comedy drama featuring Mabel Normand. It is not a drama of flying pastry or innocent heroines seduced, or seven buckets of blood. It aims to be the cheerful play the public is clamoring for today. 'Mickey' is just a mischievous little mountain girl whose impish pranks are extremely amusing, and whose cheery, sunny disposition is magnetic. In spite of many hardships, her sparkling personality conquers, and ends in a wistfully sweet romance.

"'Mickey' is now complete, and we feel it is an illustration of the kind of photoplays that are doing their bit cheerfully for humanity."

"Beauty in Distress" is the title of the production and it is scheduled for release July 15.

Flynn Serial Added Attraction at Poli's

WILLIAM J. FLYNN'S serial, "The Eagle's Eye," will run as an added attraction in all theatres on the Poli Circuit throughout the New England States, it was announced at Whartons, Inc., producers of this serial. The episodes will be run between the acts of stock which hold the bills on the Poli Circuit.

Mr. Poli operates vaudeville and motion picture houses throughout New England. In addition, he has theatres in Washington, D. C. and Scranton, Pa.

Writing of the result of the introduction, on Sunday, of a four days' booking on each episode of the Flynn serial, Mr. Poli said:

"The Sunday opening gives a greater scope for advertising in the Sunday papers, and, to my way of thinking, and based on personal observation, 'The Eagle's Eye,' properly exploited by the man who exhibits it, unquestionably is one of the biggest attractions on the screen, especially for a Sunday night concert. It is timely, and surely authentic, which adds greatly to its drawing power. We have been very successful in presenting 'The Eagle's Eye,' the past few weeks, by opening it on Sunday nights instead of on Mondays, as formerly."

Mr. Poli's original bookings on Chief Flynn's picture were for three days in each of his theatres. This was increased to four days as soon as it was discovered that the Sunday showing greatly increased his patronage for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

In all of the larger cities of Canada, according to Charles M. Stevens, general manager of Superfeatures, Ltd., Chief Flynn's serial has created and held a big interest. In many instances, according to Mr. Stevens, exhibitors who book daily change programs, are showing "The Eagle's Eye" for two and three days, and playing to capacity.

Webster Gets Opinion of All Concerned

HARRY McRAE WEBSTER, who completed recently his first independent production, "Reclaimed," announces that he is more than satisfied with the reception given his picture by the trade and press. With the opinions of the critics given, Mr. Webster decided that it would be a good idea for the members of the cast, the author, property men and photographer and, last but not least, himself, to go on record as having given their opinion of "Reclaimed."

Richard Field Carroll, the author of "Reclaimed," said when asked his opinion, "The direction of Mr. Webster could not be improved upon."

Niles Welch's opinion was a glowing tribute to the work of Mabel Juliene Scott and Miss Scott praised his work. Mr. Welch and Miss Scott are co-starred in this production. Anders Randolf, Fred W. Peters, Mabel Wright, Warren Cook, Sidney Bracy and Bobbie Connelly—all passed the buck to the next one.

Harry Forbes, cameraman, gave all the credit to the property man. All praised Harry McRae Webster's work in the highest terms.

Mr. Webster and Mr. Carroll are working, now, on the scenario for the second production which will be commenced within the next few weeks. The exploitation and sales have been placed in the hands of Chester Beecroft.

Minnesota Exhibitor Likes United Plans

CONCERNING the co-operative spirit shown by the members of the United Picture Theatres, in its relation to the exhibitors, Alton Crosby, owner of the Wilmar Opera House, Wilmar, Minn., writes to a fellow exhibitor in Minnesota. J. E. Schwartzbine, district manager for United with headquarters in Minneapolis, forwarded the letter to the home office. The letter reads:

"I believe we old exhibitors at least realize that we are up against one proposition that we've got to overcome or get around if we are to get fair return for money invested or our labor and whatever talent we may have, and that is the excessive cost of the film we use.

"The plan of the United seems to offer relief from the above, and will if the company is honestly and capably managed. As to that, they certainly have some high-grade men at the head of it,—notably Mr. Berst. I certainly want to see you in on this, and hope you will look into it."

Wells and Goldstein Join Sherry Service

The latest to join William L. Sherry in his new distributing organization, the William L. Sherry Service, are E. H. Wells, formerly of Triangle, and Jack Goldstein, at one time with Paramount and more recently with the United Theatres of America. Mr. Goldstein will manage one of the Sherry exchanges, and Mr. Wells will be in charge of the exchange at Detroit. P. H. Smith, now with Triangle, will join the Sherry organization as general salesman for New York City.

Exchanges of the new service have been opened in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and Kansas City. Within a week or two Mr. Sherry expects to have offices fully equipped in about fifteen cities. His general manager, N. J. Sennott, and his general sales manager, Daniel J. Savage, are visiting the principal distributing points of the country and opening up exchanges.

Mr. Sherry announces that the first release will be the Keeney picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," starring Catherine Calvert.

Sherman's Picture Being Cut and Edited

Harry Sherman, president and general manager of the Sherman Productions, Inc., recently organized, announces that the first independent production under this banner, "The Light of the Western Stars," featuring Dustin Farnum, is now being cut and edited by Charles Swickard and himself. The production will be shown to the trade within the next wek, it is announced.

Dustin Farnum, the star of this production, writes that he has received an invitation from the Chamber of Commerce, Nome, Alaska, to establish a studio there. As an incentive, the Chamber of Commerce writes he will have six months of sunlight.

I. W. Keerl, secretary of Sherman Productions, says that Mr. Sherman's picture, is a knock-out and sure to go over big, which opinion has been expressed also in other quarters.

Topics Meet with Success

A. E. Siegel, who originated the idea of the "human voice talking picture," has come to the front again, this time with a collection of Snappy and Punch paragraphs selected from the Literary Digest and snapped by the camera. The Topic Slide and Film Company, of which Mr. Siegel is the head, are issuing these novelty subjects, the first of which have, it is said, met with approval by audiences at the Strand theatre where the first numbers of these have been run.

It has not been decided as to the method of distribution. The offices of the company are in the Times Building.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

ARE THE WOMEN IN YOUR COMMUNITY HELPING?

Splendid work in helping the exhibitor as well as in encouraging and fostering an interest in good pictures has been done by the Cinema Club of Cleveland, an association of women with this one general aim in view. In response to queries put to it, the club formulated a plan, quoted in full by the Affiliated Committees for Better Films in its current Bulletin. We give extracts from it herewith:

"Never mention for any purpose a film you do not desire to encourage. Say anything you like about the films you are willing to recommend.

"Make it clear to the exhibitor that you desire only the best interests of the pictures unless you are prepared to give him GOOD advertising support.

"To advertise the recommended films use library, club, church, and high school bulletins, talk freely, use any other method available."

The women of Cleveland have shown themselves essentially practical, public-spirited, intelligent, and helpful. Perhaps the women of your town are ready to do their part if you show yourself ready to do yours. Have you tried it?

TRENCHANT REMARKS FROM HUDSON MAXIM

For strongly held and emphatically expressed opinions on the task that confronts America in the world crisis, commend us to Hudson Maxim, who figures prominently and picturesquely in the Animated Interview of the current "Universal Screen Magazine."

"German-paid pacifism has delivered us to our enemies—naked and unarmed!"

"Germany is working 24 hours a day to whip us! What are you doing to help whip her?"

These are a few of the forceful statements delivered by Mr. Maxim, backed in emphasis by his sturdy figure, strong features, and keen black eyes. It is one of the best interviews the "Screen Magazine" has yet shown.

In partial answer to Mr. Maxim, there are pictures of the making of machine guns, those weapons which in the hands of Pershing's men are to-day giving good account of themselves.

In addition to the clay cartoons of Willie Hopkins, there is a pleasant comedy element in the performance of a band of trained roosters, who, according to Editor Culbertson, are releasing able-bodied patriots now engaged in vaudeville for service "over there." "Looping the loop" and jumping through hoops are some of the feats performed by these unconscious comedians.

Another addition to the food supply is seen in the Florida crawfish, displayed in several close-ups in all his spiny elegance.

A SCENIC OF THE FIRST RANK

"Pines Up and Palms Down," the title of the latest Outing-Chester scenic, cleverly indicates that it is a study in contrasts, but barely hints at the great beauty of the picture and the interesting episodes that give it real dramatic value.

The first half is novel in that it pictures life among the Seminole Indians of the Florida Everglades. For all their elaborate costumes, these people preserve many of their primitive customs, that are interesting as well as picturesque. Prospective campers may take a hint in the odd but apparently efficient manner in which they build their fire, the logs radiating from a centre and burning for days with no care other than an occasional push. Glimpses of the densely bordered streams that wind slowly through the Everglades, traversed by the Indians in canoes, are very lovely.

In the second part of the reel the scene changes to the Canadian woods and the haunts of the moose. Here swift rapids make dangerous going or necessitate the arduous portage. But the reward of labor comes when first the mother moose and her baby and then the magnificent antlered bull fall victims to the camera.

The unusual subject matter of these films, the careful editing, and the clever and sympathetic titling give this scenic series a unique place in screen entertainment.

ANOTHER REASON FOR PATRIOTIC PRIDE

The Bray Studios may well congratulate themselves on turning out an exceptionally clever and entertaining Pictograph for the week of June 2. For one thing, there is something entirely new in cartoons by Max Fleischer, who by some exceedingly clever and painstaking animation plus trick-work produces a wonderful little figure that moves with the sinuous grace of an Oriental dancer.

Professor de Kerlor continues his Character Analysis, taking as his illustrations the faces of five men holding the world's attention at this crisis—President Wilson, Foch, Haig and Pershing. Contrasting with these fine types of civilized manhood is the brutal countenance of Hindenburg. It is a very interesting picture, and is sure of a round of hearty applause.

The fine instruments that are used by the Weather Man in his perch on the top of 17 Battery Place receive intimate attention. The probability of rain is indicated by a hair which as it absorbs water from an increasingly damp atmosphere swells, in doing so moves a registering arm. The meaning of a "three-inch rainfall" becomes clearer when one sees in actual operation the delicately balanced container which empties as soon as it is filled, and, in so doing, makes its own record.

MEXICAN PICTURES SHOWN TO TRADE

A second view of the fine series of pictures on Mexican life of to-day now ready for release by the Educational Films Corporation confirms the excellent impression made on us when we first saw them. Geo. D. Wright, who is responsible for the series, was for twenty years a resident of Mexico City, where he was associated with his brother, a large manufacturer of steel and railway cars. Unlike many who have gone to Mexico for the sole purpose of exploiting the country, Mr. Wright grew up there, shared the life of Mexicans and won their confidence and respect.

The pictures are designed to show not only the superficial features of Mexico such as any tourist may see, but the intimate social and industrial life of the country. Credit should be given to Wallace Thompson, formerly of Paramount, who edited the series, and to W. Gobbett, whose fine photography adds greatly to the value of the pictures.

BRITISH DESTROYERS IN ACTION

The fifth number of "Britain's Bulwarks" showed the destroyers and men that took part in the raid on Zeebrugge in 1917. The sixth number takes up the story of the raid itself, and shows the destroyers and drifters maneuvering, and the latter laying mines under a thick smoke cloud sent out by the destroyers. A German aeroplane is seen scouting overhead, and the next moment a shell is seen bursting at the stern of one of the destroyers, happily not near enough to do any damage.

There are interesting scenes on the boats themselves, showing the officers keenly watching the effect of the fleet's work, and plenty of swift sailing as the camera points out over a bow or stern on the quick run back to Dunkirk.

PHILADELPHIA SENDS MESSENGER TO FLUSHING FOR GAUMONT REELS

Philadelphia may be slow, but Philadelphia is not taking any chances on other people's slowness when it comes to getting what she wants.

It happens that the Quaker City has developed a gratifying appetite for the two Gaumont weeklies, the News and the Graphic. To insure itself against possible delay in transit, the exchange handling the films sends a man over from Philadelphia twice a week to call at the Flushing headquarters of the Gaumont Company and bring back with him the requisite number of reels. It's a bit more expensive than parcels post, but it guarantees the exhibitor who has wisely set aside a certain day for the news weekly against having to disappoint his patrons.

The Gaumont Company expects in the near future to make an interesting announcement with reference to its arrangements for serving New York City. Though the Gaumont weeklies are being shipped in steadily increasing numbers all over the country, the theatres of New York, except those controlled by Mr. Rothapfel, have not as yet been able to obtain this fine news weekly. It should be welcomed by those exhibitors who wish to exercise independence in choosing this part of their program.

SCIENCE AND SCENERY

The second of the Educational Film Company's Mexican series makes one almost believe that, like waterfalls and surf, Mexico was invented for screen purposes. Certainly, the tremendous engineering project, to which the reel is devoted could have no finer scenic setting.

Lying a short distance from Mexico City and several thousand feet above it is Necaxa, which Mr. Wright, who takes the picture, rightly calls the "power house of Mexico." Here is a great dam, one of the largest in the world and a subject of study by Colonel Goethals before he tackled the Panama job, and a reservoir whose waters supply the power to the dynamos housed two thousand feet below. Back of Necaxa rises a lofty range of mountains acting as a natural watershed.

Mr. Wright takes us in the car that descends from the reservoir level to the power house, he gives us both impressive panoramas of the beautiful mountains, and close-ups of the dynamos. Closing the reel is a picture of Mexico at night, blazing with the lights whose source lies in the distant reservoir.

Vitagraph News Bits

Earle Williams drove to Camp Kearny last week-end to view Company "A" of the 159th Regiment. Company "A" adopted Mr. Williams as its big brother for the reason that 80 per cent of the boys in this company are from Oakland, which also is Mr. Williams' home town. The Vitagraph star fulfilled his threat of loading his car full of cigarettes and autographed photographs before leaving for the camp. His visit was a pleasant one and Mr. Williams is now ready to back Company "A" against all comers.

Montgomery, Rock and Howe, Big V. Comedy team had the pleasure of seeing one of their recent comedies, "Sneakers and Snoozers," contribute in drawing power to the large attendances at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre in Los Angeles during the past week. Sid Grauman, owner of the newest Los Angeles picture house, states that this Biv V. Company was a winner, that his patrons particularly seemed to enjoy it themselves and added: "I intend to run these Vitagraph comedies often."

Bill Duncan is having a hard time being recognized around the studio these days, as he is to be seen dressed-up in "store clothes" instead of overalls or western riding clothes, in which he is a familiar figure to all who come to the Vitagraph studio. The particular episode of the western serial he is working on at present demands dress-up clothes, rather than those of the open range. Hence, Mr. Duncan's disguise.

Paralta Paragraphs

Illness of Raymond B. West, who is suffering from a nervous breakdown and is under the care of special physicians at a local sanitarium, the production work of the next Kerrigan picture has been placed in charge of Ernest Warde. The cast for this Paralta play, titled "Toby," and adapted by Tom Geraghty from the novel o fthe same name by Credo Harris will include besides Jack Kerrigan and Lois Wilson, Art Allardt, Jesse Herring, Miss Jimmie Weil, Cliff Alexander, Thomas Guise, Beatrice Joy and others. "Toby" is a melodrama based upon a now obsolete law of Kentucky which provided that if a man was proven a vagabond he could be sold into servitude for a period of one year by the state. In "Toby" Kerrigan takes such a role and he is bought in by the daughter of a southern household. The picture will have the atmosphere of the country known as the meeting place of the bluegrass territory and the mountains.

No name has been selected for the Louise Glaum society drama which gives her an emotional role. The picture is being made by Wallace Worsley from the Denison Cliff original scenario. The play has a very big cast including as it does practically all of the stock members

Live Triangle Items

The Triangle Film Corporation's producing plant at Culver City has been completely re-organized following the withdrawal of H. O. Davis, who served as general manager, and who is now in the east, which occurred several days ago. The only definite information given out at the studio at Culver City is included in the following statement issued by the publicity department now in charge of Al. St. John upon authority of O. A. Sellers, assistant to President Harry E. Aitken. The statement is as follows:

"With the taking over of the managerial reins at the Triangle Culver City studio by H. E. Aitkin, president of the Triangle Film Corporation on the first of June, many sweeping changes have been put into effect in both the scenario department and in the method of casting pictures. O. A. Sellers, formerly production manager, has been elevated to the post of assistant to the president. A new director of high repute has been added to the Triangle directorial forces.

"Charles F. Stocking, author of several well known novels and a former newspaper man, is in charge of the Triangle scenario department, and with him as associate editor is another new comer to the Triangle, but not a stranger in the scenario game—Dr. Daniel Goodman, author and scenario expert, who has been affiliated with both D. W. Griffith and Harry E. Aitken. Two well-known novels, 'Hagar Riviley' and 'Unclothed,' are both from Dr. Goodman's pen.

"With the installation of a new head, Mr. Aitken has left Culver City for New York, and Mr. Sellers is in charge of the operation.

"'So far as is known we will continue to make program pictures,' says Mr. Sellers, 'while our new policy may also include the manufacture of some special Super Pictures.

"'Christy Cabanne is a director of long experience, and has been engaged by Triangle, and is now rehearsing a large cast on a special picture which will probably be an eight reeler. This is to be a film adaptation of the novel "The Mayor of Filbert," written by the two heads of the Triangle scenario department.

"'Working with Cabanne are such well-known players as Ralph Lewis, Barney Sherry, Jack Curtis, George Pearce, Wilbur Higby and Louise Lester. Both Lewis and Miss Lester have been engaged for this picture, they being the first players secured under the Triangle new policy of casting by the picture.'"

Universal Newsettes

Several additions are to be made to the directorial staff at Universal City according to unofficial information secured at this film plant. The list of new directors will include, according to the information, Colin Campbell, who for a number of years has been with Selig; William Walbert, who until recently directed Nell Shipman for Vitagraph; and Jack Dillon, a former Keystone and Triangle director. Dillon's last work for Triangle was in the direction of Olive Thomas.

There will also be a number of new players engaged, according to unofficial information. Douglas Gerrard is to begin shortly on the production of a story now being prepared for the screen by F. McGrew Willis titled, "Should a Woman Tell," and in this Fritzi Brunette, seen in a number of Selig Big Special Productions, and who has been with the Selig organization for more than two years, will take a very important part. Charles Gerrard is scheduled to be the heavy, and Herbert Standing will probably take an important character role.

"THE YELLOW DOG"

A new subject put in production this week, under the direction of Joseph deGrasse is at present known as "Joan of the Apaches." DeGrasse has just completed the filming of "The Spawn," and Harvey Gates is responsible for the continuity of the new subject he is making. Priscilla Dean has been selected to take the part of Joan, a more or less "wild woman" of Paris, who by the picture of Joan of Arc is inspired to do her best for her native land. J. Edward Cecil will probably be the leading man of this picture.

The William McLeod Raine story, "The Texas Ranger," is to serve as the next vehicle for Harry Carey, and will be made under the direction of Jack Ford. This company is just completing the western "Hell's Neck," and continuity for the new picture is being written by Eugene B. Lewis.

Here and There

Charles Chaplin is at work again, which in itself is an important item of news, especially to the members of the F. N. E. A. Not that it is marvelous that Charley should return to work after getting the sum that he did for his first picture, "The Dog's Life," but because the fact that he is at work sets aside the dope of all the wise ones who prophesied on the future of the motion picture industry. Many said Charley would not be shooting again until Fall, their claim being he did not want to get too many pictures on the market and thereby reduce the value of his releases.

Whatever Chaplin is making is a mystery to all concerned except himself. Edna Purviance came back this week from New York, and of course will be the lead. Henry Bergman and Tom Wilson are also scheduled for appearance in many scenes. Working with this quartette will be a dozen children, two to ten years old.

The Selig studio, located at the Selig Zoo, has been temporarily closed following the completion of the filming of "The Hoosier Romance," by Colin Campbell, which will offer Coleen Moore, Harry McCoy, Frank Hayes and others. The Zoo is to be maintained, and the entire plant will remain under the management of James L. McGee.

Thomas Nash, who has served as production manager, has accepted a position as assistant to Production Manager Henry McRae at Universal City, and takes up his new duties on June 3rd. Mr. Nash is a pioneer of production work on the coast, and was affiliated with the Selig Company for the past eight or nine years with the exception of a short time that he was engaged in conducting a company which he organized.

Just what the intentions of the Selig organization are has not been made known, but arrangements have been made whereby Colin Campbell, the only director with the Selig Company, is to produce one or more pictures for the Universal. Mr. Campbell is to begin work at Universal City at once on the filming of a propaganda picture adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story, "The Yellow Dog."

Gloria Swanson, Presented by Triangle in "Station Content"

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

Everyone about the Lasky studio is busy in the preparation of what promises to be the most active production Summer at this plant. The coming week Fred Stone, Ethel Clayton and another star, at present known as Miss Mystery, will arrive in Hollywood to begin work in as many productions. Stories are now in preparation for other Lasky players, and it is anticipated that all producing companies now between pictures will begin work at one time.

The busy season at the Lasky studio will be ushered in by a dance and carnival given by members of the stock company and the Lasky Home Guards to raise funds for the entertainment and comfort of former members of this studio's organization who are now serving in the war. The new arrivals at the studio will be the guests of honor at this function, and plans are being made for the entertainment of several thousand and the affair promises to be one of the biggest photoplay entertainments given in Los Angeles, inasmuch as practically all of the stars from various west coast studios have accepted invitations to be present. ent.

Vivian Martin with J. Parke Jones as leading man, has finished the filming of "Her Country First," and is leaving in a day or two for Banff, Canada, where she will spend a vacation at Lake Louise.

Constance Talmadge, who recently completed work in "Sauce for the Goose," is now under the direction of Walter Edwards working in scenes for "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots."

Another production now being filmed is known as "The Source." George Melford is directing and the company, which includes Wallace Reid, Ann Little, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, James Cruse, Noah Barry, Charles West and others, are spending a week in a lumber camp north of Los Angeles.

Fox Studio Doings

It has been many months since there was so much production activity at the Fox Studoes as at the present time, the number of companies working on productions there being five.

Director General J. Gordon Edwards is on a new Theda Bara subject, the title of which is "The Message of the Lilies." The story opens with Miss Bara appearing in the role of a trained nurse and later she is seen as a woman of the world who is regenerated by the influence of love.

The photoplay at present titled "Kultur," and based on incidents that led up to the great world war, has been written for the Fox organization by J. Grubb Alexander, and is now in production under the direction of E. J. LeSaint. Gladys Brockwell is starred in this, and has a big supporting company that includes Georgie Woodthorpe, William Scott, Willard Louise, Charles Clary, Nigel de Brullier, William Burress and Alfred Fremont.

Robert Thornby, formerly director for Pathe in the making of Bessie Love pictures, is now with the Fox organization and is in charge of the company headed by Jewel Carmen filming an adaptation from the Gouverneur Morris story, "You Can't Get Away With It." Miss Carmen takes the part of Jill Cummings in this story and the role is said to give her opportunity for the display of a number of very beautiful gowns.

Lynn F. Reynolds is now at work on the filming of "Fame and Fortune" with Tom Mix and company of western players. Mr. Reynolds wll introduce in this another series of exquisitely beautiful exterior shots which will give the subject an added feature. For more than a year he has prided himself on always being able to introduce something new in photographic effects in every subject. The continuity was prepared by Mr. Reynolds.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

EXHIBITORS

THESE short items are just the sort that your local photoplay editor wants. They are newsy—not press bunk. Used rightly they will create real personal interest in the players appearing at your house. Clip those referring to players on your program, turn them over to your photoplay editor for use from time to time, then there will be double value in your later publicity on particular pictures in which these players appear.

Dorothy Dalton, whose name will ever be linked with the Canadian Northwest, has arrived in New York and is stopping at the Ritz Carlton. Judging by the society pictures in which she has recently been appearing, the matter of clothes will take up a part of her time.

Betty Howe, whose work with Elsie Ferguson in "The Lie" won her much favor, despite the lack of sympathy in the part she played, is starting on a serial with a new film company. Leah Baird and Sheldon Lewis are also in the serial, which is tentatively called "Mysteria" and which is being filmed at the Crystal Studios. In the first episode Miss Howe has a few simple little things to do like riding a runaway horse, driving a racer, and jumping into the East River.

Mae Marsh, via Goldwyn publicity, expresses a most naive surprise at the upsetting by youthful motion picture stars of that philosophy of life which teaches that success can be obtained only through infinite sacrifice. She readily admits that a star's success entails no huge sacrifice but merely conscientious work. All of which decidedly rings true to one who knows Miss Marsh and her unspoiled charm.

Jere Austin, leading man for Mae Marsh in "All Woman," was the person in front of the Public Library during the Red Cross drive who helped a little girl auction off for the sum of $61 a silver ring sent her by a brother in France.

A golden canary being pursued from roof to roof by Stuart Holmes, "heavy," of "When Men Betray," is the theme of a publicity story recently sent around. The pursuit led through an open window into the bedroom of two women. Sounds as if the P. A. aspired to be a Keystone writer.

Fay Holderness is recovering from the emotional strain of appearing in "Hearts of the World" by joining the Billy West King-Bee Company. She is getting into a patriotic place, as Charles Parrott, director, is co-author of "Sammy's Saving Souvenirs for the Girl He Left Behind," and Billy West is putting into practice his new idea of fining everyone who commits a cuss word a war stamp or a Liberty Bond, depending upon financial rating.

Another proof of the way Alice Brady goes in for things. For a scene in the "Ordeal of Rosetta" she practiced hours on her secretary's typewriter in order to portray the character of a typist who succeeds where everyone else failed in taking the dictation of a temperamental novelist.

Playing the part of a nun in "To Hell With the Kaiser" and of a vampire in "The House of Gold" at the same time is Maude Hill's most recent accomplishment at the Metro Studio. So absolutely different was her appearance that even one of the old timers who worked opposite her in her role of Mother Superior did not recognize her as she came over to speak to him in her vampire costume.

J. Searle Dawley had his troubles filming Eliza crossing the Delaware for "Uncle Tom's Cabin." A river in Maine was chosen for location as it was just breaking up, but the ice proved most elusive. When Dawley was ready to shoot the ice was not ready and when the ice was ready the sky was too cloudy. For hours the dogs strained at their leashes and Eliza clutched the child, until finally sun and ice got together and the scene was shot.

After a winter on the legitimate stage Olive Tell will be back to the screen in "To Hell With the Kaiser." In the costume of an aviatrix she is most attractive and in addition makes some spectacular flights in a real aeroplane.

Beverly Bayne will give her feminine followers a treat in her new picture, "Both Members," when she appears in an evening wrap made entirely of tulle which she just received from Paris.

Tom Moore has announced to the world in general that there is nothing in the rumor that he has a favorite feminine star at Goldwyn. He has played opposite all three of them with equal enjoyment, etc., etc., etc.

The Dolly Sisters apparently prefer the stage to the studio in the summer time as they are appearing atop the Century theatre now as "The Bing Girls of Broadway."

The announcement of Conway Tearle's marriage to Adele Rowland of musical comedy fame has just been made. He is now appearing with Anita Stewart in "The Mind the Paint Girl."

"The Soap Girl" Is a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Starring Gladys Leslie

Earl Carroll, husband of the delightful little Mlle. Marcelle whose screen career in "The Fall of the Romanoffs" was only too brief, has won a lieutenant's commission in the U. S. Flying Corps at Camp Hicks, Fort Worth, Texas.

Gertrude Berkeley has returned to New York after spending the winter near her son who was at a southern training camp, but who has now sailed for France. Miss Berkeley's splendid work in "War Brides" makes us look forward to seeing her in "Just Sylvia," a World picture, which will be her first screen appearance after her return.

George Irving, whose most recent production is "To Hell With the Kaiser," is now directing Mabel Normand in a new Goldwyn picture.

"The Shooting of Dan McGraw," a Robert Service poem, will be seen on the screen in the near future. Metro produced it with Edmund Breese as the star.

John Sunderland, who plays the lead opposite Olive Tell in "To Hell With the Kaiser," does some splendid flying in this picture for which he was fully qualified by his own actual experience as a Belgian officer at the front.

Baby Ivy Ward and Lawrence Grant created quite a sensation walking down Broadway last week. The tiny little girl was in the costume of a Red Cross Nurse while the big man was in the uniform of the title part of "To Hell With the Kaiser." Baby Ivy announced to everyone that she had captured the Kaiser and demanded a reward for the Red Cross. Needless to say, she got it.

In Maurice Tourneur's "Sporting Life" the cameraman, John Vanderbroeck, had to call in four other cameramen in order to take a certain scene. This is only one of a great number of stunts that have been used to make this picture the splendid production that is expected.

Lawrence Grant, the most recent of film kaisers, is an Englishman whose likeness to the Kaiser has always been so apparent that before the war he was offered the role in a play to be produced in Germany. Mr. Grant is a traveler and lecturer who is appearing in pictures for the first time in "To Hell With the Kaiser."

It is most fitting and proper that May Allison takes the part of a southern girl in "A Successful Adventure," the third Metro picture in which she stars alone, as she was born and brought up on a southern plantation.

Harry Millarde has finished directing another June Caprice picture. Though he has been working most successfully with Miss Caprice for over a year, he has used more contrasting scenes in this picture, perhaps, than in any of the others. From the turbulence of a court room where a murder trial is in progress to the quiet of a convent where calm nuns glide through quiet corridors is an example of the change of tempo in the picture.

The picture world is filled with deep regret at the death of Benjamin Chapin, hero, author, and producer of the Lincoln Cycle. He had the satisfaction at least of seeing the consummation of his life work before he died.

One of his proteges, Charles Jackson, who played so touchingly the part of the boy Lincoln in the first few reels of the Lincoln Cycle, has again appeared on Broadway, this time in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses." Again he "weeps at a bedside" so realistically that the audience chokes with one accord.

Director Dell Henderson has the pleasant task of umpiring four fights a minute in the third and fourth reels of "Hitting the Trail." He handles a notable cast in this picture. Headed by Evelyn Greely and Carlyle Blackwell, it includes Joseph Smiley as factory owner, Mabel Banyea just back from a French war hospital and Belle Seacomb as factory forewoman.

Montague Love is returning to the World Studio after a long and serious illness, in a screen version of "To Him that Hath," that famous "best seller" by Le Roy Scott. The direction will be in the hands of Oscar Apfel, whose first World picture, "The Interloper," won such enthusiastic approval.

We have a new Madge Kennedy in a picture under the working title "Shackles," one whose hair is no longer coiled in smooth bands about her head but is piled high on top in a beguiling fluffiness.

"Shackled"

(Paralta—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"SHACKLED," in which Louise Glaum is featured, is a most skilful presentation of the drama in which the central character is the quite familiar figure of the woman with the past. Miss Glaum and the four players who appear in principal support do exceptional work, J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton have made a convincing and direct scenario from the story provided by Lawrence McCloskey, and Reginald Barker has treated it with skill in the production. Seldom has such a high level been attained in these three departments—acting, construction and directing—and the results are indeed praiseworthy. The story possesses its full quota of high lights and the suspense is excellently maintained from first to last.

Miss Glaum plays the title role of the woman whose shackles are broken through her own love and sacrifice with that sincerity and depth of feeling always to be marked in her work. She seems to be as thoroughly at home in the character of the woman sinned against as she is as the woman sinning. W. Lawson Butt as Thomas Danfield gives one of the most human and directly appealing performances that any actor has ever done in a part remote from the ordinary type of hero. Roberta Wilson, sister of Lois, has both beauty and talent. Her delineation of the romantic Edith Danfield, is realistic to the core and the role is by no means an easy one. Charles West as the heavy, Jack Gilbert as a young officer and Roy Laidlaw in a small part complete the cast with performances that are ever in tune.

For the type of story it offers "Shackled" is a thoroughly satisfying picture, which is, after all, all that is required. L. Guy Wilky photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lola Dexter (Louise Glaum) has given her love to Walter Cosgrove (Charles West) without question and when, his resources low, he deserts her to marry Edith Danfield (Roberta Wilson), she plans to steel herself toward all men. Posing as a widow she reaches a fashionable resort and soon meets the type of man she seeks. But when she meditates on his proposition (a trip on his yacht) she sees the folly of it. In despair she is about to leap from the rocks into the sea when Thomas Danfield (W. Lawson Butt), Edith's father, a cripple, calls to her to stop. A great friendship springs up between the two lonely souls and when Danfield returns to his city home, Lola is with him as his secretary and companion. When Edith returns from her wedding trip, Lola is astounded to recognize Cosgrove as her husband. As time goes on he reverts to his old ways, keeps late hours and usually returns from his licentious parties unsteady in the legs. Not until then does Edith realize that her love still rests with Jimmy Ashley (Jack Gilbert), a girlhood companion, now fighting in France. Danfield proposes to Lola, but thinking of her past she does not answer. On Jimmy's return with Major Duval (Roy Laidlaw), a doctor, he is heartbroken to find Edith married. It is the skill of the Major that revives Danfield's strength. He is once more able to walk. He proposes again to Lola, but she is harassed with the situation presented by Edith and Cosgrove. At length Edith can stand her plight no longer. Lola pleads with her to wait a little longer that she may set matters aright. That night when Cosgrove breaks into her room she locks the door and permits Danfield to discover him there. Danfield is shocked, specially when Cosgrove blurts out their former relations, but admires her the more when he learns from his daughter's lips the reason for her compromising herself. Cosgrove attacks Lola and in the struggle falls downstairs. He is killed. Lola leaves Danfield's house despite his pleading that she stay. She asks him to wait the space of a year and if he still loves her then to come for her.

"Stolen Orders"

(William A. Brady—Eight Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S long heralded melodrama, based on the Drury Lane production, "Sealed Orders," reveals eight reels of highly sensational action that seemed to thoroughly please those who crowded into the Park theatre to witness its initial presentation a week ago Sunday. The original play has been changed here and there to meet the demands of the camera and the time. Its locale is now the United States, and its characters Americans and German spies. But the melodrama it offers is, if anything, clearer and more thrilling than that which was enacted on the boards. The scenario shaped by Charles Whittaker, while rather laborious in the first reels, moves swiftly and with a full supply of melodramatically intense moments once the vitals of the plot have been reached.

The character of the story is its most valuable asset. The present-day picture audience is ever ready to applaud the hero if he be in uniform; to watch him breathlessly as he traces down his country's enemies. In "Stolen Orders" Carlyle Blackwell appears as the hero, Lieutenant Gaveston of the United States Navy. He fulfills all demands made on him with ease. George MacQuarrie is seen as Admiral Gaveston and Montagu Love is the American traitor who becomes a spy for the Teutonic power. June Elvidge and Kitty Gordon do the feminine honors, and Madge Evans appears in a small part in the first reel.

Harley Knowles directed. The eight reels include a number of scenes taken aboard the U. S. S. Seattle. A particularly fine view shows a full shot of a dance being held on the deck. The rest of the production is satisfactory.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Le Page (Montagu Love), an American, manages to incriminate an innocent man for a death he caused. Taking his child (Madge Evans) with him he leaves his country, to return many years later as an agent of the German government. Mrs. Gaveston (Kitty Gordon), wife of the Admiral of the American fleet, has gambled heavily. Another German spy seeing his opportunity takes her to a resort where she loses large amounts and is obliged to borrow from him. He tells her that she may secure a loan from Le Page the next day at a certain office. Mrs. Gaveston meets Le Page who poses as a member of an international peace society. He informs her that if she will but secure certain sealed orders from her husband, Admiral Gaveston (George MacQuarrie), the United States will be saved from the war and he offers to pay the amount of her losses for them. Mrs. Gaveston agrees to these terms. While an entertainment goes on aboard her husband's ship she manages to secure the orders. The loss is discovered. Lieutenant Gaveston (Carlyle Blackwell), the Admiral's brother, refuses to allow the officers to search him as he has on his person a letter written to Mrs. Gaveston by the German agent. It contains an insult which the Admiral might well misinterpret. Young Gaveston jumps overboard but is captured later. His story is credited by other officers and he is permitted to go free provided he bend all efforts to recover the orders. Mrs. Gaveston has, in the meantime, given them to Le Page who, with his daughter Ruth (June Elvidge), prepares for escape. Ruth is loathe to go, being in love with Lieutenant Gaveston and out of sympathy with her father. However, she accompanies him to the secret hangar of a dirigible. Another passenger in the air craft, who Le Page thinks is the man who years before served the term that Le Page himself should have served. The dirigible rises. Lieutenant Gaveston discovers who has the papers by forcing a confession from the other German agent. He pursues in an airplane. The ex-convict makes himself known to Le Page and high in the air they fight. At length they both fall from the craft and are drowned. Coast artillery is trained on the dirigible and Ruth is obliged to arm herself with a parachute and jump. She is picked up by Gaveston to whom she returns the orders. With their return Admiral Gaveston is reinstated.

"More Trouble"

(Pathe—Five Reels)

A FARCE-COMEDY with the unexpected coming in the climax and a finished bit of work by Frank Keenan, as the chief farce-comedy maker, reflects credit on "More Trouble," produced under the direction of Ernest G. Warde from the scenario furnished by Quida Bergere who whipped Edgar Franklin's story into ideal shape for reproduction on the screen. Director Warde can handle Mr. Keenan and Mr. Keenan can handle himself—result—a finished piece of work, smooth running action, snappy comedy and cleverly written sub-titles.

Mr. Keenan can express a world of comedy in his face. He works before the camera like the veteran he is, and moves through the various scenes with an unconsciousness that smacks of the regular order of things and not of the average "actor's" stuff. Without Mr. Keenan's ingenious ability to provide a laugh from an insignificant situation, the part of Lemuel Deering would have moved through the reels of this production with nothing more than passing notice. But the star has made a "mountain out of a mole hole," and raised the smaller moments to the pedestal reserved for the higher lights. He [illegible]ne. Mr. Keenan can make a dr[illegible] sitting down or raising a glass of liquor to his lips and at the same time inject a bit of humour. His slightest move calls for attention and registers before the camera something to think about. He puts "More Trouble" "over the top" and gets you.

John Gilbert who has the juvenile role comes in for a good bit of praise. He works with Mr. Keenan with assurance and fills the role of the son to perfection. Roberta Wilson in the ingenue role has little to do. She does this little well. Joseph J. Dowling does his usual good work in a character role. Ida Lewis makes up a bit too old for the part of the mother. Jack Rollins, Helen Dunbar, Al Ray, Clyde Benson and Aggie Herring, have minor roles. The photography, heightened by good lighting, is par excellence. "More Trouble" bats three-hundred in every scene.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lemuel Deering (Frank Keenan), a wealthy iron manufacturer, has unbounded success with his business until his son, Harvey (John Gilbert), gets his A. B. degree from college. Then dad's troubles commence. His father discovers to his amazement that his son neither smokes or drinks and is a "model" young man. He decides to make him a partner in the business. Papers are signed, and the son takes his place on the opposite side of the desk to the father.

Then the trouble starts. Daily strangers arrive at the Deering home with unpaid bills charged to the account of Harvey Deering—a couple hundred for tobacco and cigars, a few more for liquor, a moderate size bill (a few hundred) from the taxi company, and so on and so forth, until one day the clerk of a bank presents a note for a few thousands which has fallen due. All these placed to the credit of "model" Harvey. The blow is too much, and dad finds that he has to raise money to keep his business going or go into bankruptcy. He fails; a rival, Cecil Morrowton (Joseph J. Dowling), arrives to take over the property. Morrowton has a son, Harold (Jack Rollins), who was a college chum of Harvey. Harvey is landed in jail on a trumped-up charge. Harold rescues Harvey from jail, and the two go to see Harvey's father. Harold confesses that he is the one who signed all the "markers" and the note—not Harvey. Then Father Deering suggests to Morrowton that he might lend him a sufficient amount of money to put his business back where it belonged. Morrowton thinks it would be a good move. Deering turns to the two young men, and suggests that they go to the factory, pick out their wheelbarrows and do some real work.

"Her Final Reckoning"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

PERHAPS it is because "Her Final Reckoning" is an adaptation of a play by Jules Claretie, a distinguished member of the French world of letters and art, that it strikes the writer as the best vehicle Pauline Frederick has had this year—in fact it may safely be said that it is because of this fact. The name of Claretie is probably quite unknown to the exhibitor, but it remains that his handling of the story of the woman whose past bothers her in a sincere love affair has resulted in conventional material taking on a refreshing and stimulating aspect, while at the same time Miss Frederick is provided with a role in which her talents, beauty and personality fit with remarkable ease. Credit is due also to Charles Whittaker, the scenarioist, whose work seems to have retained all the force and directness of development which must have been present in the original.

The drama moves forward with an irresistible power. The various episodes in the career of Marsa are developed with skill and the whole moves forward with a sustaining force that never allows the attention to wander. Miss Frederick is allowed full play in the chief feminine role and renders a brilliant performance in her many big scenes. She is given valuable assistance by John Miltern as Prince Zilah and by Robert Cain as Count Menko. The realism of the atmosphere instilled in the production by Director Emile Chautard is to be noted. The fact that practically all the scenes transpire in Paris has given Mr. Chautard the opportunity to show his acquaintance with the locale as well as his dramatic sense. He has succeeded beyond the shadow of a doubt in both respects. He has put the finishing touch on "Her Final Reckoning" that makes it the exceptional picture it is.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marsa (Pauline Frederick), half gypsy, half Hungarian, a woman of great beauty and unlimited wealth resides in Paris. She meets Prince Zilah (John Miltern), a Hungarian, and in a short time the two become engaged. Marsa mentions something about confessing her past, but the Prince believing that she will only tell him of the unfortunate love affair of her mother silences her. Count Menko (Robert Cain), who had previously taken advantage of Marsa's romantic temperament one night in Italy pleads with her not to marry the Prince, but she ignores his request. Therefore, on the night of her wedding, he sends her letters to the Prince. Marsa pleads with him not to open them, and the Prince agrees not to providing she will swear that they do not concern her. This she cannot do. On learning their contents, the Prince leaves Marsa in a rage. His life-long friend, Count Varhely (Warren Cooke), takes up Prince Zilah's quarrel with Count Menko, and in Italy kills him in a duel. The Prince after remaining away from his wife for some time cannot keep himself from seeing her. Marsa insists that she will be content with his forgiveness and retire for the rest of her life to a convent. Realizing that she loves him to the extent of being willing to make this sacrifice, the Prince takes her to him as his wife.

"The Model's Confession"

(Universal—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

IDA MAY PARK, one of our best women directors, and one who has demonstrated by her past performances that she can put on a production and do it right, faced the almost impossible when she took the working script, prepared by herself, and started Ruby M. Ayres' "The Model's Confession." With just about sufficient material to stand up under an average one-reeler, Director Park was called upon to produce a five-reel picture. Added to this handicap it seemed that Miss MacLaren did not "feel" her part.

The action lags from first to last—the result of a story that contains very little dramatic or plot material. Convenient coincidents serve as the connecting links between the action of many of the episodes. An example of this is the incident which serves as the connecting link between the meeting of Billy and Violet in front of Seldon's home. In order that he might hold conversation with her, the chauffeur was obliged to run up the entrance to Seldon's home and hand him a coat which he had left in the machine, and then to stand and talk over the weather with his master in order to give the couple more time in which to act in order that the picture might go on. This sort of action would never happen in real life in "reel" life. If the chauffeur wanted his boss to get his coat he would take it to the butler in through the kitchen door or through the entrance marked "this entrance for tradesmen." Such action as this is so apparent in its introduction to serve the purpose of prolonging the plot action and to meet the demands of a poor scenario writer, that its effect is the same as a flat chord in an otherwise perfect harmony.

The title is the most alluring thing about the picture and will, no doubt, arouse curiosity, which will be satisfied to the extent of getting the people in the theatre. The chief point of plot construction is based on the fact that Seldon does not know that Iva is his daughter. In the first reel she could have gone to him and shown him the picture of her mother and his wife and have ended the story there. And this is what ninety-nine out of every hundred human beings would have done. So that from the start there isn't a good reason for the story after the first reel.

The photography is of the excellent Universal brand and the lighting has been handled well.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Iva Seldon (Mary MacLaren) is a model for Armande, a fashionable modiste. Billy Ravensworth (Kenneth Harlan) is a frequent customer, purchasing expensive finery for Violet Challoner (Edna Earle), a vampire lady. Iva is the model who "shows off" the gowns. Billy's account is over-due and he upon request, gives Armande a check for the amount. The check is returned "no funds." Iva is then sent to Violet's home to get the finery which had not been paid for.

While she is there Bertrand Seldon (Herbert Prior) pays Violet a visit and she persuades him to give her a check for the amount of the purchases. The check is handed to Iva and she recognizes the name of her father as the maker of the check. She leaves and goes to a lawyer friend and together they form a plan to make Seldon recognize Iva as his daughter. Meanwhile Violet breaks with Billy. Iva purchases some stylish clothes and makes a bargain with Billy to pose as his fiancee so that she might get into society. She meets Seldon on his level and he becomes infatuated with her. Billy is made jealous as he too, has fallen in love with her. Iva and Seldon go for a motor ride and Seldon is killed in a wreck that results. The mystery is explained and Iva and Billy are married.

"The Claw"

(Select—Five Reels)

THIS adaptation from a novel by Cynthia Stockley appears to have been stripped to its skeleton of physical action. So a number of inconsistencies are disclosed while the bare plot outline fails to deeply stir the emotions. The bid for suspense comes when Stair lies to Mary Saurin, telling her that Kinsella, the man she loves, has been killed fighting African natives. So after a time Mary marries Stair, only to discover on her wedding night that he has deceived her. Then Stair shows a change of character and to make amends gives his life to rescue Kinsella from the natives who hold him prisoner. But this bid for suspense is weak and falls far short of the mark. The spectator sits only to await the end not to be stirred.

This lack of sustaining power seems due to the fact that the story, as previously stated, was reduced to its mere skeleton. There is no opportunity for any convincing development of character. Stair's change of heart is so sudden that it conveys nothing but an easy means to attain the end. Also, we for one would like to know, why Kinsella did wear earrings. We are constantly reminded that he does and Mary wonders why too. Perhaps she found out. And perhaps also she discovered why Kinsella was always referred to as a very dangerous man for a young woman to become acquainted with. He always appears the hero while in action.

The production given "The Claw," by Robert Vignola is pretentious but rather poor as to atmosphere and detail. The African scenes always bring to mind the hills of California and Kinsella's miraculous loss of his beard after being rescued is not explained by barber or razor. The subtitles in a number of instances are poorly worded.

Clara Kimball Young makes the role of Mary as appealing as possible under the circumstances, and Milton Sills is a pleasing Kinsella. The always efficient Jack Holt is Stair, while Henry Woodward, Mary Mersch, Marcia Manton and E. M. Kimball complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Saurin (Clara Kimball Young) traveling across the African veldt is rescued from the danger of the prowlers of the jungle by Major Kinsella (Milton Sills), commander at Fort George, an English post in South Africa. At the post she sees very much of her hero, and soon they become engaged despite the objections of Maurice Stair (Jack Holt) and Mrs. Valetta (Marcia Manon), who insists that Kinsella is already married. A native uprising calls all the men from the post. When the tide of battle turns against the English, Stair deserts and reports back to Mary that Kinsella has been killed. He shows her a duplicate of one of Kinsella's earrings which he has had made specially for the purpose to convince her. In time Mary accepts the proposal of Stair. On her wedding night she discovers the other duplicate earring, and her husband's perfidy is revealed to her. Kinsella by feigning madness has escaped being killed by the superstitious natives. A change of heart convinces Stair that the only course open to him is to rescue Kinsella, which he does, but at the cost of his own life. On his deathbed he is forgiven by both Mary and Kinsella.

"CHERCHEZ LA FEMME," wrote O. Henry, the wizard of short stories, the idol of Greenwich Village. Vitagraph has answered the call, and Alice Joyce is discovered as la femme and she's some find. If O. Henry could drop into the rear seat of a motion picture theatre in which the screen version of his mental reation was being shown, he would no doubt be inspired to jot own the skeleton of another masterpiece entitled "Donnez-moi Femme."

Touches which only a Henry could give, moments that could y be pictured in the mind of a Henry, and suspense that only master of short-story writing could sustain, together with clever impersonation of la femme by Miss Joyce, and the good ction of Tom Terriss, make this screen version of an O. ry creation a rattling good picture and one that Vitagraph well send the rounds of the exchanges and enter accounts but one side of the ledger—the credit side—both as to satis-ion and financially and the action will be duplicated by every ibitor who shows this picture.

It is very seldom that one will advise a producing company to n a program picture to more than five reels. The reviewer nakes an exception in this case.

"Find the Woman" is an excellent example of story-telling on the screen. Its construction is perfect, the continuity as smooth-running as a quiet brook, the suspense sustained without the straining of one situation or event, the subject-matter revealing human incidents and the thought behind the whole, one with a purpose.

Director Terrnss caught the spirit of the story from the first and welded the links together so that any part taken separately is as strong as the whole. He started with the big advantage of having an excellent story to work from and a good cast to interpret its meaning. He emerged from the studio leaving behind on the celluloid work of which he may well be proud.

Walter McGrail heads the supporting cast in the straight lead, Mr. McGrail is a fine type for the part and puts over the situations he is called upon to interpret with a punch in either hand. Arthur Donaldson has the chief character support and does some of his best work. Jessie Stevens has a bit which she does in her usual finished manner. Jean Paige gets the ingenue honors. We would like to see Miss Paige in something bigger—with a wider range in which to show her worth. Martin Faust is a new-comer in Vitagraph stock. He has a tendency to overact in some of the scenes, but this is the fault of the director not his own. He makes a good heavy. Henry Houry is given a bit.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Madeline Renard (Alice Joyce) is given the prima donna role with the French Opera Company. Maurice Dumars (Walter McGrail), dramatic critic on the "L'Abeille," a New Orleans daily, is in love with her and she with him. Before her appearance in the role of Marguerite in "Faust," she meets M. Morin (Arthur Donaldson), a pious old gentleman, who spends his time modeling works in gold. Madeline induces him to make her a string of artificial pearls so that she may wear them the opening night.

Madeline's maid, Ninette (Jean Paige), lives with Mme. Tibauld, who gives M. Morin her savings to invest for her. Ninette is in love with Pierre (Martin Faust). When Madeline makes her appearance with the jewels, a scandal is started, and she is accused of being the consort of M. Morin. Shortly after M. Morin had finished the jewels, he dies. He leaves a note for Madeline telling her that she is the only girl in the world whom he would favor thus. The money which Mme. Tibauld had left with M. Morin to invest, is not accounted for and it is thought that he had used it to purchase the jewels for Madeline. Madeline, afraid to face the people who had scandalized her, disappears.

A year later she returns. Shortly after Maurice discovers in the home of Mme. Tibauld a picture which he admires. He takes it from the wall and discovers in back of it, $20,000 worth of government bonds which M. Morin had obtained with the money left with him by her. The mystery is cleared.

ANOTHER story of the Civil War, and the subsequent hatreds and feuds, in which Belle Bennett displays her histrionic abilities to advantage first as Cora Batesford of fifty years ago, then as Floribel, granddaughter of the former, in that of "The Last Rebel."

While this theme is to a certain extent hackneyed, still the production in this case will warrant its hearty reception. The costumes of the early sixties at the outbreak of the war are beautifully reproduced and lose none of their splendor or uniqueness when compared with the present-day style of apparel, as shown in the later reels.

Then the old trustworthy colored mammy, Lulu, as portrayed by Lucretia Harris, who loves her charge and is just as ardently beloved in return, is a true picture of the southern negro in ante bellum days, as is also her stanch fidelity in the less prosperous days that follow.

It is a charming story, even though it does harbor a duel, and cause hearts to become cankered for half a century, and even though the intrigue of a wily mortgage broker is instrumental in robbing Floribel, the "Last Rebel," of her inheritance, through all of which she retains her composure and haughty southern pride.

The photography of Jack Mackenzie is indeed worthy of comment; in the first reel is a beautiful garden scene taken at twilight, which is a masterpiece.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The Civil War breaks up the old friendship that has existed between the Appersons and Batesfords for generations. Harry Apperson (Joe King), engaged to Cora Batesford, fights a duel with Jack Batesford (Joe Bennett), his rival. Cora breaks her engagement with Harry because she sides with her people, who are ardent Confederates.

After the war, Harry returns to find Cora married to Jack and his own plantation gone to ruin. He goes West. There he accumulates a fortune.

Fifty years pass. Harry Apperson and his grandson, Jim (Joe King), are the only Appersons left. Both cherish the old southern ideals of courtesy and chivalry. Harry sends Jim back to Carolina to buy the old Apperson place. The fortunes of the Batesfords have steadily declined until Floribel, the last Batesford, reaches womanhood to find that everything is lost. Pensinger Gale (Jack Curtis), who holds the mortgage on the Batesford property, conspires with Jepson, the foreman, and gets possession of the place.

Raised in sadness by an old negro mammy, Floribel faces a dreary outlook. Pensinger Gale offers to return everything if she will marry him but she rejects his proposal. Jim arrives and determines to be her guardian angel in spite of her rebuffs. He follows her to Columbia, where she goes to obtain employment.

She makes a failure of business. Finally she goes to the docks with the negro mammy to commit suicide, is attacked by a gang of thugs, rescued by Jim, has the old home restored to her and marries him.

"The Firefly of France"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THERE is hardly anything more gripping than a good spy story. In peace times these come under the general head of detective stories, but war offers a different background, which besides offering many opportunities for original plot development provides the picture with that valuable combination of bigness, intimacy and reality that is often missed in the mere murder mystery and kindred subjects. "The Firefly of France" was highly interesting fiction when it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, the easy style of the author, Marion Polk Angelotti, rendering it stirring at all times. This valuable asset, its style, is still to be noted in the produced picture and speaks well for the adaptation made by Margaret Turnbull, and the direction by Donald Crisp. The plot moves rapidly, convincingly and steadily increases in its suspense. There have been any number of twists provided by the author which keep the spectator guessing as to the ultimate outcome. The interest is tightly maintained until the final scene.

Wallace Reid's work as the hero is clean cut and likable, and Anna Little as the mysterious heroine does well. Raymond Hatton in the small space allotted him for the interpretation of the title role gives yet another show of his skill, and Charles Ogle is a German spy, happily not of the type that betrays itself at the very first encounter with an opponent. The atmosphere of adventure and romance is assisted in no small measure by a number of exterior settings which well suggest a rural France. The photographic work is of the best.

The supporting cast includes Winter Hall, Billy Elmer, Ernest Joy, Clarence Geldert, Henry Woodward and Jane Wolff.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bayne (Wallace Reid), a young American aviator, prepares to leave his country to enlist in the air service of France. Previous to his departure he discovers a German spy meddling with his trunk, but discovering nothing missing, dismisses the matter. On board ship he meets Esme Falconer (Anna Little) and a man by the name of Jenkins (Charles Ogle) who constantly watches her. Bayne is mystified when Jenkins tells him that she is a German agent but eventually refuses to believe him. On arriving at a European port Bayne's baggage is inspected by British officers. Papers are found stolen from American authorities by von Blenheim of the German Secret Service. This further mystifies Bayne but after the officers receive his endorsement from the authorities in the United States, he is permitted to proceed. At a French inn where he is obliged to stop he again encounters Esme and Jenkins. The girl refuses to tell him her mission. Jenkins still insists that she is a member of the German Secret Service. In the night her chauffeur is killed. Bayne takes his place and drives her to her home. They are pursued by Jenkins and three aides who are now disguised as French officers. They demand that Esme procure for them plans held by her brother-in-law, the Firefly (Raymond Hatton), a French aviator who has disappeared. He has taken refuge in a secret chamber in the Falconer chateau. Bayne manages to secure false plans from the Firefly and these he gives to Jenkins, who in reality is von Blenheim. Then through his courage and ingenuity he manages to bring about the capture of the spies. And he wins the French war cross and—Esme.

"A Game with Fate"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

DIRECTOR TOM TERRISS, of the Vitagraph forces, has tried his hand at writing for the screen. "A Game of Fate," Vitagraph's latest picture starring Harry Morey, is credited to Mr. Terriss' authorship. He tried the mystery brand and has succeeded pretty well in keeping the suspense but has not followed closely, the rules which have been laid down by our law makers—in fact he disregarded all this and went right ahead with his mystery. Result of which is that after Paul Scardon had finished we find a fairly good dramatic offering, thanks to his direction; the work of Harry Morey and Denton Vane.

"A Game with Fate" is a mystery story, pure and simple, but, although not exactly original, it has been given an original touch by the author. As a climax to all this mystery which he has revealed in the first four reels, he closes with the information that it has all been a joke, the result of a wager made by a young broker and a fellow club member. It has some of the generalities, in this respect, of "Believe Me Xantippe," in so far as the backbone of the plot is founded on a wager. In all other respects it is as unlike the stage success, as black and white.

In all credit to Mr. Terriss, he has certainly aroused the interest and curiosity of his audience, from the start and until the re-appearance of Henry Dawson, he has us "buffaloed" as to the climax. And this has been done without far-fetched or impossible situation being introduced. We except, of course, the author's waiver of the fact that there is such a thing, as a legal code governing the actions of men. Even a joke or a wager can be carried so far as to bring it under the pale of the law, and the participants in jail.

An example of this is prominently brought out when the joke is carried so far as to have one of the parties brought to trial, the trial held and the accused found guilty, all before we are informed that the supposedly murdered man turns up. A man cannot be tried for murder unless it is known that the one whom he is accused of having murdered is dead. This was not proved until the sub-titler informed us of the fact long after the trial. This was necessary in order to keep the suspense, but it is not excusable because of this fact.

After all is said and done, "A Game with Fate" will prove good entertainment and will be accepted as such by the patrons of the big and little theatre. Paul Scardon has given the picture faithful production, has revealed the proper atmosphere and has run true to form of his usual good directing. Harry Morey hasn't the possibilities for strong acting in this production as he has had in some others, but he gives it a good resounding punch now and then which smacks of Morey pep. Betty Blythe is fair in the leading feminine role. Percy Standing, Robert Gaillard and Stanley Walpole have lesser roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Henry Dawson (Denton Vane), broker, and Robert Harwell (Harry Morey) are club members. At a garden party, at the home of Elaine Huntington (Betty Blythe), Dawson disappears. He is last seen with Harwell in the garden. Investigation revealed that Dawson and Harwell quarreled shortly before Dawson disappeared. Detective also learned that Harwell has robbed Dawson of a large sum of money shortly before he disappeared. Harwell is indicted for murder on the evidence gained, tried and found guilty of the murder of Dawson.

Elaine Huntington is in love with Harwell and puts forth every effort to clear the mystery. She is thoroughly convinced that Harwell is innocent. The time for the death penalty to be imposed nears, and the mystery is still unsolved. Shields (Percy Standing) is in love with Elaine and phones her that he has important news for her. Arriving at his home, he shows her certain papers which she knows will free Harwell if presented to the court. Shields asks herself as reward for giving her the papers. She refuses to meet his demands and he burns the papers. Later, however, the original is found. The papers are in the form of an agreement entered into between Harwell and Dawson. Harwell wagers that he can lay a net of circumstantial evidence around his actions that will convict him of murder. As the evidence is being presented to the court, Dawson appears and laughingly admits the wager. Harwell is released.

"Madame Sphinx"

THE police department having failed to apprehend the murderer of a rich banker impels his ward (Celeste) to take steps to fathom the mystery alone. To do this she—Alma Rubens—visits the famous Moulin Noir, where distinguished persons in disguise hobnob with notorious characters of the Apache type, and her association with a young artist there leads her into many precarious situations. There are plenty of thrills in the picture, and the continuity is fairly good, but there's certainly a waste of footage and all to no purpose, for the third reel, or "round" might be better, where two women of the underworld engage in a most unseemly rough and tumble fight on the floor of an Apache den.

With this exception the picture will prove an acceptable offering.

The title "Madame Sphinx" is evidently attributable to two reasons: first, after the murder of her guardian Celeste finds a cuff link on which is engraved the image of the Sphinx, and secondly when in these dens of ill repute she is asked to give some clue to her identity. She insists that for the present she had better be known as "Madame Sphinx."

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

With a peculiarly designed cuff link as the only clue upon which to work, Celeste (Alma Rubens), disgusted with the failure of the police department, sallies forth to round up the murderer. In the Moulin Noir, she notices a young man wearing a scarf pin of precisely the same design. She cultivates his acquaintance, learns he is a young artist and on ingratiating herself, he promises to take her to an Apache dive on condition that she go blindfolded. She is convinced, now, she has the murderer, and on his desiring to know more of her, she promises to take him to her quarters on condition that he go blindfolded. On reaching her home and having the bandage removed, he falters and behaves so suspiciously that Celeste is assured that her surmise was correct. The police arrest him.

The young prisoner protests his innocence, and the girl begins to doubt whether the right man has been caught, when the servant of the dead DuBois recognizes in the young captive the long missing son of DuBois, Andre (Wallace McDonald).

Celeste again takes up the trail for the slayer, and finally fixes the crime on Raoul La Verne (Gene Burr), bank cashier, whose love she had rejected. Raoul confesses. The young artist and Celeste are wedded.

PORTER EMERSON BROWNE'S play, " A Fool There Was," based on Rudyard Kipling's poem, " The Vampire," enjoyed a success on the stage several years ago and shortly after its Broadway run had ended William Fox produced it as one of his first box office attractions. Now he releases it again as a " 1918 Version," and it seems as if success should return to it in its freshly edited and condensed form. It was in this picture that Theda Bara gained the foundation for her present fame in interpreting vampire roles. Certainly there has never been a more vampish vampire than Mr. Brown's and Miss Bara derives the utmost from the part. A notable performance is also contributed by Edward Jose as the Fool. He plays convincingly and with tremendous effect.

" A Fool There Was " despite the passing of years is still a good picture of its kind. In most respects, Frank Powell's direction holds as good today as it did when he added greatly to his reputation by producing the picture. The story as presented is absorbing and powerful and grips with an iron like grip from beginning to end. The relentless Vampire, the poor driveling Fool and his suffering family are three forces which never allow the interest to become slack.

The supporting cast includes May Allison, Clifford Bruce, Mabel Fremyear, Victor Benoit and Runa Hodges. It is also interesting to note that Creighton Hale is seen in a few scenes doing a " bit."

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Schuyler (Edward Jose) is happy with his wife (Mabel Fremyear) and child (Runa Hodges). Because of his popularity and ability he is commissioned to go abroad on a mission for his country. Circumstances prevent his wife and child from accompanying him. On board ship he meets the Vampire (Theda Bara), bent on securing vengeance on him because his wife refused to have anything to do with her. She accomplishes her desire so completely that in Italy Schuyler forgets wife, child, country and honor while basking in her embraces. Back in America, his best friend (Clifford Bruce), even his wife and child make efforts to break the Vampire's influence, but it is useless. The story ends with the man dead on the floor of his neglected library, the Vampire gloating over her horrible accomplishment.

THIS Broadway Star Feature contains a true heart interest and an element of pathos which is bound to find favor with the average audience. Agnes Ayres, as Maida, is self sacrificing to a degree for she deprives herself of attending a Thanksgiving dinner, by rehabilitating Grace (Adele De Garde) in her room from which she had been ejected for nonpayment of rent. Grace, by the way, had spent her room rent on a new dress to attend the dinner above mentioned, and Maida advanced to Grace the small sum she had laid aside as the final payment on her purple dress.

Grace attended the dinner—the chief attraction at which was young Mr. Ramsay (Evart Overton), considered by the girls at the Busy Bee dry goods store as extremely eligible and a good catch, for he was about to be taken into partnership.

Maida manages, however, later in the day to procure her purple dress, and the dinner being over she sallies forth and incidentally encounters Ramsay and they walk together in the park.

WHEN one sees this title flashed in electric lights or on the screen they haven't got the slightest hint as to the corking good comedy that awaits them with the showing of the picture. In one reel, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have crowded a bunch of laughs sufficiently effective to carry out a five-reeler. After the showing of the picture the title means more than it actually conveys at first sight and one is pretty dense who cannot connect the thought of the story with the title.

The story centers around an American Blue-Jacket who is on shore-leave in Paris, and to while away the time he drops into a resort frequented by the Apaches of the Paris underworld. The unsuspecting sailor believes that the dance, which is in reality staged for his entertainment and benefit, is a serious affair and he goes to the rescue of the girl in the case, but is met by all sorts of obstacles in his path. With the final scenes come the realization that it has all been staged for our American sailor's entertainment.

All of the action is staged in one set—showing the interior of the Apache resort. A few exterior flashes are shown but these are not of great importance to the picture itself. So, with one set and themselves, and with the excellent support of Edith Roberts, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran stage one of the best short comedies they have ever done—and this is a strong statement for Eddie and Lee have turned out some pretty good comedy in their work for Universal.

Lee Moran has the role of an Apache gangster—and Lee has certainly affected the proper dress and the right atmosphere. Eddie is cast as the Blue Jacket, and although he is not given the prominence accorded to Lee, he puts his part over with all possible pep. Lee is the star of the picture. His impersonation of the Apache gangster and his execution of the Apache dance is one of the best things ever done in the comedy field. The reviewer has seen the dance staged in New York cabarets by professionals, and never has he seen the dance executed in a more realistic manner or with a greater degree of the "tough stuff" which is the high light of the dance.

"Are Crooks Dishonest?"

(Rolin-Pathe—One Reel)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

HAROLD LLOYD and Harry Pollard are seen as crooks in this rollicking one-reeler. In the city park they proceed to work the old game of the lost diamond ring. Pollard explains his loss to the various folk on the benches and then Lloyd comes along to find the ring(s), selling them to the searchers for large amounts. They encounter Bebe Daniels, however, and incidentally their Waterloo, for Bebe is in the game herself, and after relieving them of their chubby bank rolls, the scene shifts to a fake mystic's parlor where there is staged an uproarious mixup. It is one of the best that Lloyd and his support has turned out.

"The Bondman"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE re-edited and re-subtitled version of "The Bondman," one of William Farnum's early starring pictures, shows a rapidly moving story affording the principal player all the opportunities he could possibly desire for displaying his varied abilities. "The Bondman" was adapted from one of Hall Caine's works which appears to have been a subject well suited to be transferred to the screen. It was given a lavish production, the various scenes on the Isle of Man and in Iceland being handled with remarkable fidelity as to atmosphere and attention to deail. The mob scenes with the supernumeraries in the native costume are striking.

Perhaps the only criticism one may make in regard to "The Bondman" is that it is a little episodic. This arises from the fact that it is divided into two separate stories by a twenty-year jump along about the middle of the five reels and because much of the important action is passed over in the subtitles. The closing scenes demand that the action jump about considerably in order that the activities of the various characters may be traced and this too adds to the episodic effect produced. However, the story offered in "The Bondman," with its powerful themes of love, self-sacrifice and hate entertains sufficiently to leave a most satisfactory impression after the closing of the last reel.

Farnum's supporting cast in this picture was composed of Dorothy Bernard, Harry Spingler, L. O. Hart, Charles Graham, Doris Wooldridge, Charles Brooke, Julia Hurley and Carey Lee.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Rachel (Doris Wooldridge), daughter of Joregen Jorgenson (Charles Graham), the Danish governor of Iceland, is attracted by the brute force of Stephen Orry (William Farnum), a vagabond, and marries him. She is disowned by her father and finds, after a year of marriage, that Orry displays little else but the brute. After a fight with her he leaves and makes his way to the Isle of Man, where he again marries. By this wife (Carey Lee) he has a son, Sunlocks, and the baby seems to awaken everything fine within him. When his wife meets with a tragic death he leaves Sunlocks in charge of Adam Fairbrother (Charles Brooke) and again becomes a wanderer. Rachel also bears a son, Jason.

With the passing of years Rachel dies telling Jason (William Farnum) the story of his father's desertion. Sunlocks (Harry Spingler) has grown to manhood and is in love with Fairbrother's daughter, Greeba (Dorothy Bernard). From Orry, who returns again, he learns of his half-brother and promises to seek him and win his friendship.. Jason swears to avenge himself on his father or upon Sunlocks. So Sunlocks departs for Iceland and just misses Jason who sails for the Isle of Man. While awaiting Jason's return, Sunlocks becomes very popular with the people of Iceland who eventually proclaim him President, renouncing Jorgenson. Greeba waits in vain for Sunlocks and is on the point of marrying Jason when she gets a letter from him, summoning him to her. Infuriated, Jason follows and threatens to kill Sunlocks. For this he is sentenced to work in the sulphur mines. The return of Jorgenson with soldiers again establishes his rule. Sunlocks is also sentenced to the mines where he weakens and goes blind. Jason, unaware of his identity, assists him to escape. On a certain day when all the people are privileged to present their woes and demand and receive deliverance Jason strides up to the council with Sunlocks and presents their case. Jason is released but Sunlocks is sent to a nearby island to await judgment of the Danish government. Now fully aware of Sunlocks' identity, but his bitterness toward him turned to love because of their mutual love for Greeba, he changes places with him. So Sunlocks' bondman, Jason, is stood before the firing squad the next morning. But he is happy in the thought that Sunlocks and Greeba have gone away to seek a new life.

OPPORTUNITY has been provided in this episode, "The False Signal," for the players to exercise their dramatic talents, but at the same time the thrills have by no means been neglected. Pearl and Harvey, the latter still feigning insanity, are taken to a distant island pending the arrival of the Hooded Terror. Queenie Kate is completely taken in by Harvey and, finding herself falling in love with the young hero, suggests that they take a walk along the cliffs. Safely away from the rest of the gang, Harvey throws off his mask and starts to make Queenie a captive preparatory to escaping to the mainland when his attention is turned to Pearl who has also masqueraded as being infatuated by her captor, a rough looking gangster. She has promised to be his girl, if he will but move the light marking the landing place on the island so that the Hooded Terror will meet destruction on the rocks when he comes. The gangster discovers her game. Harvey comes to the rescue and together they escape over the cliffs. The Hooded Terror despite the changed position of the light finally lands. He and his men pursue. As the episode closes Pearl and Harvey are crouched under the slight protection afforded by an overhanging cliff, while the Terror hurls rocks at them from above.

" Kidder & Ko "

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"KIDDER & KO" is somewhat reminiscent of the fiction pages of the Saturday Evening Post prior to the war. Its hero is a young man turned out by his pater because he is skilled in pushing the ivories about the green top table but unskilled in making cod liver oil. He proceeds to go generally westward, where, not many miles from home he plunges head-on into romance and a business opportunity on which he realizes through bluff.

His various experiences and kidding produce a comedy that is alternately effective and dull. The only trouble with the author's hero is that he is better at kidding than in the pastime of utilizing the faculties stored away in his gray matter. And while a musical comedy hero can perfectly well go through his three acts on a bluff, the picture hero must have some sober thought, particularly when he makes a splash in "Big Business." But Friend Cuthbert Kidder never shows intellect. Furthermore the manner in which he finally makes a success of things is never clear.

However in those localities where Bryant Washburn is remembered for his past work including the popular "Skinner" series, "Kidder & Ko" is a safe picture to play. But while it has a certain amount of comedy, some good lines in its subtitles, it can hardly be placed on the same level as the "Skinner" pictures.

It was produced at the Diando Studios, and supporting Washburn appear Gertrude Selby, Harry Dunkinson and Wadsworth Harris.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cuthbert Kidder (Bryant Washburn) is given fifty dollars by his father, Silas (Harry Dunkinson) and told to return with a thousand or so. Silas objects because Cuthbert is a pool champion and nothing else. In another city Cuthbert crosses cues with a couple of gangsters and gets their money. In revenge he is beaten up. He is found by James Knight (Wadsworth) and his daughter Julie (Gertrude Selby) and they decide to take him home because his father's canned fish is so good and he is so good looking. When Cuthbert comes to, he feigns amnesia for some reason. He proceeds to monkey about with a lot of tin cans in order to invent a Kutless one. But while one of Knight's employes gets ahead of him in this line, Cuthbert is successful in discovering a food profiteering scheme headed by his rival in love and by breaking it up earning some money. He returns to his father, the manufacturer of a canned fish put up in Kidder's Kutless Kans and also as a proud young husband. Kidder Senior is quite satisfied.

" The Man Hunt "

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

WORLD FILM turns to comedy in "The Man Hunt," and with Ethel Clayton as the heiress who sets her mind on a certain young man and kidnaps him with matrimony in view, and Rockcliffe Fellowes as the certain young man, it develops into a very pleasing affair with many moments where the farce becomes politely uproarious. There are many things which contribute to its success. Travers Vale, the director, seems to be possessed of a comedy sense that is more original than his straight dramatic sense. The values in "The Man Hunt" are nicely balanced from beginning to end. Jack Drumier's playing of the minister is really delightful. His characterization is touched with burlesque, not too heavily, and is always amusing. Besides both Miss Clayton and Mr. Fellowes, particularly the latter, display an apt sense of comedy. Mr. Fellowes' smile spreads all over his face in a most contagious manner.

Fred Jackson is the author of "The Man Hunt," while Virginia Tyler Hudson prepared the scenario. The action moves briskly and sustains the interest remarkably well when the fact is considered that no melodrama has been allowed to enter. The production is adequate, including as it does, a number of pretty snow scenes. A supporting cast that fits well into the siprit of the picture includes Henry Warwick, John Adrizonia, Herbert Barrington, Al Hart and John Dungan.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Betty Hammond (Ethel Clayton) finishing her studies in an English boarding school decides to travel and enjoy the large fortune left her by her father. She repairs to Monte Carlo but only succeeds in attracting the persistent attention of three bankrupt noblemen in that centre. Back in America she is advised, by her lawyer, to marry, as the size of her fortune demands good management. Betty has no one in particular in mind but at length recalls her childhood sweetheart, James Ogden (Rockliffe Fellowes), now manager of her lumber camp in the West. She arrives at his office as a stenographer. Ogden immediately recognizes her and puts her to very hard work. At length she rebels and drops her futile disguise. But she has taken a liking to Ogden and asks him suddenly if she may become his wife. Laughingly he declines. Peeved, Betty, with the assistance of some of the men, kidnaps him along with Parson Brown (Jack Drumier). The three settle in a distant cabin. Ogden's attempts to escape prove useless as do the parson's. With each proposal made by Betty, Ogden retorts with the question, "Do you love me?" Betty is unwilling to admit that she does and so Ogden refuses. Finally the three bankrupt titled gentlemen arrive and innocently stir Ogden to action. He throws them from the cabin. Betty, as a last resort, bribes the foreman (Al. Hart) to play the villain and kidnap her. Of course she is duly rescued by Ogden and when she shams unconsciousness he kisses her not at all gently.

play. Nor does this fault, if it may be called one, go to the merits of the picture as a quality production. The fault is external to the picture. It invades the inalienable right to the public to see or not to see a costume play. The more enlightened element will find in Sardou's work, in Cavalieri's work and in the most finished work of Director Jose, a quality of entertainment that raises the photoplay above the brand of dramatic work on the screen that is often referred to by the narrow-minded critic, as fit only for the masses and unable to find a receptive spot in the minds of the real connoisseur of dramatic art.

But this fact does not mitigate or make less significant the fact that the average photoplay audience, does not take kindly to the costume play, and here is where "Love's Conquest" will fall in the so-called "pulling power" at the box-office. It is to be noted that Cavalieri's picture has some sharp distinguishing lines of demarcation and as one advances either one side or the other of these lines, he finds the melodramatic quality which is always received with open arms by an American audience; the element of thrills raised to the nth power by a most realistic reproduction of Almerio's fight with the lion, and his rescue of Gismonda's child; the element of mob-psychology and the always attractive effect when a director has staged the mob scenes as Mr. Jose has staged those incident to a faithful portrayal of Sardou's intentions when he wrote "Gismonda."

All these elements which have placed the photoplay first in rank with entertainments at the theatre, in the minds of the average audience, are prominent in Paramount's "Love Conquest." The picture has strong dramatic value; it develops tense moments; it is full of action. It does not represent, simply, a fashion parade before the camera, depicting the styles of the sixteenth century or whatever century the action of Sardou's play is laid. There is a purpose behind every advance forward in unravelling the plot.

The cast which Director Jose has assembled as support for Madame Cavalieri includes Courtney Foote, in the leading male role; Fred Radcliffe, Frank Lee, Fredi Verdi, J. H. Gilmore and Isabelle Berwind—each rendering capable support. Mr. Foote's performance is generally characterized by strong dramatic work, but in a few instances, he falls back into the tracks of the amateur in his portrayal. Somewhere in the second reel, Mr. Foote, as Almerio, is called before the Gismonda and the effect of her criticism of his mute request that she meet her promise to give him herself and kingdom, is meant to cast him into a faint, and he falls at her feet. One of the clumsiest falls ever recorded by the camera, is seen when Mr. Foote tumbles. The settings, the lighting and the general atmosphere are examples of painstaking direction. Edward Jose has done a master's work. Charles Whittaker's work in making the adaptation, is finished product.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Grismonda (Lina Cavalieri), the Duchess of Athena, is a beautiful widow, who is courted by suitors from all parts of Greece. She is devoted to her little son, Francesco (Fredi Verdi), and rejects one after the other of her suitors. Almerio (Courtney Foote), a poor huntsman, arrives in the vicinity of the Duchess' castle. Prince Zaccaria (Fred Radcliffe) is an ardent suitor of Gismonda. He arrives with a caravan containing costly gifts to her, among them a lion. She refuses his offer of marriage, and he in revenge conspires with Gregoras (Frank Lee) to get rid of the child, as he thinks the child stands between him and the Duchess. Gregoras consents to throw the child to the lion. He does so, and there is a cry goes up that the little prince is in danger of being killed by the lion. About this time Almerio arrives, and, hearing the cry, rushes to the pit where the lion is, jumps in, kills the lion, and saves the child. Gismonda had promised to give the Duchy and herself in marriage to the one who saved her child. After seeing the savior of her child, she refuses. Later Almerio brings Gismonda the head of a bandit chief, who had terrorized the vicinity, and it is then that the spark of love is aroused within her. Almerio has proved himself a man. Prince Zaccari plots to kill Almerio. Gismonda foils him and accepts Almerio as her husband.

"Smashing Through"

(Universal—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"SMASHING THROUGH," a "Herbert Rawlinson Special Attraction," is a miniature serial, in that it contains thrill after thrill of a most sensational variety. Rawlinson's fight with the thug on the rear platform of the limited is breath-taking and it has been handled excellently by Director Elmer Clifton. The men grapple as the train goes into a tunnel. When it emerges into the open air again, there is only the thug left. Then there is a flash back to the dark and smoky tunnel showing Rawlinson rolling from the track just in time to escape being crushed to death by the second division of the limited. Following this he takes a thrilling ride on the rods and finally reaches his destination safe and sound.

This, however, is only the beginning of "Smashing Through." The stunts persist until the end. There is a wild automobile chase, ending when a railroad engine crashes into the car and lifts it up on the fender, there is an equally wild ride on a motorcycle, and a furious fight between the sheriff's men and bandits. Outside of all this "Smashing Through" is a quiet little picture, which means of course that it isn't quiet at all. The melodrama supplied by Walter Woods to carry all these stunts serves its purpose satisfactorily.

Rawlinson's work is certainly typified by "smash." Sally Starr is the heroine. She overacts a little but not much. Others who contribute of their best to the picture's success are Sam DeGrasse, Neal Hart, Millard K. Wilson, Clarissa Selwynne and Paul Hurst. Mr. Clifton's direction is good throughout.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Mason (Herbert Rawlinson) visits the city to sell his mine but discovers that the prospective buyer, Foster (Sam DeGrasse) plans to swindle him. Starting to return home he is followed by one of Foster's men who engages him in a fight on the back platform of the train. Mason is worsted but manages to escape death and arrivve back at his mine. Here he discovers Mrs. Brandon (Clarissa Selwynne) whose step-son Ralph (M. K. Wilson) has unwittingly sold her a worthless mine through Foster's agency. Mrs. Brandon, with her daughter, Holly (Sally Starr), arrives to find themselves in the power of Foster. Foster's men attempt to jump Mason's claim but with the assistance of Holly and an escaping bandit (Paul Hurst) he manages to defend himself until assistance comes. Foster then demands Holly's hand in marriage, threatening to send Ralph to prison unless she accepts him. They repair to the minister's house where the bandit has taken refuge. Disguised as the minister he goes through the service. Mason sells his mine and realizes that his profits are sufficient to free Holly from Foster. He learns that the marriage ceremony was not legal and gives pursuit to the train boarded by Foster and Holly in an automobile, accompanied by Ralph. After a wild chase Mason arrives at the hotel where Foster has engaged rooms and catapults himself through the door just in time to save Holly.

"Mexico Today"

(Educational—Five One-Reel Subjects)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

GEORGE D. WRIGHT, who has lived among the Mexicans, survived the turbulent days of revolutionary activities, and who has been actively engaged in the commercial life of Mexico, has produced a series of educational pictures for release on the Educational Film Corporation's program which are the best expositions of Mexico as seen today, that have ever been seen on the screen or elsewhere. In fact, it is safe to assume that they are the only ones of their kind that have ever been exhibited for review.

Mr. Wright has gone into the very heart of Mexico and not only has he registered with the camera the ordinary points of interest which the tourist sees in his travels through this country of the Aztecs, but he has reproduced for exhibition on the screen, points of interest that have lain dormant for thousands of years and have never been seen by the average person living on the northern bank of the Rio Grande.

There are twelve one-reelers in the series. The reviewer has seen five of them—"The Heart of Mexico," "Mexico's Floating Gardens," "Pulque, the National Drink of Mexico," "The Most Useful Plant in the World" (the maguey or century plant), and "Necaxa, the Power House of Mexico."

The first named shows the important public building in Mexico's metropolis, Mexico City. The ruins of Madero's former home is one of the many points of interest in this reel. The next subject, "Pulque, the National Drink of Mexico," shows in detail how the Mexicans make their own "beer" from the heart of the Century plant, or Maguey plant. Every foot of this subject is interesting to the nth degree.

"Mexico's Floating Gardens" shows how intensive cultivation is carried out on the fertile lands which for all intent and purposes actually float on water. "The Most Useful Plant in the World" shows the varied uses to which the Mexican places the Maguey or Century plant. From this plant the Mexican makes rope, huts, "beer," food and most everything imaginable. This subject is a distinct feature in itself.

"Necaxa, the Power House of Mexico," shows the wonderful piece of engineering construction, perfected by T. S. Pearson, noted electrical and structural engineer, who was one of the victims of the Lusitania. This electrical plant furnishes the motive power for Mexico City and the surrounding country.

"Mexico Today" is a "knock-out" series of educationals. They are really educators of the most enlightened brand.

Theatre Analysis

DID you ever analyze the motion picture field? Did you ever stop to think just where you stand in this industry? Do you know how many houses there are in the country which are just about the size of yours? Did you ever consider just where the money comes from to pay for the production of pictures, the manufacture of projection machines, in fact the whole running expenses of this industry of which we boast?

You ask the average exhibitor how many houses there are in the country. He will shrug his shoulders and tell you that he hears there are over twenty-two thousand. A friend of mine without asking any advice of any one went into a proposition connected with the industry and paid out good money for an interest in the business on the statement that there were one hundred and forty-four thousand picture theatres in the United States and Canada—think of it. The company is now out of business—flat broke, and naturally so.

The largest list of houses I know of calls for seventeen thousand five hundred. This includes houses which once active are now closed, torn down or converted into other uses. It includes dance halls where pictures are shown between dances, town halls with an old projector showing pictures once a week, converted stores not theatres, airdomes run in connection with theatres as well as those which are out of business, places where English is not spoken, etc. A twenty per cent return (undeliverable by the Post Office) on a circular would be small.

While talking to a prominent man in one of the film companies the other day, I asked how many picture theatres he considered there were in the country. His reply was simple—"I have, for eight months, through my exchange been building up a list which I now consider complete. I have twelve thousand three hundred possible customers in the United States." From another film man who knows, I received this answer—"Between twelve thousand and twelve thousand five hundred."

The answer is simple. Some one is lying or smoking a bad blend of tobacco for there are not over twelve thousand five hundred houses in the country which can honestly call themselves picture theatres. This total includes chain houses from two to fifty under one management who do their booking and buy through one office. This reduces the possible number of purchasing houses with managers who actually buy new goods to well under twelve thousand.

Consider the music trade. How many houses can, by the greatest stretch of the imagination, legitimately use orchestras and organs or orchestras alone? Three per cent? If there are, they are keeping very quiet, though some optimists will tell you as high as five. How many houses can afford to purchase even on the easiest kind of payments large organs costing eight thousand dollars or over?—ten per cent of the whole?—perhaps. How many houses can afford to put in the small organs with or without attachments or the one-man instrument costing from twenty-five hundred to seventy-five hundred dollars? Seventy per cent of the houses, a total of eight thousand four hundred? Yes and some say more, but be conservative. We know what music means to a picture house—forty per cent of its drawing ability, therefore, the nearer the houses of the country come to reaching the one hundred per cent saturation mark, as far as musical equipment goes, the better, and the larger the patronage.

Consider a trade paper. How many theatre men in the country are there who will subscribe to a trade paper and take advantage of its service? We find from careful analysis that twelve thousand five hundred is the very outside which any paper can possibly get within the industry. The print or sale to the public may mount up still higher, in fact without limit, but it is waste and is of no value to any one. A trade paper should not reach the public or it ceases to be a trade paper. It must be remembered that the picture industry is limited and governed more or less on the basis of seats per thousand population. Two papers there must be—more are superfluous.

We print this superficial analysis in order to show the exhibitor, operator and theatre man in general just what the conditions are and also to tell the manufacturer just what he is aiming at when he approaches the industry in order that they may better shoot his advertising gun to get results. This advertising is just as much news to the theatre man as the text pages themselves.

Motion Picture News reaches on a subscription basis more than eighty per cent of the purchasing houses in the country, the rest will fall in line—all are boosters.

Special Cues

IN order to add to the permanent value of our Music Service we have incorporated in our Music Department a list of special features for which our Music Editor has prepared cue sheets. In addition we will co-operate at any time in obtaining other cue sheets where this is possible. Incandescent Lamps for Motion Picture Service

By A. R. Dennington

[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Rochester, April 9, 1918.]

CONDENSER SYSTEMS AND OBJECTIVE LENSES

A NUMBER of different condenser systems have been tried out in the development of apparatus for the use of Mazda lamps in motion picture projection. The two which have given the best results are the corrugated type of condenser and the plano-convex condenser system. Each of these condenser systems possesses some advantages and also some disadvantages in comparison with the other, and it is a matter of choice as to what points should be sacrificed in making a decision as to the type of condenser. One advantage of using the plano-convex condenser system is that the working space between the lamp-house and the head of the motion picture machine is great enough to permit of easy manipulation of the framing-lever or to make any adjustment to the film which may be necessary. There is also another advantage in that the angle at which the light rays converge is more acute and therefore there is less loss in picking up the cone of light beyond the aperture plate and collecting this cone in the objective lens. This is especially true where a fairly long focus objective lens is used. Motion picture machines which are in use at the present time are constructed with a lens tube or holder about two inches in diameter. If a lens larger than this holder is to be used it is necessary to have an adapter which reduces the opening of the lens to the two-inch. In this way, a part of the area of a two and one-half-inch diameter lens is unavailable because the light rays strike the sides of the holder before reaching the lens. The disadvantage of the plano-convex condenser is that there is some tendency to show a more or less imperfect image of the coils of the lamp filament on the screen. This tendency can be reduced to a minimum by careful focusing of the lamp, and by the use of a mirror back of the filament. It is possible to produce a screen illumination which is so nearly free from streakiness that it is not in the least noticeable when a picture is being shown, though there may be slight traces of the streaks on the screen when there is no film in the machine. Lantern-slides can be shown with the plano-convex condensers and this is a condition which must be considered. The corrugated condenser has the advantage of giving a somewhat more uniform screen illumination than can be obtained with the plano-convex system. It has the disadvantage of requiring a very short working space between the lamp-house and the head of the motion picture machine. Lantern slides cannot be shown with this condenser, and an auxiliary set of plano-convex condensers is consequently necessary. The condenser also has such a short focus that the rays of light converge at a much more obtuse angle than the rays from a plano-convex consenser, and therefore a greater portion of the cone of light passing through the aperture plate is lost and is not picked up by the objective lens.

SHUTTERS

The use of incandescent lamps on alternating current circuits will result in improved screen illumination because of the fact that the filament stores up heat and maintains a practically uniform temperature throughout the current cycle. In an arc lamp, the intensity of light varies as the current alternates. It is because of this periodic variation in the arc that it is necessary to use a two-wing shutter on motion picture machines which are being operated on 60 cycle alternating current circuits. With a two-wing shutter the picture is normally cut off 32 times per second. This frequency of cut-off is so far different from the frequency of the light variation due to the alternating current that there is no tendency for the two to come into synchronism. However if a three-wing shutter is used, the picture is cut off 48 times per second. The frequency of cut-off is so near the frequency of the current that there is a periodic variation in the screen appearance, due to the fact that the light is dim because the current is near zero value during the time that the shutter is open and later the picture is cut off entirely by the shutter wing. Later the light is bright while the shutter is open and the result is a periodic variation in the brightness of the picture. It will be dim for a short space of time and then it will be bright for a corresponding period. This condition has led to the adoption of the two-wing shutter as the standard for alternating current circuits. The two-wing shutter possesses the disadvantage of operating at such a low frequency of cut-off that there is usually a decided appearance of flicker on the screen. With a gas-filled incandescent lamp on an alternating current circuit the light is steady and therefore a three-wing shutter can be used with the result that the frequency of cut-off of a picture is sufficiently high so that there will be no noticeable flicker.

Fig. 5—Foot-candle Intensities on Screen of 27.75 Sq. Ft. Area. 693 Lumens

When a wide aperture objective is used, in order to secure as much illumination on the screen as possible, the shutter should be considered. If the shutter is not adapted to the wide aperture lens, it will not cut off the light from the screen during the period of picture travel and there will be the appearance of a travel ghost. This may be seen especially when titles are being shown, as it tends to cause a streaming or fuzziness, at the tops and bottoms of the letters. Most of the shutters for projecting machines have been designed for use with the smaller lenses and the wings are not wide enough to take care of the wide aperture lenses. If the shutter diameter remains unchanged and the lens aperture is very greatly increased, the angle through which the shutter must move in order to cut off the light from the screen is decidedly increased, thus resulting in a slower cut-off and a corresponding reduction in the time that the full lens aperture is utilized while the film is stationary. The use of a shutter with a diameter correspondingly larger is desirable where a wide aperture lens is used, though in most cases such a change in the shutter size cannot be made conveniently. The only thing which can be done to minimize the difficulty is to proportion the wings of the shutter so as to eliminate the travel ghost and at the same time get as much light on the screen as possible.

SCREEN ILLUMINATION

The useful light which is delivered to the screen is the final test of the effectiveness of any system of condensers and lenses which may be used. The object is always to produce the brightest and most uniform screen illumination possible with a given source of light. It is no disadvantage to have the illumination in the center of the screen somewhat greater than near the edges because the greater part of the action in the pictures is well toward the center; however, there should be sufficient light at the edges to show all details, and the screen should not be so unevenly illuminated that it is noticeably brighter in the center than at the edges, especially when titles are being shown. If the difference between the center and the edge illumination is too great, titles will show up clearly in the center and will fade off toward the ends of the lines so that it is difficult to read the complete message.

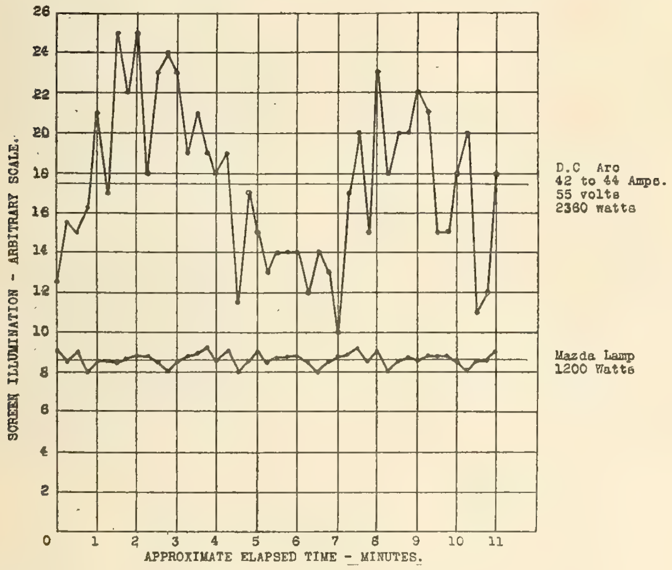

Fig. 6—Screen Illumination with D. C. Arc and Mazda Lamp for Equally Satisfactory Picture

A typical screen illumination is shown in Figure 5. The figures in the center of each square represent the actual foot candles on a small screen having an area of 27.75 square feet. The total illumination delivered to this screen is 693 lumens. The intensity of illumination in the corners is approximately two-thirds the intensity in the central portion of the screen and this ratio is not too great for the satisfactory projection of pictures.

The color of the light delivered by a Mazda lamp has a warmer tone than the light from a carbon arc and therefore the pictures do not have that hard, chalky appearance which is sometimes noticeable in pictures projected by high-powered arcs. As the illumination is steady the eye can be more comfortably focused on the picture than where the light intensity is varying as is always the case when arcs are used.

A comparison of the intensities obtained on a screen with a 40 ampere direct current arc and 1,200 watt Mazda lamp is shown in Figure 6. These intensities give approximately equally satisfactory pictures; that is, the audience could not determine which lamp was in use. In this test the illuminometer or photometer was arranged so that its field of view covered practically the entire surface of the screen, and readings were taken at intervals of 15 seconds for a period of 10 minutes. The scale used is an arbitrary scale and does not show the actual foot-candle values of the light reflected from the screen.

LAMP-HOUSE EQUIPMENT

When the filament of a Mazda lamp is once placed at the proper point in the optical system it remains in this position for the life of the lamp. Changes in the focus are necessary only when lamps are changed. For this reason it is possible to adjust a lamp so that the filament occupies a predetermined position with respect to a base-plate or holder which can be slipped into the lamp-house or removed at will. After the filament has been adjusted with respect to this holder the lamp and holder can be very quickly placed in service in the machine in case of a burnout. The only thing necessary is to remove the burned out lamp and holder and substitute the new holder with its lamp properly adjusted.

A mechanism has been developed which permits the focusing of lamps independently of the optical system of the machine. It has been demonstrated by actual test that more uniform results can be obtained in this way than can be obtained by focusing each individual lamp in the system by judging the appearance of the screen by the eye. There are certain modifications of this equipment which include a part or all of the features which have been outlined.

ELECTRICAL CONTROL EQUIPMENT

The lamps for motion picture projection are operated at extremely high filament temperatures. It is necessary, therefore, that the current supplied to the lamp be closely regulated as, otherwise, satisfactory lamp performance cannot be secured. If the current is reduced below that at which the lamp is rated the intensity of the light is diminished while if the current is increased above the rated value there is danger that the lamp may fail very shortly.

In order to keep the current at the desired value it is essential that an ammeter be included in the lamp circuit. Where the lamp can be supplied from an alternating current circuit it is possible to use a transformer equipped with an ammeter and a regulating device. The regulating device may consist of a switch which connects different taps of the secondary to the lamp in order to obtain the current control, or may consist of an adjustable reactance. The reactance method of controlling the current has the advantage of permitting very accurate adjustment of the current and voltage. This is of primary importance and the transformer is not a serious disadvantage. In fact, under the worst conditions the power factor of the control equipment for Mazda lamps will be higher than the power factor of arc lamps with reactance coils which are often used. The power required by the Mazda lamp is less than the power required by the arc, so that existing circuits in the theatres will be ample to supply the new lamp and the voltage drop will be less than when the arc is used.

It is important that the rush of current through the lamp at starting be kept fairly low in order to protect the ammeter and reduce the danger of cracking the lamp seal at the point where the leading-in wires pass through the glass. The resistance of the lamp filament is very low when the filament is cool, and as the filament is large there is an appreciable time before it heats up so as to limit the current. If no method is used to limit the starting current the initial rush is momentarily many times the normal lamp current.

Adjustment of Condenser System for Incandescent Projection

Mr. E. J. Seybt, Castine, Me., writes as follows: "We have a Powers 6 B. fitted with an incandescent lamp but we can't get a spot with the corrugated condenser, but can get a fairly good light with the 4½" plano-convex condensers that we are now using. The light is 30 volts, 650 watts, 20 amp., making a picture 7½' x 10', approximately, at a 36' throw. The lamp is centered, set 2" from corrugated condenser and 9½" from the aperture-plate. This is the best position for getting maximum light with 4½" plano-convex. When we use 4½" condensers we get a fairly good spot with a good white screen free from discolorations with the moving picture lens, but when we shift to the corrugated condenser it don't give us the spot. Although the screen shows a white field, we only get about 50 per cent of the light that we get with the regular condensers. We have moved the lamp back and forth and have done everything we could think of, following directions in Motion Picture News of May 11-18. Can you tell us why, if the lamp isn't in the right position that we get the spot and good light with 4½" plano-convex condensers, and when we change to the corrugated we get no spot and lose 50 per cent of the light on the screen?"

Reply: The cause of your difficulty is readily apparent from a careful study of the information contained in your letter.

You state that you place the lamp 2" from the corrugated condenser and that the corrugated condenser is 9½" from the aperture. It is true that when using the plano-convex condensers the most satisfactory screen illumination is secured when the distance between condensers and aperture is in the vicinity of 9½", but this is not at all the case when using the corrugated condenser.

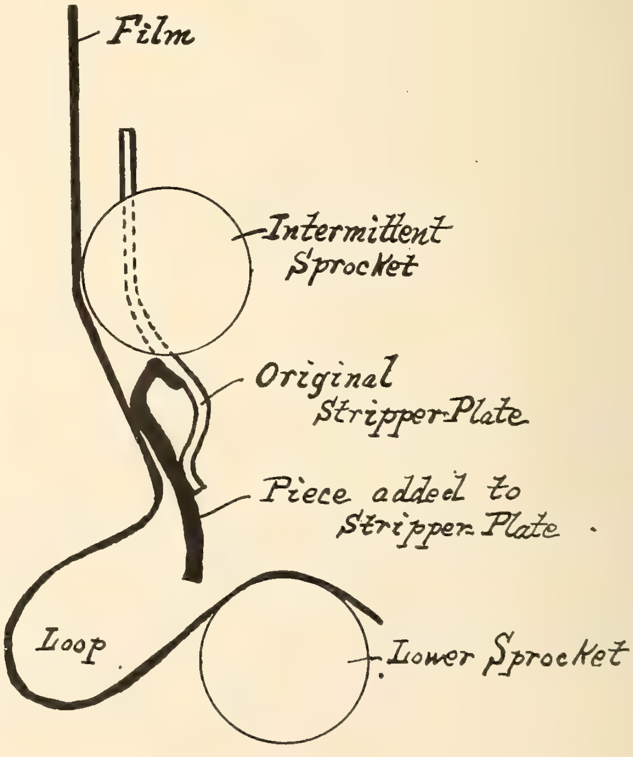
As is pointed out in the articles which appeared in the NEWS, the corrugated condenser is specially designed to work at a preconceived distance, and has not the flexibility of focal adjustment which the planos have, because it is unnecessary, inasmuch as once the incandescent lamp is focussed and centered it requires no further movement or adjustment. The conjugate foci at which the 4½" corrugated condenser is designed to work are 2½" and 6½", i.e., the lamp filament is to be 2½" back of the rear (smooth) surface of the corrugated condenser, and the aperture should be 6½" (or in the immediate vicinity of 6½") from the front (corrugated) surface of this condenser. The curves of the 4½" corrugated condenser are designed for use at these distances, and if you have had a 9½" distance between the condenser and the aperture it is easy to see why you have not been able to secure the screen illumination claimed for the incandescents by their makers.

Modified Stripper-Plate for Motiograph Mechanism

Mr. Fred C. Shivers, Lexington, Neb., submits the following: "As you perhaps know, there is very little on a Motiograph to steady the lower loop. After the intermittent sprocket becomes a little undercut there is an increase of noise due to the flapping of the lower loop, which is very annoying, and makes the picture unsteady. The stripper-plate shown in the drawing is formed by taking an old aperture plate, cutting one inch from the top end; trimming the sides down to tracks; then braze it onto the original stripper plate just below the sprocket teeth slots. The film, in its travel, will rest lightly against the attached plate and I can assure you, that it is a decided improvement. I have one on my machine and it certainly eliminates a lot of noise. What do you suppose the factory will say to my doing this? This may help somebody else who is troubled with noise."



Comment: We believe that this modification of the Motiograph stripper-plate should look pretty good to the makers of the Motiograph projector, because there is no doubt that it will tend to reduce the noise caused by the intermittent flapping of the lower loop against the stripper-plate as originally situated on the Motiograph machine. As it is the aim of all makers of projection machines to supply as noiseless a machine as possible, the attention of the Enterprise Optical Company is directed to this suggested change, which can probably be carried out by them to advantage. Many of the little refinements and improvements on present-day projectors are the direct outcome of suggestions from operators.

Rex Theatre, Valley City, N. D., Has Woman in Charge of Projection

ONE of the few women motion picture machine operators in the country is Miss "Billy" Yaeger of the Rex theatre, Valley City, North Dakota.

Unlike recent instances of women becoming operators, Miss Yaeger's entrance into the profession was not due to the scarcity of men in mechanical pursuits brought on by the draft.

Five years ago she and a sister owned the Cameo theatre at Granit Falls, Minnesota. Shortly after assuming the management of the theatre she was compelled to learn how to operate a projection machine. She found it hard at that time to keep operators and have them carry out her instructions, for as she explains, "Men do not like to be told what to do by a woman."

Endowed with energy and initiative, she made up her mind to meet the situation in the only way that seemed possible. She left the front of the house to the management of her sister while she, after a short period of instruction, became "Captain of the Booth."

After having successfully conducted the theatre for some time the sisters had an opportunity to sell out at a profit, and following the sale of the theatre, about a year ago, she returned to her home town, Valley City, North Dakota. Later on, Manager Robinson of the Rex and Grand theatres in that place, whose operators had been called out by the draft, prevailed upon her to take charge of the Simplex projectors at the Rex theatre.

Miss Yaeger, who had learned operating on a Simplex machine, states she will never cease to be impressed with its smooth running qualities.

Endorses Incandescent Projection

ON a previous occasion we requested those readers who are using Mazda lamps as the light source for motion picture projection to favor us with reports on the performance of these incandescent lamps after they had been employed for a sufficient period to permit of their characteristics being thoroughly determined.

One of our valued correspondents, Philip Frahm, of Lake Mills, Iowa, has used the Mazda lamps in projecting motion pictures since December last, and he sends the following report, for which we thank him, as doubtless our readers will also.

Mr. Frahm says:

"I have had a Sheck Adapter since December 19, 1917, and must say that under no circumstances would I go back to carbons. I have alternating current, a 65-foot throw and a picture 8 x 10 feet. We have a Gold King screen, so we get just as good a light as you would with D. C. and we have the flicker done away with."

Mestrum Moves Uptown

MR. HARRY MESTRUM, the supply dealer and successor to C. B. Cline, announces that he has moved from his former place of business on Sixth avenue to No. 166 West Forty-eighth street (two doors east of Seventh avenue), New York City. This places Mr. Mestrum, who is known to a generation of operators and lanternists, again in the heart of the film district, and he will be pleased to meet all of his old customers at the new address. Mr. Mestrum, as is well known, manufactures and repairs stereopticons, motion picture projectors and stage effects, and handles projection accessories of all kinds.

The Testing of Optical Glass

A CONVENIENT form of monochromator may be purchased, or one readily constructed according to the following scheme, which has been planned to give a single operator convenient control of the light source while actually observing the block under test. (See Fig. 2.)

The source of light at A should be small and fairly intense (preferably a straight portion of an electric filament), placed parallel to the edges of the prisms B and C. To give a deviation of 90° the prisms should be of flint glass with refracting angles of about 60°. After dispersion by the prisms, the rays are focused by a lens D on the upper surface of the total reflection prism E. This surface is covered with tin-foil perforated by a pin-hole F. The remainder of the apparatus is the arrangement for striae testing as described above. The color of the light coming through the pin-hole is regulated by moving the source along the line AA′

Another use for such a monochromator is found in testing irregular pieces of glass by immersion in a liquid of suitable refractive index. The tank to contain the liquid may be built of plate glass of good quality, or a small storage-battery jar may be used, with circular openings cut in opposite ends over which plano-convex lenses are cemented. The liquid in the jar must be stirred continuously to eliminate striae due to evaporation of the liquid and temperature differences within it. For the highest accuracy the jar should be tightly covered during the observation. For regular use inexpensive liquids should be employed, as a considerable amount adheres to each piece of glass when it is removed from the tank. A mixture of carbon bisulphide and benzol is inexpensive; the fumes, however, are somewhat poisonous and extremely inflammable, but if the test is conducted under a ventilated hood, and a cover glass kept over the tank, these liquids may be used with safety.

While the immersion method should probably not be employed in cases where other methods are available, it is valuable for examining the rough pieces as first broken from the pot and making it possible to reject much of the unsuitable glass without moulding; it is also useful for testing the numerous broken pieces which are too small to form moulded blocks of the standard sizes. In case this glass is to be pressed into blanks for small lenses and prisms the preliminary moulding into rectangular blocks can be omitted.

IV. Bubbles and Stones.

Bubbles, or "seed," as they are called by the glassmaker, are apt to occur to a greater or less extent in all types of glass because of the liberation of gas from the batch materials or walls of the pot at some stage of the melting process. They seem to be quite without effect upon the surrounding glass; that is, the glass remains optically homogeneous right up to the surface of the bubble. As a bubble deflects from its course nearly all the light striking it, the only effect is to diminish slightly the total amount of light transmitted. In the commoner types of glass, bubbles are not apt to be numerous enough to cause a loss of more than a few hundredths of one per cent of the light passing through a telescope or binocular. Hence, bubbles are usually negligible, unless they are in such a part of the instrument as to be seen superposed on the image. This may be the case with the collective lens of a compound eyepiece, or to a less extent with the prisms of binoculars. Too much attention, rather than too little, has often been given to examination for bubbles. They can be found by direct inspection of finished parts, or of blocks with opposite edges polished. Or the bubbles can be seen by reflection, by viewing the block (against a dark background) at right angles to a beam of light passing through it.

If it is desired to inspect pieces of glass which do not have polished faces, it can be done by wetting the surface with water, or preferably with a liquid of higher refractive index, such as benzene, which will make them much more nearly transparent.

Good glass should be free from "stones" or included particles of dirt, as they are in themselves rather gross defects, and the surrounding glass is apt to be colored, or of a different refractive index from the remainder.

V. Light Transmission.

It is a well known fact that a beam of light in passing through a medium such as glass, loses in intensity. This loss is of two kinds, by refraction at the surfaces, and by absorption. For the purpose of discussing the light transmission of optical glass, we need not go into the reflection coefficient except to give the law governing it. This law, as stated by Fresnel, is, that at each boundary surface a fraction of the light incident perpendicularly is reflected, where n is the index of refraction of the glass. Thus the higher the refractive index of the glass, the more light is lost by reflection. For rough purposes, we may say that each piece of glass causes a loss by reflection of 10%, i. e., 5% at each glass-to-air surface.

The following table will give the loss by reflection as depending upon the index:

n	Loss by reflection at one surface $\left(\frac{n-1}{n+1}\right)^2$	Transmitted through a thin plate $\left\{1-\left(\frac{n-1}{n+1}\right)^2\right\}^2$
1.50	.0400	.9217
1.52	.0425	.9166
1.54	.0452	.9116
1.56	.0478	.9065
1.58	.0505	.9016
1.60	.0532	.8966
1.62	.0560	.8913
1.64	.0587	.8863

The loss caused by absorption depends on the composition of the glass, and on the nature of the impurities. Tinted glass, which has been made of impure materials, may let through more light than the same kind of glass which has been made colorless by the addition of some decolorizing or oxidizing agent.

There seems to be no definite relation between the refractive index and the absorption of the glass. The following table gives a few values of index, dispersion and absorption of Jena glasses taken from Hovestadt's "Jena Glass." The last four are glasses manufactured by the Bureau of Standards.

Methods of Measuring Transmission of Light.

The principle of the measurement is the following: The brightness of a source such as an illuminated surface is balanced against a constant comparison surface without the glass, and again with the glass intervening. The ratio of the two, after it has been corrected for reflection at the surfaces, is the light transmission of the glass. For this measurement, any instrument for measuring brightness can be used. The instrument used at the Bureau of Standards is the Martens polarization photometer.

This instrument consists of two small circular openings, through one of which comes the light from a small standard lamp, and through the other, the light from some uniformly illuminated surface. The light from these two openings passes through an objective lens and a Wollaston doubly-refracting prism, which separates each beam into two beams, polarized at right angles to each other. The light then passes through a biprism, which divides the beams into two comparison fields separated by a sharp line. The light is then analyzed by a Nicol prism. A Ramsden Ocular focused on the biprism is used to view the fields.

The light coming through the Nicol prism and ocular from one of the openings in front of the instrument is polarized in one plane, and that from the other opening in front of the instrument is polarized in a plane at right angles; the intensity of the two beams can then be varied by rotating the Nicol until a match is brought about between the two fields.

The measurement is carried out as follows: The little standard lamp used as a comparison source is balanced against the uniformly illuminated surface viewed direct, and the reading of the photometer noted. Then the block of glass is placed between the illuminated surface and the photometer and the comparison lamp again balanced, and the reading taken. The square of the ratio of the tangents of the two angular readings is the percentage transmission. This is to be corrected for reflection at the two surfaces and then reduced to transmission per unit thickness by the formula where E_0 is the transmission for 1 cm. and E the transmission for t cm.

Cinema Camera Club Makes Heavy Contribution to Red Cross Fund

THE CINEMA CAMERA CLUB, co-operating with the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, in securing subscriptions within the industry to the Second War Fund of the American Red Cross, succeeded in turning over the sum of $2,466 to that organization as the result of their united efforts in the recent drive.

The club's committee, consisting of George Coudert, captain, Fred Chaston, Oliver Marsh, W. M. Zollinger, W. J. Black, A. Lloyd Lewis and L. B. Dunmyre, state that their contribution was accumulated as follows: Members, individually—total, $728; studio camera staffs—total, $432; outside contributions—total, $1,306; making the grand total $2,466.

The cameramen are certainly to be congratulated on this fine showing, as is also the Cinema Camera Club in going after the contributions in such a thorough and systematic manner.

Music and the Picture

Suitable and Unsuitable Music for the Motion Picture

THE casual observer, who enjoys a good motion picture, and who, at the same time, is affected by the musical accompaniment frequently finds much food for thought as to the attitude of the general public towards the questionable connection between the screen picture and the orchestra's musical description.

There can be no question as to the sincerity of some of the larger producers in their endeavors to supply suitable and artistic musical accompaniments to their output. Some spend considerable time and money in providing original scores, while the greater majority have elaborate musical settings compiled from every conceivable source. But while this works out admirably in larger houses with a good orchestra and plenty of time for preparation, the smaller houses with inadequate musical combinations and no time for preparation as a rule can give hardly any attention to a proper musical accompaniment, whether provided by the original producer or not. It might be added that the excellent musical cue sheets issued by producers, arrangers and publishers for a large majority of our more important screen productions, have helped immensely toward a better understanding of what would be effective in a musical way, giving an opporunity to leaders to prepare ahead of time and helping in innumerable ways to meet the demands of the picture. But this excellent assistance is not taken advantage of nearly as much as it should be, even in our larger centres. Quite to the contrary, we find many theatres with imposing entrances, foyers and magnificent interiors, which employ so-called orchestras, which are almost as primitive in make-up and ability as during the bygone days of the piano and bass drum and cymbals period.

Sometimes when a movie admirer feels glum and is in need of a good laugh it might prove beneficial if he visit some of these picture theatres, providing he can see the humorous side of some of the musical accompaniments offered. As an example, the writer strayed into such a house not long ago. It was on one of the principal downtown thoroughfares; the entrance was brilliantly illuminated and special announcements of a Charlie Chaplin and another important dramatic feature adorned the outside of the place. Inside of the swinging doors the spectator's attention was immediately arrested by the sounds of the orchestra, which, in this particular place, consisted of a piano, presided over by an iron-handed young lady; two violin players, and a 'cellist. Under ordinary conditions considerable effect can be gotten from such a combination, particularly if the players would know their business and have sufficient sense to select the right kind of arrangements. All that would be necessary would be to provide themselves with some of those admirable arrangements for piano solo and obligato violin and 'cello, such as Charles J. Roberts has made famous, and they could furnish a musical accompaniment worthy of the name for any picture.

But to come back to the above performance, the Charlie Chaplin picture was accompanied by every conceivable shoo-fly march, and it seemed that every publisher who had ever given away complimentary copies of music had been remembered in the musical setting of Charlie's antics. But the surprise came with the dramatic picture, the main action of which revolved around Wall Street, speculators and financial operations in general. Hardly had the picture started with its announcement of cast, etc., when the orchestra commenced with the first tutti of De Beriot's well-known Seventh Violin Concerto, and to the amazement of the writer of these lines, one of the two violinists — evidently "the leader," played the three movements of this work from start to finish. One is justified in asking how in the name of common sense such a thing is possible, and how a New York manager would pay a musician who had so deplorable an idea of the fitness of things. But, after all, it goes to show what kind of sins are perpetrated in these theatres, and what the managers and audiences will put up with. In a way it was really funny to look at stirring scenes in Wall Street, love scenes, scenes of quarrels, serious pictures, all passing along to the tune of De Beriot's sweet and inoffensive melodies scratched and torn to tatters by a player who probably imagined he was supplying appropriate music to the picture and giving an artistic (?) treat besides.

At any rate, people who take it upon themselves to accept an engagement at motion picture theatres ought to be able to do two things well. To begin with, they should know how to play an instrument (preferably the violin) exceedingly well; and, secondly, they should have the tact and instinct to select appropriate, suitable music for a picture and the necessary musicianly ability to arrange it for the exact purpose for which they want to use it. The cue sheets, already mentioned, which can be had for the asking nowadays, provide an excellent help for leaders who are really in earnest about supplying suitable music, and even if not interested to such an extent, no end of appropriate dramatic, descriptive and characteristic music can be obtained from our music publishers, who are issuing every conceivable kind of material for this very purpose.

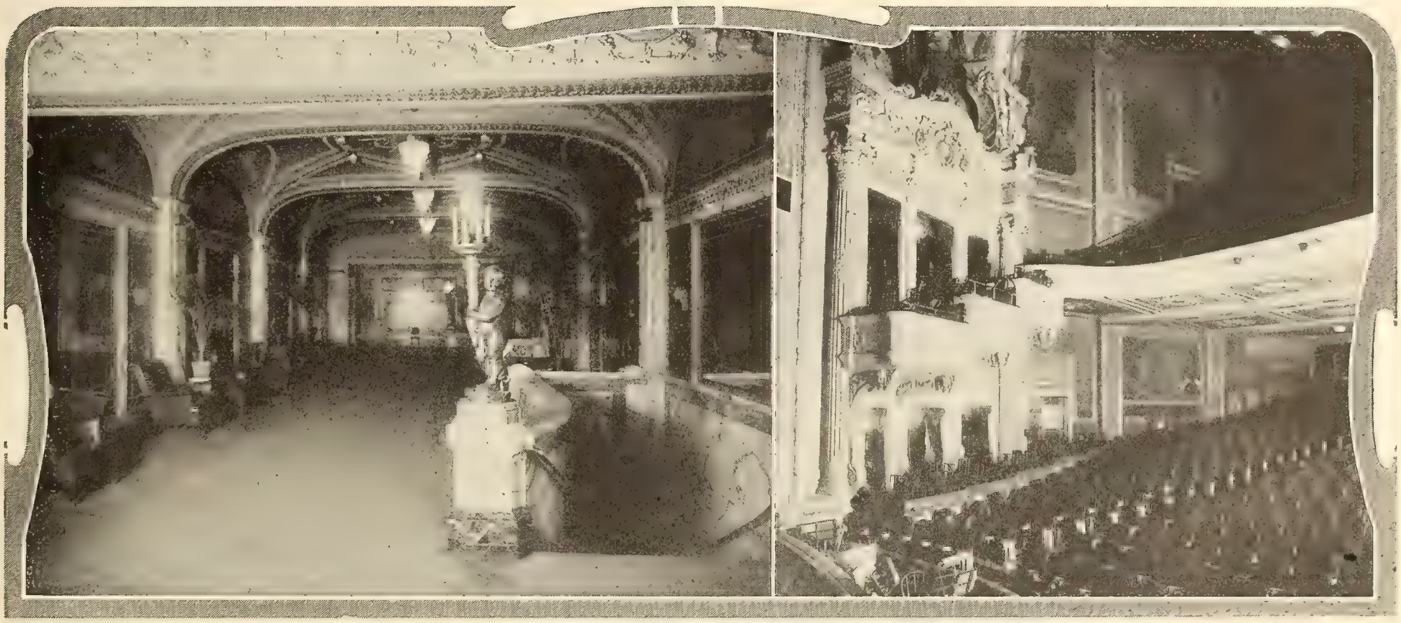
Allen-Regent Opened at Ottawa

JULE AND JAY J. ALLEN added another beautiful theatre to their already extensive chain of cinema palaces last Monday evening when the Allen-Regent of Ottawa, Canada, was thrown open to the public. This house, which was formerly the Regent, operated by J. T. Moxley and his associates, was recently bought by the Allens, was renovated throughout in the short space of one week and opened, thoroughly redecorated and almost entirely remodeled, on Monday, May 20, to the most enthusiastic and in many ways the most remarkable audience ever assembled in Canada's Capital.

Sir Robert Borden, Premier of Canada, was not able to attend, but sent a representative in his stead. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, being called upon to preside that evening at a meeting of prominent Canadians from all over the Dominion, was represented by his wife, Lady Laurier, and Hon. Mrs. L. J. Lemieux, wife of the Sheriff of Montreal.

Theatres Worth While



Foyer and section of the auditorium, Orpheum theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Orpheum, Seattle, Goes to Motion Pictures

ONE of the finest theatres in the country was added to the motion picture ranks a few weeks ago when Eugene Levy, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Seattle, Wash. determined to devote it to the silent drama. Before the house was taken over by Mr. Levy it was the prize theatre of the Orpheum circuit on the Pacific coast. Orpheum circuit vaudeville is now being shown at the Moore.

The Orpheum is a million dollar theatre. The walls of the foyer are lined with mirrors and panels or marble, while the auditorium is decorated with fresco paintings and rich scroll work. It has a seating capacity of 2,100.

So far, week runs of big pictures has been the policy at the Orpheum, and it is probable that this will be followed. "The Kaiser" and Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket" were the first two pictures shown. Among the pictures that are included in the bookings are Paralta Plays, Fox Standard pictures and Sunshine comedies, Select Pictures and Pathe specials besides the Pathe comedies and news weekly.

Bennethum Buys Two More Typhoon Systems

GEORGE W. BENNETHUM, one of Pennsylvania's live exhibitors, is installing Typhoon Cooling Systems in two of his houses—the Pictureland theatre at Reading, and the Palace theatre, at Coatesville.

This makes six houses in all that Mr. Bennethum is cooling with Typhoons. The other theatres were equipped last year and comprise the Scenic and Hippodrome theatres at York, Pa., the Hippodrome at Allentown and the Hippodrome at Pottstown. Mr. Bennethum has several other houses in Pennsylvania, all of which he expects sooner or later to equip with Typhoons.

Rembusch Invents Searchlight System

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Shelbyville, Indiana, owned by Frank Rembusch, national secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association, has an advertising light in the way of an enormous searchlight of eight million candle power, which revolves and casts a streak across the horizon at night which can be seen for over twenty miles.

When it is considered that this light travels and is visible for over twenty miles, it is seen that it covers an area of about two thousand square miles and describes a circle of seventy miles. This streak of light across the sky passing this space every half minute constitutes an advertisement that is unique.

The light is a new invention and will be used for various purposes.

The United States Government are planning to use them to direct aviators at night. A company is being formed to manufacture these lights. The large size, as is being used by Mr. Rembusch, will sell for $1,000. A smaller size for $150. A system of signals can be instituted that will advertise the kind of show.

How Diamond Theatre Features Diamond Comedies

THE DIAMOND COMEDIES, produced by the Diamond Film Company of New Orleans for distribution by General Film Company, enjoy the unique distinction of having a theatre of their own for pre-release showings. R. M. Chisholm, president of the Diamond Film Company and owner of the Diamond theatre in New Orleans, has arranged to give each of these one-reel comedies a pre-release showing in his own theatre, backed by an extensive advertising campaign. The plan has worked so successfully that it will be continued indefinitely. These comedies are given one of the places of honor on the Diamond theatre program and have proved to be one of the most popular comedy brands ever screened in New Orleans.

Fine New Theatre for Army Camp

VICTORY THEATRE, Camp Lewis, near Tacoma, Ore., is the latest house to appeal to the soldier patronage. The theatre is located at Green Park, a settlement that has sprung up since the start of the war.

It has a seating capacity of 1,900, which includes balcony loges of about 200. It is seated with comfortable opera chairs and in every way is as comfortable as any city theatre, and its managers boast that in decoration scheme and finish, it is more attractive than most city theatres. A very effective lattice work has been carried throughout the theatre and the color scheme is of French gray and light green, the woodwork being gray stain and the walls and hangings green. The panelled walls are of three-ply laminated native fir which proves most effective with the gray stain treatment.

One of the most attractive features of the Victory is the ladies' rest room, which is finished completely and beautifully in yellow and black. The drapes here are of deep yellow and the curtains of figured cretonne. The furniture is yellow wicker.

The operating room is one of the finest, having the very latest and best equipment. A pipe organ with all necessary devices including xylophone and bells furnishes the music.

Directory of New Theatres

CALIFORNIA

A new motion picture theatre is being erected at Arcadia by Mrs. Ruth Cassill, manager of the Colonial theatre at Monrovia. "The Outpost" is the name selected, and it will cater specially to soldiers soon expected at the Arcadia Balloon school. It will be located on Fallingleaf avenue, just west of the City Hall, and will seat 800 persons.

ILLINOIS

Minier's new motion picture theatre and dance hall were opened recently under most auspicious circumstances, the entire proceeds of the opening date being devoted to the Red Cross.

Work has been resumed on the new theatre being erected on the site of the City Hotel, Litchfield, and it is estimated that the building will be ready for occupancy along about September 1 next.

IOWA

The big theatre at Union Park, Dubuque, was reopened a week ago with pictures and vaudeville, under the management of Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Majestic vaudeville theatres. H. B. Maynard, vice-president, and O. H. Simonds, general manager of the Dubuque Electric Company, are responsible for the re-opening of the theatre, which was closed last summer. They believe that it will do much to popularize the park and make it one of the best summer amusement resorts in the state.

Bruce McGregor is building a $400,000 structure at Des Moines, a part of which will be fitted up as a motion picture theatre.

KANSAS

Work of wrecking the buildings at 308-310 East Douglas avenue, Wichita, has been commenced and on the site will be erected the new Wichita theatre, which is to cost $80,000.

The Palace Block on West Douglas street, Wichita, owned by Charles S. and Harry Lawrence, is being remodeled, and E. B. Holmes is moving his motion picture business from Newton to occupy the remodeled building. The Lyric theatre, which has been in this building, is moved to its new location at Twenty-first and Lawrence streets.

MISSOURI

The Doric theatre, a new house devoted to the silent drama, located at 914 Walnut street, Kansas City, was opened recently to capacity business. The entire proceeds of the opening day were devoted to the Red Cross.

A twenty-five-year lease of the Garden theatre, Thirteenth and McGee streets, Kansas City, was signed May 25 by Sam Davidson, owner, to the Richards & Flynn Company, composed of E. E. Richards, William Flynn and N. J. Flynn, owners of the Wonderland and the Twelfth Street picture theatres on Twelfth street. The lease dates from September 1. Six months' rental was paid in advance, the average yearly rental being $20,000. The new owners will spend $25,000 in improvements in the near future, which will include a pipe organ, electric sign and strip lights. The theatre will be devoted to motion pictures, with William Cullen as manager.

NEBRASKA

Under auspicious conditions, Omaha's $700,000 motion picture house, the Rialto, was opened last evening. Two audiences, estimated at nearly 5,000, were present for the premier. Having begun its career on Memorial Day, it was peculiarly fitting that the Red Cross should have been generously benefited by the theatre's opening. All the box seats had been sold at auction, and thereby the Red Cross fund was increased by $500. H. M. Thomas is the manager.

NEW YORK

The Brooklyn Ice Skating Palace, Bedford and Atlantic avenues, is to become a moving picture theatre for the summer. The entire interior of the building is to be remodeled. The plans call for a seating capacity of 2,500. A large pipe organ is to be installed and will be used in conjunction with a symphony orchestra. The ice plant, which was used to make ice for skating, the management announces, will be used to cool the theatre. The change of policy is simply to bridge over the summer months, it is announced, and the building will revert to ice skating in the fall.

Plans have been filed with the Manhattan Bureau of Buildings for the construction of a two-story theatre and stores on Fort Washington avenue, between Broadway and 160th street. It will be irregular in size and have a seating capacity of 2,700, with an orchestra, balcony, and roof garden. The City Real Estate Company of 176 Broadway is the owner of record. H. J. Krapp is the architect and has estimated the cost at $100,000.

OHIO

Manager Morley has re-opened the big Weller theatre in Zanesville, Ohio. This house has 1,400 seats, is newly equipped and re-decorated, and promises to be one of the most popular places of amusement in Zanesville. The opening attraction was "The Re-making of a Nation."

Manager Mott of the Lyric theatre, Wooster, contemplates making many improvements and alterations to his popular playhouse, that will cost in the neighborhood of $1,000.

RHODE ISLAND

Edward F. Albee, manager of Keith's circuit of playhouses, is authority for the statement that Pawtucket is to have a new Keith theatre. The new structure, which will have a seating capacity of 2,500, will be erected on East avenue.

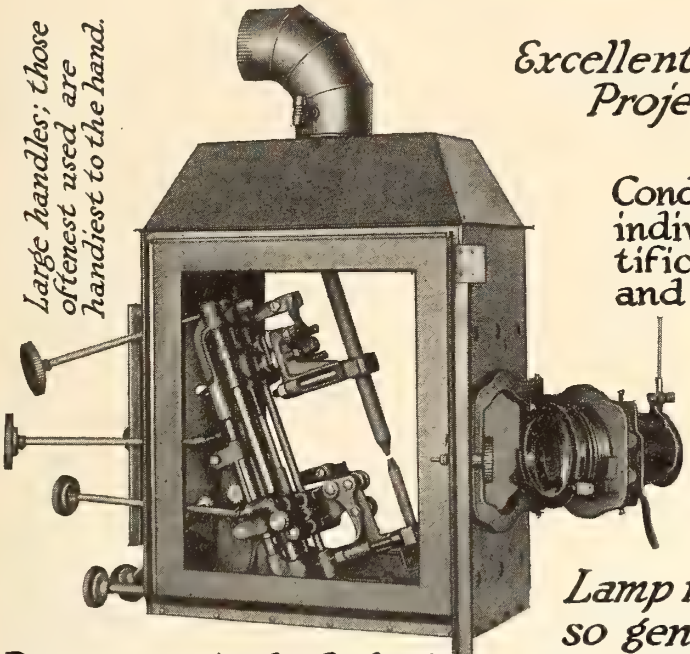
Why the Operator is so fond of the Type "S" Simplex Lamphouse



Large handles; those oftenest used are handiest to the hand.

Excellent ventilation. Double doors. Projection Room kept cool.

Condensers quickly accessible, and individually held in rings scientifically designed to expand and contract same as the lenses. reducing breakage to a mininum.

Patent terminals for lead-wires require neither lugs nor solder, and yet provide carrying capacity ample for the most extreme needs.

Lamp is built like a machine, and so generously designed that it will hold a larger arc than can possibly be required.
Can draw 150 amperes or more.

These are only a few of the reasons. In every detail this outfit is one that makes the Operator dissatisfied with any other. And it can be had only on the Simplex Projector.

The Simplex Mechanism insures projection of unequaled steadiness
The Type "S" insures clear-cut pictures, unequaled in brilliancy

Announcement of the plans of The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Season of 1918-1919

Beginning Sept. 1, 1918. Ending Aug. 31, 1919

"IT is just as important to project the right sort of pictures 'Over Here' as to fire the right sort of cartridges 'Over There.' To the work of helping to keep up the morale of the Americans at home, we dedicate our Organization."

An Essential Wheel in Uncle

THESE are days when the only industries that can survive are those that have a staunch and definite part in the winning of the War. The producing of motion pictures is one of these. More than a year after the United States entered the War, America's motion picture industry finds itself stronger, more favored, more necessary than ever before.

The motion picture is in the War to win the War. It has labored faithfully and efficiently for such patriotic movements as the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross, Food Conservation, and Ship Building.

President Wilson himself has publicly thanked the exhibitors for turning over their theatres to Four-Minute Men and for war propaganda. The greatest motion picture stars, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, have toured the nation in the Liberty Loan campaigns. The motion picture has willingly paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes. The exhibitors have opened their doors for war work, but have only just begun their splendid share in the War.

The motion picture's mightiest task is to keep up the morale of the folks at home. It is the national amusement, filling a national need.

Next Year's Output—208 Features

RECOGNIZING this national need, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release in the year beginning September 1st, 1918, two hundred and eight feature pictures, booked on the Star Series plan, which has been such a success in the season just ending. Fifty-two of these features will be re-issues. The others will be new productions, each constructed to meet the demands of the public for war-time amusement. They will be productions to inspire and to entertain.

The 156 new productions will be booked in 23 Star Series groups, and one group of special productions. The 52 pictures of the Success Series (re-issues) will be booked in 9 Star Series groups and one group of specials.

The Success Series is made up of 52 of the finest productions of the last four years, re-edited. New prints and new lithographs will be furnished.

Besides these four weekly releases, all the Artcraft Pictures and all the Paramount Pictures of the season of 1917-1918—the first Star Series productions (143 in all)—will be available for initial or rebooked showings.

That we are able to release such a wonderful list of productions from our own and allied studios is due to the genius of Mr. Jesse L. Lasky.

Exhibitor Can Plan For Year

AS in the season of 1917-1918, the exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures will contract for certain stars, not for a program.

The productions of each star will be released at regular intervals so that the exhibitor can arrange his schedule for the entire year. For instance, when an exhibitor signs for the productions of a star who is to appear in eight pictures, the exhibitor will know that these will be released six weeks apart and can plan accordingly.

He can lay out his year's program and apportion his entire budget at the time he signs his contracts, thus avoiding conflicts.

Sam's Great War Machine

New Paramount and Artcraft Stars

IN the year to come, we shall introduce new stars to Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors—stars in whom we have great confidence. They are Fred Stone, John Barrymore, Ethel Clayton, Dorothy Gish, Lila Lee, Shirley Mason and Bryant Washburn. John Emerson and Anita Loos will write and direct a number of star features.

On behalf of the organization I wish to acknowledge the splendid cooperation extended us by Mr. Thomas H. Ince, who will continue to produce the sort of features that have made his name a guarantee of excellence to exhibitor and public.

The Finest Short Subjects

NOT satisfied to furnish only the finest feature photoplays, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation leads in the distribution of short subjects—a very vital part of every motion picture entertainment.

The greatest comedies ever offered, greatest in variety as well as in quality, are ready for the Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors. Mack Sennett will make 26 of his remarkable comedies for release in the year to come. "Fatty" Arbuckle will produce 10 avalanches of laughter in 12 months. For the first time, for Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors, the new James Montgomery Flagg comedies—16 of them—will be available. These will give the exhibitors one two-reel comedy release each week.

The Paramount-Bray Pictographs will open up a new field of novelty entertainment in the theatres. The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures will bring to America the battle-torn fields of France; Travel Pictures that Mr. Holmes is now taking in the War zone. These one-reel pictures are increasing each week in popularity and box office value.

The Greatest Year Of All

WE have pledged ourselves to produce only motion pictures that will make Americans become better Americans, and we shall keep that promise. In the year to come the public will need more than ever the constructive stimulus that only fine motion pictures can give.

Our efforts to maintain a better merchandising service for the exhibitor have met with immediate success. Our National Advertising has built a clientele of new patrons for every exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. In the year to come we shall increase by many thousands the number of regular patrons of theatres that show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

The quality of our pictures has grown even faster than the quantity. We all owe a great debt to the men and women who have toiled so faithfully to improve this quality—the stars, the directors, the writers. Without these artists, there could be no motion picture as it is today.

Our entire organization is dedicated to two purposes—to help keep up the spirit of America, and to perpetuate the art of motion pictures.

The motion picture has established itself. Ahead of us is the greatest year of all; great, not for what the country will do for the motion picture, but for what the motion picture will do for the country.

SERIES of 1918-1919— Three Artcraft Pictures

FRED STONE'S debut in motion pictures unquestionably will be one of the most interesting events of the fall season. Mr. Stone is the pre-eminent star of musical comedy—a comedian of rare skill, an acrobatic genius who is known as "the man who can do any stunt better than it ever was done before."

Mr. Stone's latest success is "Jack o' Lantern." He has appeared in recent years in the team of Montgomery & Stone in "The Wizard of Oz," "The Red Mill," "The Old Town," "The Lady of the Slipper" and "Chin Chin." A great pantomimic artist—all America remembers his "Scarecrow" in "The Wizard of Oz"—Mr. Stone will be a sensation in motion pictures.

His first picture, "Under the Top," is a circus story by John Emerson and Anita Loos. Mr. Stone's early life was spent as a circus performer and the part will be "made to order" for his comedy and his "stunts."

THE Paramount and Artcraft Special productions for the next year will comprise a series of pictures of the type usually classified as " something unusually big."

JOHN EMERSON and ANITA LOOS are more than directors and scenario writers. They are artists who have developed a new sort of motion picture comedy-drama—the motion picture that doesn't take itself too darned seriously, the motion picture that speaks your language, that gives you a glow of good humor, that genially slaps you on the back, says " Look here! This is a bully story! " and proceeds to tell it to you.

John Emerson and Anita Loos are responsible for Douglas Fairbanks' rollicking tales, " Down to Earth," " Reaching for the Moon," " The Man from Painted Post," " Wild and Woolly," and " In Again, Out Again." They adapted " Hit-the-Trail Holliday " for George M. Cohan, and " Let's Get a Divorce " for Billie Burke.

CLEANS UP THE MONEY-TRENCH!

"Can recommend 'OVER THE TOP' in highest terms, both as money-getter and patriotic masterpiece. Receipts exceeded any other picture, including Vitagraph's 'Battle Cry of Peace,' which held previous house record. Booked it three days, but compelled by big business to run it five days."

"TANGLED LIVES"

by JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
Directed by Paul Scardon

Work This Copy Into Your Local Notices—Or Run It In Your Advance Program

John Howland was all that a man should be. He spurned the illicit love that the wife of his best friend offered him. He buried himself in his work that he might amass riches for the wife he adored.

But his pampered wife proved unworthy. And he chose prison rather than freedom at the expense of her good name.

And then the flame of a righteous hatred all but consumed the good that there was in John Howland. He planned an act of vengeance that he was willing to pay for with his life.

Yet—from the murky soil of his sordid surroundings sprang another love—greater than he had ever known. But had it come too late to save him from himself? Would it win over the great, flaming hate that threatened to destroy him?

Goldwyn Pictures

You Must Read This

If You Never Read Anything Else!

BACKED by a year of kept promises, by a year of clean-cut, look-you-in-the-eye business integrity, by a year of splendid production achievements which have made the name Goldwyn powerful and respected everywhere, I am now making our second annual announcement to the exhibitors of America.

One year ago in June Goldwyn deliberately challenged the attention of the nation's exhibitors by announcing its readiness to distribute the then-new Goldwyn Pictures under the great mercantile slogan:

"The customer be pleased!"

Today—twelve months later—5,148 contract customers of our company bear witness to the revolutionary success of the Goldwyn principle and the Goldwyn productions.

We have proved in a year to the industry at large that it is wise and profitable to operate under a policy of human-being service. We have regarded our exhibitor-customers and all other exhibitors with friendliness and respect instead of with cynical contempt.

We have been enabled to do this because I have around me the finest and most loyal organization ever created in the motion picture industry; men of ideals—clean, powerful, able people who set out to build good will for Goldwyn because they knew that nothing in the world can be permanently successful unless it possesses the unquestioned good will of the customers it serves.

In a year, with a very small percentage of mistakes, which any new organization is bound to make, Goldwyn has been a pace-maker; a blazer of new trails, the discoverer of new brains, the offerer of big stars, powerful stories, fresh, new personalities and the producer of the newer types of stories which the popular tastes craved and world-conditions made desirable.

In the literary markets of America today the agents and venders of screen material are being urged by other producers to "get us the kind of stories that Goldwyn is producing." This means that for twelve months exhibitors of Goldwyn Pictures have had the good fortune to possess the forms of screen entertainment the public was most anxious and eager to buy.

Having grown amazingly—having led the way for a year—another Great Advance is at hand.

The Goldwyn organization which was equipped in its first year to give you 26 productions, is ready in the coming twelve months to double this number of productions, giving you and every other exhibitor in the country more freedom and independence.

A great California exhibitor said to me the other day: "It has been a fine thing, and a lucky thing, for the exhibitors of this country that Goldwyn was in existence during the past twelve months. Goldwyn was formed just in time to keep America's exhibitors from being ground to pieces."

If a company with but 26 productions accomplished this for the exhibitors of quality pictures in its first year of existence, think how much greater freedom and independence Goldwyn will bring you in its second year with its productions doubled to in excess of fifty.

Just as there is required in the big world A BALANCE OF POWER, just so is a similar balance imperatively necessary in motion pictures. The more than 14,000 exhibitors in the United States would be in sorry straits if they found themselves at the mercy of any one motion picture organization.

An organization that has GERALDINE FARRAR, PAULINE FREDERICK, MAE MARSH, MABEL NORMAND, MADGE KENNEDY, REX BEACH'S stories, TOM MOORE and other stars to be announced, has in its possession to give to you the star names and values and popularities to make any exhibitors in the world successful.

We have all of these great assets to give you in our second year—and still more. We have created a Goldwyn magnetism, a Goldwyn power of attraction and there surrounds this company's name a feeling of exhibitor trust and confidence that is making the great stars of the screen wish to become a part of our growing organization.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH,
President.

A remarkable picture of a worldly modern woman, drawn with all sympathy of insight but with no palliations, is "The Unchastened Woman"—unquestionably one of the most successful screen-plays ever produced.

"Consistently fascinating. The unchastened heroine is the most fascinating study of curious woman-kind that has been offered in many a day."
—Burns Mantle, in New York Eve. Mail.

"Remarkable for the creation of a character that in sheer brilliance is little short of sensational."
—Louis Sherwin, in New York Globe.

"A play of intense emotional force of passion and of pathos. It has tense situations and homely truths driven home by sledge hammer blows." —Dramatic Mirror.

"A most brilliant and interesting achievement. The author has taken his people out of the social life of the day and limned them with a master hand."
—New York Review.

The progressive exhibitors of the United States are thoroughly aroused to the need of sounder business principles and practices in the industry. They realize that, bound together in a unity of command and strength, they can do collectively what they are unable to do individually.

This fact is evidenced by the large number of inquiries which have been received regarding the Hodkinson Copartnership Plan. A recent folder setting forth seven specific reasons why the Hodkinson Copartnership Plan merits the investigation of every thinking exhibitor, for instance, brought back requests for more detailed information from exhibitors in 687 cities.

If you are one of the many picture theatre owners who are keeping their ears "close to the ground" these days, this action of your fellow exhibitors will not be without its significance for you.

"ALL SOUTH AMERICA WENT LIKE THAT!"

Little Talks with Foreign Buyers—No. 14

By Paul H Cromelin

President

RECENTLY we started a sales campaign in behalf of Paralta Plays in every South American country. Selling a whole line of features—an entire program—is a different matter from disposing of a SINGLE feature. But all South America went like that! The buyers fairly gobbled the contracts up! Paralta quality and our recommendation were irresistible. Now, why does Inter-Ocean's recommendation have weight with you, the Foreign Buyer? Solely and simply because it IS TIED TO QUALITY. You know that we tolerate nothing else! You know that Inter-Ocean has time and again turned down films for distribution (to YOU) because they failed to reach a certain standard. You know the slogan of "Nojunk" that we have made famous. Inter-Ocean will not attempt to struggle with questionable quality when its recommendation of perfect quality means instant sale, as in the Paralta instance.

TRIANGLE

U-BOATS!

EVERY evil practice in the motion picture business is a U-Boat to the industry.

"SINK ON SIGHT" is the only policy to be adopted toward the evil practice.

AS thoroughly and effectually as the United States sweeps the seas of the pirates of the deep, Triangle sweeps aside practices that tend to torpedo the profits of exhibitors.

STAR-EVIL, Secret-Agreement-Evil, Reel-Tax-Evil, Competitive-Bid-Evil, Waste-Evil—they have all gone down before the quick-firing, cool and practiced gunnery of the Triangle flag-ships.

GENTLEMEN—There are men in charge of the Triangle who know what your needs are; what your problems are; what your reward should be.

THESE men are proceeding with clear vision, far-sightedness and a keen sense of your requirements to make the Exhibition of Pictures something more solid than a gamble.

UP to date enormous success has attended the Triangle efforts.

TURN which way you will on the high seas of motion picture progress you will meet Triangle exhibitors who are glad we are here to serve them.

EXCELLENT pictures? Yes.

LOWER rentals? Yes.

HAWORTH PICTURES

Corporation announces the eminent Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, in a series of eight five and six part motion picture productions of imposing splendor.

The Haworth organization has been formed for the special purpose of presenting to the motion picture theatre a highly developed and specialized product aimed to meet the strenuously competitive conditions of the day and to enable the theatre to anticipate the strides of the rapidly improving public taste in photoplay art.

Haworth Pictures Corporation, with ample resources and a single definite purpose, is pledged to the achievement of a product of the highest box office value.

Available at All
Mutual Film Exchanges

SESSUE HAYAKAWA

is a star of stars, as conceded by every critic of standing and authority. His mastery of his art is complete, finished, refined to a degree, which sets him apart among those of the upper rank of screen value.

Every aid and every precaution has been given and provided to bring all of this remarkable value to the screen in the terms of box office value in the production of the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

Two directors will give their undivided time to the making of these eight productions. William Worthington and James Young will alternate on the pictures, insuring the time and latitude necessary for absolute perfection of story and picture.

Available at All
Mutual Film Exchanges

The first two productions on the Haworth Pictures Corporation schedule of Hayakawa specials are:

"HIS BIRTHRIGHT"

and

"THE TEMPLE OF DUSK"

Both are productions chosen after months of careful consideration of dramatic material and the conditions which the motion picture theatre faces to-day. Increasingly high value must be delivered to the public. The Hayakawa pictures contain that value.

These productions, eight in all, will be available beginning September 1, for pre-release and at intervals of six or eight weeks.

Special arrangements for pre-release runs will be made with first run theatres in larger centers.

Terms outlined on application. Ask the Haworth representative or the Mutual Film Corporation's exchange manager.

STATE RIGHTS BUYERS

Mr. Leslie Mason, in the June 15th issue of "Exhibitors Trade Review," says:—

WE believe in reissues.

A good picture deserves a life of as many seasons as the public wishes.

It is as unpardonable an extravagance to let a good picture die of disuse as it is to throw away a loaf of bread half-eaten.

And the day is coming when every company in this field will utter a fervent prayer of thanks that it has in its vaults pictures good enough to be reissued.

PRODUCTION will be reduced to a war basis.

Intensive cultivation of the products already at hand will be the inviolable order of the day.

The reputation and standing of the reissue in the eyes of the exhibitors and the public must, therefore, be kept above suspicion. It must not be discredited. It must not be open to charges of sharp practice.

The reissue will be the salvation of this industry before normal conditions prevail again. And the concern that, consciously or unconsciously, vitiates its value, is hamstringing itself as well as hurting its fellow-concerns.

We are placing new titles on these films on account of re-editing, but the original title will also be retained on all advertising matter and on the film itself.

A Long-Arm Reach

¶ Having covered the trade field—maintaining, always, a minimum of waste circulation—Motion Picture News is now reaching the public through a novel and important enterprise.

Arrangements have been concluded with the well-known King Features Syndicate of 37 West 39th Street, New York City, whereby a weekly news service from the reading columns of Motion Picture News will be retailed with timeliness to the leading newspapers of the country.

¶ Important happenings within the trade and studio will therefore be given a public circulation running into the millions.

Our objects are:

To help build up the photoplay sections of the newspapers so that the exhibitor may be brought adequately in touch with the greater motion picture public.

To make more prominent and through authentic news to give the public a correct impression of the motion picture and its great industry.

So far as we know this is the first step of this kind ever taken by a trade paper in any field; the first extension of trade news beyond the trade and to the public through the public prints.

Motion Picture News

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 17. No. 26 June 29, 1918

More Reasons for Talk

THE first Friday issue of Motion Picture News comes to you over two hundred pages strong.

Strong in news, strong in service, strong in reviews.

More pages have been added to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau—and more are going to be added. New features—notably the S. Barrett McCormick weekly contribution—will be found. Other surprises are planned.

More Harrison reviews than ever—over a score—are given in this issue. And the new Friday publication date will enable us to bring more and more of these booking guides to exhibitors in advance of any other review source.

Later Box Office Reports; more last minute, first hand news; these are a part of the promise given by this issue for Motion Picture News every Friday.

This issue is the pledge and the proof that Motion Picture News will continue to show the way; that Motion Picture News will continue to merit the unequalled endorsement of being the trade paper most talked about by other papers.

* * * *

Prepare for Peace!

THERE will always be competition in picture production. And the exceeding probability is that this competition will gather in keenness.

Sooner or later—not very much later—competition may reach the point where a full quota of foreign sales may be absolutely essential to profit making in picture making.

What of your export field, Mr. Manufacturer?

Selling Yankee goods overseas has been largely an adventure in the past.

Selling goods in the future is going to be strictly commerce—of a nature stern, in many ways, as war.

Success will be achieved through exact knowledge of the foreign market, its supply and demand, and therefore its prices; the kind of goods wanted; systematic and adequate outlets and representation; shipping, insurance, banking, trade mark rights, etc.

There's a great field here; not merely an attractive one but a flatly essential one.

But it must be dealt with, not played with.

It is no longer to be a side line to an engrossing domestic business.

Those who cannot sell over there—sell for all the goods are worth—cannot compete successfully over here.

Not selling the foreign field is going to be just as serious and intimate a matter as not selling a big part of the domestic field.

That's putting the situation bluntly; but, certainly, it's a situation to be faced—in some respects right now, in all respects very shortly.

The Germans, we know full well, are reversing the old adage and are preparing for peace in times of war.

What of South America, where German commerce has played so strong a hand?

What of Russia—long cherished as a great future outlet for American goods?

What of the Orient, the Continental Nations and the British Colonial countries where during the war the American picture exported from New York has made such headway.

Are these sales to be had by you, or the other fellow over there or over here?

The question is a big one; it is an immediate one.

And it's going to be a plain question of general success or failure.

Read It and Keep It

THERE'S a masterful article on picture advertising in this issue by S. Barrett McCormick.

Every exhibitor who believes with us that advertising is a fifty per cent factor in a showman's success ought to keep and reread this article every week. As he progresses in advertising ability—and no man should feel that he can't progress, for advertising is ever new—he will stop often at some of the epigrammatic sentences in this statement and say from experience gained: "That's a fact!"

There's a mouthful and a mindful in many of these sentences.

Mr. McCormick's simple distinction between advertising that should appeal to the mind and advertising that should appeal to the heart is one that many advertising men late, if at all, and often fail to apply intelligently.

It is the distinction between copy that reasons why, and copy that suggests.

Copy that suggests has, in our opinion, the stronger appeal, and pictures not only permit but demand this heart interest kind of advertising.

Which reminds us of the statement of a man whose advertising judgment we hold highest, namely, that pictures are capable of better advertising copy than any other product ever made, because they have the heart appeal.

Plot is the thing to advertise, says Mr. McCormick.

Pick out its selling point or points—the element of heart appeal.

Paint them in colorful words—make them appeal.

Stars are personalities; they have in their very names heart appeal; so they are easy to advertise.

But read the article. If you feel as we do you'll treasure every word of it.

There are other reasons why this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS should be kept for long future reference, but no reason sounder than this article on picture advertising.

Our Many Tangents

THIS business has one remarkable facility, that of going off on tangents.

There are the tangents—of the star, the story, the director, the special production, exhibitor service, cooperative booking, economical distribution, etc., etc., etc.

The tendency is to advance or accept each with such hectic enthusiasm that other and very important allied considerations are minimized or ignored.

There are no single cure-alls in this business; and never will be.

Good pictures, like all other good products, are the result of good policies and good organizations.

Into the good producing organization enter the star, the story, the director. Each is of great importance. But all three are of no avail without good organization; and too great emphasis upon any one means a distorted product to just that degree.

Exhibitor service is of great importance—if service is not given in name only; if, as we have pointed out, the same showmanship ability and experience are used in making service as the making of good pictures requires.

Exhibitor booking circuits may have all the other elements of success; but lack of good pictures will blow the best of them sky high.

This is a broad business. Success is had by cool judgment and broad vision. Tangents are only accidentally and temporarily successful; those who ride them ride for a fall.

Policies, broad, clear-sighted and patiently held to; organizations well balanced and equipped—these are the only winning factors.

Easy With the Whip!

AN exhibitor writes us protesting strongly against Jingoistic sub-titles in news weeklies.

There is good sense as well as good patriotism in the suggestion.

Jingoism has always proved a boomerang at home as well as abroad. Some of these sub-titles may even indicate to our Allies that we don't want any assistance whatsoever in winning the war.

More dignity and truth, a treatment not less firm but more gentle, will do more for the picture and especially for the great cause we all have at heart.

An Epoch Marking Event

THE following estimate of the motion picture is sent to Rob Wagner, Author, from a prominent University professor:

"No new art has come into the world within the history of man, until the birth of the photo-drama. Though all the other arts are more or less related to one another, and the photo-drama has borrowed something from her older sisters, nevertheless it is a new art-form. Future historians will regard this new birth as an epoch marking event."

And It Works Out, Too

WE give in full the following excellent suggestion, adding that the Red Cross Magazine deserves all the best that can be said of it:

"My dear Mr. Johnston:

"In addition to our contribution to the American Red Cross individually and otherwise, we have decided to take out a Red Cross membership for each member of our organization, the idea being to make each individual member feel that they are part of the great Red Cross organization and, at the same time, have delivered to their homes a copy of the Red Cross Magazine.

"I believe that the regular reading of this magazine by employees and their families will do much to imbue them with the spirit of the war and make them realize the great importance of the American Red Cross; and it might be a good idea for you to make this suggestion through the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to various other manufacturers where people of foreign parentage are employed.

"Respectfully submitted,
"ROTHACKER FILM MFG. CO.,
"(Signed) W. R. ROTHACKER,
"President."

Exposé and Expositions

THE calling off of the proposed Exposition at Boston will be a matter of profound satisfaction to the great majority of the members of the industry.

Expositions were never wanted. The opposition to the one this year is really no greater than it has been in the past. Expositions have never paid those who paid for them. The advertising results are not only negative but, in the opinion of many, detrimental to the best interests of the motion picture. They have proven to be exposé rather than expositions.

The holding of one this year is certainly not in accord with public opinion. Business conventions are quite another matter. Expositions, especially on the carnival order of every single one thus far held by the industry are now and certainly should be taboo.

It is unfortunate that the definite opposition taken at the eleventh hour by the manufacturers did not develop earlier. It should have. We believe, furthermore, that in the case of every previous exposition the consensus of manufacturers' opinion has been decidedly against them. Why conceal this feeling?

In the present instance, however, the New England Exhibitors were led enthusiastically to boost their exposition plans, and despite their reimbursement of funds expended it will be difficult and embarrassing for them to undo their work—perhaps too difficult and embarrassing.

We have every faith in their sincerity of purpose as ably set forth by their representative, Mr. A. S. Black, of Maine.

Their sacrifice, however, will be a boon to the whole industry if the exposition lapse this year will become permanent—or at least continue until that time when we are prepared to depart from every single standard thus far observed and hold an exposition that will be a credit to the industry and a satisfactory return to those who bear the financial burden.

Serving It With Speed and Ginger

GOSH, but it's ten days since the last issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS came bouncing from the press!

It seems like ten weeks, so much has happened. Every time the typewriters in the editorial department stopped clicking our ears caught rumblings that indicated a couple of extra pages of copy arriving in the advertising department. Every time we turned around some new bit of news popped up.

Summer is over, as far as the picture business is concerned. Fall is here, as far as the picture business is concerned.

Things may have been slow for a few months past, but that has passed. If there is a studio or distributing office that isn't humming with redoubled activity, that doesn't look forward with smiles to the Fall, then we don't know its address.

That's the lesson of the last ten days which is told in this week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS—and watch for next week's—and the next.

Who says that educators are a poorly paid lot?

E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Film Corporation, is sporting a new "Stutz" these days. If that's poverty give us a job editing pawn tickets.

But then, Hammons is the man who took the sting out of "education" a long time ago—and put money into it, for himself and for exhibitors.

* * * *

ADOLPH ZUKOR'S aggregation was first to come to bat with announcements giving the keynote touch of "Prosperity" to the Fall outlook.

With the complete and detailed announcements for the year that are given between the covers of this week's NEWS there isn't much left for a commentator to say regarding the Paramount-Artcraft plans.

Only this: Adolph Zukor probably realizes as well as we do that he has set for his organization a program that is breath-taking at the first glance. And Adolph Zukor realizes equally well that he has an organization loyal and brainy enough to prompt to any heights of ambition.

And that doesn't refer to the producing end; that gets its share of bouquets in the ordinary course of events. We are aiming our words at the "boys" who hang their hats at 485 Fifth Avenue.

Had a call from R. R. Nehls of the American Company this week. He pulled the usual Chicago trick—stole into town quietly, gumshoed energetically about his business affairs for nine days, and then dropped in just as he was about to leave town and had time only for a "Hello!"

These Chicago boys sure don't take any chances of being side-tracked by the Wild, Wild Men of Gotham.

OTHER producers came to the front with deeds that crowd into this page this week.

Vitagraph with the announcement of a year's complete serial campaign that deserves attention. There's interest in the fact that Vitagraph is going in so strongly for the serial proposition, and further interest in the fact that exhibitors are given a complete year's outline at a glance.

Goldwyn, after announcing plans for a doubled output the next year, offer two pages of advertising copy this week that are as interesting as anything in the next section could possibly be to any exhibitor.

The two pages consist of a signed statement from Samuel Goldfish that don't even bear the fingerprint of a press agent. For sincere, straight-from-the-shoulder film talk, we commend them to you.

Goldwyn, by the way, is expected to have some further big policy announcements to make as we near the company's anniversary.

Isn't he some boy for his age?

* * * *

A call in "Doc" Shallenberger's office disclosed a shop humming with preparations for the exploitation of "The Finger of Justice." Recent additions preparatory to the drive are J. J. Raymond—we gave you our high opinion of J. J. on this page a few months ago—and our old friend "Eddie" Corbett.

We'd give you our opinion of "Eddie" also only these publicity men never believe the nice things we say about them. They suspect us of having ulterior—a synonym for "advertising"—motives.

IT seems as though we can't get through talking about the producers this week. If we are not careful the boss will accuse us of sharing the press agents' salaries.

[No, that wasn't the voice of The Rewrite Man you heard saying, "I'm the one who oughter."]

Getting back to our subject: Metro steals its share of the limelight by collaborating with our Exhibitors' Service Bureau in an exploitation supplement on "To Hell with the Kaiser."

And Fox crowds in for another page heading through the glorious windup of the Exchange Managers' Convention.

Which reminds us of a thought we often have:

We wonder if William Fox and Winfield Sheehan, looking over the crackerjack organization that now carries the Fox banner, ever find time for a smile over the days when there was a company called Box Office Attractions.

And the "wise guys" used to say, "Wonder how long that fellow Fox is going to last?"

Has he lasted?

Well, boy!!

Get out the soup and fish, gentlemen. It's next Wednesday night. Second annual dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. At Delmonico's. Seven bells. Seven bucks.

Don't blame us if you miss the big event—we've done our share.

"Service" is our motto.

THERE'S a corking lot of news this week in the activities of the Committee on Public Information.

Uncle Sam surely is showing that he is not a piker as a film man.

Read about his latest doings on Page 3863.

And then see if you don't agree with us in our hunch that the motion picture field is pretty apt to hold out strong inducements to remain within the fold to this man Charles Hart when peace signals the end of his present work.

We can use a few of those fellows who say little—but saw a devil of a lot of wood.

"THE best article on advertising I ever read!"

That's what the boss said to us after reading the S. Barrett McCormick contribution to this week's Exhibitor Service Bureau.

And the boss has been "some punkins" as an advertising man himself.

So, to the editorial on the opposite page we add this "urge" to make a note of Page 3886.

Watch the South : : : : :

By W. A. Bach

MOTION picture men will do well to watch developments in the Southern states of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and Mississippi, all of which are due to benefit greatly by the huge shipbuilding program made necessary by the war.

During the past year there has been a tremendous demand for ships, and the South is now busy handling them. Four hundred million dollars' worth of ships, including warships, are now being constructed in the South, which is the greatest total in its history.

In Maryland there are four hundred thousand tons of shipping being built at the cost of $75,000,000. At Newport News, Virginia, $100,000,000 worth of ships are under way, which gives employment to about 8,000 men, while Quantico and Norfolk have become great shipbuilding centers. The Government is contemplating a concrete vessel plant at Wilmington, North Carolina, which is at present doing its bit along the lines of shipbuilding. Charleston, South Carolina, is building steel steamships, and a marine railway is being built there at the navy yard.

Savannah, Georgia, has contracted with the French Government to build steel mine sweepers totalling over forty-five million. New shipbuilding companies are operating in Brunswick and Darien, Georgia, and also at Jacksonville, Fernandina, Bagdad, Pensacola, Tampa and Tarpon Springs, in Florida.

Mobile, Alabama, will probably be the largest shipbuilding port in the country. The United States Steel Corporation will employ twenty-five thousand skilled and highly paid workmen. The largest dry dock on the Gulf Coast is being constructed at Mobile by the United States Government for the repair of Government vessels. Even Louisville, Kentucky, is building rivercraft. At Fairfield, Alabama, $15,000,000 is being spent in providing shipbuilding steel for Mobile and other Southern shipyards. Pascagoula and Biloxi, Mississippi, will also do their bit in the shipbuilding program. At Madisonville, Louisiana, and in Texas, Houston, Beaumont, Orange, Galveston and other ports, steel ships are being built.

New Orleans, being practically unable to build ships on her river front, is building a shiplock on the river front, and also a fixed level ship basin to connect the Mississippi with the Gulf of Mexico.

These shipyards will need thousands of men to carry on the work, which will naturally mean a tremendous increase in the South's population; it will also mean millions of dollars coming to the South to defray the expenses of payroll and many others. It is estimated that through this single industry the population of Mobile alone will be increased about 100,000.

In some isolated portions of the South a temporary success of the Sunday closing faction has so dampened the spirit of motion picture exhibitors that they think their business is ruined. The welfare of our industry is dependent basically upon the progress and prosperity of the country as a whole.

It is impossible for the motion picture industry of the South to face a period of depression, when one industry alone is bringing to her states a wonderful influxion of men, money and material.

My advice is WATCH THE SOUTH.

That Sales-less Salesmen Question

BY MARK GOLDMAN

Manager of the Seattle Bee-Hive Exchange

I READ with a great deal of interest Mr. John W. Semler's article entitled "Truth Sells Pictures" in the June 8th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

It is really surprising that this subject has not come up before and in my opinion Mr. Semler should be given a vote of thanks, not only by real firm salesmen, but by hundreds of other salesmen in other lines of business, who perhaps have or do have an ambition to enter the motion picture industry.

A copy of "Truth Sells Pictures" should be mailed to every sales manager in the motion picture business.

The article struck me so forcibly that I am really writing from an experience which happened the first time I tried to enter into a business in which I saw a great future.

I had been a successful salesman and manager of a large sales promotion company and had to my credit eight years of success in my particular line of business. The disappointments and trouble I met in entering the picture business would have disgusted the average man and he would have willingly turned his endeavors to most any other line of business.

Upon entering the office of a manager of the motion picture industry, invariably the first question that will be put to you is "Have you ever had film experience?" and questions along those lines, and naturally a fellow would have to reply in the negative. No matter what success you may have acquired in other lines as a salesman and what ability you have seems to be of no consequence. The mere fact that you are not conversant with the film industry seems to preclude the possibility of your ever entering this field and proving a success.

The sooner the film industry recognizes the fact that film salesmen can be made if the man has the material in him to work with, just the sooner will we rid ourselves of the "rolling stone" variety. The usual remark now-a-days when a salesman enters an office of an exhibitor is "Well, what line of features are you selling this week—what concern are you working with now?" etc. Common sense would tell you that there is no confidence to be placed in a man who is changing his position every two or three months, yet in the past and even now this seems to be the kind of a man the film people want. I ask in all sincerity, where is there another industry that changes salesmen as often as the film business?

What this business needs is more sincerity. Film corporations need to get the material in a man, work with it, bring it out, train him to know his own goods: Keep the motto "Know Your Own Goods" before him constantly. Train him to do business in such a way that you will feel reasonably sure that your salesman can always go back over his territory and secure future bookings.

If the men at the head of these organizations would let a little new blood in and absorb some of the ideas of energetic bright young men, they would prove more beneficial than sticking and adhering to the old worn routine. Never send a salesman away that has ambitions without hearing what he has to say and his general idea of things. The fellow may have some wonderful ideas that you probably would have thought about had you not been so absorbed in other lines of work: yet this fellow's idea may make you money, don't think him a fool because he has an idea—find out what it is and act on it if it will prove to your advantage to do so.

The Other Side of the Fence

BY H. E. JAMESON

Ninth Cadet Squadron, Camp Dick, Texas

IS film salesmen humans?

Damphool exhibitors in unison:

"No, they is crooks."

The word "damphool" is used advisedly. It does not include all exhibitors, or even a small percentage of them—but only those scattering few who are so devoid of intelligence, perspicacity, and honesty, that they believe or pretend to believe all that they are told by a film man.

Time and again I have been asked by exhibitors whether I didn't think that such and such a line of films were the best. These questions invariably were asked so that the salesman was expected to answer that the particular line—always a competitor's—was the best.

A film man is paid to sell films. His employer expects him to "deliver the goods." He would be a traitor to the man who pays his salary if he did not at all times stand securely upon the merits of his own goods and exploit them to the utmost.

An exhibitor rises in great wrath because a salesman sold him a picture that he didn't get as much business upon as he should have gotten. If that exhibitor had ordinary business sense he would have known approximately what to expect. Florida merchants don't buy mackinaws, but show me the salesman that wouldn't sell them if the merchant was "damphool" enough to buy them.

I have seen dozens of exhibitors make a "helluva holler" because they fell down on a picture that the salesman boosted

THE READER HAS HIS SAY

Exhibitor Patterson Claims Prices Are Too High—Wants Readjustments Made

Exhibitor W. C. Patterson, of the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., has addressed an open letter to producers of America, through Motion Picture News, which is self-explanatory. It follows:

TO THE MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS OF AMERICA:

Conditions in the motion picture business in the United States are such that an adjustment is imperative, if many of the first-class houses are to keep alive. Exorbitant charges for first-run pictures and reprehensible practices are responsible for these conditions. Since the United States entered the world war, prices of all commodities have increased, but the charges for first-run pictures have for years been too high. Unnecessarily high salaries paid to stars is responsible, in a large measure, for this tax upon the pockets of exhibitors and the producers, of course, are to blame. There are many actors and actresses who are not drawing star salaries that are fully competent to play star roles, but producers appear to have an idea that the "star's the thing," while as a matter of cold fact, the "play's the thing." It is true there are some stars whose names are a great drawing card, but how often do we see these same stars in pictures that are mediocre, to say the very least. Unless these stars are presented in consistently good pictures they will cease to be stars, because the public will not accept bad pictures no matter who is featured. This is a fact borne out by box-office evidence—the most convincing in the world.

Then, again, every producer thinks HIS picture is bigger and better than any other on the market, and when the house manager takes it it usually is with a demand from the producer that an increased admission price be charged during the presentation of this particular film. This demand, if met, frequently plays havoc with the house patronage because people resent sudden increases in prices and the "back-fire" usually is detrimental to the best interests of the theatre.

So much for the high price of pictures. Now for the practices which should be ended, and that, too, as speedily as possible. The first-run theatres are carrying the burden of the motion picture business. They are the houses from which the producers make their money. In the first-run houses it is necessary that the most careful advertising campaigns be mapped out, the best facilities and knowledge of the managers be used to give the production everything it should receive, and the big gamble takes place in the first-run house. Now, is it fair and square to make these first-run theatres pay exorbitant rentals for pictures and then turn right around and let a competing house have the same pictures for a very much smaller rental? That is what happens all the time in this business. The manager of the first-run house pays top price for his picture and in sixty or ninety days—sometimes less—his competitor just down the street begins showing the same picture for five or ten cents.

I have stood outside my house and heard the following conversation, or one similar to it, not once, but many times: "This looks like a good picture," says the girl, "let's go in."

"Oh, what's the use?" replies the man. "We can see the same picture in a couple of weeks at the Blank theatre down the street for a dime."

And they walk off, maybe going into a five-cent house several doors away. And what the man said was absolutely true. Had he known, however, that he would never be able to see the picture at a lower price, the chances are one hundred to one he would have gone into the theatre.

Would it not be a splendid idea if a house manager could advertise the fact that the motion picture that he shows in his particular theatre would never be shown at a less price?

Now, there should be a remedy for the conditions which I have outlined in the foregoing. We go into a cigar store and buy 5, 10 and 15-cent cigars. We do not expect to get 15-cent cigars several weeks later for 5 or 10 cents. They are standard goods. The same is true of hats and other articles of daily use. There are Stetson, Young and Knox hats, and when we go into a store for any one of these makes we expect to pay a certain price—no more, no less. There is no reason why the film industry should not be patterned after successful commercial enterprises. Therefore, if the motion picture business is to be a staple business, denuded of most of the elements of chance, then it will have to be put on a different footing. The producers should make standard goods. Let them make 15-cent pictures, 10-cent pictures and 5-cent pictures, and let them be shown in houses that make a feature of each style.

It is unjust to make the first-run houses carry all the burden. Let the other houses do their part. It is up to the producers, and unless they liven up to the situation they are apt to find that they have been responsible for the demise of the goose that laid the well-known golden egg.

I am at present operating a successful first-run motion picture theatre and realize that there are several arguments, pro and con, regarding the foregoing. However, I do feel that when we get a motion picture production with a set price on it, to be presented at a set price, and when the public finds out that it will never be shown at a less price, then our business will be better, and we will be more able to cope with the producer whose expenses are going up just the same as the exhibitor's.

W. C. PATTERSON,
Manager, Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE!

IF one were to pause long enough to shower sympathy upon anyone in the industry, it should be upon the exchange man, thinks George W. Erdmann of the Cleveland Four-square office.

"Running an exchange is just one series of accidents after another," Mr. Erdmann is said to have remarked.

As an example, an innocent bystander cites: Two of the prints of "The Eagle's Eye," sixth episode, caused trouble for six weeks. One of them suddenly disappeared on the 10th of April and returned as suddenly on the 16th of May, stamped "lost in transit." Another print got identified with a fire in a projection room and was returned to the exchange beyond recognition.

Of course, the average exchangeman has other troubles, too, but for gameness there is none in any branch of the industry to beat him. If films don't get torn, they either get lost, are stolen or get burned.

But, with the patience of Job, the exchanges continue to grind out an existence.

Scenario Writer Wields Pen Against "Swelled-Head" Authors—They Make Him Sore

The following grievance is from a scenario writer, whose name we cannot publish without violating the confidence in which he unfolded the tale to us. But, anyway, he admits these "swelled-head" authors make his blood boil. This is the little incident he tells about:

"Have you ever seen a moving picture?" sneeringly asked the quite well-known magazine author.

Several heads nodded and faces beamed with admiring awe. Words of sage-like wisdom were dropping. None must fail to grasp their hidden meaning. For came they not from ONE WHO KNEW?

It happened one afternoon last week when a conference of editors, authors and contributing writers was called by the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A.

The object was wholly worthy, sincere and fine. The Y. M. C. A. in its broad field of activities among the soldiers abroad is sending to the cantonments, huts and dugouts in France, some of the best manhood of America and the brotherhood displayed among the Y. M. C. A. workers is undeniable.

In line with this work the association is sending to the boys a series of entertainments in the form of lectures, "talks" and stories, illustrated by lantern slides. It was to edit and rewrite this material that the conference was called.

Some one, there being about a dozen present, who represented some of the magazines, as well as the authors, suggested calling upon the moving picture authors.

The quite well-known author made the remark already quoted.

And because he is QUITE well known, his words had the sound as a prophet speaking.

There was one present who "biled" inwardly. But because of certain connections he was forced to remain silent. He has in the past been a scenario writer and a scenario editor, and was for a long time the editor of what was the largest moving picture company in the trade.

So, when the Q. W. K. author turned up the nasal appendage and curved the lips downward, with the blithesome query: "Did any one ever see a moving picture?" there flashed to the mind of the former M. P. editor and author, the scores of stories which had been submitted to him by WORLD-FAMED magazine and book authors. Not merely by the Q. W. K. variety. And he recalled some of the stories from such celebrities which had been bought by his company, just because they were written by the Fam-Ed Ones. And the Fame turned to Famine, as far as box-office results applied to exhibitors or producers.

A man does not have to have a world-renowned reputation to write a wholesome, appealing and dramatic plot.

And as to the query: "Has any one ever seen a moving picture?"

Answer: Yes. A few million Americans see such stories every day and every night in the year. A few more million, in fact, more than ever have or ever will read anything that the Q. W. K. author has ever produced from his fer-t-i-l-e brain, or ever will produce or ever could produce.

'Nuff said!

We hope the Q. W. K. author reads this. We will give him the opportunity if the the Motion Picture News will give us the chance.

The Other Side of the Fence

their own particular situation they would have probably found that the picture was not entirely suitable for their use.

As to the use of superlatives by a salesman. Let me tell you, Mr. Editor, the exhibitor by his actions forces a salesman to use them. The salesman who has the "guts" to say a particular picture is only fair is a rare bird and his sales reports are low.

Why is it that the salesmen get hell for telling an exhibitor that the picture is the "greatest," "most extraordinary," etc., etc., when every one of these kickers and "sore heads" use the same words in their ads. Call it misrepresentation if you wish, but let me tell you the salesman that misrepresents a picture to an exhibitor whose business it is to know better, is not nearly so bad as the man who foists on the deaf, unsuspecting public an assinine "piece of cheese."

I have seen films in seven different states. I have scores of friends among my customers. In the great majority of cases the men I sold knew what they wanted. They had brains enough to pick what they knew had a good chance for a successful showing. If they did make a mistake, partly on account of the over-zealousness of the seller, and partly because of their own lack of foresight, they threw their cards back in the deck and didn't "beef about it." For the most part, they had "guts" and "backbone," were good sports, and men.

Some time I expect to resume my occupation of selling films, which I consider just as honorable as exhibiting them. Some day I expect to be again classed with the several hundred able, honest, and dêcent men who are now selling films in America. Many an exhibitor owes in no small way his success to the help and assistance rendered him by these purveyors of celluloid amusement. And let me tell you I will be just as proud of my occupation as I am of the one that I am now engaged in.

Mammoth New Studio for Thomas H. Ince on Coast

(Special to Motion Picture News)

Los Angeles.—Motion Picture News is able to make first announcement that the plans have been completed for a mammoth new studio to house the Thomas H. Ince producing forces at Culver City, near here.

The plans have been in preparation for a number of weeks, but have been held up pending negotiations for other studios. It is now proposed to have the new producing home ready for occupancy in ninety days.

The plant will be the last word in producing efficiency. Each stage will be fitted with projection rooms, where directors during wait may view their rushes. In connection there will be film cutting rooms and editing departments, where the director may do his work on one subject while staging another.

The entire plant will be built in the Southern Colonial style of architecture, with the main administration building facing on Washington Boulevard. The grounds comprise eleven acres, giving plenty of room for any later necessary enlarging of activities.

The location of the new plant will be similar to that of the Triangle plant built by Ince, but two miles nearer Los Angeles.

Diando Studios Suffer Loss by Fire

(Special to Motion Picture News)

Los Angeles.—Fire of unknown origin destroyed eight thousand dollars' worth of negative in the vaults of the Diando Studios at Glendale on Saturday, June 15.

The fire was discovered by W. A. S. Douglas, who, with Studio Manager John English, carried out a great quantity of raw stock and negative, saving it from the fire. Both were painfully burned.

Sunday Closing Agitation in Ohio

While the recent decision of the Ohio Supreme Court upholding the Sunday closing law has not resulted in shutting down theatres in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo, Dayton, Springfield and other cities, it has already caused a renewal of "crank" agitation in small centers.

At Fostoria Managers H. E. Mickey and Arthur Buck have been placed under arrest for giving Sunday shows and a test case will be made. Mayor Eidt of Tiffin has closed the picture theatres, despite petitions opposing the move.

Operators Ask Fire Prevention Law

It became known on June 19 that the motion picture operators of New York have petitioned the Board of Aldermen to pass an ordinance for their protection and that of patrons by making the exhibitors use a device on projecting machines to prevent fire. An ordinance has been introduced, it is said, and a hearing will probably be held on it this week.

Mastbaum Memorial Building

Various motion picture men, according to announcements from Philadelphia last week, planned to journey to Eaglesville, near Morristown, on June 23 for the purpose of participating in the exercises attendant upon the dedication of the Stanley V. Mastbaum Memorial Building on the grounds of the Eaglesville Sanatorium.

Paul C. Mooney will be district manager of Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Cincinnati, and Clyde W. Eckhardt will have charge of Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Minneapolis and Salt Lake City. George Mann will supervise the territory embracing Los Angeles and San Francisco, and Harry F. Campbell will continue as district manager of Boston and New England. Albert W. Eden is made district manager of Seattle and the Northwest, and Vincent McCabe remains as district manager of Toronto, Montreal and St. John, N. B.

Davis Rests Preparatory to Hard Work

H. O Davis, production adviser of the Triangle Film Corporation, was last week in the midst of preparations for a trip to the California mountains for a rest before resuming his activities in connection with Triangle productions. This brief vacation, it is understood, was decided upon by the production chief because he has gone six years without one, and feels that it is high time to grasp time by the forelock and rest up a bit in order that future pictures may receive the full benefit of his renewed energy.

Boston "Expo." Off and On Again

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Industry held Wednesday night, June 19, it was voted to dispense with the Exposition scheduled to be held in connection with the Boston Convention of the M. P. E. L. of America on July 13 to 20.

Developments Thursday indicated that the New England exhibitors would go through strongly with the plans for an Exposition of their own—despite the Association.

Wm. A. Brady presided.

Secretary Elliott presented correspondence and minutes relative to the Exposition question for 1918. Letters from several prominent manufacturers were read and statements were made by others present indicating their opposition to the holding of an exposition in view of the war situation and present conditions within the industry.

In the discussion that followed the point was raised that a definite agreement had been reached between the manufacturers and exhibitors on the holding of the Exposition and that the matter of good faith, if not a valid contract was involved.

A. S. Black of Rockland, Me., speaking in behalf of the New England exhibitors stated that over $8,000 had already been raised by them and expended in the work preliminary to the holding of the Exposition in Boston.

After it was voted to call off the Exposition it was understod that the manufacturers would reimburse the New England exhibitors for the moneys expended.

Frank Marion gave an interesting statement on the success had by American motion pictures abroad in defeating German .propaganda and maintaining the morale of the Allied armies.

Chicago Plans to Kill Funkhouserism

A new plan has been advanced in the Chicago City Councils for relieving the city and the film business there of the plague of Funkhouser. Funkhouser, of course, is now under temporary suspension and out of the way on charges other than arbitrary censoring of films, but the new plan is proposed as a preventative should he or any others of his ilk get into power again. The fundamental idea back of it is to eliminate one-man censorship.

At the request of Alderman John Coughlin, Assistant Corporation Counsel Frank Ayers drew up an ordinance providing for a department of censorship to include three censors and nine subordinate censors. It further provides that the censors be appointed by the Mayor with the approval of Councils and that they serve two years. They are to receive salaries of $4,000 a year, and to have authority to employ all the clerical help necessary, according to the ordinance.

A principal censor would be required to be present on all occasions when films were being censored, and in case of disagreement a vote of two of the three would prevail. Mr. Ayers, who drew the ordinance, formerly was a strong supporter of Funkhouser. Alderman Coughlin intends to introduce the ordinance as a substitute for the Maypole amendment that received attention the other week and then was sidetracked to a committee.

Ince Engages Fred Niblo

Fred Niblo, the actor, who recently married Enid Bennett, Ince star in Paramount pictures, has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to act in an advisory capacity, utilizing his knowledge of stagecraft and applying it to screen productions for Paramount. The next Enid Bennett picture to be released by Paramount will be "A Desert Wooing."

Blackton Acquires Stage Play

"Getting Together" Will Be Produced Under Auspices of British-Canadian Recruiting Mission —Kelly Handles Scenario

J. STUART BLACKTON, it became known June 19, has affixed his signature to what is considered a unique contract, by which he not only acquires the screen rights to "Getting Together," patriotic recruiting play produced on the stage in New York, but is also commissioned to transfer it to the screen under the auspices and with the co-operation of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

This war play is the joint work of Major Beith, who has also won fame as Ian Hay, author of "The First Hundred Thousand," and other stories; J. Hartley Manners, the playwright who gave us "Peg o' My Heart," "Out There," and "Happiness," and Percival Knight, the footlight favorite, who is also featured in the stage version with Blanche Bates and Holbrook Blinn.

Commodore Blackton has already engaged Anthony P. Kelly to collaborate with him in elaborating the plot for the screen and to write the scenario. A prominent feminine star, whose name is expected to be announced later, is to be featured in the production.

"Getting Together" was first produced for one week only at the Lyric, where it was acclaimed the most thrilling and entertaining of war plays. After a tour of large Eastern cities it was brought back to New York a few weeks ago for an indefinite run. Presented under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and with the co-operation of the U. S. military and naval forces and the tank "Britannia," it has created great interest at every performance, and in further inspiring the patriotism of its audiences it has induced many recruits to "get together."

Mr. Blackton will be given every co-operation in its screen production. He will have at his command soldiers and sailors, locations and effects rarely available to the film producer. The British-Canadian Recruiting Mission will furnish him numerous war scenes taken under fire at the front and on No Man's Land, to be interpolated in the film.

Commodore Blackton severed his active connection with the Vitagraph Company last July to devote his time to big independent features. His first four under his new plans were "The Judgment House," "The World for Sale" and "Wild Youth," which were founded on Sir Gilbert Parker's stories, and "Missing," adapted from Mrs. Humphry Ward's sensational novel of the war. These features were produced for and are being distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as Paramount subjects.

Distribution plans for "Getting Together" and later Blackton specials will be announced later.

Ruppert Heads Film Company

Is President of Film Clearing House Organized Last Week—Intends to Aid Exchange End of Industry

IT was announced this week, closely following a series of rumors, that Col. Jacob Ruppert, brewer and owner of a baseball club, has been attracted by the possibilities within the motion picture industry and has decided to enter the business as president of the Film Clearing House, recently organized. It is said the purpose of the new organization is to eliminate the vast distributing overhead expenses that are said to make the exchange end of the business unprofitable in too many instances.

Col. Ruppert made this brief statement: "I think I have a plan that will improve the film distributing situation. But it is a little more than a plan. It has already been presented to some of the leading exchange systems and is receiving their serious attention.

"And I am still investigating. Until my investigations have been completed and the entire field sounded, I prefer to say nothing further."

Motion Picture News has been able to learn unofficially, while nevertheless authoritatively, that the Ruppert company plans to consolidate the shipping work of the exchanges—to act as a complete forwarding service to the exhibitor without touching the sales end of the exchange business. Col. Ruppert is said to feel that one "clearing house" in a locality can do the physical portion of the distributing work now accomplished by fifteen to twenty branch exchange offices. He expects to eliminate the necessity for these fifteen to twenty branch offices with his single "clearing house"—at which the sales staff of each exchange system represented will have its separate headquarters. For at no time does Col. Ruppert, according to this information, intend to sell film—just to distribute it! His attention is said to have been originally called to the need of such a clearing house by an item in a trade paper to the effect that one city with thirty theatres had twelve branch exchanges!

Along with exchange systems, independent producers will be represented. Negotiations are pending with three such, who already have arrangements for selling and therefore require distribution only. A temporary office has been opened at 18 East 41st street, New York City. Other officers announced are Fred Dennett, formerly president of the General Film Company, vice-president and general manager, and Col. Ruppert, Asbel P. Fitch and William M. Seabury, directors.

Rumor Busy Again

Reports are current in Los Angeles to the effect that Harry Garson has secured Charles Ray for work under his management, but this report could not be verified. More than a year ago Ray signed with Thomas H. Ince for appearance in Ince-supervised subjects.

Exporters Send Delegation to Washington

Following the second meeting of the New York film exporters at the Hotel Astor on June 13, at which time the organization was officially titled Film Exporters of America, a volunteer committee consisting of six men representing the association journeyed to Washington and met with various heads of the War Trade Board, Bureau of Public Information and Customs Bureau.

Their report was received favorably at the meeting in New York, June 20, when officers of the association were permanently elected. The committee included Paul H. Cromelin, P. A. Powers, Reginald Warde, Millard Johnson, Sidney Garrett and David P. Howells. A lengthy statement addressed by Mr. Cromelin to the Division of Customs, repeated the several points which have given the exporters greatest concern, and expressed the belief that the Division would put in force such administrative rules as would work the least hardship upon the export business.

At the meeting of the exporters on June 13, Dr. W. E. Shallenberger was elected temporary treasurer to complete the temporary officers already chosen. Permanent officers were to be elected June 20.

British Embargo Raised

Cable from London last week carried the news that the embargo which had been placed on films of American manufacture has been greatly modified, and approved films will be sent into England under a special license. The embargo is said to have threatened British motion picture houses with failure.

From some quarters it was reported that the Board of Trade officials thought the reels on which film is wound were the same size as they appeared on the screen. They contended that articles of such size would require too much cargo space in transit. Later, the officials were shown the exact size of American reels, and the change in the embargo was made.

Brady and Powers Appeal to Washington

Representatives of the motion picture industry appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee, June 18, to present their argument against an increase in the admission tax now in force, and appealed for a change in the law making vaudeville managers subject to the capitalization tax.

William A. Brady said that the business could not stand a heavier burden than the 10 per cent. admission tax, and that a greater tax would bring ruin to many exhibitors and others in the industry. He made it clear that the Government could not hope to profit by bringing this about.

P. A. Powers, of Universal, asked that the quarter-of-a-cent-per-foot tax on unexposed films, and the half-cent tax on exposed films, be abolished and that a tax of 3 per cent on the rental of films be substituted. He cited where this would result the same for the Government as the present tax.

U. S. Film Division Makes Vast Plans

Pathe to Distribute Official Allied News Pictures in This Country —Men Sent Abroad to Arrange for Their Showing There

VAST enlargements of the work being done by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information became known this week with announcements from the office of Director Charles S. Hart. They include the distribution of official war pictures not only in this country, but also in the allied nations and eventually in the neutral countries.

H. C. Hoagland, Lucian C. Wheeler and Charles F. Van Arsdale, all prominent in the film world, are to go abroad to open offices for the distribution of all the committee's official pictures. The general headquarters will be established in Paris under the direction of Mr. Hoagland, and a branch will be opened in London with Mr. Wheeler in charge. Other branches are to be opened in Spain, Portugal, Italy and Switzerland and Holland.

Pathe Distributes News Pictures

At the same time announcement was made that the "Allies' Official War Review" will be distributed in this country by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The first release is to be on July 1, and it will contain exclusive pictures taken on the American, British, French and Italian fronts, and will portray the war activities of all the Allied nations.

The fact has already been published that Universal Film Manufacturing Company has been chosen as the organization for the distribution of a series of single reel features on "The Wonders of Our War Work," one of which is to be put out every two weeks. It is understood that other companies will be the distributors of still other pictures made under the direction of the Division of Films, but definite announcement is withheld until the final arrangements have been made.

Just as the films distributed in this country are intended to acquaint the people with exactly what this country is doing in the war, the films for the Allied and European countries are intended to disseminate the same information abroad. These pictures will give the Europeans a clear idea of the attitude of this country toward Germany and the war in general.

Will Coordinate Work

In addition to this distribution work the three men who have been detailed for service abroad will coordinate the activities of the United States Signal Corps with the Division of Films. General Pershing is to provide pictures from the front showing the people just what is transpiring from day to day, and these will be shown in the foreign countries as well as here.

Mr. Hoagland, who will be in charge of the work abroad, was for several years general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company and later assistant general manager for Pathe, going from that company to his present post.

Mr. Wheeler was with the United States Secret Service for fourteen years, acting as personal attendant to Presidents Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson, and leaving that position three years ago to go to the Selig Company. Mr. Van Arsdale was for a number of years assistant sales manager of the H. B. Claflin Company.

Herbert C. Hoagland

The "Allies' Official War Review" is something unique in the history of motion pictures, in that it will be the work of the official camera staffs of the four countries included, and there will be facilities for gathering material that are not possessed by even the official representatives of a single country. These will be up to the minute pictures of events, and prompt action is promised in getting the views into prints and in their distribution.

Director Hart's Announcement

Details of the distribution plans are announced in the following letter from Director Hart:

"This letter is officially to announce to you that the distribution of the 'Allies' Official War Review,' issued weekly, presented by the Committee on Public Information through this Division, has been awarded to Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"The award was made on a competitive basis, the greater percentage of money taken in returns by this Division to be used by it for the production and distribution of film information, a vitally essential factor in helping to win the war.

"The rental prices charged to exhibitors will be approved by the Director of the Division of Films. Such cooperation between this committee and Pathe will insure a charge that is in every way a reasonable one.

"This information presents the mathematically certain conclusion that there can be no commercialism in the handling of the 'Allies' Official War Review,' and gives assurance to exhibitors who are showing these patriotic films."

Virginia Exhibitors Meet in Richmond

The second annual convention of the American Exhibitors' Association of Virginia was held in Grays Armory, Richmond, June 13, 14 and 15, with Acting Chairman C. E. Georghegan presiding instead of President Jake Wells, who had been indisposed for several days. Only two sessions were held and very little business transacted, though from a social and financial point of view the meeting was a big success.

Two new officers were elected, Mrs. A. E. Thorpe, one of the proprietors of the local Bluebird Theatre, being elected vice-president, while Harry Bernstein, manager for Jake Wells' Colonial, succeeds Chesley Toney as secretary. Upon motion of Mr. Ostericher, Petersburg exhibitor, the convention decided to create a "Censor Board," consisting of five members, the duty of which will be to censor and pass on all doubtful subjects. On account of the small number of delegates in attendance, there being only twenty-five, an adjourned meeting will be held at Ocean View August 25 and 26, at which time new officers, board of directors, executive and legislative committees will be appointed.

Mayor George Ainslie formally welcomed the exhibitors as well as the other visitors who attended the opening sessions Thursday night. He commended the educational work of the picture men who are using their screens to help the Government, and at the same time giving the people of the State pictures that are clean and wholesome. He lauded the example set by the exhibitors who are censoring their own films.

Quite a number of the screen luminaries from leading manufacturers attended the ball Saturday night, including Edith Storey, June Elvidge, Madge Evans, Lillian Walker, Marguerite Courtot, Rose Tapley, Marguerite Snow and King Baggot, several of whom it was said journeyed across the continent to be here.

Among the producers who had booths were Paramount, Artcraft, Metro, First National Exhibitors', Super-Features, World, Select, and the Nicholas Power Company, who displayed one of their latest machines.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Advertisers Condemn Re-Titles

Twenty Members of Association Discuss Question and Resolve That Practice Is Injurious—Letter Read from Rowland

THE question of reissuing the motion picture features of yesteryear under new titles, which has been threshed out so fully pro and con in the trade press of late was taken up by the Associate Motion Picture Advertisers at the meeting held on Thursday, June 13, at Keen's Chop House.

The association was represented by twenty of its members who unanimously placed themselves on record as opposed to the practice. The question came up for discussion, following the consideration of plans for the forthcoming second annual banquet to be held on the evening of Wednesday, June 26, at Delmonico's.

C. W. Barrell, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, brought the matter to the attention of the association.

After brief and pointed remarks in condemnation of such unethical methods of foisting old goods upon the public under new labels, John C. Flinn, director of publicity and advertising for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, introduced the following resolution, which was seconded by Nat Rothstein, advertising manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Julian Solomon, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Harry Reichenbach of the National Film Corporation:

RESOLVED: That the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., emphatically place themselves on record as condemning the practice in the motion picture industry of publishing and advertising re-issued features under different titles than those by which they were first shown to the public.

This resolution was passed by a unanimous vote from those present; and Paul Gulick, chairman of the publicity committee, was instructed by President Arthur James to give the matter the widest possible publicity in the trade press.

During his remarks on the question, Mr. Barrell read a letter from the president of the Metro Pictures Corporation to J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

This letter, from one of the most progressive and astute film heads in America, was liberally applauded by the members of the association, and was one of the clinching arguments that drove home the necessity of taking prompt action against the continuance of questionable advertising in the moving picture industry.

A resolution was also made by Allan Rock, of the Eagle Syndicate, seconded by C. W. Barrell and P. A. Parsons of Pathe, and unanimously carried by the body, directing the officials of the association to bring the previous resolution to the attention of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, with the suggestion that the members of that organization take similar action.

Horstmann Boom in Full Bloom

Candidate for National Presidency of Exhibitors' League Places Faith in New England for Election at Boston Convention

ONE of the pre-convention features of the exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which is scheduled to be held in Boston from July 13 to July 20, inclusive, is the boom, which is now well under way, for Ernest H. Horstmann for the national presidency. The first gun for Horstmann was fired at the recent meeting of the Boosters Booming Boston and has since that time gained widespread attention and at the present time he looms up as probably the most formidable candidate in the field. Mr. Horstmann is well known in Boston and New England and is at present national treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

He is a native of England, having been born in Weston-Super-Mare on February 20, 1869, and received his early education in that country. He came to America in 1890 and settled in New York City, remaining in the metropolis for nearly fifteen years.

Mr. Horstmann's initial advent in the amusement field took place in Lynn in 1906, when he became interested in the penny-in-the-slot machines, or more commonly known in those days as the "penny arcades." His success in this venture was of such proportions that he lost no time opening other arcades in Revere. In the operation of both places Mr. Horstmann was associated with Arthur E. Lord and A. Downing. It was this trio that opened the "Dreamland" of Lynn at about the same time that the now extinct Comique theatre, the Hub's pioneer moving picture theatre, was opened. Not unlike the latter, the "Dreamland" was one of the ground stores converted into a theatre and boasted a seating capacity of 46 seats. Mr. Horstmann is also recorded as having been one of the first to operate a motion picture machine. This experience took place at Asbury Park, N. J., about eighteen years ago. The machine was then called the Vitascope and the film shown was a colored one and did not exceed 20 feet in length. One of the peculiar incidents of this experience was the necessity of employing twelve men to install a massive motor generator in order that the street current might be used.

Yielding to the popularity of the motion pictures, Mr. Horstmann and his partners completed plans for the construction of the Lynn Olympia theatre, which was thrown open to the public on January 25, 1908, with a seating capacity of 1,240 seats. Since that time an additional 1,800 seats have been put into the theatre.

Honor Roll

Eddie Ring Sutherland has joined the Canadian Royal Flying Corp and has already left to take up activities in this branch of the service. He is known in filmdom as a juvenile leading man and also is the nephew of Blanche Ring.

L. R. Scanahorn, who has been salesman for the Paramount and Artcraft programs in Arizona, this week answered the call to the colors, and is now at Camp Kearny near San Diego.

Lasky Comes East—Studios Buzzing with Activity

(Special to Motion Picture News)

Los Angeles.—Jesse Lasky departed Eastward from Los Angeles on Saturday, June 15, after many busy days that left the studios at the busiest pitch they have been in months.

Productions now under way give an index to the elaborate plans of the Famous Players-Lasky organization for the coming years. Two new stars, Lila Lee and Ethel Clayton, are now at work at the producing plant, the former working under the direction of George Melford on an adaptation as yet unnamed for the screen, while Robert Vignola is staging Miss Clayton's first Western-made story for the Paramount program.

Of the Artcraft stars, Mary Pickford is filming "The Mobilization of Johanna," with William D. Taylor directing, while Douglas Fairbanks's new subject has been named "Bound to Morocco." Allan Dwan, who is directing, also wrote the story.

Monte M. Katterjohn, the well-known screen author, has been engaged by Lasky and is at work on subjects in which Wallace Reid will be starred. He has completed the continuity on "The Source," and is now preparing the screen script for "The Man from Funeral Range," adapted from the play, "Broken Threads."

It is declared that negotiations are under way with Ella Hall to play opposite Fred Stone in his first picture. This will give Stone an opportunity to unload his full bag of popular tricks, as it will have a circus atmosphere. Donald Crisp is to direct.

Jap Scenes Bring Trouble to "Woman in Web"

(Special to Motion Picture News)

Los Angeles.—Considerable excitement was caused here by the seizure by Federal Secret Service men of the sixth episode of Vitagraph's serial, "The Woman and the Web," together with all "stills" and prints available. Later explanations smoothed down the flurry and cleared the Vitagraph Company, however.

The trouble was caused when a local Japanese saw the sixth episode in a theatre here and complained to the Federal authorities that the film was seditious, because it showed American sailors fighting Japanese. Government officials, after viewing the entire serial, gave it their approval, merely recommending some eliminations.

Vitagraph Serials in the Next Year

Antonio Moreno Returns and Will Be Co-Starred with Carol Holloway—Their Product to Alternate with Duncan's

FOUR serials a year is to be the policy of Vitagraph hereafter according to an announcement made this week by President Albert E. Smith. This statement also carries the announcement that Antonio Moreno has returned to the Vitagraph Company, and that he is already on his way to the coast to appear in the first serial in which he will be co-starred with Carol Holloway.

Serials with these two players will alternate with two others in which William Duncan is to be the star, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan. The first of the Duncan serials, under the new policy, "A Fight for Millions," will be released on July 15.

Year's Serial Schedule

The serial schedule which has been mapped out by Vitagraph for the coming year is as follows:

July 15, 1918—William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan.

October 21, 1918—Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway.

January 27, 1919—William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan.

May 5, 1919—Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway.

President Smith points out that not only is Vitagraph thus standing by its previously announced policy of "a serial episode for each week in the year," but that it is also affording exhibitors an opportunity to book their serial attractions for fifty-two weeks under a single contract, with the knowledge of the stars and the merit of the pictures in advance.

It is also pointed out that exhibitors are now thoroughly familiar with the class of the Vitagraph serials, and since they know the value of Duncan, Moreno and Miss Holloway as serial stars from the work that they have done in the past, they can make their bookings on definite assurances and no longer have to appear on any chance arrangements to fill their serial demands.

Duncan Finishing Third

William Duncan has appeared in and directed two serials for Vitagraph besides the third which he is now completing. These were "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman," both of which have proven box-office winners in all sections of the country. In both of these pictures Miss Holloway, who is now to co-star with Moreno, shared the honors. Joe Ryan, who also appeared in both of these, and who also has a prominent part in the third, and Edith Johnson, a Vassar girl, who has won screendom by her work in Lubin and Selig productions, will form the strong support for Duncan. In "A Fight for Millions," Miss Johnson takes as many risks as do the men of the company. She rides a horse like a veteran cowboy, and in one of the scenes in the coming picture she makes a parachute leap from a high cliff.

Antonio Moreno's drawing power is known by exhibitors everywhere. He and Edith Storey were one of the most popular pairs on the Vitagraph list, and during the past few months he has established himself with serial audiences as well as having appeared in feature productions. In addition to having an attractive screen personality and ability as an actor, he is one of the leading screen athletes. He is a splendid horseman, a daring automobile pilot, an expert boxer and a wrestler of ability. He won much attention for his work in "The Magnificent Meddler," "The Island of Regeneration," "The Dust of Egypt," "Kennedy Square" and "The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop."

TO THE HEART

First of McCormick's Advertising Articles Appears This Week

FIRST of the articles on motion picture theatre advertising by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, and member of the Advisory Board, appears on Page 3886 of this issue.

"Advertising to the Heart" is the title of it. Mr. McCormick is not only one of the ablest of all the managers of the country, but he is one of the distinctive leaders in advertising. He believes in merchandising his pictures and he has adopted sane and business-getting policies.

Few managers have houses that approach the Circle, but there is not a manager in the country who cannot get a great deal of good from the articles. The basis of them is common sense. Mr. McCormick does not deal in mere theories, but he tells you how to get results.

These articles are worth money to your box office. Turn to the first one and read it now. The second will appear in an early issue.

Miss Holloway Daring

In Carol Holloway, Moreno will have a worthy co-star, because she is known as a girl of unlimited pluck and daring, and is one of the most beautiful girls on the screen, as well as one of its finest horsewomen. Her willingness to take any risk resulted in her being so severely injured in the last episode of "Vengeance—and the Woman," that she has been unable to work for several months. She is now fully recovered, however, and ready to start work on the new serial.

The new serials for both the Duncan-Johnson-Ryan company and the Moreno-Holloway combination were written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, authors of Vitagraph's other big serial successes, but the titles of them have not yet been announced. Mr. Smith promises these titles within a short time, and at the same time states that the serial in which Moreno and Miss Holloway are to star will be entirely different from anything that ever has been done in a serial by Vitagraph or any other company, and that the setting of the story also will be new.

Work on the Moreno-Holloway serial will start as soon as Mr. Moreno arrives in California. He left New York Tuesday on the Twentieth Century Limited, so that production of the serial ought to begin some time during the coming week.

The Duncan Company will start a new serial almost immediately on the completion of "A Fight for a Million."

Fox Standard Pictures in Quebec

A number of Fox Standard Pictures will be presented at the Princess theatre, Brownsburg, Que., it is announced from the Fox offices, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. The arrangement is largely due to the initiative of the executive of the Dominion Cartridge Company, which employs a considerable number of residents at Brownsburg.

The decision to show Fox Standard Pictures for the Y. M. C. A. resulted from the success of the presentation of William Fox's "A Daughter of the Gods" as a benefit for the Canadian Red Cross Society.

Kleine Distributes "The Unchastened Woman"

George Kleine will have the sole distributing rights for the Rialto De Luxe picture "The Unchastened Woman" for all territory outside of Greater New York. "The Unchastened Woman" was a fair success on the speaking stage and has translated so well to the screen there is hardly any doubt but that it will get a lot of money in pictures, according to Mr. Kleine.

Currier with Metro for 40 Weeks

Announcement is made that Frank Currier, one of the best known of character actors, has signed a forty weeks' contract with Metro Pictures Corporation. In August he leaves for the Pacific Coast, where he is to be featured in pictures under the direction of George D. Baker.

Mr. Currier has one of the leading roles in the Screen Classics production of "To Hell with the Kaiser."

Lasky Studio Ball Big Success

Stars Gather to Raise Fund for Folks at Home Who Have Relatives at War—Overflow Crowds in Attendance

MORE than four thousand people responded to the invitation of the Famous Players-Lasky studio to attend a dance and carnival there to raise money for the Folks at Home Fund originated to care for the needy families of former employes who have answered the colors. During the evening more than nine thousand dollars was raised.

Practically every employe of the studio devoted several nights of the past week to working for the carnival and dance, and stars and players from other studios responded to the invitation to help make this the biggest motion picture event of the kind held in Los Angeles.

It was intended the event should primarilly be a dance with music furnished by the Submarine Base training station band and jazz orchestra, with a number of side attractions the guests could visit between dances, but so great were the crowds that the immense amount of floor space set aside for dancing was completely filled. Around the edge of the big open air stage 200 x 400 feet, booths of every description from a fortune teller to a flower shop were to be found. One end of the stage was converted into a cafe where war lunches were served by a score of Japanese girls in charge of Tsuru Oaki, arrangements for this having been made by Mrs. Florence Roberts and Mrs. James O'Neill. Near what was intended to be the dance floor was the western bar presided over by William S. Hart and three of his cowboys with Kathrine McDonald as cashier. Charley Murray was there with Mack Sennett's side show, with a midway of unusual freaks and entertainments, prominent of which were Wiggleville, Roscoe Arkuckle's "Swat The Kaiser," and the "men only" place where garters were fitted on what later proved to be wax figures. Mrs. Frank E. Woods, who has read the fortunes of every star by Astrology, told more than 200 fortunes at a dollar per. Blanche Sweet was a flower girl; Mary O'Connor and Jane Wolff conducted a delicatessen, and Donald Crisp auctioned donations from eight to two. Douglas Fairbanks and Kid McCoy appeared in the squared circle, staging a four-round bout which would have gone the limit if McCoy had not knocked Fairbanks over the ropes and into the swimming pool. Lottie Pickford was the cigarette girl; Molly Malone and Eleanor Fields were newsboys who sold "Studio Stuff," a four-page publication issued by the publicity department composed of Kenneth McGaffey, Adam Shirk and Walter Vogdes. Mary Pickford auctioned off a dance with herhelf, and Clara Kimball Young disposed of the garments she wore including a beautiful Ermine cape by auctioning them off one at a time. Miss Young sold a portion from behind a specially constructed screen. Charles Chaplin was the highest bidder for a flimsy pink creation which he wore away as a muffler, and Elliot Dexter maybe expected to shortly appear as a perfect thirty-six, as he purchased the corsets. D. W. Griffith and Mack Sennett were bidders on everything put up by the auctioneers, and it is estimated the prop rooms of both these producers are now well stocked. C. B. de Mille was chairman of the committee in charge, and Billy Mason served as master of ceremonies.

Hammons Establishes Exchanges

Tom Moore of Washington Also Books Educational Subjects for One Year—Far West Likes Scenics and Animals

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, spent the third week of June in the Middle West on a flying visit to the Educational exchanges. While in Chicago and Detroit Mr. Hammons established new exchanges in those cities, which will ensure a much better distribution of the concern's scenics, travels, animal pictures and cartoon comedies, than has hitherto been possible. Announcement of these exchanges will be made shortly.

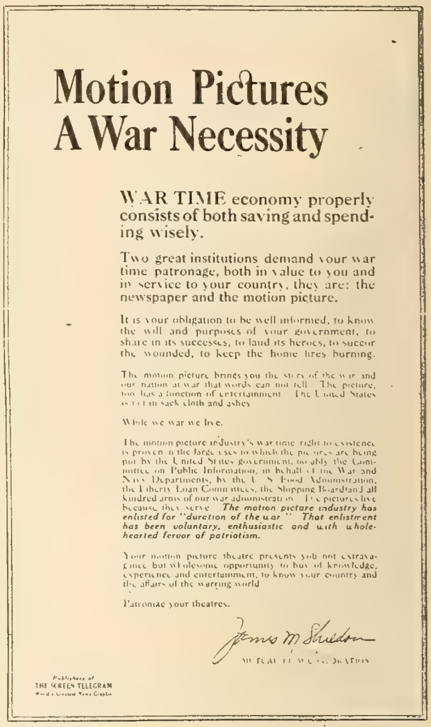
The number of first run houses contracting for Educationals throughout the United States is increasing rapidly. A notable instance is the yearly contract just entered into between Moore's Theatres Corporation of Washington, D. C., and the Educational. All the International cartoon comedies, including the Katzenjammer Kids and Happy Hooligan, will be put on by Tom Moore the first three days of each week at the Garden or the Strand theatre. Mr. Moore herein follows the example of S. L. Rothapfel of the New York Rialto and Rivoli, and Harold Edel of the New York Strand, who have played up Educational films for years.

In the Far West a striking instance of the drawing power of scenic Educationals comes from the Columbia theatre, Portland, Oregon, where "Alaska Wonders in Motion" was booked for a half week, but on account of the enormous demand was carried over to fill the entire week of May 19. In a letter to the exchange, Ralph Ruffner, the manager, says:

"I will regret to see it go, for there still remain nearly 300,000 Portland people who have not seen it. I wish we only had a few more wonder pictures such as this one. It is not a filler in name only; it is a feature 'house-filler' in 500 feet."

At the other end of the wide expanse of territory covered by the Educational's Northwestern exchange in Seattle, comes this message from the Babcock theatre, Billings, Montana:

"We wish to compliment the Northwestern Consolidated Film Corporation on the scenic and animal pictures, as we consider them very fine. Kindly send a one-sheet for each subject and oblige. Very truly yours, A. H. West."



Motion Pictures A War Necessity

WAR TIME economy properly consists of both saving and spending wisely.

Two great institutions demand your war time patronage, both in value to you and in service to your country, they are: the newspaper and the motion picture.

It is your obligation to be well informed, to know the will and purposes of your government, to share in its successes, to laud its heroes, to succor the wounded, to keep the home fires burning.

The motion picture brings you the story of the war and our nation at war that words can not tell. The picture, too has a function of entertainment. The United States is not in sack cloth and ashes.

While we war we live.

The motion picture industry's war time right to existence is proven in the large uses to which the pictures are being put by the United States government, notably the Committee on Public Information, in behalf of the War and Navy Departments, by the U. S. Food Administration, the Liberty Loan Committees, the Shipping Board and all kindred arms of our war administration. The pictures live because they serve. The motion picture industry has enlisted for "duration of the war." That enlistment has been voluntary, enthusiastic and with whole-hearted fervor of patriotism.

Your motion picture theatre presents you not extravagance but wholesome opportunity to buy of knowledge, experience and entertainment, to know your country and the affairs of the warring world.

Patronize your theatres.

Fox Film Convention Sets New Mark

Was Voted Most Successful and Enthusiastic of Any So Far Held by Fox Forces—Patriotism Is Keynote of All Conferences—Entertainment Provided BRANCH managers and executives of the Fox Film Corporation of this country and Canada and other foreign countries returned this week to their homes after concluding the business of the fourth annual convention of the Fox Film Corporation at the Hotel Biltmore. The convention was voted the most successful and enthusiastic of any so far held by the Fox forces.

Nearly a week was consumed by the managers in discussing the problems and policy of the Fox Film Corporation, and each session was marked by patriotism and business enthusiasm. More than 150 branch and district managers and executives, representing eight different countries, besides the United States, were in attendance.

At the business sessions the problems that had arisen during the last year were taken up and discussed in detail, and the policy of the Fox Film Corporation during the year to come was outlined and thoroughly debated.

Fox Acts As Host

Aside from the business sessions, which were held twice daily, from Monday to Friday, at the Biltmore Hotel, there were several entertainments for the visitors. Monday night Mr. Fox was host to his managers at the Winter Garden, Tuesday night he entertained them at a beefsteak dinner at Murray's, and Wednesday night the men attended "Business Before Pleasure" at the Eltinge and the Midnight Revue at the Century Grove.

An announcement by Mr. Fox that there are now 312 Fox employes in the service of the country was greeted with prolonged cheering, as was Mr. Fox's statement that the company must make more money this year so that the Government can thereby collect more money in taxes.

At the closing session of the convention Friday, the managers presented to Mr. Fox a beautifully illuminated resolution expressing their pride in Mr. Fox's patriotic efforts during the past year.

The resolution, which was presented by Harry F. Campbell, of Boston, New England district manager, was done in brilliant colors, and across the top bore a group, in colors, of the flags of the United States and the Allies. The resolution, which was enclosed in a frame, follows:

FOX SPECIALS

How "Cleopatra" Was Put Over in Minneapolis Told This Week

"SPECIALS" are "Specials" because they offer opportunity for unusual efforts in advertising and presentation.

The Fox list of productions is plentiful in offerings that gain first rank among "Specials." One of them, "Cleopatra," was recently put over at the Strand in Minneapolis, and the exploitation and presentation methods used have real box office value to you.

Manager Branham, of the Strand, is only one of the members of our Exhibitors Advisory Board, who tell you each week the methods followed in their houses—the leaders of America's photoplay theatres.

Read the feature on "Cleopatra" this week—it's on page 3893.

Resolution to "The Boss"

"We, the Fox Film Corporation Exchange Managers of the United States and Canada and the executives of the Home Office, assembled in annual convention at the Hotel Biltmore, New York City, June 3, 1918, take this opportunity to express our deep and sincere appreciation of our peerless leader, William Fox, whose humanitarian acts have won him the love and respect of the nation; a man who knows no race or creed, one who gladly extends his hand to the poor as well as the rich, to the humble as well as the powerful. To him such acts are solely prompted by his love for his fellowman.

"Unmindful of his personal interests, he made cheerful sacrifice in order that he might prove the guiding spirit of the Jewish War Relief Fund, the American Federation of Jewish Charities, the Knights of Columbus, the Liberty Loan, and the Second War Fund Drive for the American Red Cross in their campaigns successfully conducted throughoutt New York.

"In further expression of our love, respect and admiration and loyalty to him, it is our sincere prayer that he may long be spared to continue such worthy and noble deeds."

More Business—More War Taxes

In responding to the presentation of the resolution, Mr. Fox expressed his thanks to the men for the token of their esteem, and also voiced his gratitude for their loyalty and energies in his behalf.

Later in the closing session Mr. Fox gave a brief address, in which he outlined the policy of the corporation for the coming year, and called on the managers for renewed industry.

"Our ambition this coming year," he said, "is to deliver the greatest and best motion pictures that can be produced.

"If you managers will show the same energy and the same ambition in selling these productions that the home office has in making them, three things will result:

"First, you will help the Government of the United States, because you will increase the profits of this corporation, and thus enable our Government to take more money in taxes.

"Second, you still increase your own value to this corporation, and this increase in value will redound to your material benefit.

"Third, you will befit the Fox Film Corporation, for if you work hard enough you will make the name of the Fox Film Corporation resound throughout the world as the makers of the greatest motion pictures in all history.

"Last year at our convention I spoke on the topic, 'Opportunity.' I want to reiterate that message. The opportunities for men in the service of this corporation are boundless. Your future depends entirely on yourselves, for this corporation is eager to find men who are capable of filling $15,000, $20,000 and $25,000-a-year jobs.

"Now, in closing this convention I want to thank you all for your loyal support during the last year, and I pray to God that you and I shall all be spared for our work, so that we shall meet here again a year hence."

Discharge All Pro-Germans

In line with his energetic patriotism, William Fox, at the close of the fourth annual convention of the Fox Film Corporation's exchange managers and executives, took steps toward the discharge from the Fox organization of any employe who is not 100 per cent. American.

Mr. Fox called on all the branch managers present to submit confidential reports as to anybody whom they even suspected of not being true Americans. These reports, Mr. Fox announced, would be thoroughly investigated, and if any employe in the Fox forces should be found to be even slightly pro-German he would be instantly dismissed.

Mr. Christie has been in the East more than two weeks. He arrived in New York from Boston, last Monday on his way to Pittsburgh and Atlanta from which city he will go to Los Angeles, having completed a trip around the country. In Atlanta, Mr. Christie expects to close for the only open territory in the United States, on Christie Comedies. He reports that both the Park and the Boston theatres, two of the largest in Boston, are running Christie comedies. Mr. Christie expects to be back in Los Angeles, the first of July.

Select Managers Hold Meeting

Convention in New York Marks First Conference of Branch Executives of Company—Selznick Presides at Meetings

THE first conference of managers of branch offices of the Select Pictures Corporation was held June 12 and 13, according to schedule, at the company's headquarters in New York City. Meetings were held on Wednesday and Thursday in the office of the president of the corporation, Lewis J. Selznick. Mr. Selznick presided over the meetings, which were conducted by General Manager Arthur S. Kane. Treasurer Morris Kohn of the Select company lent his presence and advice to all meetings.

The branch executives in attendance on the conference were the following:

Max Milder, from Philadelphia; Charles R. Rogers, from Boston; Sherman S. Webster, from Buffalo; Leo F. Levison, from Pittsburgh; T. O. Tuttle, from Atlanta; Henry Siegel, of New York; Lester W. Adler, office manager of the New York Exchange, and J. S. Woody, field manager.

Representing the home office at all meetings were, besides Mr. Selznick, Mr. Kohn and Mr. Kane, John R. Rotchford, assistant general manager, and George Sharrard, correspondent. During the progress of the conference, heads of departments of the Select Company were constantly in attendance. These included John A. Derham, comptroller; Joseph Hayden, production department; C. C. Ryan, purchasing agent, and Vivian M. Moses, publicity manager.

Many topics affecting sale and distribution of Select Pictures were brought up for discussion by the branch managers in response to calls for suggestions from General Manager Kane, who had outlined the course to be followed in the discussions in order that the greatest benefit might be had from the meetings and no time expended in useless controversy. Naturally the one topic in which all were most deeply concerned was the Fall and Winter campaign, 1918-1919. Plans for the future were gone over from every angle, and by the time the conferences ended a complete understanding had been arrived at as to policies to be pursued in the coming months.

General satisfaction was expressed on all sides with the progress made in the marketing of the series of Select Pictures produced by each of the stars, and much enthusiasm was evoked over details of forthcoming series imparted to the managers. The managers were one in voicing the opinion that if Select could maintain the high standard of attractions which has marked its offerings during the first nine months of the company's existence, success beyond measure was to be secured.

Aside from matters of distribution and sale, proper, the conference discussed in detail the accessories and advertising put out by Select. It was unanimously voted that the advertising matter and accessories were of a higher class than those offered by any other organization. It was deemed advisable to continue this superb quality in Select paper advertising, as exhibitors using the various star series of Select Pictures are predominantly the highest class in the motion picture business.

MacBride Joins Fox Company

Will Hold Executive Position with Organization Following Resignation from Municipal Civil Service Commission—Hylan Writes

JAMES E. MacBRIDE, president of the New York Municipal Civil Service Commission, has tendered his resignation to Mayor John F. Hylan, to take effect before July 1. Mr. MacBride is to take an executive position with the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. MacBride, who formerly was a newspaper man, was in charge of the publicity of the Business Men's League, which conducted Mr. Hylan's campaign for Mayor.

In accepting Mr. MacBride's resignation, Mayor Hylan wrote the following letter:

"My Dear Mr. President: I deeply regret that you find it necessary at this time to separate yourself from the city service, but the reasons that you advance in your letter for your actions are such that as much as I would desire to have you remain in the service, I am constrained to take your view of the situation and accept your resignation, to take effect on July 1.

"The city is indeed unfortunate to lose a man, or to be deprived of the services of a man, of your character, ability and resourcefulness. The character of your work since you have been at the head of the Municipal Civil Service Commission has been of the highest type, and it will be indeed difficult for us to find a man to replace you in whom I shall have as much confidence and esteem as I have in you. However, I should be the last man to stand in the way of one's personal advancement. I can appreciate that your personal necessities are such that you are compelled to enter the commercial world, because of the additional remuneration that you will receive in your new line of work.

"In parting with you officially I still hope and trust I shall always hold your personal friendship. Your unselfish devotion to me during the recent campaign I shall always treasure as a pleasant memory, and I take this opportunity to thank you again for the great assistance that you rendered to me at that time. I shall always expect that you will give me the benefit of your wise counsel during my term of office. I trust that if at any future time I can be of any service to you, you will not hesitate to call upon me. With high personal regards, I wish to remain, sincerely and cordially yours,

"JOHN F. HYLAN."

Western Canada Outlook Pleases Ouimet

L. Ernest Ouimet, of Montreal, the guiding spirit in the affairs of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., holders of the Pathe franchise in Canada, has returned to Montreal, after a trip through western Canada. He was struck by the pleasing conditions that exist in the film business generally in that part of Canada, and says that everything points to good business for the fall.

Mr. Ouimet visited three important western cities, Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg, and found conditions in all three very good. "I believe that the Canadian West this fall will have an excellent crop. Everything points to that conclusion, he said. "I was particularly struck with the aggressive spirit shown by the various successful exhibitors in that part of the Dominion. There are some mighty good showmen out in the Canadian West. As a rule the admission prices are higher than in the Canadian East, and they seem to have no difficulty in getting and maintaining these prices."

Zukor Outlines Coming Year's Policies

BY ADOLPH ZUKOR

[" The greatest circulation possible at a price within the reach of all exhibitors " and " Wholesome, clean photoplays exclusively " are the two high lights of the following interesting statement from Adolph Zukor setting forth the plans of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the coming year. As the first announcement to come " over the top " in that organization's Fall campaign it will doubtless be read with close attention. Noteworthy is the spirit of confidence that it breathes throughout.]

THERE is something to be said in favor of setting up a mark to shoot at. Municipalities do it when they make out an annual budget. The United States of America does it when it prepares to make certain that the battle for democracy is to be a sure victory for humanity. Business firms do it when they close their fiscal year and map out their selling campaigns for their next year. Playwrights do it when they set out to feel the public pulse and brew their entertainment medicine to strengthen the beat of that pulse. It is a good plan all around. It has in it the value of a definite inspiration and a sound knowledge of just how far ambition may go.

So it is with a feeling of genuine satisfaction that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has made a budget for itself for the year beginning September 1, 1918, and ending August 31, 1919—a mark to shoot at which is worthy of the highest aim, a goal set after the most careful consideration, the most thorough preparation and, we believe, the most complete understanding of what shall be, for the public, of the greatest entertainment value and, for the exhibitor, the means for making his business a genuine, real, thorough success.

It is with a feeling of confidence based on adequate experience and sound business judgment that this company has set its goal for the next year of its existence. Back of that confidence is a pardonable pride. Both the confidence and the pride have a reason for being.

First there is the known value of the stars who will appear in Paramount and Artcraft pictures. To the already formidable list of luminaries whose popularity in pictures is acknowledged by all, we have added new stars in absolute certainty. There is no need to bolster up confidence in the hope that such men as Fred Stone, George M. Cohan, David Griffith, Cecil B. De Mille, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, John Emerson, Charles Ray, John Barrymore, Bryant Washburn and Wallace Reid will interest the moving picture public. That hope is a dead certainty.

And so with such stars as Marguerite Clark, Lina Cavalieri, Ethel Clayton, Shirley Mason, Billie Burke, Lila Lee, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Vivian Martin, Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson and Dorothy Gish. Their work advertises itself and no one can doubt their drawing power when they are provided with the stories, the directors, the settings and the artistic intelligence that we aim to put back of every Paramount and Artcraft picture.

The resources back of the production department of Famous Players-Lasky are not a mere matter of luck. They are the result of a definite aim and the ability to attract and interest persons of proven worth in the production of motion pictures.

Two hundred and eight productions in twelve months makes four features a week. With the stars at its command and the proven value of the " Success Series " pictures, each one of these productions will be a real " feature " worthy of the highest exploitation, and, properly presented, of definite cash value to the exhibitor that shows them. After reading the roster of stars who are to appear in Paramount and Artcraft pictures during the coming season it seems needless to state that the progress of the producing department has been artistically consistent until now we are firm in the conviction that there are no other pictures made which can compare in artistic value and drawing power with those of this company. And for these pictures we have but one desire; the greatest circulation possible at a price within the reach of all exhibitors.

Another reason for our confidence in the success of our year's prospectus is in the good will and reputation which we have built up. That reputation and good will does not come over night and does not come haphazard. It is the result of hard work, backed by a constant ideal and the ability to show the sincerity of our aims to the public through our national exploitation work.

Give the public a chance and in the long run it is sure to learn to discriminate. Six or seven years ago when the photodrama was a " jitney " show, the public's sense of discrimination was not so keen. It was in direct ratio with the amount of real art and merit to be found in pictures of that day.

The public is letting the exhibitor know that it does discriminate. No housewife will go to the grocery store nowadays to buy " a good scouring soap." She discriminates when she comes to pay her five cents and asks for a particular brand. No man will go to the drug store and ask for " a good safety razor." He knows a particular brand by its advertising.

So when Mr. and Mrs. Public saunter out to a moving picture show they are learning to know that there is a brand on the goods they are about to purchase, a brand that is the trade mark of a big producing firm striving honestly to provide the absolute best in art, in stars, in direction, in photography, in scenic equipment, in entertainment value and in everything that enters into the production of the very best in moving pictures.

That is the reason for the good will back of Paramount and Artcraft pictures and that, too, is the reason for our confidence in what we intend to do in this new season.

Wholesome dramas, uplifting in character, clean comedies, comedy dramas and plays dealing with the more cheerful aspects of life will be exclusively chosen for production. The reason for our decision to eliminate photodramas of a morbid, depressing or tragic character as well as those concerned with religious problems, fairy tales and costume plays must be as obvious to others as it is to us. Our conviction is the result of a thorough canvass of the situation, an interrogation covering the whole country, and our knowledge, which every one shares, as to the effect of the war on the moving pictures.

Advertising is now essential to the exhibitor for he should drive home the fact that his is the playhouse of comfort, amusement and entertainment, in which are presented the famous stars of the stage and screen.

Many theatres will take advantage of the conditions which have arisen because of the war and will capture increased patronage and prosperity by broadsides of prosperity, appealing to this necessity for relaxation that is in every one of us.

It should not be forgotten that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has demonstrated its faith in the present conditions and the anticipation of the future by its great national advertising work to acquaint the public with the photoplays it produces and that it is backing up this publicity with the best pictures that brains and money can produce. The prosperity of the picture theatre is necessarily our prosperity and we are desirous of building on solid ground.

So this is the message we wish to bring to the exhibitors and the great public behind them: Famous Players enters into its new picture year with a confidence that is a true growth and is based on solid experience. Never have we felt so firmly entrenched in what shall spell success for the showman who can take advantage of these new conditions of today.

Moore Tells of German Scheme

Declares American Films Have Ousted Hun Propaganda Pictures in South America—Writes Interesting Letter to World Pictures

THE insidious manner in which Germany sought to push its propaganda in South America through films made in Germany, re-titled in Spain and sent to South American from Spain, and of the manner in which America films have ousted the German propaganda pictures and established a much more cordial feeling toward the United States in all South American countries, is interestingly told in a letter received by World Pictures from John E. Moore. Mr. Moore penned the letter at Punta Arenas, South America, while held up in that city during the time that his vessel coaled before proceeding through the Straits of Magellan.

"During this trip of mine through these South American countries," wrote Mr. Moore, "I have made some interesting discoveries regarding the manner in which Germany was able to distribute its propaganda films through South America so thoroughly despite the fact that she was cut off from any direct intercourse. The propaganda films were made in Germany, then shipped to Spain where they were retitled in Spanish—the prevailing language down here—and then shipped here from Spain. Many of the films were given to theatres free of charge. Others were placed with theatres by German commercial travelers, who while ostensibly not connected with the German government, plugged for the propaganda films in town after town after completing their regular day's work. Naturally the German films were widely distributed in this manner.

"Now, however, I am glad to say that American films have pushed the German pictures into the discard and it will be a big satisfaction to American producers to know that it is the superior entertainment value of American films over any other make, which has done this. South Americans like our films—in fact, I may say that they are crazy about them. This delight in American films is doing far more than any diplomacy could possibly do in cementing the frendship of the United States and South America.

"In this connection," Mr. Moore concludes, "you will be interested in knowing that World Pictures are represented in all the picture theatres I have so far attended here in South America."

Mr. Moore is a prominent New England business man whose interests make it necessary for him to take yearly trips to South America.

Goldwyn Holds Sales Meetings

Zone Conferences Bring Salesmen of Nineteen Branches Together in Three Cities — New Sales Policy Wins Approval

Two-day sales conventions of Goldwyn's managers and the salesmen from all nineteen of its American branches were held simultaneously this week (June 22 and 23) in three cities—New York, Cleveland and Chicago.

In each instance an executive of Goldwyn's home office organization was present in charge of the regional convention, bringing with him the new sales policy of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the season which begins in September. Managers and salesmen were impressed with the fact that next year they will have productions featuring six established stars in addition to the celebrated Rex Beach pictures and that instead of twenty-six releases there will be more than fifty.

The Eastern District Convention was held in New York and was presided over by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. Present were Samuel Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York City branch; George A. Hickey, Buffalo; Herbert W. Given, Philadelphia, and G. F. Lenehan, Washington. Salesmen from all of the offices in this territory also attended.

Alfred Weiss, a vice-president of Goldwyn, had charge of the Central District meetings, which were attended by H. A. Bandy, manager of the Cleveland office; J. F. Flynn of Detroit; C. C. McKibbon of Pittsburgh and A. J. Pincus, manager of the Cincinnati, Ohio, office.

The Middle West convention, held in Chicago, had Harold Bolster, another vice-president, and Messrs. Aaron J. Jones and Nathan Ascher as its heads. It was attended by H. J. Bayley, manager of the Chicago branch; Richard C. Fox of Minneapolis; Paul Bush of St. Louis and Richard Robertson of Kansas City.

The salesmen in every division of the territory were called into the convention cities to hear the voice of the representative of the home office and to learn from him direct of the good things Goldwyn has in store for the coming producing year.

The Western States convention is held in abeyance pending the arrival on the Pacific Coast of a Goldwyn executive leaving in a few days with the official draft of the sales policy.

Doll-Van Lays Claim to Wide Attention

The following announcement concerning the Doll-Van Film Corporation was issued last week from Chicago:

The Doll-Van Film Corporation, with offices in Chicago and Indianapolis, have been on the film firmament of the Middle West only a matter of months, but in that time they have grown from a satellite in the independent field to a real big planet. They got off for a great start as independent producers when they secured the distribution rights in Indiana and Illinois for "Today," "The Cold Deck" and "The Mad Lover." Then came such big productions as "The Public Defender," "Carmen of the Klondike" and "The Grain of Dust."

But they topped this all off and brought themselves to national attention in the film trade when they showed the courage and money that brought them the sole distribution rights on "Hearts of the World" for Indiana and Kentucky. While neither Mr. Vanderwalker nor Mr. Dollman have yet seen fit to announce the cash consideration for the Griffith feature in this territory it is said that amounted to as much for these two States as some other independents paid for four and five territories.

Since taking over "Hearts of the World" together with the Hall productions for the Central West the Doll-Van Company have seen fit to add to their staff all the way from stenographers to salesmen and an advertising man. The booking plans on the Griffith picture for the purchased territory are being concentrated on at present and it is expected that much of the returns on the investment will be made from Indiana alone.

"Topics" Sold for Europe

A. E. Siegel this week announced the sale of the world rights outside of the United States and Canada for his latest novelty, "Topics of the Day." The sale was made by Mr. Seeley, of Robertson-Cole Company, 1600 Broadway, and arrangements are being made by Mr. Siegel and Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, for the translation into Spanish and French so that the film will have an international distribution.

It is understood the United States and Canada will be offered on a franchise basis.

Harrisburg's Curfew Will Not Ring

Harrisburg, Pa., theatre managers, who lose much patronage through a curfew law that tucks children in their beds at nine-thirty, received good news in a recent statement of Mayor Keister that he is inclined to let the children have an extra half hour of grace during the daylight saving period.

Davis in Atlanta for Mutual

R. A. Davis, salesman for Mutual at Atlanta, has been appointed manager of that office, succeeding C. E. Kessnich.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Sawyer?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

WE started out to make this a story about A. H. Sawyer. We didn't get very far before we found that we would have to let Herbert Lubin in or it would only tell half the story. A little further and we began to fear that it might become "What Sort of Fellows Are Sawyer, Lubin, Ince, Vance, McClure, Mather Building, General Enterprises and Mme. Petrova?"

You just can't nail this fellow Sawyer down in one spot all alone. Since the days when we used to call on him at the Kinemacolor offices in 1600 Broadway he has branched out until he's a whole assortment of picture interests and companies in one package.

Spend an hour in his office, and you leave, feeling that you have been in half a dozen offices. So what chance had we to use a whole page telling you what kind of a fellow Sawyer is?

We had to find an easy way out—and we did. We just decided to let you in behind the scenes and see for yourself what a job we had finding out anything about this fellow Sawyer. So here's a running fire, "Dotty Dialogue" of our half hour attempt to secure an interview with that personage.

CURTAIN! Let her rip!

INTERVIEWER: "Now, Mr. Sawyer, when you first—"

OFFICE BOY: "Ralph Ince is on the wire, sir. Says he—"

SAWYER: "Put Mr. Ince on the 'phone."

After two minutes 'phone conversation:

INTERVIEWER: "After you had formed the Kinemacolor Company, Mr. Sawyer, what—"

OFFICE BOY: "Pardon me, please, but Louis Joseph Vance has just 'phoned he will be here in fifteen minutes with a new story for Mr. Ince.

INTERVIEWER: "And you formed your present company of General Enterprises, Inc., with Herbert Lubin?"

At this moment a voice from the adjoining office sends in the injunction:

LUBIN: "Oh, Arthur, don't forget. We have an appointment at 11 A. M. with Mr. Collins, of McClure's."

SAWYER: "That's Mr. Lubin, now. Oh, Herb. Come in and let this gentleman find out 'what kind of a fellow you are,' for that page he is running in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

INTERVIEWER: "Am glad to know you, Mr. Lubin. I remember meeting you when you owned the Metro franchise for Canada."

OFFICE BOY: "Excuse me, Mr. Lubin, but Madame Petrova called up to remind you of your appointment with her for this afternoon."

LUBIN: "And General Enterprises, Inc., in less than a year, has sold the entire country for "Mother" and "The Warrior," caused the erection of the Mather Building in Washington for the convenience of film exchanges, promoted several successful film deals and—"

STENOGRAPHER: "Here is a notice from Albany, Mr. Lubin, stating that the papers of Associated Pictures, Inc., have been filed."

INTERVIEWER: "Associated Pictures?"

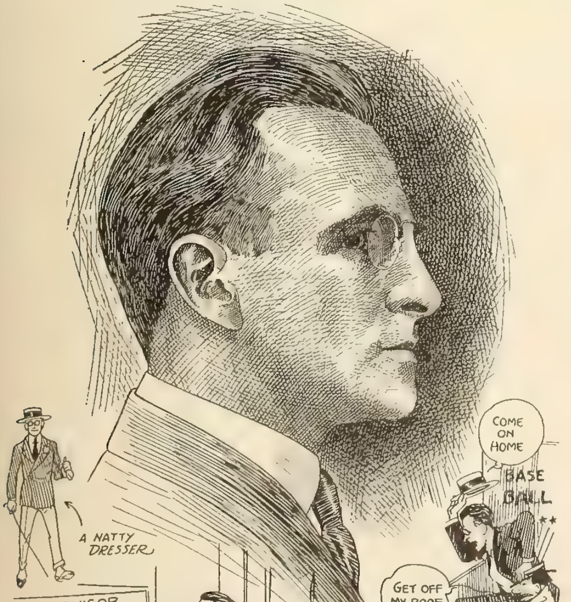
LUBIN: "Oh, yes, Mr. Sawyer and myself have just formed a company for the production of special features to be called 'Ralph Ince Film Attractions.' They will be directed by Ralph Ince, the stories written by Louis Joseph Vance, of Saturday Evening Post fame, and the entire details of studio management, distribution and exploitation will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Sawyer and myself."

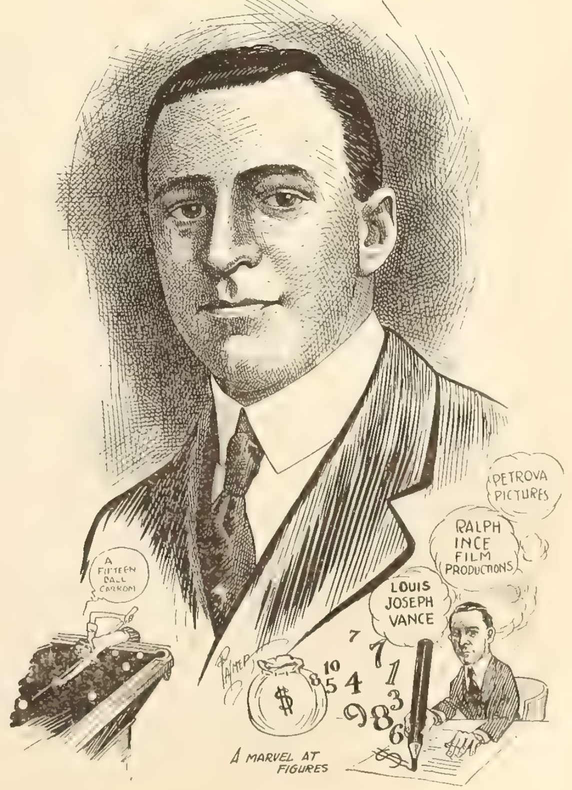
INTERVIEWER: "I understand that Ince is going to make one special feature starring Ethel Barrymore for Metro?

MR. SAWYER: "Through special arrangements made between Mr. Rowland, the president of Metro, Max Korger, and ourselves, we have loaned Mr. Ince for this production while Mr. Vance is completing our first story."

OFFICE BOY: "I beg your pardon—Mr. Rowland is on the wire and says not to forget you are to meet him at the gymnasium at one o'clock, for that game of handball."

As the interviewer left, the voice of Mr. Lubin floated through the door: "Glad you caught us on a day when we weren't busy. Drop in again."





"It's an Ill Wind," Says World

Thinks Railroad Rate Boost Will Materially Help Motion Picture Industry — Theatrical Companies Find it Hard to Move

THE tremendous boost in passenger rates, which went into effect on June 10, will prove of immense benefit to the picture industry, in the opinion of World Pictures. The World is securing many prominent stage actors, who are unable to secure legitimate engagements owing to cancellation of routes of companies organized for the road. Many of the big legitimate theatres throughout the country are planning to show pictures next year and making preparations now for this change as they realize it will be impossible to keep their houses open night after night with the limited stage productions that can survive.

This condition is the inevitable result of the passenger rate increase. It will, of course, be utterly impossible for many theatrical road companies to operate as heretofore, owing to the fact that they cannot pay the increased fares for the members of their companies and still make a profit. Just how big this increased railroad fare is, as it affects road companies, can be graphically shown by taking a typical dramatic movement from New York to Buffalo. It is a railroad rule that twenty-five fares must be purchased to secure the use of a baggage car and as a baggage car is needed for the company's use, the computation is made on the basis of twenty-five fares.

Old rate, one person, New York to Buffalo	$8.00
Sleeper	2.00
	10.00
Eight percent war tax	.80
Total	$10.80
New rate	$13.20
Sleeper	2.00
Half cent per mile excess for sleeper.	2.20
	17.40
Eight per cent war tax	1.40
Total	$18.80
Old total fare	10.80
Increase per person	$8.00

This increase means for a company of twenty-five an increase of $200.00 in the fare from New York to Buffalo which, of course, is prohibitive. This means fewer attractions on the road and makes it necessary for theatre owners to look for other forms of entertainment with which to keep their theatres open. Naturally they are turning to films and as a consequence pictures will this coming year been seen in legitimate theatres never before open to them.

Symphony Theatre Opens Auspiciously to Packed House

The Symphony theatre at Broadway and 95th street, New York, built on the site formerly occupied by the old Astor market and later by Thomas Healy's skating rink, opened its doors to the public on Friday night, June 14, just a few minutes after the final inspection by the city authorities and the granting of its license by the commissioner. It is operated by Kennedy Theatres, Inc., of which Aubrey M. Kennedy, a film man who has seen service in practically every branch of the business, is president. The theatre, the seating capacity of which is 1,400, is one of the unique uptown houses in the city. It is situated in the midst of a densely populated neighborhood and will draw its patronage, for the most part, from the surrounding quarter of the city.

The Symphony is notable in more ways than one. In the first place it is the first uptown New York house to bring a full orchestra into a picture theatre. The Symphony orchestra has fifty-two pieces and is directed by Signor Carlo Ronchi, a well known musical director. There are twelve soloists among its members who are highly recognized in musical circles. Mr. Kennedy justly claims credit for being the first theatre owner to install such a pretentious orchestra in an uptown theatre.

The work of transforming the old skating rink into a motion picture theatre was entrusted to William G. Masserene, an architect and builder of great ability. The interior arrangement is unlike that of any New York theatre. The throw of the picture is parallel to Broadway instead of perpendicular to the entrance street, as is usually the case. The orchestra is exceptionally deep, the largest number of seats being on the main floor. In the rear, there are five or six tiers of mezzanine boxes and back of these the projecting booth. The throw to the screen is practically straight. On a level with the booth and forming a horseshoe round the orchestra are a few loge seats, where smoking is permitted.

The color scheme is restful to a degree, Mr. Masserene having employed coral shades, the predominating tints in which are blue and a burnt yellow. The lighting scheme corresponds to these colors to most artistic effect.

The opening feature at the house was "The Unchastened Woman," the Rialto De Luxe production presenting Grace Valentine in the title role. The other attractions included the war and news weekly, a Mutt and Jeff cartoon, a patriotic tableau depicting the destruction of Chateau-Thierry and a ballet corps headed by Mlle. Clara Tosca rendering "The Dance of the Hours," from "La Giaconda."

The executive staff is as follows: J. H. Kennedy, assistant general manager and treasurer; Dr. Melvin Wolk, house physician; Charles de Sorio, electrical effects; Ed Wotham, mechanical effects; H. Berry, scenic artist.

Sherry Names Release of Keeney Subject

Announcement was made last week by William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, that the first of the Frank A. Keeney pictures, "A Romance of the Underworld," and the first picture by Doris Kenyon as the head of her own company, "The Street of Seven Stars," will be released June 30. The Keeney picture is a screen adaptation of the drama of the same name by the late Paul Armstrong. It stars Catherine Calvert, who also starred in the play when she was the girl-wife of the playwright. "The Street of Seven Stars" is by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It is after her story of the same name which ran in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post. Upwards of 250,000 copies were sold in book form.

Miss Kenyon and her company are now at work on a second picture, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance. This is an original scenario, written especially for Miss Kenyon. The fictional rights have been sold to one of the most important American magazine publications, the story to appear in serial form. The second release of the Keeney corporation will be "The Girl Problem," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, starring Miss Calvert. Herbert Rawlinson, one of the best known of screen stars, will play opposite her. The story is said to be a gripping one, with sensational dramatic situations. The Keeney forces are now working on their fourth picture, "The Girl With a Past," by Paul Armstrong.

Petrova Has Special Poster for Tour

Following the personal appearance of Madame Olga Petrova in Washington and Baltimore which marked the opening of her country-wide tour in behalf of the War Saving Stamps movement, she returned to New York to witness a special screening of "Patience Sparhawk," her fifth production. Immediately following the showing, she departed for Boston, accompanied by Beulah Livingstone, her personal representative, and Bobbie North, studio manager, where she will commence her transcontinental tour for the Government. N. H. Gordon, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of that city, will co-operate with the star and guaranteed to have an audience of forty thousand people on Boston Commons to hear Petrova talk.

Before leaving New York, arrangements were completed between the actress and the New York War Saving Stamps Committee whereby the official government War Saving Stamp inscription will be carried on all stationery. In addition to this privilege the committee is furnishing all of the cuts for publicity purposes, together with various patriotic posters, etc.

The tour as mapped out by Madame Petrova embraces the following cities: Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Boston, Atlanta, Houston, Dallas, Kansas City, St. Louis, Des Moines, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Butte, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Louisville, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

[These reviews, by P. S. Harrison, are based solely on the entertaining qualities of the picture. All other factors are considered of secondary importance.]

"The Finger of Justice"

Crane Wilbur in the Tale of the Barbary Coast's Downfall

(Produced by Rev. Paul Smith. Distributed by Arrow Film Corp. on State Rights Basis. Directed by L. W. Chaudet. Screen Time, 90 M.)

BEFORE I go on with this review, there are two things that I wish to impress on you, first, that "The Finger of Justice" is not a religious subject, except to the extent that the principal character is a minister, and second, that it is a morality melodrama, and the cleanest of its kind that I have ever seen since I have been identified with the motion picture industry. But what is of more importance, it is presented not as a preachment against vice alone, but as an interesting entertainment as well. In fact, it will depend entirely on a person's particular taste whether to accept it as an entertainment more than as a sermon, or vice versa. It can be taken either way.

The story in a general way is a dramatization of the campaign against commercialized vice and gambling that was waged recently in San Francisco, California, and which most of you are familiar with, on account of the wide publicity it has had. It was carried on by Rev. Paul Smith, a minister and president of the San Francisco Federated Churches. This campaign resulted in the closing of the famous "Barbary Coast," and other underworld resorts.

The incidents in the story are based on facts which occurred during the campaign or before. But in order to make them more interesting, they have been embodied into a love story.

The subject, on the whole, is free from vulgarity, the strongest point being only where the innocent girl that was brought into the underworld resort, is seen fighting off the man who attacked her, finally escaping.

The direction and photography are up to the highest mark. As to the sub-titles, you will have to take your hat off to Rev. Smith. He has certainly backed off the board some score of our old and experienced writers. They possess dramatic force and they are characterized by common horse sense. The sermon itself is very dramatic and will hold your interest in spite of its somewhat extraordinary length.

ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS: This picture can be played by most of you, a great deal depending, however, on the manner you present it to your public. If you cater to the high class element you can put it over by securing the co-operation of the ministers, public officials and reform societies of your town. Impress it on them as being a serious subject and that it has the endorsement of the clergy, civic bodies, mayors of large cities and has been especially recommended by the National Board of Review. Copies of these endorsements, I understand, are going to be furnished with the picture.

If you cater to a more liberal element, you may bring out the fact that it shows scenes of the San Francisco underworld and of the "Barbary Coast" and incidents that have actually happened, and which eventually aroused the public ire that caused the cleaning out of the town. In any event, don't fail to let your patrons know the kind of subject it is, as the harm is not done in playing such a picture occasionally but in not letting them know the nature of the theme.

"The Voice of Destiny"

Baby Marie Not at Home in This Heavy Melodrama

(Pathe—June 23. Directed by Wm. Bertram)

IT seems to me that the producers cannot find any more suitable story material for little Marie. "The Voice of Destiny" can hardly be classed as a pleasing entertainment.

The scenario of this melodrama was written by Clara S. Bearanger and is based mostly on two things, the ingratitude of a young man to his brother and a murder with robbery its motive.

Charles Lind went blind, therefore he had been compelled to let his younger brother, John, father of little Marie (Marie Osborne), conduct his business. He squandered his fortune mostly at stock gambling. When reprimanded by his brother, he almost choked him to death.

Later the butler shot and killed the blind man, robbing him of some valuable jewels, John being accused of the crime, owing to circumstantial evidence. In the end the real murderer was apprehended and the innocent man was exonerated.

Little Marie is not given much of a part in this picture. Of the rest of the characters none gets any sympathy because none deserves it. A brother tries to murder his own brother, though he has treated him kindly. This point will prove rather distasteful. Of course we all know that such a thing has happened in actual life; at the same time human nature revolts at the thought of it. It is not a good point to incorporate in an entertainment.

In both murders the bodies are shown lying on the floor. Such details are unnecessary and they do not add to the entertaining values of a picture.

One bad slip on the part of the director is the fact that it shows the dying butler getting up from the bed half way and giving a detailed account of the crime. He looked anything but ready to die.

This picture will not please the better class of picture-goers.

"Patriotism"

Bessie Barriscale in a Satisfactory Tale of German Spies

(Paralta-Hodkinson—June 10. Directed by Raymond B. West)

THIS is a very interesting and well produced patriotic subject, suitable for propaganda work. It is based on the German spy system and shows some of the methods used to gain their ends.

The story was written by R. B. Kidd and Jane Holly. The locale is Scotland and tells of Robin Cameron, who had donated her home to the Red Cross as a hospital for convalescent soldiers.

When a ship was sunk off the coast by a German submarine one of the men saved was a young American. While officials were visiting to investigate, an air raid took place. The officials had reason to believe that some spy had signalled their presence there.

Suspicion rested on the young American with whom Robin was now in love. Unshaken in her confidence in him she undertook to carry on an investigation. She detected in the ruins of an old abbey evidence of the guilt of some German spies who were on the medical staff of the hospital and who were signalling nightly to a submarine. They were arrested and thus her sweetheart was exonerated.

"The Heart of a Girl"

Barbara Castleton and Irving Cummings in a Corking World Drama

(World—July 1st. Directed by John Adolphi)

YOU'VE got to hand it to Director John Adolphi. One does not need special training to know this picture has been directed by a master hand. This man knows the subject he undertook to direct thoroughly, the society as well as the political campaigning end of it. Besides he understands human nature so well he has, without overdoing it, enriched it with little human touches that cannot be put into a script. They add to the heart appeal.

"The Heart of a Girl" is a clean and wholesome drama showing no murders or suicides. It is the kind that will entertain your patrons and have them leave satisfied.

The story was written by Maravene Thompson, the well-known writer, and is very interesting. It depicts the way of crooked politics and how the love of a girl for a congressman, candidate for governor, helped turn the tables against some low-minded politicians.

The action starts with a "bang" and continues so to the end. The mob scenes in the convention that was to nominate the governor were handled admirably well. They are extremely realistic.

As to the leading characters you might just as well make room for this new combination, Castleton-Cummings. Miss Castleton is pretty and photographs well. She is splendid in the role of the aristocratic girl. She knows how to wear clothes. As for Mr. Cummings I don't think he has ever taken a more sympathetic role in a picture before in his life and he knows how to handle it.

The interior settings are the best that have ever been seen in a World picture. It is plainly seen that the director had a good-sized bank roll to draw from. The picture will appeal to any audience, especially to a high-class one.

ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS: In advertising this picture play up strong on the feminine element. Tell them about the pretty clothes that are worn in it. You may also bring out the fact that a congressman, who was about to be nominated as Governor, was willing to sacrifice his future in order to shield a good woman, who was accused wrongly of being a gambler.

For the balance of your program you may use a News Weekly and a high-class comedy or a scenic with a comedy. You may add a cartoon if it does not make your program long enough.

"A Desert Wooing"

Doubtful Points in This Latest Enid Bennett Offering

(Paramount—June 23. Directed by Jerome Storm)

THE action in the first three reels of this offering is somewhat slow but it gains considerably in the last two.

The scenario was written by J. G. Hawks, and tells of Miss Avice Bereton (Enid Bennett), who married an Arizona millionaire so she could have enough money to spend. Previous to her marriage she had an innocent flirtation with a doctor whom she promised to love even after her marriage "just as most of the women of her set do."

The doctor later was her guest in Arizona. One night he entered her room through the window and demanded she stick to her promise. She rejected him saying she did not realize what she was doing when she made that promise.

The husband was given a hint as to the doctor's character, therefore, instead of taking the trip he stated he would he returned to find the doctor trying to force his attention upon his unwilling wife. He beat the doctor badly and ran him out of the place. Some days later he returned and shot the husband, but the wife, at the point of a gun, made the doctor attend to the wound and save his life. The manhood having all of a sudden returned to him he begs forgiveness.

If you cater to critical family patronage I am afraid you will hear from the women folks on that point where Avice tells the doctor that "she will love him even after she marries just as most of the women of her set do." I know of a case from personal experience where an exhibitor was called down for showing a picture in which the insinuation was not anyway near as bad as this one. Irrespective, however, of whether any of your patrons will kick or not, the point in question will not be accepted as true in its entirety.

Another point that will prove objectionable to family patronage is the fact that the doctor enters the room of a woman at night through the window with a sinister purpose in view.

You may be able to get by with this picture but it will not please as well as the last Bennett contribution.

"We Should Worry"

Jane and Katherine Lee Once More Appear for Their Admirers

(Fox-Standard—July 15. Directed by Kenean Buel)

IF your patrons like an entertainment in which the principal characters are children and are not particular as to whether it is based on a well-knit story or not, then this is all right to show them.

In producing this offering the principal idea in mind was comedy, or to be exact, to exploit the particular talents of the diminutive Fox stars by assigning them to the roles of mischievous youngsters. No stress was laid on the story which is mostly a collection of episodic situations, each one based on either or both the little players.

The action is very mechanical and in most instances forced.

Moving picture fans may get some laughs out of this but I wouldn't make rash promises to them if I were you.

THE Universal special attraction, "Three Bad Men," with Harry Carey, which was reviewed in the issue of June 8, has been renamed "Hell Bent."

"How Could You, Jean?"

A Real Old Fashioned Mary Pickford Subject That Delights

(Artcraft—June 23. Directed by Wm. D. Taylor)

THIS is a regular old style Mary Pickford contribution, the kind that used to please so well. It contains an abundance of clean and wholesome comedy situations and lots of heart interest.

The play is based on the story by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd, which was published serially in a magazine and also in book form. It tells of Jean Mackay (Mary Pickford), a young aristocratic girl, who obtained a position as a cook when her income ceased.

The son of a millionaire recognized the charms of the girl under the guise of a Swedish cook, therefore he obtained a job in the same place that he might woo her. Real love sprung between them.

The father wondered what kept his boy away, so he decided to investigate. He smiled when he found out the real cause and was glad to encourage the love match.

The story on the whole is pleasing. The regular Pickford comedy tricks are in evidence throughout. Her impersonation of the Swedish cook is very successful and will get several hearty laughs.

Another point that will prove very pleasing to picture-goers is the fact that the father, contrary to the prevailing custom in pictures, approves of the love affair instead of disapproving it. This will help make the picture more pleasing.

There are several little children in the cast, which help Miss Pickford feel perfectly at home. The direction is very good. Most of the picture has been taken outdoors and shows some beautiful scenery.

This offering may rightly be considered as one of Miss Pickford's best. It will appeal to all audiences, especially to the women and children.

"Station Content"

Gloria Swanson in an "Above the Average," Triangle

(Triangle—June 16. Directed by Arthur Hoyt)

THIS offering is a little better than the average Triangle. It holds the interest and has a strong dramatic ending.

The story was written by Catherine Carr and tells of Kitty, the wife of Jim Manning, who leaves her husband after the death of their baby because she was feeling lonely. She joins a troupe of theatrical performers.

She gains fame and many admirers and accepts the invitation of a railroad magnate who proposes marriage to her while on a visit to his country place. He gives her time to decide.

After leaving the magnate's home she misses connections with the train and is compelled to remain overnight at the office of the operator. The baby of the operator becomes sick and in order that he can go for medical assistance she takes his place.

A lightning storm the next night strikes the trestle, causing fire. She flags the train after a thrilling race with death on a gas tricycle. Jim is on the train and a reunion takes place. The railroad magnate, also traveling on that train, is startled to learn that Jim was Kate's husband, but gives no sign of recognition when introduced to Kate. The bond of love and contentment come to the couple again.

There are points in the story that will not stand an acid test, but it is clean and on the whole entertaining.

"A Little Sister of Everybody"

Bessie Love in a Drama That Won't Stand Boasting

(Pathe—June 30. Directed by Robt. T. Thornby)

THIS is only an average program offering that will help fill a corner in your week's bill. It isn't the kind you can brag about.

The story was written by William Addison Lathrop and tells the following. After the death of his father, Hugh Travers assumed management of the factory. There was discontent among the workingmen and threats of a strike and destruction of property.

In order to get acquainted fully with the situation, he disguised himself as an ordinary workingman. Recognizing their just demands he did justice to them. Incidentally he fell in love with Celeste Javier (Bessie Love), a little orphan, who was loved by everybody and whom he met at her grandfather's while posing as a plain workingman.

The worst feature in the story is the fact that the author has not endowed the detectives, who were trying to capture the plotters, with any amount of intelligence. Their role is very childish.

As it is a clean picture you will be able to get by with it provided you don't make your patrons believe they are going to see something big.

"A Woman of Redemption"

Harrison Finds Too Much Blood in World's June Elvidge Offering

(World—June 17. Directed by Travers Vale)

TWO murders — one cold-blooded, and with the bodies stretched on the floor — are enough to put any picture on the blacklist for a big number of picture-goers, no matter how strong the story otherwise may be.

This story was written by Poty Hobard and is very weak. It tells of the following: In the city there was a young man, the son of a wealthy father, whose chief business was to get drunk on father's money. But as there is an end to everything, so there was an end to governor's patience. He took his son to a lonely place in the woods far away from civilization, and left him while he was asleep with enough provisions to last him a few days, and a note admonishing him to make his own way back to civilization.

In the country there was a girl living with her father in a lumber camp. The big boss had an eye on her, but she didn't want him for a husband, so she left. The boss murdered the old man because he thought he tricked him by sending his daughter away. The young man and the girl met in the woods and became friends. Later the boss was murdered by his common law squaw wife, whom he deserted after tiring of her. The boy and the girl in the end became engaged.

This picture has been photographed almost exclusively outdoors.

"The House of Gold"

Emmy Wehlen in a Satisfactory Melodrama

(Metro—June 17. Directed by Edwin Carew)

THIS is a well produced melodrama that will hold the interest throughout. It will entertain your patrons provided they don't mind seeing a couple of murders and some drinking in a picture.

The story was written by Katherine Kavenaugh. It tells of Pamela Martin (Emmy Wehlen), who was tricked by her scheming mother and wealthy Douglas Martin into marrying him.

Frank Steel, her sweetheart, returned from South America and was broken-hearted at Pamela's marriage. They met at a reception and she explained to him how she was deceived and made believe he was a thief.

Douglas Martin was found murdered and Pamela married Frank, but she was shocked to be wakened up one night and find her husband standing before her. He explained that the dead man was his twin brother whom he killed in self-defense.

Aroused by her cries for help Frank rushed into the room, but in an attempt to rush away Douglas fell from the balcony to the ground and was killed. Happiness at last comes to Frank and Pamela.

Emmy Wehlen is very convincing in her role.

"The Girl in His House"

A Mystery Drama, Presenting Earle Williams and Grace Darmond

(Vitagraph—June 24. Directed by Thomas Mills)

THIS is a fairly interesting mystery drama calculated to please the more refined picture-going public, but hardly good enough for the masses who demand more or less thrilling situations.

The scenario is based on the story by Harold MacGrath, one of the best known authors of the present age. It was published serially in the Ladies' Home Journal and is now in book form. It is considered one of the most widely read stories published recently and therefore offers a splendid opportunity for advertising.

It is based chiefly on the hatred of a father for his daughter whose birth was the cause of the mother's death. It may be considered as improbable, belonging more or less to the imaginary class rather than to the realistic.

Wealthy young James Armitage is jilted by a girl. He leaves for the far away tropical lands after he vests on his lawyer full power of attorney. He returns years later to find a strange young lady in possession of his home.

Upon investigation he found out that the girl was the daughter of none other than his attorney who had misused his power of attorney in order to provide for her. He finds the father on his death bed in another town where he was hiding under an assumed name. Eventually he falls in love and marries the girl.

"The Soap Girl"

Gladys Leslie in a Vitagraph of Average Value

(Vitagraph—June 17. Directed by Martin Justice)

THIS offering can only be classed as passable. The story is very simple and contains hardly any points that would excite a critical picture goer.

It was written by Lewis Allen Browne and tells of the opposition of a mother towards a union of her boy, a Van Ruhl, with the daughter of a tradesman, the Soap King. The brother of the girl conceived a scheme to break the proud spirit of Mother Van Ruhl. He bought a distillery and gave the name of Van Ruhl Rum to the product.

Society gossiped while the Mrs. was shocked, and threatened the distillery men with court action unless they stopped using her name on the rum bottles. Eventually her pride was broken. She also consented to the love match between the boy and the girl and everything was lovely after that.

Let this picture slip by. It won't hurt you to run it provided you don't make much fuss about it and make your patrons believe it something big. But be sure to have something strong for your next change. The story is clean.

"A Man's World"

The Double Standard Basis of Emily Stevens's Latest Feature

(Metro—June 24. Directed by Herbert Blache)

THERE is not enough body in the story, "A Man's World." It is hardly strong enough to hold the interest, much less to measure up with the capabilities of such an actress as Miss Stevens. It is padded to the limit to make up the five reels.

The scenario is based on the play of the same name by Rachel Caruthers. It is wound around the double standard, or the man's privilege to transgress the laws of morality but not of the woman's.

Frank Ware (Emily Stevens), while in Paris, adopted the baby boy of a dying American mother. In America, Malcolm Gaskel, the publisher, who undertook to publish her book, became interested in her and proposed marriage. She accepted and they became engaged.

His mistress accused Frank wrongly as being the mother of the child from a love union with a man in Paris. Gaskel went to Frank and demanded to know the truth. It developed, however, that the child, who resembled Gaskel greatly, was his own.

When she learned the truth by questioning him she returned the engagement ring and told him to go. Answering that this is a man's world and that men usually get what they want, he assaulted her.

Hearing the sound of the scuffle, David Powell, an artist, living on the floor above and who was in love with Frank, rushed into the room, beat Gaskel and ordered him to go. Eventually Frank married David, the man she really cared for.

The subject, although treated in a refined manner, is hardly the kind you want to boost strongly to a family patronage. The origin of the child is the constant discussion in the picture, more or less, and it makes not a very pleasant theme.

You may be able to get by with this, but the less said the better.

Additional Exhibitor Reviews will be found on Page 3876

" Say! Young Fellow! "

Douglas Fairbanks's Latest—That's 'Enuf Said

(Artcraft—June 16. Directed by Joseph Henaberry)

T is hardly necessary to review a Fairbanks picture. They are all so good you will be taking no chance in boosting any of them to the sky limit. The effect "Say! Young Fellow" will have on a picture goer is just like being in a home where everything is smiling and happiness reigns. It is a sure antidote of gloom. Doug makes you feel like sixteen. He knows how to bring sunshine into sad hearts.

The story was written by the director himself. It is different than any of his previous ones. Doug is given the part of a newspaper reporter on a New York paper. He certainly can put it over on some old ones at the game. Here is the story in a few lines. A young fellow (Douglas Fairbanks), whose only stock in trade was his smile and optimism, applied for a job on a newspaper. He was assigned to get an interview with a recently made millionaire where another reporter had failed.

Having been forbidden admission he scales the wall and enters the room of the millionaire through the window. By an acrobatic trick he takes away the gun from the frightened millionaire and forces him to tell how he made his millions. He rushes back to the office and gives the story to the editor.

The editor now realizes that this young fellow has the stuff in him for more difficult things. He assigns him to unearth a fraudulent scheme in connection with a factory in a nearby town in which the stockholders were to be defrauded.

That he succeeds in his task is beyond question. He had to climb walls, jump from roofs, battle a gang of crooks, find a perilous perch over revolving flywheels, and overcome the villain but gets there just the same. The only one to whom he was compelled to acknowledge defeat was the girl to whom he had lost his heart.

The picture opens in a kind of allegorical way. It is novel and picture-goers will like it. It shows a chasm the sides being formed by steep mountain walls with the word "success" in the distance and Mr. Fairbanks after it.

The subtitles show by double exposure a diminutive man, the allegory for "Hunch," encouraging The Young Fellow and urging him not to grow faint hearted but to go forward until he gains his goal. This allegory is only incidental and not the main part of the story, and as it is rather a novelty picture-goers will like it immensely.

There are also some children introduced in a few scenes which also causes additional laughs.

The supporting cast which includes Marjory Daw as The Girl is excellent. The direction and photography are of the best.

This picture will please everybody, even the critical. You should play it twice as long as you would other pictures.

ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS.—You can go the limit with this picture, and fearlessly back it with your reputation as being one of the best Fairbanks ever made. Nobody will contradict you. Lay stress on the fact that it is a pleasing comedy-drama containing clean and wholesome situations. Also that his usual athletic stunts that helped make him famous are in evidence throughout the picture, and that it is different from his other pictures.

" Closin' In "

William Desmond in a Story of the Northwest with That Locale's Appeal

(Triangle—June 23. Directed by J. W. McLaughlin)

SOME way, pictures based on the Canadian Northwest, if they are made even half way decent, never fail to take well with picturegoers. There is some fascination about such stories, possibly due to the outdoor scenery, which everybody likes.

"Closin' In" is a very well produced photoplay, and as it is based on the element of self sacrifice, it will surely prove a winner.

The story was written by Joseph F. Poland. It tells of Jack Brandon, a young bank cashier, who prevented the father of his sweetheart and president of the bank from committing suicide for embezzling the bank's money, by assuming the blame himself. It didn't matter to him, as the doctor told him he had an athletic heart and only a short time to live.

Jack left for the Canadian Northwest where he joined the Mounted Police force, his heart proving perfect at the examination. News of a gold strike brought Barbara, his sweetheart, and her brother Burt into this territory. Burt denounced Jack as a thief. The latter, unwilling to deny it, was compelled to resign from the Mounted Police.

After many rebuffs Brandon saved the girl from a native who had lured her into a bigamous marriage. The native was killed by an Indian while attempting to harm his first wife, a squaw. Barbara read a telegram that fell from the dead man's pocket, addressed to her brother, but withheld from him, telling of her father's confession at his deathbed, exonerating Brandon. Jack and Barbara are again united.

Mr. Desmond's role is a sympathetic one and he handles it excellently. Especially he looks fine as a Canadian mounted policeman.

This picture ought to please any audience.

" Up Romance Road "

William Russell in a Clean and Interesting Active Drama

(Mutual—June 24. Directed by Henry King)

THIS is a pleasing romantic drama containing several comedy situations. It is somewhat the Fairbanks style of a picture in which Mr. Russell does not attempt to encroach too much in his territory.

The story was written by Stearn Fox and tells of Gregory Thorne and his sweetheart, Marta Billbanke (Charlotte Burton), who had made up their minds they wanted some excitement, as life was too slow for them. They agreed to be kidnapped.

Gregory hires some crooks to aid in the kidnapping, but they soon found out that they have been kidnapped in reality by a gang of German spies who wanted to compel their fathers to cease shipping ammunition to the Allies in Europe. But Gregory succeeded in outwitting the gang and arresting their leader, who was formed to point out the place in the factory where they had hidden a bomb which was to explode at a certain time and destroy it.

" One Dollar Bid," with Warren Kerrigan

(Paralta-Hodkinson—June 24. Directed by Ernest C. Warde)

A FEW more pictures like this one and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will have to hire some extra help to take care of their bookings. I don't think I have seen another picture in the last two years that will hold the interest and play on the emotions of a spectator as "One Dollar Bid" will do. I have seen one more picture that had the same effect on me. It was "The Conquest of Canaan," produced by the Frohman Amusement Co. When I played it I had people jump up and yell "we surely got our money's worth." You will hear the same kind of expressions when you play "One Dollar Bid."

It is a Kentucky Hill story, based on the book "Toby," by Credo Harris. It is built around an old law in Kentucky, by which the authorities are given the right of auctioning a vagrant and awarding him to the highest bidder to work for him for one year, the only remuneration being food, clothing and medicine.

Play it longer than your regular program pictures. Go to it and advertise it strong.

" After the War," with Grace Cunard

(Universal Special Attraction—Aug. 12. Directed by Joseph De Grasse)

THIS is a peculiar subject but I am sure it will prove of interest to picture-goers. It depicts conditions that no doubt will exist in the future, after the present colossal struggle is over, in a manner that is rather unique and novel.

Dramatically it is one of the best of the recent offerings released by Universal. There are several tense situations in it. The first part of the story contains elements of mystery which add to the suspense.

It is very unfortunate that such a splendid picture should be based mostly on a sex question, although it isn't as bad on the screen as it reads in a synopsis. However, most of you that are careful as to the kind of pictures you show to your patrons, might be able to get by if you present it to them as a propaganda subject. It lends itself admirably for such an exploitation.

Buffalo Like the Backwoods

Only a Very Few of the Theatres Advertise and Newspapers Are Very Shy on Co-operation

BUFFALO couldn't be worse. What do you think of a city of a half million people in which only two theatres advertise regularly? If we did not know Buffalo and if we were not sure that there were many live managers in that city we would conclude that motion pictures had about lost their appeal there.

But such is far from the case. There is not a better motion picture city in the country so far as the fans are concerned. That the houses are not doing a great deal more than they are is for the want of the right sort of exploitation, because there is little evidence of the desire on the part of the newspapers to co-operate and because the majority of the managers seem to be in the class that doesn't think it pays to advertise.

Before placing strictures on any one, it must be understood that there are some peculiarities to the situation there. Buffalo has six dailies, which seems to us to be a large number for a city of that size. Three of these have Sunday issues. With the exception of the News, which approaches the 100,000 mark, none of the papers has a daily circulation that would be expected in a city of that size. Of course this means that the circulation is divided up and the result is that the exhibitor wanting to cover the entire field has to spread his advertising through all of the papers—a big expense.

In the next place the advertising rates are high, yet we have to stop to ask whether the newspapers are to be blamed for this. Several years ago the Evening News started to issue a four-page photoplay section and gave the theatres a low rate. Now, according to the Lord and Thomas newspaper directory, the News has almost as much circulation as any two of the other newspapers during the week and this was certainly a splendid piece of work on the part of the paper, but less than a half dozen exhibitors took advantage of this offer and the rate was withdrawn. It is very likely that at that time exhibitors had not been educated to the importance of advertising as they are now and that if some further effort were made now there would be much greater response.

As it stands the Buffalo newspapers give the motion picture just about as poor representation as any city in the country. And at the same time the exhibitors as a whole do a little less than they do in any other city of the size. There is not a place on the map of the nation that could be cited as such a splendid example of the utter lack of all around co-operation.

Now Buffalo is a big city in territory as well as population. It is a city with a number of splendid neighborhood houses. And therefore it is a city that makes advertising for every theatre that desires to do the maximum business a necessity. There are a lot of people who are willing to walk around the corner to see what a theatre is offering that day, but there is not a great many that will take a long trolley ride. But all of them would look at the newspaper and find the theatre that they wanted to attend.

Let us say again that there appear to be too many newspapers in Buffalo. And let us add that if one of them would start a real motion picture department and if it could succeed in getting the daily directory advertising houses of some twenty or more houses at the start, it would soon find itself so far in the lead of other papers that there would be no reason for worry about the "other boys."

And in this connection let us call your attention to the fact that the advertising manager of a prominent newspaper told us the other day that it had put on 15,000 circulation as the result of feature motion picture news matter and theatre advertising. This, of course, was not in Buffalo.

There are seventy theatres in Buffalo—and two of them advertise consistently. Six of these are downtown houses and the others belong in the neighborhood class. Downtown are Shea's Hippodrome, which under the able management of Harold B. Franklin ranks among the leading houses of the whole country, Strand, Palace, Keith's, Academy and a small Hippodrome in lower Main street. Three of these are first run houses—Shea's, which has a capacity of 2,600, the Strand which seats 1,350 and the Palace which cares for 900.

The Victoria is one of the handsomest neighborhood houses in the country. It seats 2,000 and has a big patronage, but it does not advertise in the daily papers. When it was first opened it used display in all the local papers, but this was dropped and now the theatre depends on its house organ. The management believes that this gets business, as it doubtless does, but there would be more business, we believe, if the theatre advertised and appealed to people outside of its immediate neighborhood.

Now Shea's Hippodrome and the Strand are the only two theatres that do advertise consistently daily and Sunday. The Hippodrome uses all the papers with double column advertisements in the Sunday issues and single or double in the Saturday issues of the afternoons and a one-inch advertisement during the week and three inches on Thursdays. It is the largest advertiser in the city.

The Strand has been a consistent advertiser since its opening five years ago. It is safe to say that this theatre is now catering to a clientele that knows that there is always a good show to be found at this house.

The third of the first run houses—the Palace, does not do a line of advertising. It was opened by the late Mitchell Mark and under the management of Harold Edel, now directing the New York Strand, and it advertised from the start and until the ownership changed.

Among the neighborhood houses the Family and the Regent are the only ones that we find represented. The Central Park, the Premier, Collonia and Columbia stay out of the papers entirely. The Plaza uses a one-inch "display" in one Sunday paper, the Courier.

Here are the papers with the circulation as given in the latest Lord and Thomas newspaper directory:

Commercial, evening (9,840).
Courier, morning (22,205) and Sunday (108,197).
Enquirer evening (35,293).
Express morning (36,517) and Sunday (54,722).
News, evening (91,594).
Times, evening (47,421) and Sunday (60,500).

It will be seen that there are two morning papers and four afternoons with three having Sunday issues. The circulation of the Commercial appears to be so small that it can almost be dropped from consideration.

The Commercial charges $2.10 for its motion picture advertising, a ridiculously high rate for the circulation. The only advertising that it carries is that of Shea's Hippodrome, the only theatre that uses every one of the papers. The same size advertising is carried here as in the other Sunday papers. During the week Shea's, which is a vaudeville house, and Shea's Hippodrome uses a combination one-inch double column advertisement in all the papers and this is also carried in the Commercial.

With such limited advertising you would not expert the Commercial to give much space to motion pictures. In the Saturday afternoon edition it devotes about a column and a half to "Playhouse News" which is nothing more thatn a series of reading notices. Each Tuesday it devotes a column to so-called reviews. There are no shows allowed in Buffalo on Sunday except motion pictures, and therefore they do not get a Monday review.

In this connection it will be noted that the advertisement of the Olympic theatre appears in the papers. This is a vaudeville house

How a Nebraska Theatre Shows Way To Small Town Houses In Advertising

EASILY the most encouraging thing in the motion picture advertising field is the manner in which theatres located in the smaller towns are using the country weeklies. In the past it has been the habit of the small theatre owner to simply conclude that because he was not located in a big city that had newspapers of wider circulation that it was not necessary to advertise. Since the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has been established we have urged the smaller town showmen to take advantage of every facility at their disposal and to get the most from them.

Here we take a page from the Wayne Herald, published in Wayne, Neb., population 2,140. We don't know whether the theatre pays for the entire page, but it evidently prepares the reading matter as well as the display. In the first place the display work is a good one, for a country weekly. We say for a country weekly, because values differ in such cases. Ordinarily we would say that the TODAY attraction ought to be played up the most prominently, but you must remember that probably the majority of the subscribers do not get the paper on the day of its publication, and that the effect of this class of advertising would be lost in such cases.

The man who is responsible for this work showed fine discretion all the way around. His news matter includes short stories about various productions, and some paragraphs of real news about the industry. It will be read and it will carry conviction.

Crystal theatre and its manager, N. B. Neilson, deserve the thanks of the whole industry.

IT'S WONDERFUL

But We Are Mighty Glad to See that Exhibitors Know This Is the Place

IF any one told you a year ago that any trade paper would print the amount of matter from exhibitors that is appearing week after week in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS you would have laughed.

Less than a year ago we opened this department as the REAL FORUM OF THE EXHIBITOR. The response has been little short of WONDERFUL. There is more exhibitor matter printed here each week than a trade paper would have boasted of showing in six months.

We have had the loyal response of the men of the industry. We believe that we have kept up our end and that we have proved LOYALTY instead of sycophancy.

We invite you—all the exhibitors—to make this your true forum, the recording place of your effort.

Don't hesitate because you have a small house, because you cannot do so much as others. We know your case. We know how to help you. AND WE WILL.

All we ask is the voluntary effort on your part. Come on in.

"Editorials" Prepared for Goldwyn Exhibitors

CALLING attention to the fact that the editorials of one great newspaper genius are largely responsible for the 840,000 circulation of one New York newspaper, the 450,000 copies of a Chicago edition and thousands of others in four other cities, Goldwyn asks why the editorial style of motion picture advertising will not sell thousands of admissions to the theatres.

With that belief Goldwyn has prepared an editorial on Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star." Practically all of this is based on the meaning of the new flag that is flying today in this country—the service flag—and the last three paragraphs call attention to the fact that this picture tells the story of a wonderful girl and a wonderful boy who help to make this a wonderful world in which to live.

Similar editorials will be issued for use of exhibitors on all succeeding productions. At the same time it is pointed out that this form of advertising was adopted by Selwyn and Co. with great success on the stage productions, "Rolling Stones" and "The Eternal Magdalene."

New Manager Scores Hit at Lyndhurst Theatre

LYNDHURST, N. J., is boasting of one of the best conducted motion picture houses in the country in the Stuyvesant, which is now under the management of Dominick J. Livelli. He is showing originality in advertising, executive ability and broadmindedness in conducting his house.

Grauman's Has Art Gallery of Stars' Portraits

SID GRAUMAN is adding an attractive feature to his million-dollar theatre in Los Angeles, with a series of paintings of stars that regularly play at his theatre. The mezzanine floor is to become a veritable art gallery.

First of the portraits was that of W. S. Hart, which was presented to the theatre by the actor. Others that are now being made are of Douglas Fairbanks, Sessue Hayakawa, Charles Ray, Marguerite Clark and Mary Pickford.

2 Exhibitors Score Present Publicity Aids

Next week members of the Advisory Board will begin the discussion of the question of exploitation of pictures, with special reference to the co-operation supplied by the producers. These members have been asked to say what they think the companies should do in affording them material with which to merchandise the picture to the public. Many members of this board believe that the producers should center their trade paper advertising on serve to the exhibitor that he can in turn use.

But before going into this symposium we are printing here two statements from prominent exhibitors. They come as a voluntary expression of the chief difficulties that are confronting them.

H. M. THOMAS, manager of the Rialto and Strand theatres, Omaha, is one of those to write us about the failure of the manufacturers to supply him with the sort of material that is needed for the exploitation of pictures. He declares that practically all the matter that he gets is unsuitable and tells the reason why it should be better and how it can be made so:

There's one matter I have been howling on for years—I have taken it up from office boy to general manager, but for the life of me I can not accomplish much good, namely: ACCESSORIES:

The average one sheet today is no better than the ones we had when Lubin and American Biograph were in their prime, or infancy, for that matter.

I'll wager a bet that there's not a theatre directed by one single member of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS advisory committee that uses for display the usual one sheet that is furnished. The majority of these one sheets drive away trade rather than make it. I have begged for a one sheet costing all the way from 25 cents to $1.00 each, but the only answer I can get is "It's a good idea, but there are not enough progressive exhibitors like yourself who would use them." Now this doesn't flatter me—it makes me mad to think that no distributing organization is "game" enough to stand a possible loss to educate their exhibitor customers to the advantage of using better one sheets, better advertising, which in the end means better and bigger business. If an exhibitor can pay the price of a Pickford, Hart or Fairbanks picture, for example, surely he can afford to pay the price for a decent one sheet, but Paramount or any other distributing concern for that matter cannot see the force of my argument.

It costs me $1.25 for the cards I use in front of my theatre, and it surely costs other managers like amount for the cut-out cards they use. Now, then, if they could get suitable one sheets—drawings by well known artists, or photographs or etchings of the stars with a clever descriptive border worked in—I know every wide awake exhibitor in the country would sooner or later use them.

The nearest approach I have seen to clever one sheets lately are those put out on the Montgomery Flagg comedies, signed drawings by Mr. Flagg, but the cheap quality of the paper used spoiled these.

Just as little wording as possible should also be used on the one sheets, as the public is not interested in Mr. So-and-So, President, and Mr. So-and-So, General Manager—all they want to know at the most is the name of the picture and the star, but you can't blame the producer for putting on his trade mark, but surely this should be the limit.

I wish through the medium of your valuable paper you could scare up one distributor game enough to invest a few dollars in helping out the exhibitor get business by giving him business pulling accessories. I believe the increased business would more than justify the outlay.

Then it does not strike me the best of judgment is used in the selection of "stills." I know it's a hard matter to get the proper subjects for the "stills," but I think clean, bright and breezy photos are preferable to possibly some with "punches," such as murder and death-bed scenes, for example. These naturally are justified in the picture by the action leading up to them, but when put out in front of a theatre, with no description as to how the murder was committed, etc., they offer too morbid a showing to draw people in.

I have stood out in front of my house night after night and watched people "shop" my frames, and when the subject looked bright, breezy and pleasing, they always went in, but when morbid, time and time would leave with the remark, "Oh, that looks too sad."

Then those slides—once in awhile we get a clever slide, but most of the time not. Personally I have cut out slides, and am using film titles which cost me $3 each, but I have found that the more pleasing I present a picture in advance to my patrons the more people who will come.

Another thing that could be improved, to my mind, is the style of mats the exchanges furnish us. Why don't they eliminate these punk drawings and give us mats from photos in the plays?

I may be a "crab" about these matters, but I surely think there is room for improvement, and would like to have you start the ball a-rolling and see what you can do to improve a matter that needs improvement.

WE wrote C. Edgar Momand, now manager of the Garden theatre, Flint, Mich., and formerly in charge of the Bijou, Saginaw, for the same interests, telling him of the many splendid things that we had heard about the way that he advertised. He comes back with some very interesting comment on the sort of stuff that he is given to work with, and he is among the leaders:

It is with pleasure I note your comment that "a prominent film man" has told you of my success at that house, and I am equally gratified that you should be interested to the extent embodied in the contents of your letter.

However, I can only say that I did not figure the things I am doing—nothing unusual I thought—would prove of much interest to others. Always a firm believer in the judicious use of printers' ink; realizing that I had something to sell and endeavoring to sell it; and, lastly, endeavoring to keep faith with my patrons as best I could under present distributing conditions (improved greatly over those of past few months) were the principles upon which I worked to establish a confidence and try and maintain it with all patrons who had a desire to be pleased.

Not every production offers the manager, or press agent, equal opportunity for getting results, nor have all the same popular appeal. Therefore it is up to the manager or press agent to discriminate to some extent, getting as much business as possible with the weak attraction, by discretion in the wording of ad-copy, and leaving it to the patron to extract as much pleasure and entertainment as he can, than by flamboyantly proclaiming every picture "greatest on earth" and greater than "The Birth of a Nation";

Not every producer gets out the right kind of consistent advertising aids for the exhibitor, who is therefore out of luck and must rely greatly upon his own ability and his knack of extracting material from the trade papers with which to build his personal appeal to the public.

One great trouble I find and have found for years with the publicity the exhibitor receives from the exchange is the notorious absence of practical matter that will give him an idea upon which to build an ad that might draw business. Most of the publicity stuff concerns the story of the film hashed up in three or four ways, cast of characters, and generally a lot of rot that said exhibitor is presumed to clip, insert name of theatre and play date and hand to his editor. (Said editor is generally tickled to death to get the stuff to "fill space" with.) Most of this bunk concerns "the star having recently recovered from an accident to her limousine" or "star has a new angora muff" or other commonplace things that neither interest the exhibitor or the public, if fed to them.

Producers also are still prone to get out fine-screen cuts (which exhibitor must buy) and which are not serviceable for newspaper use, instead of especially attractive cuts and mats designed with a view of practically aiding the exhibitor to get business with their product. Not every manager can get out special cuts.

The cost is prohibitive in most cases; artists are scarce as frogs' hair; and so exhibitor must depend on what kind of cuts he is enabled to get from the exchange and on the type he finds in his local paper—and then take it from me he has a hang-of-a-time to make his advertisements distinctive and business-pulling.

Occasionally an opportunity will present itself whereby an exhibitor may use a caption to attract attention, and incidentally, business. I frequently resort to a good head-line and have used several, on divers occasions, at different houses, over a period of years. Some are unfailing in arousing interest.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

TWO most effective, and different, combinations of the song and the silent drama are used at the Rialto and Rivoli this week, and it is noteworthy that while the feature at one house is a drama of intense heart interest and there is a comedy at the other, the songs in each case achieve the purpose of bringing out stronger the romantic interest of each production. Even the methods of their employment are different. In the case of Douglas Fairbanks in "Say, Young Fellow," the song puts over the introductory punch, and in "Missing" at the Rialto it brings about the great heart-gripping climax.

And while exhibitors may not be able to do some of these things on the scale that they are done at the Rothapfel houses, they could get all the effectiveness out of these same numbers, and they could similarly give added interest to many of their productions by such simple little touches. We do not hesitate to say that these song effects caused twice as many people to talk the presentations at the two houses this week than would have been the case had the pictures simply been thrown on the screen as a matter of course. And this is true even though "Missing" is one of the most gripping and convincing pictures that it has ever been our good fortune to see.

Now let us watch how the arrangements at both houses are worked out to the point that fully carries out the spirit of each production, how the very theme arranged for each picture breathes its spirit through the entire presentation.

At the Rialto the overture is "Orpheus in the Lower World," played with the entire lighting system of the theatre in gold. This work of Offenbach is really a burlesque on the original opera, and it is filled with dash and spirit and good humor. However, the spirit of the underworld remains through the selection and this leads into pictures of Mount Lassen, the only active volcano in America.

These pictures, released by Educational, are unusually interesting, showing the boiling springs, the steam vents, the hot mud lakes and finally the huge pillars of smoke from the inside of the earth. The music for the first of this is "Orgies of the Spirit" and then an original composition. Now watch this. During the showing of this picture the only lights in the house are dark blue in the dome alone. Before the end of the film the green curtains fall together over the screen and for a moment one gets the impression that a mistake has been made in dropping the curtains before the picture is over, but when Emanuel List, in the garb of Vulcan, appears and begins to sing "Vulcan's Song" from "Thilemon and Baucus," the connection is apparent. At the same time the curtains in front of the display panels part, revealing at both sides volcanos in action, with the lighting there in blue, while from the inner dome come slowly rising and fading flashes of red. It is easily one of the most effective things that we have seen in a long time.

WITHOUT A FEATURE

Rothapfel to Use Only Marines and Short Subjects for a Week

FOR the first time in the history of either the Rialto or the Rivoli, Mr. Rothapfel is to put on a show without a feature picture. In the past there have been cases where war pictures or some other subject have shared honors with the feature—but next week at the Rivoli the feature is to be conspicuous by its absence.

The main feature of the program will be some more of the Marine pictures made by Lieut. Rothapfel and dealing principally with the aviation work. These are said to be the most remarkable ever filmed.

The remainder of the program will consist of short subjects and musical numbers. This is going to be a most interesting experiment, especially in view of the recent discussion of members of the Advisory Board of shorter features.

Rialto Animated opens with Gaumont pictures of making torpedoes at Washington and for this "Honor to Our Nation" is played. Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of the yacht season opening in Chicago and Universal pictures of the newly invented unsinkable life boat, for both of which "Nights of Gladness" is played. Universal Screen Magazine contributes an interesting number in "Raising squirrels by hand" and "Tete-a-tete" is the selection. From the same source come pictures of shad fishing with the warning that we are to eat fish to help the nation along, and then follow pictures of Syracuse kindergarten children at drill, and the music changes to "Shadowland."

From Gaumont we get just a flash of the visiting Mexican editors, shown to the first strains of "Panamericana" and then come some splendid Gaumont pictures of the arrival of Americans on the Picardy front. "These are the boys that are making Germany feel that Uncle Sam has his sleeves rolled up" is one of the titles that adds to the applause and these pictures are shown to "Over There" with the horns and drums sounding. From the same source are pictures of the arrival of relief troops on the Italian front, including some of the most wonderful shots from a high elevation and here the music becomes "Parade Militaire." Then the big punch at the end is given with Universal pictures of the West Point graduation, showing a number of pictures of the marching cadets and then the award of diplomas by Secretary of War Baker, together with some unique shots of the applauding audience. "Sunshine March" is the music and this is played with the full orchestra and organ effect, with the result the audience is stirred to the greatest enthusiasm.

Now note the first way the song is used with the feature at the Rialto. All the lights of the house become red with the exception of the blue center dome. As the center curtains part, revealing the Byzantine setting, with Annie Rossner singing "Because I Love You, Dear," the outer curtains of the side panels also part, leaving the red curtains bathed in light. Now this song interprets the whole spirit of the feature that follows, a picture based on great and pure loves. It gets one thoroughly in the mood for the heart gripping drama that follows—and there is a great deal in getting one into the spirit of a picture.

Nevin's "Love Song" is the theme for the feature. The picture opens with battle music. There are wonderful titles with double exposure, showing a background of the struggle in France with the girl's figure predominating for the introduction. "A Garden Dance," "By the River" and "Merry England" are played early in the picture and when the "honeymoon cottage" is shown the orchestra changes to "In Love," and then takes up the theme for the second time. In fact the most charming of music is used throughout, including such other selections as "In the Gloaming" and "Song Without Words," while the more lively airs are carried with "Tipperary" and "Pack Up Your Trouble in the Old Kit Bag and Smile, Smile, Smile." But the essential charm of the music is in the use of "Bonnie, Sweet Bessie." This is first introduced when the girl wife plays it on the piano for her husband just before his departure for the front and then it is repeated when the girl reads a letter that he has written to be given her in the case of his death. But still the most effective use comes when the girl is at the bedside of her husband who is suffering from aphasia as the result of shell shock and she sings the song to him again. With this the voice of a girl is heard behind the screen singing the words.

Already the heart has been moved by the wonderful music and the splendid picture, but, after this, if there was a dry eye in the house—well, it wasn't ours.

But the ending is a happy one. We see the American flag beside that of the Allies in the trenches and then comes the roll of drums and trumpet calls and then the orchestra bursts into "Over There" at the end. It it any wonder that the audience applauds with all its heart?

All lights are gold for selections from "Naughty Marietta," which restores the sprightly air, and then comes one of the Triangle comedy re-issues, "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts," which gives the orchestra chance for catchy music and clever effects.

Rialto and Rivoli

At the Rivoli

Brilliant lighting is used for "Twelfth Rhapsody," the overture at the Rivoli. The main lights are in red with the exception of the inside dome, which is in light green with the panels at the side orange.

"Serenade" is played for the scenic, one of the Pathe-Post travel pictures showing scenes at Basse Terre, Guadeloupe. Chimes are effectively used just as a glimpse of the old church is given.

Lighting effects are again unusual for the first of the musical numbers. The main dome becomes blue, the inner dome red, the panels red and the uprights and border in blue. The curtains part slowly and we have Greek Evans, baritone, seated on a bench. There is no setting, only the hanging curtain in red with evergreens on either side of the singer and a green light from the side on him. "Friend O' Mine" is the effective musical number.

Gaumont pictures of the West Point graduation open the Animated and the audience is put in a patriotic frame of mind from the start with the flashes of the marching cadets which are shown to specially arranged music consisting largely of rolls of drums and bugle calls. Then come Universal pictures of the Blue Devils saying farewell to Secretary Baker and here the music becomes "La Pere de la Victoire," changing to "My Dough Boy" as Universal pictures of the hospital trains in England ready for the use of American soldiers are shown.

From the same news weekly come pictures of President Wilson at the congressional ball game in Washington. There are several fine close-ups of the President, the music being "Giddap, Giddap, Go On," this continuing through pictures showing General Pershing's boys at baseball practice. Gaumont follows with pictures of the commencement at Annapolis and the "snake dance," with "Jack Tar March" and the sounding of eight bells.

Then the weekly takes its first turn into pictures made by Lieutenant Rothapfel. Now we get splendid pictures of the navy, showing destroyers rushing through the water rolling from side to side, seaplanes patrolling the sea, etc. All of these were made on the manager's recent trip for the Marine Corps and they are splendid. "Nautical Fantasy" is used for these and finally we are given a cry of "Submarine Ahoy" and a shot rings out.

Then the pictures quickly change to those of the Marines taken at Quantico, Va., by Mr. Rothapfel and the double spot is thrown on the crossed American and Marine flags on the arch. There is a very clever touch right at the start of these pictures with the title "They salute you," and with their faces turned to the audience and smiles on their faces the hundreds of men wave their hats in greeting. It is most effective and gets a big hand. Now from the time that the shot was fired up to this time the music had been "Marine Hymn," but now it becomes "There's a Million Heroes," which continues until the men are shown going through the manual of arms, and here the music changes to "Semper Fidelis." There are some most unusual pictures of troops marching in review with shots from all directions and then we are given a glimpse of Col. S. D. Butler, commander of the marines, with Lieutenant Rothapfel hiking toward the camera. It is at the end that the great effect comes. We see the marching marines silhouetted against the river, as the orchestra turns back to "Marine Hymn." Unexpectedly the men break into a charge right at the camera and there comes a shout from the orchestra members which is quickly taken up by the entire audience and a scene of riotous enthusiasm follows.

Here is the stage setting used by Manager A. J. Moeller at the Franklin theatre, Saginaw, Mich., on "Over the Top." It is noteworthy that this was the last setting used by Mr. Moeller before he joined the army service to himself go "over the top".

Now comes a real novelty and one of the most pleasing of numbers. It shows a different way that the song may be used with the picture and it is another case of surprising the audience. In the first place the lighting effect is unusual. The dome is in blue and there are no other lights except the light blue flood on the orchestra. First of the 'cellos comes the strains of "Old Folks at Home" and then the curtains part, revealing a beautiful garden scene in rather fanciful effects with roses everywhere, vines hanging from the top and the burst of the setting sun seen in the clouds behind. Miss Gladys Rive, dressed in simple white, is seen and she begins to sing "Can't You Hear Me Calling, Caroline," and before the song is ended she slowly walks off the stage and completes the song from behind the scenes.

The curtains remain parted and as the singer ends the audience bursts into applause, demanding an encore. Now Mr. Rothapfel never has encores at his houses, though the applause is insistent for them. He believes in leaving the audience with just enough, and wanting more, rather than tiring them with repeats. But here a novel effect is put over to the surprise and delight of the audience. The singer is heard again, still from behind the stage, and the selection is "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms." The audience sits back, believing at last that Mr. Rothapfel has yielded to the demand for an encore, but just as the words come to an end the film curtain rises and the screen curtain falls and the feature immediately starts running. A few moments later it develops that "Believe Me" is the theme of the picture.

There are forty-one changes of music in the feature, with the theme twice repeated, and then heard again at the close of the picture. All of the music is catchy in the extreme. "Fairbanks One-Step" is used during some of the star's most vigorous action five times during the showing of the picture. "Old Fashioned Town" is used for some of the scenes in the country village. "Frou Frou," "Kangaroo Hop," "A Little Peach," "Shadowland," and "Star Gazer" are some of the other selections used and there are a number of others, especially prepared for use at the Rialto and Rivoli, taken as parts of various selections and which are simply indicated by numbers

Selections from "The Sinning Girl," another of the revivals of old-time favorites, is then played by the audience, and because there have already been so many laughs the unusual comedy does not appear on the bill as the closing number, but instead there is an interesting "Baseball Review." But this contains clever titles by "Bugs" Baer that gets many laughs. In other words, it's a happy bill from the rhapsody at the start until the fun and action of outdoor sport at the end.

There is real atmosphere to these bills, and any one who does not believe that music makes a big difference in a motion picture exhibition ought to try one of Mr. Rothapfel's arrangements.

We have seen some rather ordinary features turned into successes at the Rothapfel houses by the settings that they have been given. Now both the features this week are unusually good, but we don't hesitate to say that the musical arrangements have improved them fifty per cent. Isn't that worth trying for?

Advertising Pictures to the Heart

By S. Barret McCormick

Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, and Member Advisory Board

This is the first of a series of talks on motion picture theatre advertising by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis. Mr. McCormick is known wherever motion pictures are shown and his achievements in exhibition have formed one of the brilliant epochs of the industry.

Managers of the smaller houses are the ones that need this advice more than any one else. Don't conclude that you "cannot afford" to do these things. You will find in these articles more ideas than you have ever been given before in so much space. You will find them applicable to your theatre. They are essential to the every day policy of your theatre.

THERE are two roads that lead to the Public's purse.

One winds its way through the analytical channels of the mind.

The other drives straight to the heart.

Advertising can travel either route, or both.

That which is aimed at the mind must stand the searching scrutiny of logic, the weighing of values, and convince of a practical mission if it is to prove efficient.

The advertising aimed at the heart has exactly the opposite effect. It's results are actuated by impulse. It disregards cold reasoning and strikes the heart strings of pride, pleasure and vanity, and often overrules the sterner court of the mind.

One kind sells Motor Trucks, concrete buildings and Government bonds.

The other sells Touring Cars, Lucille Gowns and Amusements.

Now that real salesmanship is becoming necessary for the merchandising of pictures to the public an understanding of the underlying causes that influence buying is vital.

The economist will state that there are two elements, the Necessity and the Luxury.

The advertising writer, however, can reduce that to one, the necessity, for with the creating of a demand for an article which administers to a want — that want, real or imagined, is always a necessity.

— and that is the mission of advertising, creating a demand, selling a necessity.

Amusements as Necessities

Amusements then are created necessities; they administer to the needs for recreation and diversion; they must tint with the glitter of make-believe the drab lives of the majority of the people, and draw the curtains that all may view the broad vista of the great world.

Therefore amusement advertising can best be directed to the heart where its appeal will strike the responsive chords that yield to the lure of love of life.

Salesmanship in print is nothing more than a megaphoned voice.

There is no magic in it, unless it be the magic of a thousand tongues that speak at once.

The potency lies in what is said.

The results are exactly as if one man met another and said, "Her Decision" is down at the Palace, or if he said "The gray-haired husband came home to find his young and beautiful wife in the loving embrace of his own boy, her step-son — it was youth calling to youth. He could not kill his own flesh and blood; he saw the barrier between husband and wife — it was 'Her Decision' down at the Palace."

Both are technically advertising; one is colorless and barren of salesmanship; the other stirs the imagination and creates desire.

Multiply the results by the circulation of the advertising medium.

Only the Method Changed

The need for merchandising pictures or selling them to the public has always existed. The method has merely changed, not the principle. The public has outgrown the ballyhoo of meaningless words just as it has advanced beyond the primitive stages of photoplay production.

The old circus press agent was a mighty good salesman.

He was spectacular in words because he was selling spectacularism. His was a massed drive against the combined emotions that influenced buying. But if he had to sell a circus ticket every week, year in and year out, to the same public, how soon would the Vesuvius of grandiloquent words continue to attract? Intensified salesmanship would soon be necessary. The Humor of Clowns would have to be dwelt upon, the daring of the bareback riders sold to the public, the lure and mystery of the spectacle displayed through creative advertising instead of the bombastic charge that overwhelmed with its torrent of printed eloquence.

Slang gives a light and satirical twist to the expression of the theme

Colorful words are as essential to advertising as are the various tints on the artist's pallette, for indeed the advertising writer must be a painter in words, who, taking the bare skeleton of a commercial product, illuminates it with the glowing colors of desirability and mental necessity.

To find the appeal in a picture, as in any commercial product, requires analysis, an investigation of the selling qualities it possesses, an elimination of the lesser points and the acceptance of that element which comes nearest to a universal appeal.

Subordinate All But Essentials

Assuming, then, that the plot of the play is the vital thing to be sold to the public, all else must be subordinated according to their relative values as selling points.

Analysis of the story then becomes necessary. What does it tell in an unusual manner of the various human emotions from which all plays are compounded? Is Love the big thing? Is Hate the vital issue? Is Humor the appealing note?

If so, why does it strike the responsive chord and subjugate all else before its spell?

When you have grasped this you have found your selling point, the one that will bring the maximum of results according to the merit and necessity of the thing sold.

Take as an example, "Tarzan of the Apes," which possessed a wide field of selling appeals. It combined Mystery, Adventure, Love, Romance woven into a fantastic fabric. Which then is the element of universal appeal? Weirdness was the dominant note, yet when one analyzes his audience as well as his picture, he will realize that the uncanny is not a subject that

A Woman Sets the Pace for All of You

IN the next issue we will publish a story telling you of the way a woman puts over her productions in a city of 10,000 that would do credit to the biggest theatre in the country.

This is an article that will make every exhibitor think. When he hears the success that this woman exhibitor has won he will start out to do bigger and better things for himself. This article, and the others to follow, will prove more of a spur to the industry than all the mere talk of centuries.

MISS FLOSSIE A. JONES, head of the Waukesha Amusement Company, owning three theatres, is the woman. The advice that she gives and the examples which she proves will make the industry think once more. She shows you how you can get more money for your theatre by doing more for your patrons.

You cannot afford to miss this article. We have held it back for a week to notify you to look for it.

AND this is merely one of the features of the next issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. There will be a story about the way that S. Barret McCormick staged "Carmen of the Klondyke," and there will be illustrated stories about the way that other pictures were presented and big events celebrated. We have so much to promise that we are afraid to list them.

For we are not merely promising you things here. We are giving you the stories of the best things that the leaders among exhibitors are doing. We are not talking to you in theories—we are giving you SERVICE.

If you are not reading every line of this matter you are robbing yourself.

reaches all. Add adventure and the subject becomes more interesting, yet all natures do not respond to the thrill of battle. Include romance and you reach the hearts and hold them more securely, and finally with Love added you have the composite of the vital selling points which make the story, "A Weird Romance that travels the paths of Adventure and brings Love from enchanting Mystery."

The story possessed the composite elements all the time, the audience instinctively felt them and advertising salesmanship searched them out and capitalized them.

Many Different Treatments

Having found the selling points and combined them into one method of appeal they permit of a thousand different treatments in advertising exploitation, each with a different appearance yet all possessing the same vital selling argument or heart appeal.

Any one of the several appealing points, exploited separately, would have sold the picture to a certain group. Combined in word paintings, they form an irresistible force against all the emotions that respond through the heart.

Perhaps the great vogue of the star system lies in the already created market for their product. Their personalities are ready made advertisements. They dominate all else in the picture. They are easier to sell simply because they are an established commodity. Their selling points do not change. Once imbedded in the buyer's mind they remain the same, an established quantity who sell themselves over and over again, according to the one or more appeals they make to the heart.

But try to establish a new star overnight. Then salesmanship is absolutely necessary just as it is essential to the marketing of a story on its plot. Reason must be found why that player is going to appeal to the man or woman who is reading your printed message and that reason advanced in such a manner as will stimulate the imagination of the reader and prospective buyer, and create desire to see for himself.

Conversational style of advertising brings the punch home

Selling Points of Players

Likewise the player who is at the top and the one on the half way road are always material for further exploitation, not merely by the heralding of a name, but by finding their selling points and presenting them with an appeal that reaches the heart and convinces.

In some advertising writers the ability to find the vital selling point of a product is what might be termed "subconscious analysis," a gift that produces conclusions without any apparent effort on his part. Frequently this is instinct, the same instinct that makes "born" salesmen and supermen in all professions, but more frequently it is a developed condition of the mind gained through study and reasoning.

Often we hear of "born" showmen, men who possess an indefinable instinct for providing the public with the type of amusement they crave, but it is always well to remember that the "showman" is nothing more than a merchant; the successful showman is merely a successful merchant and the poor showman a poor merchant in that particular line.

The difference between the mercantile salesman and the amusement salesman is entirely a matter of mental processes.

The showman must possess a dramatic instinct, either inherent or acquired, and it is upon this instinct that the psychology of his selling must be based.

The writer of amusement advertising must deal with the same emotions as the dramatist, he must strike the same heart strings that the playwright does and his results are acquired, not from what the eye sees but from what the heart feels.

It is this that often makes typographically perfect and rhetorically exquisite advertising a failure. The eye was pleased but the heart was not thrilled. The same is all too frequently found in plays, which despite lavish production and technical perfection, fall flat because they lacked "Heart Interest," or what is more generally termed, in the realm of the cinema, "Punch."

"Trailer," Next Door, Sends People Into Theatre

Mark Gates, manager of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., used a novel and profitable stunt during the run of "The Unbeliever" at his theatre. The store next door was vacant at the time, so he took an extra machine from his projection room, hung a sheet across the store window and ran the "trailer" on "The Unbeliever" on it, and then flashed on the screen, "A few views of 'The Unbeliever' now being shown inside." In a few minutes the streets were crowded and it is estimated that 80 per cent of the people immediately turned to the box office.

Your Idea and Ours

THANK heavens, here is a different sort of "Bill" Hart advertisement! We are so tired of seeing two guns sticking at us out of nearly every newspaper that we pick up that a relief is most welcome. Here Sam W. B. Cohn, of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, has used a real half-tone of the star and has made a telegram a dominant feature of the display.

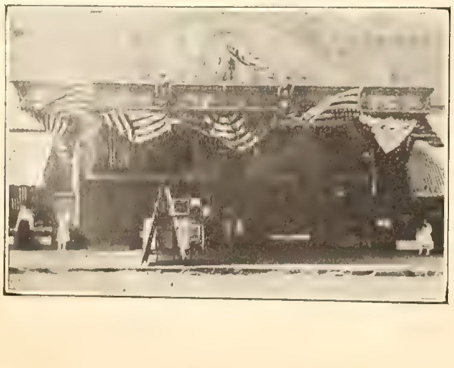
Now the use of the telegram is not entirely new, but it is a good stunt to pull once in a while, where you are sure that you have an especially strong production. Please note that no wild statements are made in this "wire." The picture is called one of the best in which he has appeared. Now the degree of typing is sacrificed in order to bring out the telegram and the halftone stands out by itself.

Here is a splendid way to vary your advertising. Give 'em something different and you will have the public looking for what you have to say.

Keep the nightmares to yourself; let your audiences have the pleasant dreams.

LAST week we told you some of the details of the manner in which Charles H. Ryan, manager of the Garfield theatre, Chicago, put over "The Unbeliever." He gave it a special patriotic setting and used a special score. Just before the picture was to be shown the program that we described last week was followed, and then there was thrown on the screen a section from one of the Universal news weeklies, showing American marines forming the word "Victory!" It went over with a big smash.



Front of the theatre was decorated in American flags for the run. Mr. Ryan had the cooperation of two companies of Boy Scouts, one on the day preceding the attraction and one on the day the picture was shown. For the night parade the boys were equipped with torches.

For the flag raising on the stage in the prologue a high school cadet in uniform was used and the "Star Spangled Banner" was played. In the evening a lieutenant and a squad of five marines were present and fired their three-pound cannon three times in front of the house. Afterwards the officer made a talk from the stage.

The difference between a green apple and a red-ripe one is the same as between a picture merely thrown on the screen and one properly presented.

THIS is not good advertising. Dayton theatre, Dayton, Ohio, generally does good work, though it yields to the temptation to put too much matter into the advertising. Here is a display that, taken by itself in the form that it is reproduced, we would condemn as mighty bad, but when we look at the entire page, we must admit that it attracts the first attention. It occupies space five columns wide and twelve inches deep, and when one comes to look closer into it, is easily read and not confusing.

THE NEW GARRICK

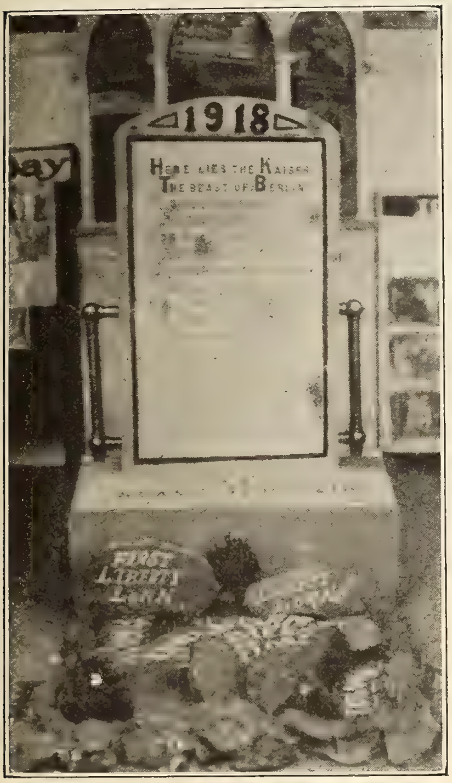
AFTER looking at one of the old type displays it is a pleasure to see what can be done in a modern newspaper office and with the use of a single style of type. This has been done by Thomas L. Hays, of the New Garrick, St. Paul, and the result is what we consider perfect display.

The use of the cut is excellent and the proper emphasis is given each portion of the matter. There is just enough said and not too much, and there is ample white space. Another thing about this display is that one need not be afraid of its company. It will stand out no matter what sort of other typing surrounds it. And since it is three columns wide and seventeen inches deep it will dwarf most of the others.

For every grouch among your patrons you need two smiles, one for him going and coming.

HERE is a striking idea that was used by E. H. Collins, manager of the Liberty theatre, Electra, Texas, when he played "The Kaiser." In front of the box office he placed a tombstone bearing the words: "Here Lies the Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and other appropriate lettering. In front of the tombstone were huge rocks labeled the First, Second and Third

What Live Wires are Doing



Liberty Loans, the American Army, etc., During the showing of this picture, Mr. illustrating how the kaiser came to his end. Collins used a huge banner bearing the title of the picture, a cartoon of the kaiser, and a picture of the devil. He played the picture for two days to unusual business.

There's only one bellwether in a flock; are you "over the fence" first?

WE want to commend this display of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., for mighty good taste in making the announcement of the return engagement of "Cleopatra." This picture played to record business during its first engagement and the temptation would have been strong with most managers to employ all sorts of superlatives in announcing its return.

MAJESTIC

We did not see the advertising on the first presentation of the picture, but we imagine that the design was probably one of those that was used the first time. It is striking in its combination of black and white and half-tone effects. It certainly carries dignity with it and the manner in which the statements about the business of the first engagement are carried is going to impress patrons that the picture drew crowds because of its merit and that the theatre manager is not merely trying to "bally-hoo" the picture along to a second run. This sort of treatment of a picture is convincing—and the day of the "hip-hip-hoorah" is rapidly ending.

Don't worry about "Who's who." Make yourself and your theatre IT.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Selma, Ala., has improved in its advertising more than almost any other small city in the country, but here is a case where it slipped back. Now the designer saw the catch line quickly enough, "What her eyes have seen, yours shall see." But then he forgot all about it. One has to hunt for the name of the star, after having found a cut in a midst of a lot of white space at the top and the reference to the Lusitania is worse hidden.

HERE is an excellent idea for the advertisement of serials in the larger cities. We take this clipping from the Rochester Photoplay News. It appears under a general heading, "Serials,' and there are similar advertisements on "The House of Hate," "The Lion's Claw," "The Woman in the Web" and "The Bull's Eye." By-the-way, it is a remarkable thing that these advertisements show that there are three Rochester theatres showing serials five nights a week, and all different serials.

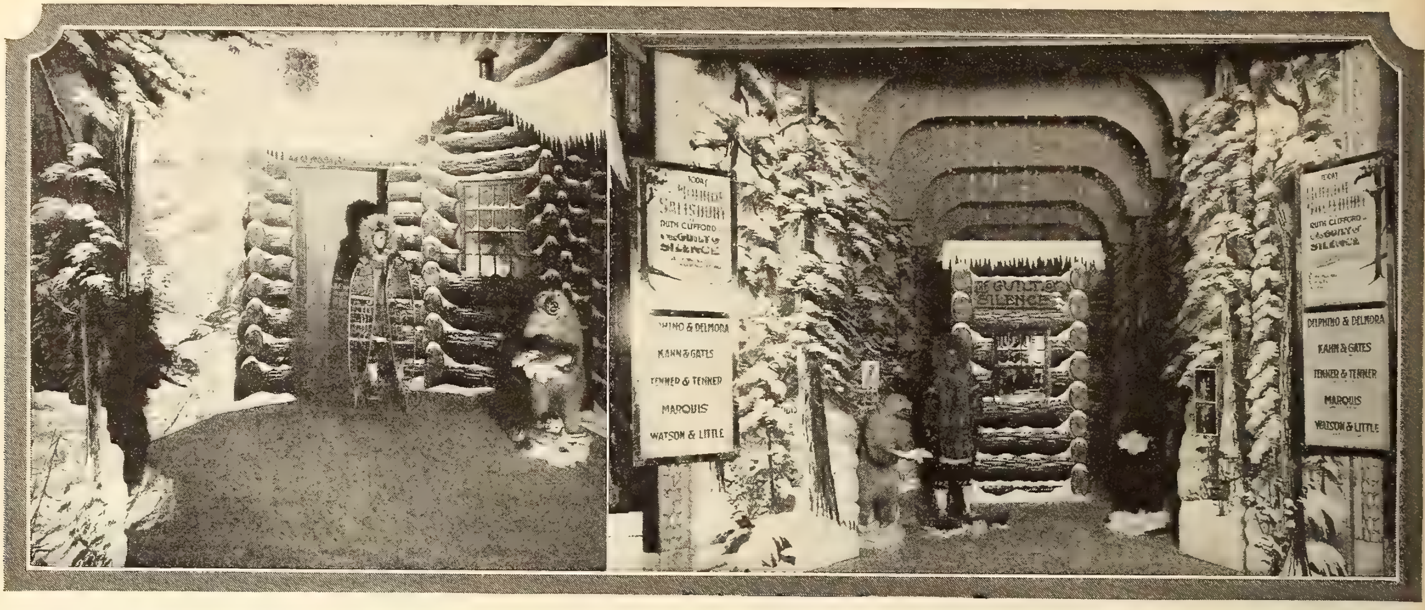
We commend this as a mighty good form of advertising for the exchanges to follow in the larger cities. The one weak point of serial pictures is that most theatres depend strictly upon the neighborhood knowledge of the days that they are to be shown at the various houses. This sort of advertising calls attention to all of the houses at which the picture is being shown, together with the date and the number of the episode.

If the theatres themselves follow this up by mentioning the serial in their daily advertisements, they will be getting well nigh one hundred per cent publicity.

The fan who comes back is worth three that you "best" is an argument.

ORIGINAL drawings by Haskell Coffin and Charles Chambers, noted artists, will supply the lobby material for the exploitation of the first Doris Kenyon production, "The Street of the Seven Stars," according to announcement from De Luxe Pictures.

An intensive and nation-wide publicity has been inaugurated, which will include many of the foremost publications. The first of these is a full page display in the June issue of the Pictorial Review, which has a circulation of 1,500,000 and is read each month by at least 7,000,000 women. Specially posed-for photographs have recently appeared or will appear in the near future in the rotogravure sections of a score or more leading newspapers throughout the country.



Manager Walter B. Armstrong, of the Strand theatre, Portland, Ore., was one of the leading stage artists of the Northwest before he went into motion pictures, and he used that knowledge in exploiting Universal's "The Guilt of Silence." At the right is the front of the theatre and at the left the back door entrance with cyclorama drop. Note the use of the bears and the costumes of the attendants. during the week, but shows motion pictures on Sundays.

We'll pass the Commercial by with this comment: It might find a circulation tonic in a real motion picture department.

The Courier has an almost prohibitive advertising rate, $2 on week days and $4 on Sundays. This paper is owned by William J. Conners, who also owns the afternoon Enquirer, and a joint rate for the two papers daily is $3 an inch. On Sunday the Courier carries 5½ inches double column for the Hippodrome—and attractive advertising it is—about 3½ double for the Strand, 1½ double for the Family, five inches single for the Academy and two inches for the Regent. All the theatrical and motion picture matter is thrown together under the heading "This Week at the Theatres," pure reading notice matter without general interest. There is an occasional single column cut sprinkled in. NOT A LINE OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Now each of the Sunday papers prints an illustrated section, and what little representation they give the motion picture houses is given there. In the reproduction it will be seen that a couple of the theatres are represented with cuts which are all mixed in with war pictures. This may do the theatres some slight good, but we consider it a messy scramble.

During the week the Courier carries an inch for the Hippodrome and the Family and a half inch for the Strand, and then the story of its advertising is at an end. On Monday under the heading "This Week at the Theatres" it carries an average of four lines for each of the advertising houses, with the motion picture jumbled together with legitimate and vaudeville. On Tuesdays longer reviews of the picture houses, together with notices for the other theatres are given in the same column.

On Thursday most of the theatres change their bill and we find the Hippodrome the only one using increased space, going to three inches double column. There is the same "news' as on Mondays.

In its Saturday issue the Enquirer separated photoplay matter from the other under a two-column heading and prints single column cuts of various players. The Strand carried the same ad as in the Courier, the Hippodrome used six inches single, the Academy five, and the Family one, while the Allendale comes along with a half inch. During the week the Hippodrome, Strand and Family each use an inch of space. This paper gives a separate two-column head to the motion picture houses on Tuesdays and a single-column head to all the theatres on Thursdays.

The Sunday Express carried the same advertisements of the Hippodrome, Strand, Academy and Regent as appear in the Courier, and has an equally messy and uninteresting department—again merely a series of reading notices. It also has one of those illustrated sections and at the lower part of the page that we have reproduced we find cuts of Mabel Normand and Nazimova appearing at the Hippodrome and the Strand. Hippodrome and Strand use an inch daily in this paper, with larger space Thursday for the former. Brief reading notices Tuesdays and Thursdays. It charges $2.10 daily and $3.50 Sundays.

The News comes nearer having a motion picture department than any other paper, but it is only "near." There is a two-column heading which carries cuts of three players at the legitimate and at the bottom of the page we find a two-column cut containing pictures of six players at the various houses.

There is a column of "Gossip of Film Stars" that is worth while. It is the start of a real motion picture department, but only a start.

But the theatres should encourage that start. We find that the Hippodrome goes to six inches single column in the News and that the Strand used only two inches, the Regent two and the Family one. Strand, Family and Hippodrome use an inch daily. There are reading notices Tuesdays and Thursdays. Its rate is $2.80, far the lowest in the city when one considers circulation.

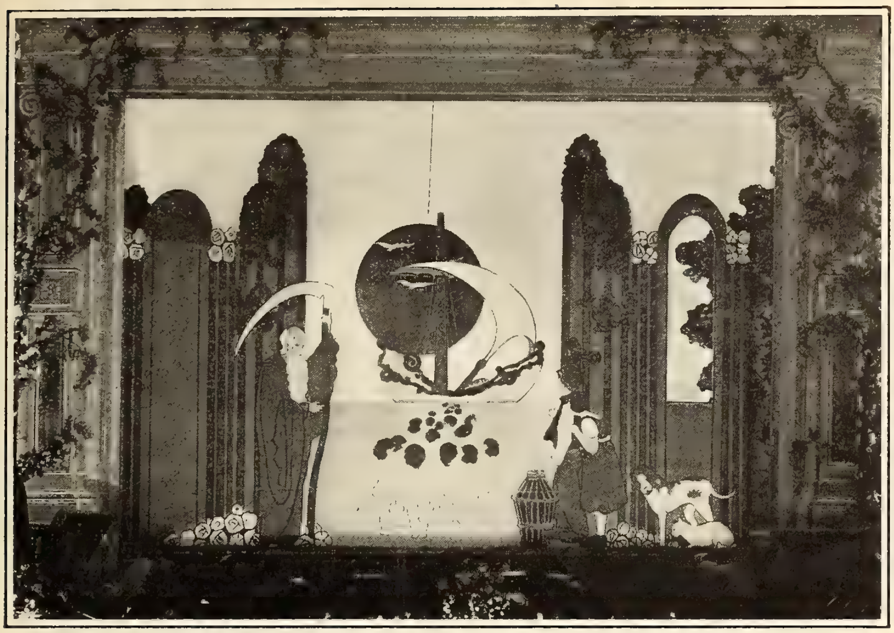
The Sunday Times devotes one page and a part of the second to general theatrical matter. Hippodrome, Strand and Academy use the same space as in the Courier. There is one double column and some single column cuts on the players. This paper also has an illustrated section, better printed than any of the others, and both the Strand and the Hippodrome are represented in this with three column cuts. Hippodrome with an inch and Strand with a half are the only theatres using the paper during the week. Reading notices appear Tuesdays and Thursdays. It charges $2.25 daily and $3.50 Sundays.

The News appears willing to co-operate from time to time in running special stories for some of the theatres. It is the only paper to try to do anything, apparently.

Such is the Buffalo situation; it couldn't be worse.

But even with the situation so bad we have hope for the Buffalo case. But to do any good the newspapers should get a man who understands motion pictures and conduct an attractive department. This man should know how to solicit advertising. A campaign of education is necessary to get the neighborhood houses into the habit of using paid matter, but once converted they are apt to be permanent.

With Buffalo a house with so many neighborhood theatres we should think that the publication of a "Chart" giving the attractions for each day of the week at all of the houses that do advertise would be most attractive. We are sure that it will greatly increase the circulation of the paper that tries it first and sticks to it long enough to get the public accustomed to it.



Fanciful stage setting on "The Blue Bird" at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

Lighting and Music Big Features of "Blue Bird" Presentation in Buffalo

ONE of the most artistic photoplay presentations ever recorded in Buffalo was offered by Manager Harold B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome last week with the first showing in Buffalo of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird." Before showing the picture, Mr. Franklin took pains to create the proper atmosphere for the showing of the production and his efforts to put the audience in a "Blue Bird" frame of mind by introducing the feature with a scenic and musical prelude were most successful.

The effect of the stage setting was magnificent, succeeding in preparing the audience for what was to come. The 26-piece Hippodrome orchestra, under the direction of Alfred R. Moulton aided greatly in producing the desired effect. Before unveiling the setting, the sky over the entire stage was gradually dimmed up into a rich deep blue during which the orchestra played a theme from "The Midsummer's Night Dream." The curtains were drawn, discloisng a beautiful scene from Maeterlinck's master-piece—that depicting the moment when the little souls are waiting to be born. The entire effect was lighted with various shades of blue, blending into each other, giving the rainbow effect.

In contrast to the soft blues, there appeared the golden light of the mythical sun in the centre, in front of which several blue birds were flying. The scene was shown just long enough for the majestical ship to sail on. The curtains were then drawn to the rich tones of a few bars of "The Chimes," and orchestra went right into the beautiful music of "The Enfantine" with harp predominating. The curtains were again parted, this time disclosing the screen which was also lighted with a soft blue. This light was kept on during the first three titles, then was blended.

Throughout the prelude the orchestra was illuminated by the blue lights thrown from the two spotlights to the stage. The accompanying photograph naturally fails to show the color effects. The sun was brilliantly lighted with a golden amber and baby "spots" were used in picking out the characters of the play.

The musical program given by the Hippodrome orchestra and which was arranged by Mr. Franklin and Mr. Moulton, was as follows:

Enfantine	Gounod
Pastel Minuet	Paradis
Les Sylphes	Bachmann
Return to Me Soon	Greig
Woodland Whispers	Czibulka
Whisperings of Love	Blou
Arabesque	Debussy
Dance of the Hours	Buchielli (Gioconda)
Willow Blossoms	Sousa
Aubade Printanniere
Tendre Aveu	Schitl
Serenade	Somme and Latt
Latruit et L'Amour	Holmes
Blissful Dreams	Helmund
I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby	Clay
Ballet Suite I Faust	Gounod
Suite II Faust	Gounod
Rustling Leaves	Kohler
Prelude—Last Dream of the Virgin
La Lettre de Mauve
Temple Bells	Finden
Angels' Serenade	Braga
La Soupie	Gillet
Fair Tales	Kersen
Dear Land of the Home
Festival Dance	Delibes

Mr. Franklin also launched an extensive publicity campaign for "The Blue Bird," inserting 12-inch ad in the Saturday, Sunday and Monday papers. The ads used were striking because of their simplicity and because of their generous size stood out on the drama pages like a spotlight. The Hippodrome enjoyed capacity business during the presentation of "The Blue Bird," and the special children's matinee Wednesday was a huge success, the big house being filled with little folks, bright smiles and joyous laughter.

With some managers "running a picture house" simply means that they stick around while the theatre runs itself.

Vitagraph Gives Complete Line of Aids to Exhibitors on New Serial

VITAGRAPH has just issued what is probably the most comprehensive plan book that has been given the exhibitor for the exploitation of a serial. This is for handling "A Fight for Millions," the new fifteen-chapter story in which William Duncan is starred.

It opens with a talk on the manner in which this serial should be put over, beginning with the advance campaign and includes a number of stories to be placed in the newspapers and house program before the picture is started. The line of advertising prepared is unusually attractive. It is in line work from four columns down to single and the adventure idea is strongly brought out. It enters fully into the spirit of the picture and is sure to attract.

There is no reason in the world why a serial should not be advertised as much and as regularly as a feature, and certainly the exhibitor of this picture is furnished with exactly the proper matter to be used.

Two solid pages are devoted to ideas that may be used in connection with "A Fight for Millions." A number of stunts are suggested and they differ from most of those usually offered.

On each episode the full story is given, there are separate stories for the newspaper and new cuts. A short synopsis for the program is also prepared for each chapter.

Vitagraph is itself posting striking twenty-four sheets all over the country and in addition will give exhibitors as many as they themselves will post. Besides this there is a six, three and one sheet for each episode. There are also lobby displays for each episode, and in addition to the advertising matter there is a series of halftones of the star and two supporting players.

SUMMER EFFORTS

If Business Is Bad Are You Trying to Do a Little More?

M. MARCUS, now manager of the million-dollar Grand theatre, Pittsburg, and formerly manager of the Colonial, Columbus, O., has some good ideas for summer-time. He sees no reason why business should be any worse then, if the exhibitor makes a real effort to make the utmost appeal to his audiences.

In the next issue of the NEWS we are going to start a discussion of hot-weather ideas.

What have you done in the past to get the crowds when the park has its lure?

Don't be afraid to write.

Father and Son Prove Great Team in Exploitation of Pictures at Newburgh

FRED M. TAYLOR, of Newburgh, N. Y., is preparing to celebrate shortly the thirtieth anniversay of his ownership of the Academy of Music. Together with his son, Burton, he is now conducting it as one of the most popular photoplay houses in New York State and there he is setting a mark that any city of 30,000, and many larger, will do well to follow.

One of the Goldwyn officials, in his review of the things that prominent exhibitors are doing in the way of exploitation points out that the Taylors, father and son, are making a home rather than an amusement house out of the Academy for 15,000 people each week. Here are some of the things that the Taylors have done recently, as pointed out by the Goldwyn official:

"It is the Taylor rule to invest the same amount of brain power, energy and money in exploiting every picture. The Taylors play no favorites. The only deviation from that custom is their method of augmenting the Academy orchestra with the presentation of Goldwyn Pictures, which have grown to be a byword with Newburgh's picture devotees. How successful the Taylors have been with Goldwyn productions is gleaned from the fact that 'Polly of the Circus' starring Mae Marsh, has played no less than three separate engagements at the Academy, all in the space of six weeks. 'The Auction Block' and 'The Cinderella Man' also played return engagements. The Academy could very appropriately be called 'the house of Goldwyn repeats.'

"The Taylors are liberal advertisers. But even that wouldn't tell why they are so tremendously successful with everything they undertake, for there are a thousand such throughout the country who never get in return the half of what the Taylors do in the way of prestige for their theatre and profit for themselves. It's their original way of advertising that gives the Taylors their influence and power in Newburgh and its territory.

"Let Mr. Taylor, the elder, tell about it.

"'There never was a picture,' said he, 'that didn't offer at least six perfectly good showmanship angles—something to stir the town—something entirely different from anything exploited before. As an example, take "Polly of the Circus." We enjoyed tremendous success with that because it gave us a score of ways to interest most of the people in Newburgh.

"'On the initial presentation of "Polly," we played the circus stunt to the limit. For three days before screening date we had two circus wagons and a chariot and calliope parading the principal streets of the town, as well as in Marlboro, Cornwall and Beacon. The Academy lobby was turned into a circus entrance with side-show barkers and two young girls dressed as equestriennes. For the second run of the picture we played up the star angle. Everything we knew of Mae Marsh—her work in "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance"—was put into print.

"'"The Cinderella Man" was another that gave us no end of angles for exploitation. Here again we used a big float to tell what the play was about. On it were a girl dressed in the height of fashion and a young man in the garb of a struggling poet representing the big scene in the picture where Mae Marsh, as a girl of wealth, steals into the garret home of the poet, played by Tom Moore. I had the good fortune to select a couple who greatly resembled the leading Goldwyn players in "The Cinderella Man."

"Like the winning combination in baseball or in any other field of endeavor, the Taylors always seem to 'get the breaks' whether it is in newspaper advertising or in getting a picture appropriate for the day and times. The Academy of Music has a great friend in the Newburgh Daily News.

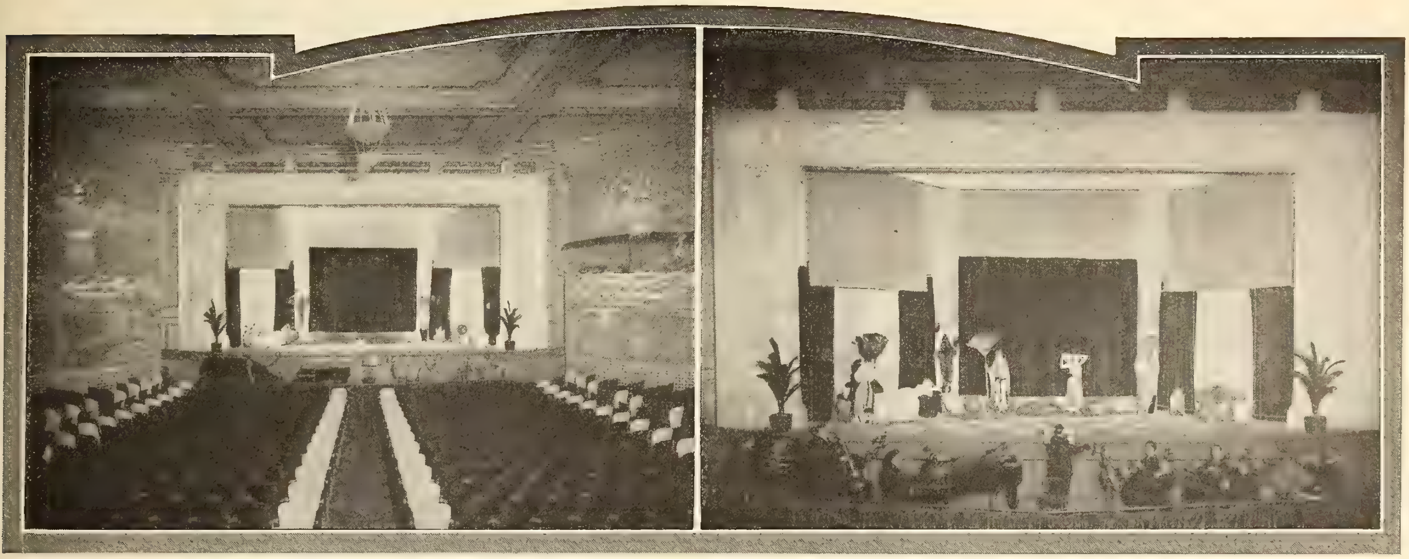
"Frederick H. Keefe, business manager of the News, is a firm believer in motion pictures. He doesn't understand why many publishers are still judging picture standards by some slipshod productions of many years back.

"'Subscribers to the News enjoy reading worth while stories of movie stars,' Mr. Keefe told a Goldwyn representative the other day. 'So why shouldn't we print them? They are a whole lot more interesting than detailing how much pig iron was produced last year or publishing the story of some happening in far-away Utah that doesn't concern Newburghers.'

"Taylor showmanship stunts are a source of great enjoyment to the townspeople. There isn't a week goes by that the Taylors don't 'pull' something startling in the way of novel exploitation of a picture. For instance, when Goldwyn's 'Nearly Married' played the Academy young Bart started down Broadway, the main street, in his car and, spying a friend of his in the company of a pretty girl, he drove up to the curb and invited them for a ride.

"They accepted and he drove them back to the theatre, where, unknown to the occupants, the automobile was bedecked with the customary bridal send-off entanglements—an assortment of old shoes, tin cans, pails, etc. This outfit was supplemented by several large posters which read, 'Nearly Married' at the Academy of Music."

"For the engagement of Madge Kennedy in 'Baby Mine' the Taylors announced the raffle of a baby. To each purchaser was given a number. On the final night of the engagement policemen were on hand at the request of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. With the announcement of the winner, who happened to be a girl of eight, the large audience was thrown into a frenzy of laughter when a baby pig was wheeled."



Two views of the special stage settings at Strand theatre, Milwaukee, for Fox's "A Daughter of the Gods"

"Daughter of the Gods" Given Special Prologue in Showing at Milwaukee Strand

ONLY last week we had an inquiry: "How can I put over 'A Daughter of the Gods'?" There is not a week passes that the Exhibitors' Service Bureau is not called upon for suggestions on the showmanship of the bigger pictures and of some of the lesser known. And the inquirers always get definite answers with plans which they can and do follow. The leading exhibitors of the country who are contributing regularly to this department afford invaluable help in that direction.

And so we are mighty glad to have this week from Charles C. Perry, managing director of the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, and a member of the Advisory Board, an account of the splendid success that he made with this big Fox special. Mr. Perry has been setting a new mark in Milwaukee by the way that he puts over the unusual features. His stage settings and his special introductions have been worth thousands of dollars in word-of-mouth advertising for the Strand.

The prologue used by Mr. Perry entered into the very spirit of the picture. The stage setting itself was Oriental, and on both sides of this what were originally the boxes were converted into scenes of the sea. This was effected by the use of a serim across the lower boxes.

The interlude opened with a dark stage with the faint suggestion of the light of the moon coming through and resting on a dancer reclining on a couch. On either side of the stage incense bowls flared up and then died down into smoke. The scene opened with the orchestra playing an Oriental overture, and then as the lights came up first into blue, and then into red and green and finally into amber two girls were seen fanning the lady on the couch.

At the conclusion of the overture the orchestra began the introduction to the "Intermezzo" from "Salome," and the dancer gave a solo performance which lasted about three minutes, coming to an end with the performer in the center of the stage just as the curtains were drawn. When they came apart again the picture was started. It was so effective that it brought repeated applause.

A similar introduction to this might be used for either "Salome" or "Cleopatra," though the stage settings should be varied and the individual atmosphere of each of these big productions preserved. We regret that we are without a thorough description of the stage settings used at the Strand, but the photographs reproduced with this article give a splendid idea of the way that the spirit of the picture was carried out.

Strand theatre is making a specialty of putting something behind each of the specials that it shows. Instead of this being a confession of the weakness of a picture, as it was once regarded, it is now added power to a production that will make good. But for a big house to put on a spectacular production cold with an ordinary overture, and merely preceded or followed by any old film has months ago been banished as a forgotten plan by the leading houses. We use the word months because it has not been a very much longer time since exhibitors all over the country began to give special attention to the atmosphere of pictures.

You are going to hear a lot about the way that the Strand and Mr. Perry are doing things. These articles are worth reading and putting away until the time that you show the pictures that are covered in these articles.

Manager of New Orleans Strand in Army

Maurice F. Barr, manager of the Strand theatre, the largest and the newest of the theatres of the Saenger Amusement Company, has gone to war, having just reported to Camp Beauregard, La. His duties have been assumed by D. L. Cornelius, who is director of publicity for the entire Saenger company. Mr. Cornelius has had long managerial experience, and among others conducted the Lafayette theatre in New Orleans before the completion of the Strand.

HYMAN PROMOTED

Advisory Board Member to Run One of Biggest Liberty Theatres

EDWARD L. HYMAN, who was manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, until recently, when he decided to devote his services to the government and became manager of the Liberty theatre at Camp Gordon, Ga., has just been given an important promotion.

Announcement is made that he has been promoted to the management of the Liberty theatre, Camp Zachary Taylor, near Louisville, Ky. This is one of the very largest of the amusement places operated by the government for the benefit of the soldiers.

Mr. Hyman has been a member of the Advisory Board since its inauguration and will continue to serve. He will soon contribute some interesting articles to this department.

Pathe Promises Superior Work in Its Posters

Pathe announces that the greatest efforts yet put forth to secure artistic and business pulling effects from the posters are being evolved under the management of Harry Lewis, who is now in charge of the poster and lobby display department. Several noted artists who have hitherto declined to do commercial work will lend their efforts to the creation of this superior matter.

Included in the advertising that Pathe declares to be superior are these productions: Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno in "The First Law"; Elaine Hammerstein in "The Woman Eternal" and "Hands Up" the newest serial.

How to Exploit the "Success Series" For Big Business

EVERY theatre which has been in operation for the past four years and which is today doing even a fairly successful business unquestionably owes a large part of its success to the good pictures that it has presented. It has probably shown bad ones, too, but the permanence has resulted from the impression of the good ones prevailing. Other elements have entered into the theatre's success, but the big element has been the merit of the photoplay itself.

Every manager would probably jump at the opportunity to show again the best pictures of all of those that he has presented during the past four years. Because of the different changes in producers, the altered affiliations of the stars and for many other reasons this is physically impossible, but Famous-Players-Lasky corporation proposes to do this so far as its own product is concerned. Fifty-two of the pictures which the company considers to be the best that it has made in the past are to be reissued under the general name of the Success Series.

Included in this series are eight pictures with Mary Pickford as the star, six with Marguerite Clark, and six with Pauline Frederick, four with Dustin Farnum and an equal number with John Barrymore, three each from Geraldine Farrar and Victor Moore, two featuring William Farnum, five Jack Pickfords and eleven specials with various stars or all-star casts, including such productions as "The Old Homestead," "The Girl of the Golden West" and "The Warrens of Virginia." A full list of these will be found on the opposite page.

Two Big Points in Exploitation

Now there are two points to be considered in the exploitation of reissues, especially where you can go before the public and say, in the name of the Famous-Players-Lasky Company, that these represent the best product of the past. First, you want to bring back to your theatre again the people who saw the pictures when they were first shown. Where the pictures have made a real impression, although the memory of them may be somewhat hazy, this is going to be comparatively easy. But you want to do a great deal more than this; you want to appeal to those who have become picture fans since these pictures were made—and there are thousands of these. Apparently, there is no more reason why a good picture should not be shown again than there is why a standard book should not be read a second time—or by later generations that could not read it when it appeared.

Very frankly, rather than book these reissues as mere fillers, something that may be a little cheaper to you, we would leave them alone. If you take them in that spirit, you are going to put them before your patrons in the same spirit. If you are not going to make them specials and put something unusual behind them, you are going to miss a great share of their exploitation possibilities. And the manner in which you can get this publicity is so simple that it does not require the work of an expert. The whole spirit in which these pictures should be put before the public is that you are yielding to the popular desire of those who have seen these pictures and those who have failed to see them by presenting them again.

USE PHOTOS FREELY

Recall How the Players Appeared in These Productions of the Past

USE of photos in newspaper advertising, the free matter that you get in your papers, in your program and in your lobby displays is highly important in the most successful exploitation of the Success Series.

Everyone wants to know how this or that player looked in a picture made a couple of years or more ago. Especially on the part of those who have seen the production these will create a word-of-mouth exploitation that you could not buy.

Use newspaper stories that will recall earlier days of the players. Connect the making of the picture with some local event if you can, and it will bring the appeal of the recollection of them closer home.

"Re-Issues" Your Strong Point

In the first place don't make any effort to conceal the fact that these are reissues. That is one of the strongest points that you have for their exploitation. There is not a star on the list that Famous Players-Lasky is reissuing that is not known wherever pictures are known. The specials are pictures that have been made from stage productions or novels that are household words. You already have established for you the fame of the star or of the story, or both, as the case may be. But you have a great deal more than that behind them. You have the word-of-mouth advertising of those who saw these pictures in the past or who have heard others talk about them. In some cases it may be only a memory, but memory is a wonderful spur.

Bookings for these reissues open September 1 and there are fifty-two of them, as we have said, or one a week if the exhibitor takes them all. Naturally the number that the individual exhibitor will book and the length that he will run them will depend on the other arrangements that he makes, so that the suggestions for handling these will have to be gauged accordingly, but for the purpose of covering the field here, we will discuss the entire series.

Now as soon as you have booked this series, or the part of it that you will use, decide that you are going to these pictures from the start. If possible, select special days on which you will show them. Of course some of the pictures will take longer runs than others, but this is one of the little details that you will have to arrange accordingly.

Worthy Use of Letters

Now shortly before you show the first of this Success Series we would send a letter to each patron announcing the bookings and telling the public that you have taken these as a part of your plant to revive the great successes that have stood out among the mass of productions of the past. We have not been believers in the policy of writing a letter to each patron about every picture you show, because we believe that the very value of the letter consists in making it to apply to something out of the ordinary—something that will attract attention. A week, or say, the Sunday before the showing of the first of these productions we would devote the largest space that we could afford to newspaper exploitation of such of the pictures that you have booked. By all means list all of those that you are going to show and give the names of the stars and a few lines about each production.

Then proceed to advertise each individual picture just as heavily as you would a first run—but in a slightly different way, always repeating something along the line that this is one of the productions that helped to give the motion picture the position that is occupies today.

Here is one intimate form of advertising that you can work out, but it must be done carefully, if the picture has been shown in your city before. It will require a little trouble, but it is worth it. Find out, through a card census of your audience or through personal inquiry, the names of prominent patrons who have seen the picture before, and quote one of these in each individual advertisement. If you can use a statement from a leading physician or a prominent lawyer that he remembers Mary Pickford in "Rags," and that it was one of the most appealing pictures he ever saw, this will be worth many dollars to you. It will add the personal endorsement of some one that the public knows. It will put the same kind of longing to see it in the hearts of the public as exists from the constant recurrence of hearing that "Ivanhoe" is a great novel.

Follow Merchandising Angle

In all of the newspaper advertising we would follow the merchandising angle, for certainly each of these is regarded as a good picture, or they would not have been reissued and you have the guarantee of Famous Players-Lasky that they have been selected on that ground. We would go outside of the ordinary styles of advertising with this series. For instance, when we were about to show Marguerite Clark in "Wild Flower" we would start our talk off something like this:

"Do you remember the charming appeal that Marguerite Clark made to you in 'Wildflower'? It was the picture in which she was introduced to the screen and it has never been surpassed, etc."

You can follow this plan in the case of all the star pictures, and especially in the case of those where there is no book appeal.

But many of the series were made from famous books or stage plays. There are "The Virginians," "The Eternal City," "The Traveling Salesman," and a number of others. You have here a chance for the human appeal. In this connection it is well to remember that one of the biggest hits that Mr. Rothapfel has scored at his theatres has been in the playing of old time songs. Often these selections get more applause than the main overture. Yet there is not the chance to advertise them, to get in the advance appeal that you have in case of these pictures.

Feature Titles Strong

Now keep your appeal dignified, but keep it intimate. When some exhibitors are told to use intimate copy they think that they have to use something like "Say, old boy, do you remember, etc." Feature the title of each one of these productions strong and use cuts of the stars in your advertising. Then talk about the production, talk about it in the spirit that every one had either seen the picture or has heard so much about it that he wants to see it.

There are other things that you can bring out in your advertising. There are a number of players who are now among the leading stars who appear as leading men or women or in even lesser roles in some of these productions. For instance, there are Harold Lockwood, Mae Allison, Monroe Salisbury, Tom Forman, Creighton Hale and many others. Now even if you are playing these who are now stars in their own rights, it is not going to weaken your current new offerings in the slightest to calling attention to the fact that these players are in the casts of these successes of the past. But do not do any fake advertising. For instance, some exhibitors might be tempted to feature Marguerite Clark and Harold Lockwood as joint stars and leave the impression that the picture is a new one. Such sort of exploitation is not going to get you anywhere and it will weaken the very appeal of the picture that you are trying to put over.

Now if you have a live photoplay department in your newspaper there ought to be plenty of good material that you can put over about these pictures. Go to the newspaper and tell the editors frankly the plan that you are following. If you spend the amount of money that you should in your original announcement you will undoubtedly be given a complete story in the newspapers in advance of the first showing of the picture.

Interesting "Recollections"

An interesting series of articles suggests itself about the players in each one of these pictures. If you or the photoplay editor is enterprising you can discuss the players who took the various roles and what they are doing now. There is not one of those on which you cannot build interesting matter. You can get much of this material from the MOTION PICTURE STUDIO DIRECTORY, and for that matter most of the players are so well known that any one familiar with the business can recall where they are now right off the reel.

A novel idea to be used in this connection would be pictures of the players as they appeared in these productions. Some of them have not changed a great deal, but others have. There is not an admirer of any actor that won't be interested in how these players looked three years or so ago. Famous Players-Lasky is furnishing with each one of these productions a full set of "stills" for both newspapers and for the lobby. Instead of regarding them as "old matter," they should be employed as all the more novel and interesting. It should be said here that these pictures have been carefully selected so that there are no incongruities in what are supposed to be modern costumes, these, of course, complying with the period in which the picture is located.

KEEP "BUNK" OUT

You Weaken the Appeal of These Pictures When You Employ It

THERE is no place for bunk or deceit in the exploitation of the Success Series. When you try to make these pictures appear new releases or purposely use one of them against a current picture with the same star at a competing theatre, you are weakening your own appeal.

Keep before the public that these are great successes of the screen and that they are reissued in compliance with the great demand from all parts of the country. Keep that point strong in all of your advertising. Base your exploitation on the theory that every one has either seen them or heard of them.

Even if they haven't, you are going to create the desire best in that way. Merchandise each picture. Talk about the elements of it, but keep the Success idea dominant.

Elements of newspaper cooperation are almost unlimited. You could even offer prizes in connection with the newspapers for the person who can best repeat the story of the picture in a limited number of words, or name the cast.

Use Lobby and the Screen

Now keep every one of these pictures before your public through the lobby and the screen. If your lobby is so arranged we would suggest that you have a list of these picture attractively painted and put in the lobby, so arranged that each can be dropped off as it is shown.

LIST OF THE 42 IN SUCCESS SERIES

The list of Success Series reissued during the season of 1918-19, beginning September 1, will include the following subjects:

Eight starring Mary Pickford—"Caprice," "Hilda from Holland," "Hearts Adrift," "The Eagle's Mate," "Behind the Scenes," "Dawn of a To-morrow," "Rags" and "Esmeralda."

Six starring Marguerite Clark—"Wildflower," "The Crucible," "The Goose Girl," "Gretna Green," "Still Waters" and "Miss George Washington."

Six starring Pauline Frederick — "Sold," "Zaza," "Bella Donna," "The Eternal City," "The Woman in the Case" and "Sapho."

Four starring Dustin Farnum—"The Virginian," "Captain Courtesy," "The Gentleman from Indiana" and "The Parson ot Panamint."

Three starring Victor Moore — "Snobs," "Chimmie Fadden" and "The Clown."

Three starring Geraldine Farrar—"Carmen," "Temptation" and "Maria Rosa."

Two starring William Farnum—"The Sign of the Cross" and "The Redemption of David."

Four starring John Barrymore—"Are You a Mason?" "The Man from Mexico," "The Dictator" and "The Lost Bridegroom."

Five starring Jack Pickford — "Seventeen," "Great Expectations," "Freckles," 'What Money Can't Buy" and "The Dummy."

Eleven special productions, including Viola Dana in "The House of the Lost Court," John Mason in "Jim the Penman," Marshall Neilan in "The Country Boy," Frank McIntyre in "The Traveling Salesman," Fannie Ward in "The Cheat," an all-star cast in "The Girl of the Golden West," Denman Thompson in "The Old Homestead," W. H. Crane in "David Harum," Theodore Roberts in "Pudd'nhead Wilson," Bessie Barriscale in "The Rose of the Rancho" and Blanche Sweet in "The Warrens of Virginia."

Now if you happen to be showing current pictures in which there appear players who also are to be seen in the NEXT one of these "Success Series" don't fail to couple that fact up. Run a special slide saying that this or that player appeared with Mary Pickford in "Esmeralda," one of her first feature successes, etc."

If you are showing current pictures in which there appears the same star as in the Success Picture we would recommend that you place a full set of scene pictures in the lobby at the same time, being sure to call attention to the fact that this is an earlier picture and giving the date. You won't weaken the drawing power of the player even if you ask: "Is So and So as good now as when she appeared in 'Warrens of Virginia?' You will have a chance for comparison when the latter appears at this theatre October 9."

If you haven't the room to use a full set of lobby pictures on the Success Picture, be sure to use one large picture of the star in the role that she has in the particular reissue. You will be surprised to see the curiosity that will be shown in these. We would do this even if we were not playing any of the particular player's current production. You need not be afraid of advertising your competitor across the street because he happens to have that star at present.

And this brings up a point that should

Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star," Drama of the Hour—Not a War Drama

(Goldwyn Five-Reel Production)

"The Service Star" sounds pretty good for the title to a picture—doesn't it? And when the management of the ——— theatre tells you that delightful Madge Kennedy is cast in the featured role, your interest in such a production should be heightened to the maximum percentage. "The Service Star" is a Goldwyn production and the latest picture in which Madge Kennedy has been seen. And it's worth all the praise that I or the American public can give it. The story in brief, is that of a slacker who builds his own prison—the story of a man who lived as a hero and is branded a coward after death. Miss Kennedy has the role of Marilyn March, a girl reared in homely surroundings, of plain appearance who is kept in the background by her relatives who are fond of the humdrum life. Marilyn is anxious to do her bit in war work and can think of no better start than to marry one of the brave boys who had gone to the front. Her friends are surprised when she announces that she is to marry a man whose name is on everyone's lips, for he had been cited for distinguished bravery in the trenches. But this is all deception, which fact is developed in a series of most interesting incidents, revealed by the camera when "The Service Star" is shown.

Enid Bennett in J. G. Hawks' Screen Drama "A Desert Wooing"—Miss Bennett's Best

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

J. G. Hawks, whom you will remember for his stories depicting life in the West during the days of the Forty-Niners and who has furnished William S. Hart with some of his most successful screen dramas, has written "The Desert Wooing," the featured role of which is interpreted by Enid Bennett, the pretty little Australian girl who jumped into prominence over night by her clever work before the camera and is now one of Paramount's biggest stars. "The Desert Wooing" is said to be the best picture in which Miss Bennett has yet appeared. She is supported in this production, which was made under the direction of Jerome Storm, supervised by Thomas H. Ince, by Jack Holt, Donald MacDonald, J. P. Lockney, whose characterizations are known by every movie fan; Charles Speare and Elinor Hancock. She has the part of Avice Bereton whose parents, facing financial ruin, decide that their only salvation is in a rich marriage for their daughter. With her own consent, Avice is placed on the marriage market, and offered for sale to the highest bidder. Then comes the story of the "social butterfly." The highest bidder takes his young bride West to his ranch. A former admirer pays her a visit and is promptly thrown out of the house by Avice's husband. She resents this but is brought around to his way of thinking and all ends happily.

Clara Kimball Young's latest appearance in the screen drama is in "The Claw," a story of love and romance in South Africa. The story opens in London with the debut of Mary Saurin (Clara Kimball Young), a young orphan of high social standing. Lord Herriett is in love with the beautiful debuntante. One of the guests at the party is Major Anthony Kibsella (Milton Sills), better known to his comrades in South Africa as Kim. Shortly after her debut, Mary receives news from her attorneys that the bank which had held the trust fund from which she derived her allowance had failed. She decides to break all relations with Lord Herriett and go to South Africa where her brother Dick is stationed. When she arrives in the land of the tooth and claw, she realizes for the first time that there is adventure, and plenty of it, if one will only go to South Africa.

"Sisters of the Golden Circle," an O. Henry Story—Full of Henry Pep

(General Two-Reel Release)

"Sisters of the Golden Circle" is the latest two-reel O. Henry drama to come to the ——— theatre—and it is a good one—full of romance, adventure and the O. Henry dramatic punch that distinguishes all his works. In the cast interpreting O. Henry latest story to be adapted to the screen are seen.. Edward Earle in the leading male role; Agnes Ayres in the leading feminine role; Frank Kingsley, Alice Terry and Danny Hayes. The story opens with a scene showing the passengers on one of New York's "rubberneck" busses, which ramble up and down Fifth Avenue. Among the passengers on the bus this spring morning were two couples who attracted much attention for "all the world loves a lover." One couple hailed from Cloverdale, Mo., and the other—the girl in particular—had the Fifth avenue brand written from the natty cut of her spring bonnet to the latest cut in tailor-made dresses. The bridegroom from Missouri bore a striking resemblance to the bridegroom from New York, and the two brides caught the eyes of one another and an acquaintance developed. The man from Missouri is arrested as notorious "Pinky" McGuire. What is the answer? At the ——— theatre ——— week.

Madge Evans in "Neighbors," Written by Maravene Thompson—Hines, Comedian

Bring the Kiddies with you when you visit the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Little Madge Evans is going to enact "Neighbors" on the screen for you. Young and old alike will find an hour's entertainment while this little actress is on the screen before you. In Johnny Hines, who is in chief support of Miss Evans, you will see one of our best juvenile light comedians and one who will make you laugh whether you will or not. Worl's little actress has an excellent story to interpret. "Neighbors" was written by Maravene Thompson whose works have appeared in some of our best current publications and who is considered as one of our best contemporary short story writers. She has fashioned a story for Miss Evans which fits her to a tee and in which she does the best work of her career before the camera. One of the points of interest in the production itself, is a large set showing a skating rink on which Madge and her partner, Johnny, cut all sorts of capers. The action is laid in a small New England town and the little heroine is the life of the place and when she sees the advertisement announcing that a life-size doll would be awarded the one wearing the most original costume at the skating contest, she there and then made plans to carry away that doll, regardless of all cost. In the supporting cast with her are seen Violet Palmer, J. A. Furey, Maxine Elliot Hicks, Mathilde Brundage, Herbert Pattee, Kitty Johnson, Frank Beamish and Charles Hartley.

Elsie Ferguson in "The Doll's House," Henrik Ibsen's Greatest Stage Play

(Aftcraft Five-Reel Production)

Elsie Ferguson in Ibsen's greatest stage play, "A Doll's House"—How's that for an evening's entertainment? Sounds pretty good, doesn't it? Paramount has given a screen version of this great Norwegian's work which has been enjoyed by the millions in its stage production. It is fully as entertaining as shown on the screen as it is when seen on the stage. Elsie Ferguson has the role of Nora, the doll wife who, after years of married life, suddenly wakes to the fact that she possesses no individuality and is living in a doll's house. It all comes about by a series of incidents which develop from the action she takes before her marriage to obtain money for her intended husband's benefit. "The Doll's House" is a distinctive photoplay. It has, of course, many of the characteristics, common to most plays as seen on the screen, but its theme is different, conveys a different meaning, teaches a lesson in a little different way—in short, it is, as said before, distinctive. Many of Ibsen's works have been produced on the stage and a few on the screen. His "The Doll's House" is considered to be his masterpiece in so far as real dramatic worth is considered. Miss Ferguson is an ideal character for the part of Nora and the supporting cast is exceptionally strong.

Elsie Ferguson in Ibsen's "The Doll House," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road," Bohemian Life and New York

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

If you remember—and you do if you have ever seen it—"The Devil's Wheel" in which Gladys Brockwell is featured, the management of the ——— theatre should have no difficulty in persuading you to see her latest work, "The Scarlet Road." The critics and press pronounced "The Devil's Wheel" one of the best screen offerings of the day—and it was an unusual picture in that the acting of Miss Brockwell was a finished piece of dramatic work. You will also remember William Scott for his fine work in this picture. In "The Scarlet Road" these two are again seen and to as good advantage as in their last success. Miss Brockwell is an accomplished screen actress and in the time that she has been acting for the silent drama, she has made thousands of friends and millions of admirers for her work in the photodrama. In her late offering she verifies the confidence her many admirers have placed in her and none will be disappointed. On the contrary, they will leave the ——— theatre with their praises ringing in the air as loudly as they did when she was seen in "The Devil's Wheel." In her late work she is cast as Mabel Halloway, a girl of the Bohemian section but not in sympathy with its life. Two men are in love with her, an editor and a broker. Her brother appropriates funds of his employer and to save him Mabel makes the sacrifice that forms the climax of this most interesting play.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road."

William Russell in "Up Romance Road"; Romance, Adventure, War-time Spirit

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

A little romance, a little war-time spirit, a few thrills, a popular hero, and a pretty heroine—what else is there essential to entertaining picture on the screen. All these have been incorporated in the late release of Mutual, "Up Romance Road." William Russell is the hero, and pretty Charlotte Burton is the heroine. Others in the cast are: John Burton, Joseph Belmont, Emma Kluge, Carl Stockdale and Claire Du Brey. The picture was produced by the William Russell Productions, Inc., under the direction of Henry King. Gregory King and Marta Milbanks are engaged, but both are in favor of a bit of romance and adventure before the knot is tied. Their chance is afforded with the appearance of Count Hilgar Eckstrom. Both Gregory and Marta's fathers are millionaire shipowners and engaged in shipping supplies to the Allies. The Count receives a letter—or rather it is found before the Count receives it by Mr. Milbanks, telling him that if a certain shipment of supplies is permitted to be sent, his family will be ruined. Gregory tells Milbanks that he knows who the writer is, but refuses to divulge the name. Milbanks tells Gregory that he is not to enter his house again. Then comes the chance for romance. He abducts Marta, and later discovers the plotters at work and causes their apprehension.

And Now an Exhibitor Doesn't Want Us to Use His Name

"DON'T use my name with this," writes an exhibitor, "for I'm ashamed to have it known that I have been turning past the two pages devoted to Ad Talks each week. I didn't see any use of reading them.

"But a couple of weeks ago one of my regular patrons happened to be in my office. He picked up a copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS while he was waiting to talk to me. Directly he turned to me and asked: "Why didn't you tell the public this about such and such a play?" I replied that I didn't know it at the time. Then he pointed out that the issue he was reading was two weeks old and that I knew that I was going to have the picture and that there wasn't any excuse for my not having known the particular fact. He didn't come to see that picture, but he would have done so had I been able to exploit it properly.

"Since then I have been using the Ad Talks. I know the angles on my pictures now and don't have to wait for some patron to point them out to me."

Gladys Leslie in "The Soap Girl," One of the "Best Sellers" on Comedy Row

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

You have all heard the expression, "it pays to advertise," and, no doubt, some of you saw the stage play of that name when it was running in New York at the Cohan theatre. At any rate you all appreciate the meaning of the term and most of you know that it is pretty much all truth. Lewis Allen Browne, one of our best short story writers, has penned a story titled "The Soap Girl" and Vitagraph Company have reproduced it for screen presentation with Gladys Leslie in the featured and title role. And it's a corker. Some of the best light comedy ever enacted for the screen is seen in this offering. The picture was produced under the direction of Martin Justice, the director responsible for many of the O. Henry short subjects. In the supporting cast are: Frank Norcross, Harold Foshay, Ed. Burns, Julia Swayne Gordon and Ed. Favor. In brief the story tells of the efforts of a wealthy soap manufacturer to place his daughter into society and on the top rung—and he does it by advertising his daughter as he did his soap which was known throughout the world. But in doing so Father got in bad with the society leader of the city in which he lived, but Marjorie, his daughter, gifted with the business instinct of her daddy, conceives a plan to humiliate Mrs. Society Leader and does so. Seeing is believing, so that we will wait until you see this picture for your judgment which we feel assured will be favorable.

Constance Talmadge in Broadway Success, "Good Niight, Paul—Rollicking Comedy

(Select Five-Reel Production)

"Good Night, Paul," a comedy-drama which met with instant success on the stage has been adapted to the screen and presented by the Select Pictures Corporation with pretty Constance Talmadge in the leading feminine role. In the supporting cast are seen Norman Kerry, Harrison Ford, John Steppling, Beatrice Van and Rosita Marstini. "Good Night, Paul" was written by Roland Oliver and Charles Dickson and was produced under the direction of Walter Edwards. You remember Miss Talmadge in "Up the Road With Sallie," and you remember that you were all more than pleased with the fine entertainment that this comedy-drama afforded when Miss Talmadge presented the leading role. "Good Night, Paul," Miss Talmadge's latest contribution to the list of successes which have been seen on the screen, is rich in comedy, has been produced with all possible care by Mr. Edwards and presents Miss Talmadge in a role that spells entertainment. Her smile and her distinctive mannerisms which have endeared her to the picture-going public are seen to fine advantage in this offering and she carries away the honors of an above-the-average photodrama. This is the laugh-provoking vehicle in which Ralph Herz recently appeared to crowded houses on Broadway. The story concerns the novel efforts of Matilda Landers (Constance Talmadge) to help her husband and his partner out of financial difficulties.

Jack Richardson in Dual Role in "His Enemy, the Law"—Striking Drama

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Jack Richardson presents a dual role in one of Triangle's late productions, "His Enemy, the Law" and Irene Hunt, his leading lady, also presents a dual role. This is one of the few pictures ever produced which shows the two leading characters playing a dual role. Others in the supporting cast are Jack Livingston, Graham Pette, Dorothy Hagar, Walt Whitman and May Giraci. The story was written by Lillian Ducey and scenarioized by George E. Jenks and produced for Triangle under the direction of Raymond Wells. Mr. Richardson has the role of Captain Jack Rodgers, a young Confederate who returns to his home after the war to claim the girl he had left behind, as his bride. Her father objects to the marriage and the young Captain, disappointed, leaves for the West to seek his fortune. While there he meets and weds a young widow. They have a son but their married life is unhappy. The wife dies and the husband takes the son, John, to the town of Ten Strike where the father becomes one of the most notorious bandits in the West. The girl who refused to marry him turns up in the little western town as the wife of one Randolph. Her daughter and Captain Jack's son fall in love and they learn the truth concerning the love between their parents.

Gloria Swanson in "Station Content"—How a Young Wife Finds Happiness

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"Station Content" has for its theme the fact that there are many in this world who seek the world over for happiness and after they get through with their search, find that the real happiness for them is at home. The heroine of this picture, Gloria Swanson, is one of this kind. She is married to a young telegrapher living at a lonely station and she, desiring a better environment, goes to the city to join a theatrical company. She meets the president of the railroad for which her husband works and tells him of her unhappy life. He invites Kitty to accompany him and his wife to the West. He then makes a confession of his love for Kitty and she tells him that she is unhappily married. They agree to solve the problem together. She leaves in a machine to meet him in San Francisco. Her machine breaks down and she is compelled to stop with a young couple at a lonely station. Here she finds real happiness in the contented life of her hosts. A storm breaks and the trestle is destroyed by lightning. She knows the train is due and rushing into the storm saves the train and finds that on it are her husband and the president of the railroad. She is told that her husband has been made division superintendent. There are other actresses better known than Miss Swanson, but none who could have given to Triangle's "Station Content" a better punch than she. Its an above-the-average photodrama.

Gloria Swanson in "Station Content" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Live News from the Producers

Metro Rents More Studio Space

Growing Activities Make the Action Necessary to Care for Production —Five Stars Prepare for New Subjects

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION, it was announced this week, has rented the top floor of the Biograph studio for the use of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc. stars and companies. This was found to be a necessary measure on account of the firm's many activities, which have expanded to such an extent that there is no longer room for them in the East and West coast studios, the capacities of which are crowded to the utmost, and room had to be found for the distinguished stars now under contract.

Viola Dana will be one of the stars to work in the "Deepest Bronx" location, her new production. "Flower of the Dusk," a picturization of Myrtle Reed's novel, will be made there under the direction of John H. Collins. Emily Stevens will probably make "Kildare of Storm" there under the direction of Edwin Carewe. Whether Mme. Nazimova and Ethel Barrymore, in their forthcoming productions, will be at the Biograph or Metro's home studio at 3 West 61st Street, is as yet undecided. David Thompson, assistant to Maxwell Karger, Metro's production manager, will take charge of Metro's "extension studio" at the Biograph, and will take his own working crew with him. Leander de Cordova will for the present take Mr. Thompson's place at the Metro studio.

Every star, director and company of Metro Pictures Corporation is busily engaged. Activities in all lines are almost without precedent, it is said.

George Irving, Who Directed "To Hell With the Kaiser" for Metro

Exterior locations for Mme. Nazimova's Screen Classics, Inc., production de luxe, "L'Occident," by Henry Kistemaecker, have already been chosen by Albert Capellani, the French director who is handling the making of the production. Assisting him will be Henry Kolker, who is learning motion picture direction under Mr. Capellani's guidance; J. J. Dunne, who has previously served him as assistant, Eugene Gaudio, cameraman, and Henri Menessier, art and technical director.

"To Hell With the Kaiser," the Screen Classics, Inc. multiple reel patriotic feature directed by George Irving, with Lawrence Grant and Olive Tell in the leading roles, is practically ready for release. Some especially effective scenes have been arranged, showing the American lads in the trenches, giving intimate bits of life at the front that will interpret the activities of those "over there" to friends "over here."

Dorothy Gish Becomes a Paramount Star

PARAMOUNT news of the week included the announcement by Famous Players-Lasky that Dorothy Gish, D. W. Griffith's star, will become, under a new arrangement with Mr. Griffith, a stellar attraction in Paramount pictures.

It is said that by terms of the agreement between Mr. Griffith and Famous Players-Lasky, Miss Gish will appear in seven productions under the Paramount trademark during the coming year.

The acquisition of Miss Gish adds still another name to the list of new stars announced for appearance in Paramount and Artcraft productions within the next few months, including Fred Stone, John Barrymore, Ethel Clayton, Shirley Mason, Bryant Washburn and Lila Lee. The young star, who is an Ohioan by birth, has been identified with the stage and screen since 1902 when, at the age of four, she made her debut before the footlights. Like so many of the stars of motion pictures, she began her screen career with the old Biograph company, her first appearance being in the Biograph production, "The Mountain Rat."

Her association with the productions of Mr. Griffith, thus formed at the outset of her career in photoplays, has continued unbroken to this day. With him she went to the Reliance-Majestic, where she appeared in "Old Heidelberg" and other productions. When Mr. Griffith formed Fine Arts Miss Gish became one of the stars of that organization, notable among her productions being "Atta Boy's Last Race," "Stage Struck," "The Little Yank," "Chlidren of the Feud," "The Failure" and "That Colby Girl."

Blanche Sweet Signs New Garson Contract

Harry Garson is said to have been so impressed with Blanche Sweet's work in "The Hushed Hour," which was recently completed at D. W. Griffith's studio in Hollywood, that he has signed up a long term contract with her.

"The Hushed Hour," Miss Sweet's first picture for Mr. Garson, includes in the cast Harry Northrup, Wilfred Lucas, Milton Sills, Mary Anderson and Rosemary Theby. Her second picture, cast for which has not been announced, will be "The Unpardonable Sin," by Rupert Hughes. The production will be made in New York, it is said. Miss Sweet is expected to arrive in the metropolis July 1 to begin work on it.

It has not yet been decided as to how "The Hushed Hour" and her other pictures will be released, but this will be determined upon Mr. Garson's arrival at his New York office about July 15th.

Farnum Begins Work on "Rainbow Trail"

William Farnum, the Fox star, has begun work on "The Rainbow Trail," according to a telegram just received at the Fox Film Corporation offices from Hollywood, Cal. "The Rainbow Trail" is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," which has just been completed by Mr. Farnum. Both stories were written by Zane Grey.

"The Rainbow Trail" is being filmed under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Some of the scenes in it will necessitate the entire company traveling again to the wilds of Arizona, where, it is expected, they will remain several weeks.

"Kaiser" Converts Manager to Pictures

That the success which attended the showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," at the Orpheum theatre, Seattle, Wash., has caused Manager Levy, of that house, to decide to adopt a straight motion picture policy, is stated in a report made to Jewel Productions, Inc., by G. A. Metzger, manager of its Portland office.

The Orpheum has heretofore featured vaudeville. It is stated that the change in the Orpheum's policy will become effective with the coming season.

Dexter Signs New Contract

Elliott Dexter, leading man, has cast his fortunes for another year with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it was announced this week. Mr. Dexter will probably remain at the West Coast studios for some time to come.

Famous Players-Lasky Forges Ahead

Producing Department of Huge Organization Plans Most Tremendous Undertakings Ever Attempted in Motion Pictures—Seven New Stars Secured for Coming Year

WHAT is declared to be the most tremendous undertaking ever attempted by an organization in the history of motion pictures has been allotted to the producing forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the schedule of production for the coming season of 1918-19, according to an official announcement this week.

The plans include the preparation of 156 Paramount and Artcraft pictures, each of five or more reels, and aside from the short subjects. Sufficient indication that the organization is well equipped to go through with this policy is contained in the statement that for the coming year seven new stars have been signed up to augment the ones already being presented. Fred Stone, who recently closed an unusually successful stage season on Broadway, is among the new stars.

Others Make Debut

Other stellar players in addition to Mr. Stone who will make their debut in Paramount and Artcraft pictures are Ethel Clayton, Jack Barrymore, Lila Lee, Dorothy Gish, Bryant Washburn and Shirley Mason.

In commenting upon the acquisition of these artists, Jesse L. Lasky, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, said: "These additional stars are the brightest lights of the stage and screen, whom we deemed eminently fitted for stellar roles under the Paramount banner and when their names are added to the list of illustrious players now apearing in our productions, the greatest ensemble of public favorites in the history of amusements, either on the speaking stage or the screen, is presented.

"Fred Stone is unquestionably the most famous comedian on the speaking stage today, possessing not only dramatic ability but a marked individuality. He is renowned for his eccentric acrobatics which made him a popular favorite from the time he appeared with a circus many years ago. It is a significant fact that Fred Stone plays have had the longest run of any similar attractions ever launched, some of them being presented successfully for two and three years without interruption. We anticipate that Fred Stone Artcraft pictures will be booked for long runs in all photoplay houses, for without doubt, if Fred Stone can pack a house for a year, his photoplays will be worthy of a long run in cinema houses. In 'Jack O'Lantern,' Mr. Stone during the past season, drew record business on Broadway.

"Ethel Clayton is already too well known as a motion picture star to require comment, but I can predict that this star will shine even more brightly in the elaborate Paramount vehicles in which she will appear. Miss Clayton was one of the first stage stars to transfer her activities to the screen, and the triumphs she won on the speaking stage, notably in 'The Making of Bobby Burnitt' and 'The Country Boy' have been consistently repeated in film, so that today she is firmly established in the affections of the public as one of the most popular screen stars."

Twenty-Three Stars Named

Vivian Martin, Paramount Star

Speaking of the new accomplishments of Famous Players-Lasky, Mr. Lasky said, in connection with the new plans:

"Having at our command the best efforts of the greatest galaxy of players, directors, writers and technical experts in the industry, it is only natural to expect notable achievements from the producers of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures during the next twelve months commensurate with those of the past year and more so, for our organization has been augmented with new genius and facilities. With its increased possibilities, the Famous Players-Lasky producing department is enabled to show such results during the coming year as will make the motion picture industry on the whole, a far greater enterprise than ever before.

"Appearing in Paramount Pictures, produced in the East and West, will be the following stars: Marguerite Clark, Fred Stone, Lina Cavalieri, Billie Burke, Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, Ethel Clayton, Wallace Reid, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Pauline Frederick, Vivian Martin, John Barrymore, Lila Lee, Dorothy Gish and Bryant Washburn. In Artcraft Pictures there will be Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, George M. Cohan, Elsie Ferguson, William S. Hart and Fred Stone. D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. DeMille will also produce Artcraft Pictures of super quality and drawing power. In addition there will be staged a number of Special Productions under both the Paramount and Artcraft trade-marks.

"Mary Pickford's first two Artcraft Pictures are 'Captain Kidd, Jr.,' a comedy which played one whole season on Broadway and was produced by Cohan & Harris and 'The Mobilization of Johanna,' by the internationally famous author, Rupert Hughes. In the new vehicles, 'Our Mary' will continue to show ever-increasing artistry which with each successive picture, further enchances her wonderful popularity.

John Barrymore's Return

"The return of John Barrymore to Paramount Pictures marks the re-appearance on the screen of a young star who is taking rank as a leading American actor, Among his first pictures to be produced are 'On the Quiet,' the farcical comedy by Augustus Thomas which has made millions laugh, and Maximilian Foster's popular story, 'Something To Do.'

"Dorothy Gish, the D. W. Griffith artist, will make her debut as a full fledged Paramount star during the coming year. As a result of her extraordinary work in the leading comedy-tragic role in D. W. Griffith's 'Hearts of the World,' she became one of the most discussed women artists in America. Announcement of the titles of her first pictures will be made soon.

"For more than two years it has been my belief that, given a young woman extremely talented and blessed with unusual beauty and charm, the Famous Players-Lasky organization, with its extraordinary resources for photoplay production and exploitation could not only popularize this young woman in the eyes of the American photoplay fan, but could justly live up to all the promises made because of the quality of the productions to be released.

"Lila Lee comes to the Paramount ranks after five years under the most highly competitive artistic conditions in America. In that time she has risen from the ranks of a child actress to a great favorite among vaudeville audiences because of her sweet personality, her inherent theatrical instincts and her characterizations and impersonations. Known from coast to coast as 'Cuddles,' Miss Lee is only fourteen years old. Special attention is being given to her early productions which will be made at our West Coast studios, the first of which is 'The Cruise of the Make-Believe,' by Tom Gallon, and the experiment of launching a film star into the Paramount firmament will be watched with close attention by our producing force.

"Wallace Reid in the coming year, will be consistently starred in Paramount comedy dramas, which give him an opportunity to appear to his best advantage in modern themes and situations. His popularity has become tremendous as just reward for his close attention and faithfulness to his work. The productions that will offset him to best advantage his next year should largely enhance that talent which has made him one of the most capable actors in films today."

In conclusion, Mr. Lasky said: "It will be noted that these stars are all established

Trench Warriors See Fox Films

Reels Are Delivered to Front by Messengers on Motorcycles—Training Camps Also Get Their Share

WILLIAM FOX pictures are being shown in dugouts behind the trenches in France, according to Mrs. Elizabeth Richey Dessez, assistant editor of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, in a statement which has been issued from the Fox offices. Messengers mounted on motorcycles carry Fox films to the dugouts that communicate with the front lines, declares Mrs. Dessez, who adds, according to the statement, that if Fox films were humanized they could not follow the flag more faithfully than they do.

"The films of the Fox Film Corporation sent to France to be shown for the American soldiers in the trenches and training camps," Mrs. Dessez says, "far outnumber those of any other motion picture company. The fact that the Fox Corporation has control of the foreign rights on pictures shown abroad does away with much red tape and considerably facilitates the task of the Community Motion Picture Bureau in providing entertainment for the American troops."

The Community Motion Picture Bureau is conducted on behalf of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. under Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Departments.

The Fox Films play such an important part in the activities of the bureau that a glance at what the Bureau is doing means following the trail of a large number of Fox pictures, Mrs. Dessez says.

Not only are the Fox pictures shown behind the lines, says Mrs. Dessez, but they also form a large part of the entertainment program at training camps in this country and on transports conveying the men to France. On the transports the Fox pictures are shown on the decks and in the saloons.

Included among the pictures which are shown on United States transports, Mrs. Dessez related, are "A Fisherless Cartoon" "The Primitive Call" "Unknown 274" and "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal." Pictures in which Tom Mix appears have won praise wherever they have been shown, Mrs. Dessez says.

Pathe Releases New Bessie Love Story

BESSIE LOVE, Pathe comedienne, in "A Little Sister of Everybody," is announced as the principal attraction of the Pathe program to be released the week of June 30.

Elaborate advertising and publicity campaigns prepared by the Pathe forces describe "A Little Sister of Everybody" as "the happy play with the glad girl." The play, written by Charles Sarver from a novel by William Addison Lathrop, was produced by Anderson-Brunton at the Paralta Studio, and directed by Robert Thornby.

Also on this program will be released Episode No. 17 of "The House of Hate," which carries the title, "The Death Switch." There is more suspense and more tragic touches in this episode than in any of the others of this serial, it is said.

A new Toto comedy, "The Furniture Movers," a one-reeler, comes on this program; Britain's Bulwarks No. 8, "Destruction Wrought by the Hun at Saint Quentin," and "Guadeloupe," in the Post Travel Series, are short features.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 54 and No. 55 will be released July 3 and 6, respectively, and will contain new war pictures, as well as the animated news record of important events at home.

as leaders in their respective branches of the profession and are well fitted to enter a '100 per cent. organization.' They will prove valuable assets to all first class houses catering to intelligent people, for they have repeatedly proven their talent for entertaining their audiences and their names are well known in every community where newspapers are read. It is quite unnecessary to state that we will see to it that the debut of each star is made under auspicious circumstances, in a pretentious and adequate vehicle.

"Our recent announcement regarding a change in policy whereby we will present subjects of a cheerful theme followed careful investigations extending back for many months and as soon as we were assured of our ground we began to take steps to secure the services of the most talented people along these lines, who would bring with them not only the dramatic qualities desired but a personal following which would insure box-office success.

"In addition to the activities of the stars great things are expected from the staff of directors and authors staging Paramount and Artcraft Pictures and presenting the most notable array of creative producing talent ever assembled. With such a program of pretentious work before us there is little wonder that we should take pride in our activities for the coming year and expect not only to achieve the greatest production record in the history of the photoplay, but to place on a new level, the photoplay art in general."

Universal Casts Benedict in New Drama

Kingsley Benedict, recently featured in Universal serials, and who appeared in short subjects which were released by Universal several years ago, is again to appear in two and three-reel dramas.

Benedict has been cast for the central role in a three-reel drama, now in course of production at Universal City, entitled "The Human Target." The story deals with the workings of the Secret Service.

The cast includes Claire DuBrey, as Thelma Von Styne, M. K. Wilson, as Prince Oscar and Clyde Benson as Lieutenant Bertram.

The release date for "The Human Target" has not as yet been set.

Miss Young to Produce Next in East

It was announced this week from the West Coast that the next production made by the Clara Kimball Young company, under the management of Harry Garson, will be made in the East. Miss Young and her company are now busy on "The Savage Woman," at the Lasky Hollywood studios.

The picture upon which Miss Young will begin work immediately she returns to New York is a screen version of "Cheating Cheaters," secured from A. H. Woods. After its completion it is probable the star will go again to California and build her own studio.

Famous Players Widens Star Series

Is Well Satisfied with This Basis in Distribution and Intends to Improve System Without Limit—Better Advertising and Exploitation

THE distribution plan of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the coming year, beginning September 1, as set forth in a statement this week by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, calls for the pictures to be circulated on the star series basis, which the organization declares has proven so successful in the past.

However, it is made known, this system will be enlarged upon and improved to such an extent that every exhibitor in the United States will be able to show, if they so desire, Artcraft and Paramount pictures without regard to size or location of theatres. Mr. Greene announced that the producing and distributing facilities have been enlarged until the organization is prepared to take care of double the amount of exhibitors now being served.

More Houses—Lower Cost

In connection with distribution plans, Mr. Greene made the following statement: "Anticipating the demands of the public for better productions requiring increased expenditures, and at the same time fully appreciating the necessity to keep down the cost of the films to a minimum we are making plans this coming season to increase the circulation of our films, and we are expending our activities to the extent whereby the multiplicity of theatres served will absorb the rising cost of productions. By increased circulation of our product we will be able to obtain a return that will warrant a steady improvement in even our own high standard of quality, at the same time keeping the price within the means of all exhibitors.

"In our usual course of progress we have found it necessary to increase our output, and in the list of the new season's output may be found box office attractions which we are confident will prove second to none in the field and of a variety sufficiently broad to suit the various tastes in all parts of the country.

"With the increased product exhibitors desiring the best pictures will have an opportunity to make the Famous Players-Lasky product the foundation of their yearly program.

Lauds the Quality

"This policy of broad circulation of Artcraft and Paramount pictures comes at a time when they are at the height of their popularity due to this high quality of these pictures and drawing power of our stars and the tremendous national advertising and publicity campaign which we have conducted during the last year.

"The future advertising and exploitation plans include even a wider scope than the heretofore employed and will be conducted in a manner that will give exhibitors an opportunity to tie up with us, thus deriving direct results therefrom.

"Our plans for the coming season are the most gigantic ever conceived in the world of amusements and reflect the confidence of this company in the stability of the motion picture industry as well as our faith in the motion picture exhibitors of the country. Every exhibitor who thoroughly knows the field will appreciate the importance to him of this undertaking, as it particularly gives him the choice of affiliating himself with an organization that will protect him from the changing exigencies of war times and will insure him under all conditions an adequate and dependable supply of motion pictures that will meet the critical demands of the public.

Walter E. Greene, Managing Director of Famous Players-Lasky, in Charge of Distribution

Service Will Increase

"Our service to the exhibitors will increase in proportion to the increased quality of our product and our plans for distributing same. We pledge ourselves to give every aid within our power to assist our customers in their effort to effectively present our product to the public.

"Progress - Advance, our exhibitors' weekly, will be made of greater service. Special care will be devoted to the preparation of our accessories which will include on each production the widest possible assortment.

"Service is the key-note of all success and it will be our desire to render service in this direction during the coming year that will be entirely in keeping with the general progress of the industry.

"Above all we have very keen appreciation of the good will of the entire trade and it will be our particular aim at all times to seek the good will of all exhibitors of America."

Bushman's Year Shows Ten Strong Features in Twelve Months

With the producing companies making tabulations of the work done during the past year and laying plans for the Fall season, it is interesting to note the record established by Francis X. Bushman in the twelve months past.

The productions that have received favorable comment are on the Bushman calendar for the year, while several of the productions have been pronounced among the real big hits of the year. The list includes "The Compact," "The Adopted Son," "The Voice of Conscience," "Red White and Blue Blood." "Uuder Suspicion," "The Brass Check," "Cyclone Higgins, D. D." "With Neatness and Dispatch," "Social Quicksands," "A Pair of Cupids."

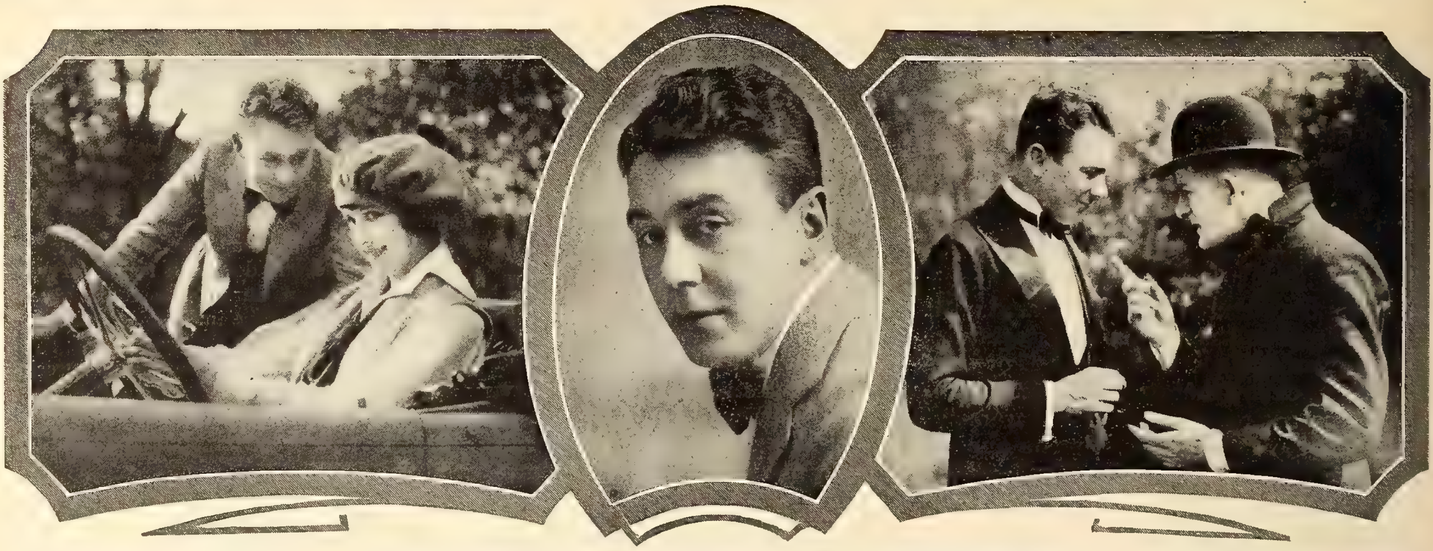
Looking over Francis X. Bushman's career in the forefront of screen luminaries his frends lay particular stress on the fact that while he has appeared in over four hundred photoplays, Bushman has never been seen in a picture that contained anything in the least suggestive. "Bushman pictures breathe clean American spirit," they declare, "driving home a moral within their entertainment and not hoping for success through an appeal to off-color tastes."

Mutual Features Please Canadian Showmen

Mutual is authority for the statement that Mutual features are pleasing the Canadian exhibitors. An announcement from the organization this week said:

"The Bellmanworth Theatre Company, Limited, which controls the Connaught & Victoria Moving Picture theatres throughout the Dominion, reports splendid box-office results from their showing the Mutual pictures.

"In a recent letter to Mutual, they say: 'Our Connaught theatre has just finished screening your Margarita Fisher Feature, 'Primitive Woman,' and we wish to compliment you on the excellence of this production both in its direction and acting. It could not have been better, and as a box-office attraction was very satisfactory indeed. We find your Mutual features very consistent, and much ahead of several of the more touted programs.'"



Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Already Well Supplied With Feminine Stars, Now Turns Its Attention Toward the Men. Tom Moore Is to be Starred In Goldwyn Productions, His First Picture Being "Just for To-Night"

Goldwyn Plans to Star Moore

Popular Leading Man's Great Following Throughout Country Causes Step—Now at Work on His First Production

ALTHOUGH rumors have been rife for several weeks to the effect that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation intended to star Tom Moore, the leading man, in productions made by that organization, official announcement of that fact was not made until this week. Through the editorial offices of Goldwyn, it is made known that the player's great popularity is responsible for the move.

The announcement is prefaced by the remark, "Give the public what it wants," and continues:

"In becoming a star Tom Moore reaps the reward of his own popularity. He is being starred by Goldwyn and has been at work on his first picture for several weeks because several thousands of the men who own theatres have written to Goldwyn saying: 'We like Tom Moore, our audiences like him and we want him as a star in Goldwyn Pictures.'"

"Just for Tonight" is the name of Tom Moore's first starring adventure, and the story is said to be both adventurous and properly romantic, as befits a handsome young Irishman with a fascinating smile, a handsome face and a pair of laughing Irish "come-hither" eyes.

Goldwyn is not assuming too much in claiming that its own productions have contributed tremendously to the popularity of Mr. Moore. Following his personal triumph in "Brown of Harvard," his advent into Goldwyn Pictures came in the engaging role of Tony Quintard, the hungry poet in "The Cinderella Man," the leading role opposite Mae Marsh, and there are hundreds of thousands of screen fans throughout the country who will be quick to say, "Oh, I remember him; he's fine!"

"Just for Tonight" is the work of Charles A. Logue, who has written another Goldwyn-Madge Kennedy success, "The Service Star—The Flag of All Mothers," now beginning to sweep the country. Charles Giblyn is Mr. Moore's director. So quickly and effectively has he worked at Fort Lee, and so secretly, that "Just for Tonight" is now out and being assembled.

No date has been set for the release of this picture.

"To Hell With the Kaiser"

Screen Classics' Feelings and Screen Classics' Pictures Are Given Special Service This Week

EXHIBITORS should not fail to preserve the Special Service Section on "To Hell with the Kaiser," which is a feature of this issue of Motion Picture News.

You will need this section if you are going to get all the money possible out of "To Hell with the Kaiser" when it plays your house. Special features need special exploitation—and the plentiful opportunities afforded by "To Hell with the Kaiser" are fully treated in this Service Section.

Our own Exhibitors' Service Bureau prepared this exploitation aid on the Screen Clessics, Inc., production.. It starts on page 3920.

"Heart of the Sunset" Gets Good Reports

Reports to Goldwyn on "Heart of the Sunset," the latest Rex Beach production, lead officials of that company to declare that this picture will exceed the remarkable success achieved by "The Auction Block," the early Rex Beach offering distributed by Goldwyn.

J. J. Parker, of the Majestic, Seattle, H. J. Sheehan, of the Rialto, San Francisco, and A. H. Hurst, of the Babcock, Billings, Montana, are among the exhibitors whose reports praising the production were made public by Goldwyn last week. Mr. Parker declared, "Our gross receipts on 'Heart of the Sunset' for a seven day run exceeded those on 'The Auction Block' even though the former was shown in May, a hot weather month, and the latter in January."

Goldfish Brings Enthusiasm from West

Ready to carry into immediate execution the doubling of Goldwyn's annual output of productions and with work well laid out in advance for six or more Goldwyn stars, Samuel Goldfish returned last week from California expressing greater confidence in the development of Goldwyn and the expansion of motion picture popularity than he has shown at any time in the last two years.

Mr. Goldfish while away covered ten thousand miles of territory, saw important exhibitors in most of the large cities and came in contact with the owners of the big and little houses in the western half of America.

"Every motion picture producer should take at least a semi-annual trip to the Pacific Coast," says Mr. Goldfish, "for such trips frequently made would absolutely destroy the cynical and ofttimes pessimistic outlook which New York associations and lobby lounging induces. The exhibitors of the West, large and small, are too busy, too prosperous, too busily devoted to building bigger houses to take care of their patronage to take time for pessimism.

"It has been a pleasure to find our governmental officers recognizing the essentiality of the stage and screen," says Mr. Goldfish. "The Government view that the theatre and other amusements should be encouraged and sustained is both just and wise. The motion picture industry is the biggest help the Government has in winning the war. Through the picture theatres is the one great way of spreading propaganda and information. The pictures have helped in all the great drives for money. There are more than 18,000 four-minute men speaking in the theatres and other amusement places of the country. Take away the pictures and you at once lower the morale of the country."

"Her Moment" Promises Much

General Film Declares It Cites Pathos of White Slavery in Beautiful Story—Anna Luther Is the Star

GENERAL FILM COMPANY is at the present time giving much attention to the proper exploitation of "Her Moment," which the organization has undertaken to distribute.

In an announcement this week concerning the production, General Film said: "That a beautiful story which presents inspirations could be found in the sombre atmosphere of white slavery is not commonly thought possible. However, anyone seeing the production of 'Her Moment' is promised a beautiful story. It was actually discovered amid the less appealing history of the traffic.

The picture itself is expected to show how this is possible. The degrading side of white slavery is never shown, the story having to do with the struggle of one typical victim of such a system to find her way to the light. A sympathetic, wholesome treatment has been given the whole subject, and one calling for the best powers of so gifted a dramatic star as Anna Luther.

"The story of 'Her Moment' was unearthed by the author, Samuel H. London, while engaged in Government investigations of commercialized vice. What make the situations in this play of such tremendous importance is that they are typical. Many innocent daughters of the peasantry of Europe, undertaking to go out into honorable service, are helpless victims of crafty exporters of girls to America.

"Thus the story is not a 'white slave' story offered as a demonstration, but one that has a human drama to relate, and one that can be presented as a real entertainment. Its happy ending is approached through a succession of suspense, and a most winning role has been created for the exceptional talents of Anna Luther as the star of the production."

General Film Company announces that "Her Moment" will be vigorously promoted as a pleasing, hugely worth-while photoplay with a leading woman who will cap her recent remarkable work with the best that she has done.

Rialto Audiences Applaud Post Films

Patrons of the Rialto theatre in New York are reported by Managing Director Rothapfel to have applauded the showing of the Post Travel Pictures released by Pathe, that company announces.

The Rialto has booked the full series. The showings started June 2 and have taken hold.

In forty other American cities these pictures are being distributed by Pathe, each one presented under the auspices of a local newspaper, the same scheme of simultaneous publication of descriptive articles being pursued.

"Crusaders" Gets Showing in Washington

A special exhibition of "Pershing's Crusaders" was given at Poli's theatre, Washington, D. C., on June 3 by the Committee on Public Information for the purpose of acquainting President Wilson and his official family with the work that has been accomplished by the Committee's Film Division, headed by Charles Hart.

A large and representative audience attended the production, including editors and proprietors of practically every newspaper in the Capital. The editor of the Washington Post wrote a column review on the picture.

Outing-Chester Pictures Bring Inquiries

ANNOUNCEMENT that the Outing-Chester adventure pictures were to be released through exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation at the rate of one a week commencing June 30 is said to have brought scores of inquiries to the Mutual branches from exhibitors who knew of the production of the series. These inquiries resulted in immediate heavy bookings for first runs in the larger cities, Mutual says:

Prints of " Ex-Cannibal Carnival," the Fiji island picture which is first on the schedule are in the various exchanges, where special screenings can be arranged by exhibitors. Striking and original posters are being prepared for the series, as different from the ordinary litho as the Outing-Chester pictures are from the ordinary productions of their type.

There has been, it is said, keen interest among exhibitors who have been watching the market for unusual features for some time over the prospective release of the Outing series, it having been known that C. L. Chester in co-operation with Outing had done some one-reels of reported exceptional merit and unusual character.

The arrangements for the release of the series were only recently consummated at a series of conferences between Mr. Chester and James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual. Selling plans were quickly formulated and the first of the pictures set on the Mutual schedule for June 30.

The releases to follow " Ex-Cannibal Carnival " and the dates are: July 7—" Kaieteur "; July 14—" Mountaineering Memory "; July 21—" Zuni Kicking Races "; July 28—" A White Wilderness "; August 4—" A Coorial on the Orinoco."

Mary Murillo Writes Talmadge Scenario

Work on the scenario of a new photoplay to be used by Norma Talmadge is progressing in the hands of Mary Murillo, who is in charge of the preparation of this script. This will be Miss Talmadge's production following immediately after " The Safety Curtain," which has been announced as the next release after " De Luxe Annie," Miss Talmadge's current attraction.

Sydney A. Franklin, who directed " The Safety Curtain," will also be the director for the succeeding production, the title of which is not as yet available.

Mary Murillo has been engaged by the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation to write scenarios exclusively for that concern. Clara Kimball Young's recent popular picture, " The Reason Why," was prepared for the screen by Miss Murillo, who also prepared titles for Norma Talmadge's next picture, " The Safety Curtain."

Pathe Announces New Castle Picture

Coincidental with the announcement that Mrs. Vernon Castle is preparing to sail for France in connection with entertainment for the soldiers, Pathe this week announced that " The First Law," which the star recently completed, will be released shortly. Antonio Moreno appears with Mrs. Castle in the picture, which Pathe expects to be very popular with exhibitors owing to the great publicity attained by the star.

Transfer of Cleveland " U " Exchange Effected

C. H. McGowan, assistant general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was in Cleveland last week transferring the accounts of the Victor Film Service over to the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., the name under which all Universal exchanges will be operated in the future. This is a change in name only as all the offices are to remain under their present managers, and will be operated under their present policies.

World Presents Big Number in Feature

Over five thousand people, it is said, will be seen in a new World Picture written by Harry O. Hoyt, of the World scenario department, in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley will be starred. Both the story and scenario of this attraction, which bears the title of "Making Good," were written by Mr. Hoyt and the work may be said to be a combination of those elements which make educational pictures so interesting and a striking love story which gives it zest and a big appeal. For the present the theme of the picture is being kept a secret, but it is revealed that the subject is one of tremendous popular interest and a topic that has not yet been treated upon in pictures. So big is the picture considered by the World executives that it is expected that it will mark a distinct advance in direction, photography and entertainment value. "Making Good" promises to make good in a spectacular manner for all those exhibitors who are so fortunate as to use the World Program.

Lytell Gets Thanks from Lynch

Bert Lytell, star of the Metro production, "The Trail to Yesterday," and "No Man's Land," has received from James K. Lynch, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, the following letter:

"As Fiscal Agent of the United States Government for the Twelfth District, the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco extends sincere thanks for the valuable service rendered by you in the Third Liberty Loan campaign.

"Your co-operation is particularly appreciated by reason of the additional assurance it affords our National Government of the loyalty and support of its citizens in the present emergency.

"It may interest you to know that the grand total of the subscriptions obtained through the Tank Meetings in Los Angeles approximated $582,000."

"Eight Bells," Famous Old Timer, a World Offering

"Eight Bells," the stage comedy in which the Byrne Brothers toured the United States for fifteen years, has been picturized in five reels and will be distributed by World Pictures. John Byrne, eldest of the famous Byrnes, directed the picture aided by many of the original cast.

As a stage production the fame of "Eight Bells" ranks with Hanlon's "Superba" and other well remembered old timers.

"Snap Judgment" a Success

"Snap Judgment," starring William Russell, and "A Game of Wits," one of Gail Kane's Mutual productions, went big on the Heatherly Amusement Circuit in Alberta, Mutual announced this week. It is said that Manager Heatherly of the circuit desires the latter production for a return engagement.

How to Exploit the Series

be made important: We would strongly advise against your trying to arrange a particular production to play in competition with the same star in a letter production, simply for the reason that when you begin to do this the temptation is going to be mighty strong for you to let the public think that is just as new a picture—and, we repeat, when you go off on that tangent you lose the great appeal that is handed you with the success that the production has already made.

Use your program for talking about the roles that the various players have in these Success pictures. All sorts of little items of gossip will occur to you. We believe that there is a lot of renewed interest that you can stir up. And if there are any of your patrons whom you have lost, we would suggest that this is a good opportunity to get them back to the theatre. If they haven't seen the production before they certainly heard of it at the time, and in both cases they are likely to return to the theatre again to freshen old memories.

Now let us repeat that these pictures must be advertised as great successes of the past. You can call them the living masterpieces of the screen.

Keep talking to the public about how these pictures were enjoyed at the time they were produced, how they have lived after hundreds of others have been forgotten. Tell the people that you have booked them because you have heard the demand from those who saw them at their original showings and from those who were unfortunate enough to miss them.

Put your advertising on a high, intimate plane. Use the name of the star and the title in big type, but at the same time use you selling arguments on the basis that every one has either seen the particular picture or wants to see it. You don't need adjectives; picture the charm of the production and the fact that it has lived.

And above everything do not use " bunk " in your exploitation. When you do it, you kill a great big, valuable thing that the distributor has handed you.

A point which the publicity department of Petrova Picture Company holds up in connection with " Tempered Steel," starring Madame Petrova, is that the story should delight lovers of the South.

World Insures All Employees

Point to Blanket Insurance on All Employees in Studio, Home Office and Branches as Sign of Permanency

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week by World Pictures that contracts have been negotiated with one of the large insurance companies under terms of which the lives of all employees in studio, home office and branch offices are covered by insurance for substantial amounts.

It is declared that the insurance given the employees will not in any way interfere with their rights under the State Compensation Laws or other statutes for employee protection. It will not be necessary for employees to pass medical examinations, nor will they be subject to a charge of any kind.

World officials believe that the new move will be a guarantee of experienced and permanent organizations reacting to the benefit of all branches of its activities, and all who do business with it.

As soon as a man or woman enters the World service, he or she becomes a candidate for the insurance, the first policy issuing ninety days after employment and continuing thereafter throughout the entire length of service, increasing steadily in amount until the end of five years when the maximum under the plan is reached.

Kitty Gordon, World Star, Whose Next Production Is Called "Tinsel"

The employee is required to name the beneficiary under the policy which upon his or her death is paid by the insurance company direct to the family of the deceased or to whomever he or she may name.

The insurance plan applies to all but department heads for whom special arrangements are being made.

Small Towns Inquire for "Over the Top"

AMONG the inquiries for "Over the Top," which reached the office of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, last week, were said to be a number of small towns in various parts of the country which do not even boast of a motion picture theatre. These inquiries came from public schools, churches and civic organizations seeking the Vitagraph special for showings in town halls, etc.

Mr. Irwin says that despite the fact that the picture, in most sections of the country, is still booking on first run and that the first run accounts will keep all of the prints in practically every branch working until the latter part of July or the first of August, requests for first and second run bookings continue to pile up. The booking on "Over the Top," has been so rapid that overtime has become a regular thing in all Vitagraph exchanges, and the prospects are that this will continue for some time to come.

In the big centers, where "Over the Top" is running on an indefinite basis, it is reported that the business of the picture has been good. In Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Louis and other cities crowded houses have greeted every performance.

An interesting phase of the "Over the Top" presentation has been the large number of requests which have reached the Vitagraph offices for return bookings. Many exhibitors declare they were unable to accommodate all of their patrons during their first runs and they are planning to play the picture again just as soon as a print is available.

Schade Rebooks "Kaiser"

George Schade has booked "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," for a return engagement at the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio. "The Kaiser" played at the Schade theatre to three days of record-breaking business, April 18-19-20. It comes back for two more days, beginning July 1.

Engholm Resorts to Novel Publicity Devices

In a letter to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, Harry Engholm, who is publicity representative of the United Kingdom branch of the Fox Corporation, shows how the war is developing various devices to conserve the supply of war materials in England.

"With regard to our big productions," writes Mr. Engholm, "which I hear from all sides are very greatly appreciated, I have issued a novel form of synopsis, printed on a card, ten inches by eight, one side of which contains an extremely brief description of the play, and the other, an artistic portrait of the star in question. These synopses have secured for us universal praise, and in this country, with conditions as they are, they meet all the needs of the moment. The card is somewhat easier to get than paper for the time being.

"The closing of all houses of entertainment and restaurants in the southern counties of England at the hour of 10:30 at night does not seem to have affected the picture palace to any great extent—in fact, the picture palace from my observation is the one paying entertainment from the box office point of view. Of course, the farther north one goes, the less things are affected by these war measures."

General Adds Two Feature Specials to List

Two special feature productions were last week added to the General Film Company schedule for distribution in certain extensive territory. They are "The Guilty Wife" and "Would You Forgive?"

Jane Grey is the featured star in "The Guilty Wife," which was produced by the Triumph Film Corporation and based on Tennyson's poem, "The Flight." This will be handled by General Film in the West.

"Would You Forgive," staged by Julius Steger and Joseph H. Golden, features Holbrook Blinn and Clara Whipple. It will be available to exhibitors at General Film exchanges in a very large section exclusive of New England and several Central States.

Lieut. Young Writes World Story Under Fire

Lieutenant Young is now in France and the story arrived at World offices written part in pencil and part in pen on such scraps of paper as he could pick up at the front.

World Sets Release Date of New Film

The World Pictures has set for release on July 15 "The Golden Wall," with Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley as the stars, with Madge Evans and Johnnie Hines in the cast. The picture was directed by Dell Henderson. The story was adapted from a French romance by Clara Beranger.

Three other stories are nearing completion and several stories are being put into continuity. Director Thomas B. Heffron's next subject will be "Alias Mary Brown."

Goldwyn Starts Farrar Story

Reginald Barker, who is to direct Geraldine Farrar in Goldwyn productions, arrived in New York from the West Coast last week, ready to begin work upon the star's initial production under her new contract.

The name or nature of Miss Farrar's picture has not been made known, and the supporting cast has not been announced.

Universal Finds Demand for Two Reelers

THAT there is a steadily growing demand for the two and three reel subjects and that this demand is sufficiently great to be given recognition, is the general consensus of opinion expressed in the reports which Universal's exchange managers have forwarded to Carl Laemmle.

These reports came as the result of a decision made by Universal's chief executive that that organization would seriously consider placing the short subject on its regular program of weekly releases if it were definitely ascertained that exhibitors want them. This decision was made by Mr. Laemmle during his recent tour of his company's exchanges.

In the report sent in by Barney Rosenthal, manager of Universal's St. Louis exchanges, is contained the following:

"Not even in the palmiest days of the program was there such a strong demand for short subjects. The exhibitor is in desperate need of two and three reel dramas to round out his show and he doesn't know where to lay his hands on them. In fact, this need is so great that some of the showmen who formerly looked upon serials, are now running them because they've got to show something. Nothing we've done in a long time, has afforded the exhibitors in this territory more satisfaction than our recent announcement csoncerning Universal's issuance of two reelers."

From John J. McAleer, Universal's Pittsburgh representative, came this interesting report:

"The inclosed bookings for the two reel dramas we are releasing tell their own story. So far as this territory is concerned, you couldn't do better than to make the short subject a permanent fixture of our weekly program."

Lichtman Gets Top-Notch Field Service

WITH a view to a better understanding between exhibitors and those engaged in the selling of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has issued a statement in which he sets forth the principles which govern the relations between the organization and its sales force.

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is behind every man in the field to give each of our customers, big and little, 100 per cent. service," said Mr. Lichtman.

"At the periodical meetings of the district branch managers, held at the home office; through the medium of letters, office and inter-office memoranda, personal interview and in every conceivable way which presents itself, the principles and the ideal upon which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is founded are instilled in the sales force—the principles of square dealing, justice and honesty and the ideal of creating and doing something better than anyone else.

"The men are imbued with the idea that the reputation of the organization lies entirely in their hands and that if they are not adhering strictly to a policy of square dealing, justice and honesty in their transactions with their customers—our customers—they are undermining the principles we are striving so hard to maintain.

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation demands of every member of the field force that he shall know: first, what he is selling; second, why he is selling it; and third, why it is worth selling. These are the 'Three R's' of salesmanship, yet it would astonish the industry, if a check could be made of the thousands engaged in selling films, to find out how few have learned them. They make sales, good will, more sales.

"The entire proposition is one of service, and it is my opinion that when the exhibitor has become acquainted with what we are doing along these lines the word 'service,' when coupled with the name of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will take on a new significance."

Baker Begins Cutting "No Man's Land"

George D. Baker has resumed his duties as manager of productions at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, having fully recovered from an operation for appendicitis at the Good Samaritan Hospital in Los Angeles. Mr. Baker will supervise the cutting and titling of "No Man's Land," Bert Lytell's newest picture, and "As the Sun Went Down," with Edith Storey as the star, which is nearing completion. He is also working on several new stories for early production."

Henry Kolker Becomes Assistant Director

HENRY KOLKER, stage and screen player, has turned his attention toward the producing end of the motion picture industry, it was announced this week by Metro Pictures Corporation. He has been appointed assistant director to Albert Capellani at the Metro studio, and will learn every angle of the business under the latter's direction and guidance.

The first production in which Mr. Kolker will be interested is Mme. Nazimova's forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., picture, "L'Occident," a screen version of the play by Henri Kistemaecker.

Mr. Kolker has already begun his work by interviewing players for the new production. His own experience on both screen and stage has given him intimate knowledg of the abilities of large numbers of players. He will assist Mr. Capellani in various technical matters connected with the production, at the same time placing himself in the mental attitude of an eager pupil. J. J. Dunne, who has been assisting Mr. Capellani in previous productions, will remain, giving his attention to the mechanical details.

After Mr. Kolker has been associated with the French director in three productions, he will make up his mind whether to return to the speaking stage as actor-manager, or remain in the new field of endeavor as a motion picture director, Metro announces.

Mastercraft Completes Its First Film

The Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation announces the completion of its initial production at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, this week. According to F. Eugene Farnsworth, president of the concern, this first picture is distinctly in that class known to the industry as "superproductions." It is a screen adaptation of Thomas Dixon, Jr.'s "The One Woman," which appeared in novelized form upon the book shelves of this country.

The production is now going through the stages of its final assembling and the first print is expected to reach the New York office of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation within the next fortnight.

Ebony Completes Two New Productions

Luther J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, of Chicago, announces that two new comedies are ready for the cutting room. The first laughmaker, titled, "Luck In Old Clothes," is by E. K. Means. This was directed by Ralph G. Phillips, featuring Billy Ledman, Mattie Edwards, and Rudolph Tatum. The second subject, entitled, "Monday Morning's Madness," is said to be a scream from start to finish. This was prepared for the screen by Bob Horner, their scenario editor, from a story by William H. Rice, and featuring Sam Robinson, Yvonne Junior, and Samuel Jacks.

Metro Finishes New Storey Production

Filming of "As the Sun Went Down," Edith Storey's newest starring vehicle in the Metro program following "The Demon," "Treasure of the Sea," and "The Claim," has been completed at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. E. Mason Hopper directed the picture, which was photographed by William Thompson. The director is now editing the film and assembling it for shipment to New York.

"As the Sun Went Down," adapted for the screen by George D. Baker from the drama of that name, of which he is also the author, presents Miss Storey in the rolo of a "two-gun woman" of the California mining camps during the period directly following the gold rush of '49.

Name General's Crystal Releases

Following the announcement in last week's NEWS that General Film would release some of the Crystal comedies featuring Pearl White, this organization has made public the following titles in the series:

"What She Did to Her Husband," "What's in the Trunk," "Reuben's Romance," "The Lady Detective," and "His Wedding Day." (Split reel) and "Troubled Waters."

In addition to Pearl White the casts include Charles Hutchinson, Don Barclay, William Browning and Estelle Deland.

Ethel Barrymore Returns to the Screen

Ethel Barrymore, having completed a season at the Empire theatre, New York, will return at once to her motion picture activities under the auspices of Metro Pictures Corporation, the only firm with which she has been identified. Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, has secured for Miss Barrymore the screen rights to her play of a season ago, "Our Mrs. McChesney," which was dramatized by George V. Hobart and Edna Ferber from the Emma McChesney stories by Miss Ferber, including "Roast Beef Medium," "Personality Plus," and "Butterside Down."

Luther A. Reed is completing the picturization of "Our Mrs. McChesney" for Miss Barrymore's use, and it will be placed in production at once under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, who has been specially engaged for this production. A supporting cast of a high grade of excellence is being engaged for the picture.

General Releases Timely O. Henry Story

An O. Henry story that is said to be winning renewed favor now with exhibitors is "The Fourth in Salvador." General Film this week announced that large numbers of theatres over the country are booking this O. Henry subject for the Fourth of July week because of its timely nature.

Other O. Henry stories which are doing well because of their seasonable nature, according to General Film, are: "The Defeat of the City," "The Indian Summer of Dry Valley Johnson," "Little Speck in Garnered Fruit," "John Tom Little Bear," "The Laso to the Troubadours," "The Lonesome Road," "Law and Order," "The Enchanted Kiss," "Hygeia at the Solito," "One Dollar's Worth," "Two Renegades," "The Hiding of Black Bill" and "The Moment of Victory."

Here and There

May Irwin will shortly make her bow to photoplay patrons the country over via the medium of the two-reel Universal production called "Thoroughbreds." This was filmed in Connecticut on a large stock farm.

Alice Joyce, busy under the direction of Tom Terriss in "To the Highest Bidder," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon production which is expected to be released in July, spent most of last week in Babylon, L. I., where exterior scenes were made.

"Cupid by Proxy" is the title of the next play in which Baby Marie Osborne appears on the Pathe program. Little Snowball, colored lad, who has often appeared with her, is also in the cast.

Douglas Fairbanks no sooner finished his current feature than he started a new Artcraft picture. It is called "Bound in Morocco," written by Allan Dwan. It is said to be a high-geared, romantic comedy-drama.

Baby Mary Jane Irving and Ben Alexander, the little tad, are appearing together in the screen production of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The One Woman," filmed by Mastercraft at the Brunton Studios on the Coast.

Donald Gallaher has been engaged by Metro to appear as Ensign Arnauld in "L'Occident," starring Mme. Nazimova. This is a Screen Classics, Inc., production, directed by Albert Capellani.

No New Exchange System in Hodkinson Plan

In a statement last week outlining the plans of his Hodkinson Copartnership Plan, W. W. Hodkinson was emphatic in declaring that it was not the intention to establish a new film exchange business.

"Film exchanges are as a rule unprofitable," declared Mr. Hodkinson, "and it is the unstable condition responsible for this that we are seeking to remedy in our plan. The capital furnished by our prospective stockholders will not be employed as investment in branch offices, nor used for overhead expenses while we organize.

"Our function is to gather together a large number of representative theatres throughout the country and use their combined force to their benefit. The central organization merely provides a means of contact with producers—the funds are used merely as advances to producers where necessary to assure a continued quality product to the exhibitor stockholders.

"Our product is handled on a percentage basis with no risk to the local organizations or the central organization.

"One of the strongest planks in our platform is the economy we have effected through our utilization of an exchange organization already established. Our present contract with this exchange corporation gives them a certain commission for handling our sales, which is always fixed and reduced with the volume of our sales. In other words, there is always a profit between the commission we pay them and the percentage received by us from the producers.

"The central organization does not prosper at the benefit of the subsidiary corporations throughout the country, as we only retain a small percentage for administrative expenses, and any deficit on that account will not, of course, interfere with the dividends of the local corporation stock."

John Stewart Robertson Directs Brady

Alice Brady has acquired a new director in the person of John Stewart Robertson. This director, who has done effective work for the screen, received a stage training under Charles Frohman with Maude Adams, and under Henry B. Harris, having been two years with Rose Stahl. Mr. Robertson, who is in charge of the new production which Miss Brady is now starting for the Select Pictures Corporation, is hard at work collecting his cast, the principal members of which have already been engaged.

David Powell, well liked for his leading roles in support of Mary Pickford and Elsie Ferguson, will be seen for the first time as Miss Brady's leading man. Craufurd Kent will play the heavy role in the piece. Mr. Kent has appeared in two other of Miss Brady's Select Pictures, having been effective as the lawyer in "The Knife," and as leading man in Miss Brady's more recent Select Picture, "The Ordeal of Rosetta."

Miss Brady herself will again essay a double role. In this case she will play two sisters who strikingly resemble each other in appearance, but whose natures are totally dissimilar. The production is being prepared at the Paragon studio, where the filming will soon be commenced according to news just received.

Barriscale Subject Arrives in East

The first print of Bessie Barriscale's forthcoming Paralta Play, "Patriotism," arrived from the studios last week and was screened for the benefit of the executives at the New York offices of Paralta Plays, Inc.; all of whom proclaimed the picture excellent.

This photo drama is enacted by a cast headed by Bessie Barriscale and including such well known players as Charles Gunn, Herschel Mayall, Arthur Allardt, Joseph J. Dowling, Ida Lewis, Clifford Alexander, and that delightful screen kiddie, Mary Jane Irving.

Two Ince Pictures Come in July

Two subjects said to be unusually timely are scheduled on the Paramount list early in July by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Both are Thomas H. Ince productions, the first being "The Kaiser's Shadow," on July 1. It will star Dorothy Dalton. The second is "The Claws of the Hun," in which Charles Ray is presented. The release date is July 8.

It is announced that while neither is essentially a war picture, both productions are closely interwoven with the great struggle on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean.

Triangle Announces New List

Gloria Swanson Is Star of First Release Week of June 23—William Desmond Featured in "Closin' In"

TRIANGLE Distributing Corporation this week announced its schedule of releases for the week of June 23. Only two productions are listed, the first starring Gloria Swanson and the second featuring William Desmond.

A picturization of Norman Sherbrook's story, "Smoke," under the title of "You Can't Believe Everything," featuring Gloria Swanson, is the first release on the Triangle program for June 23. A romance of the Canadian Northwest with Maud Wayne and William Desmond follows.

"You Can't Believe Everything" features Gloria Swanson as Patria Reynolds, the Belle of Society's favorite summer colony. Possessing wealth, beauty and a charming personality her career is an assured success. Even women admitted her popularity, for when men like Arthur Kirby, "Chub" Danforth and Hastings Carson fall in love with the same girl, there can really be no room for doubt.

This production will serve to introduce Edward Piel, Triangle's new leading man, who will play opposite Miss Swanson, appearing as Jim Wheeler. Claire McDowell, Darrell Foss, Jack Richardson and George Hernandez are other members in the cast of this production, which is reported to be of unusual strength.

According to the report several beautiful and expensive sets were especially constructed for this production and Miss Swanson will wear many attractive frocks that are said to be a revelation of up-to-the minute fashions. Jack Conway directed this production with Elgin Leslie at the camera. The scenario was written by Charles Mortimer Peck.

Iris Ashton, In "You Can't Believe Everything," Triangle Play

"Closin' In," the second release on the Triangle June 23 program, is a story by Joseph F. Poland, featuring William Desmond and Maud Wayne. This is a human interest story in which Jack Brandon, an athlete and society favorite, sacrifices his honor and future happiness to save the aristocratic parents of his sweetheart from disgrace. In the Canadian Northwest Brandon seeks life anew, and ofter many rebuffs he reaps the reward of valor when he and Barbara Carlton are reunited in happiness.

Darrell Foss, Louis (Bull) Durham and Graham Pette are included in the cast of this production which was scenarioized by G. E. Jenks and photographed by Steve Norton.

"Hell Bent" Heads Universal New List

It was announced last week that Harry Carey has completed one of the wild and woolly western productions with which he has become identified, and in "Hell Bent," heads the list of productions released by Universal during the week of July 1. "Hell Bent" is a five-reel special attraction and Universal claims for it unusual beauties scenically, and unusual interest from a story standpoint.

Neva Gerber, who has appeared in several of the recent Universal serials, makes her debut as Carey's leading lady. Vesta Pegg, who usually furnishes the bad men for Carey's heroes to reform via the six-shooter route, enacts a more sympathetic role in this production. Others in the cast of "Hell Bent," are Duke Lee and Joseph Harris. One of the unusual effects in this feature is a sandstorm which occurs in the climax.

"The Butler's Blunder," a comedy featuring Eileen Sedgwick, Ralph McComas, Milton Sims and Charles Haefeli is the Monday Nestor.

Universal Names Comedies for June 24

In line with a recent announcement the comedy releases of Universal for the week of June 24 will include a two-reel Century featuring Alice Howell instead of the usual L-KO with its beauties. The recent announcement was to the effect that every fourth week one of the Century comedies would be substituted for the L-KO.

The title of the Howell comedy is "In Dutch."

The Nestor comedy for the same week is entitled "The Borrowed Baby," in which Gale Henry and William Franey are featured.

"Birth Control," a one-reeler, is the Lyons-Moran offering for the week under the brand name of Star Comedies. It's a regular baby story, with lots of both smiling and squalling babies in many of the scenes.

"More Trouble" Gets Advance Bookings

Reports from the thirty Pathe branches are said to indicate that the success registered in New York by "More Trouble," the tragic farce in which Frank Keenan starred, will be repeated in every city, town and hamlet in the country.

The play will be released for general exhibition July 14 and Pathe executives report that advance bookings are breaking all records. The exhibitors of the country have been provided with a blanket-sheet in which are reproduced the printed reviews and criticisms from all the daily and the trade newspapers. The campaign book for exhibitors contains real press matter with re-prints of what New York newspapers said about "More Trouble."

Film Within Film Announced by Fox

A rapid-fire comedy of South American revolutionists, an adventure-loving young American and an eccentric motion picture director is furnished by George Walsh in "The Kid Is Clever," which is announced from the William Fox offices as the next Special Feature release. The picture, which is a film within a film, is described as one long laugh from the beginning to the final fade-out.

"The Kid Is Clever" was written by Randolph Lewis and Ralph Spence, and a particularly strong cast supports the star, the other players being Doris Pawn, Ralph Lewis, A. Burt Wesner, Don Likes, Clyde Hoplins and James Marcus.

"Inside the Lines," a World Release

Positive announcement was made last week by World Pictures that "Inside the Lines," the screen version of the play of the same name with Lewis Stone in the feature role, would be distributed through that organization. The release date will be set soon.

Program Glances

"A Successful Adventure," starring May Allison, has been scheduled for release by Metro on July 15. It will be the organization's third releases of that month. The story concerns a Southern girl, transplanted in the North.

William Desmond is pictured as the boss of "Hell's End," a refuge for crooks and political intriguers, in a picture by that name which will be released by Triangle on the July schedule. Josie Sedgwick is in the cast.

A Wolfville tale, "The Dismissal of Silver Phil," is announced this week by General Film Company, in the series of O. Henry and Alfred Henry Lewis productions. The story is of a "bad man's" finish.

The Fay Tincher comedies now current, released by World, are "Main 1-2-3" and "Some Job." The former is already playing, and the latter was set for distribution June 24. More will follow at regular intervals.

"How Could You, Jean?" described as a vivacious, delightful and wholly charming story, is the Artcraft subject released June 23 in which Mary Pickford is starred. William D. Taylor directed the production.

"The Girl in His House" declared in an advance notice from Vitagraph to be the best picture in which Earle Williams has appeared in twelve months, is set as the Blue Ribbon feature release for the week of June 24.

"Naked Fists," a drama featuring Neal Hart, Dick La Reno, Eileen Sedwick, Joe Rickson and Dark Cloud, is the two-reel Western feature to be released by Universal this week.

American heroes being honored for their bravery and mettle in action against the Huns in the Lorraine sector is a feature of Screen Telegram, No. 31, released by Mutual June 16. A non-sinkable life-boat is also demonstrated.

"Kidder & Ko," Pathe play starring Bryant Washburn, was released June 16. The story combines the interests of romance, youth and business, and is expected to make a substantial hit throughout the country.

Enid Bennett's new picture on the Paramount list is called "Coals of Fire," and is said to be one of the funniest the star has yet appeared in. It is not, however, straight comedy, but has a dramatic vein as well.

"The Woman Eternal," the feature in which Elaine Hammerstein will be starred by Pathe, has been set for release some time in the summer. John E. Ince wrote the original scenario. Ralph Ince directed the picture.

"Sandy" is the last Paramount picture in which Jack Pickford appears. His co-star in the production is Louise Huff, who has since been engaged for World Pictures. Pickford is now in the service of his country.

"The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" is having a great run, General Film reports, and has been made stronger by the recent submarine attacks off the Coast. This is a two-reel feature from the Interstate Film Company.

The sincerity of love of friend for friend is said to be brought out strongly in "The Bravest Way," the Paramount release of June 16, starring Sessue Hayakawa. Florence Vidor is cast as a Japanese-American girl.

"His Matrimonial Moans," the fourth of the Diamond Comedies, is announced for release this week by General Film Company. Lou Marks, Irving Browing, Joe Eschezabal and Oom Paul are in the cast, with pretty girls galore.

Live Triangle Items

No additional information relative to the policy of the Triangle can be gleaned at the producing plant at Culver City other than that preparations for continued activities are going forward under the direction of assistant to the president, O. A. Sellers, during the absence of President H. E. Aitken, who is still in the East.

Henry D'Elba is an addition to the directorial staff, and this week began filming the crook story, "Alias Mary Brown," which has a college atmosphere in a large portion of the story. Casson Ferguson, who played opposite Constance Talmadge in "The Shuttle," takes the featured part in this story with Pauline Starke as his leading woman. The story pertains to a youth who became a crook to secure comforts for his mother after his father had been robbed of his wealth. Ultimately the youth is reformed by the girl.

"The Mayor of Filbert," a novel by Charles F. Stocking, is to be the first subject produced by the Triangle by Christy Cabanne. The cast for this contains fourteen principals, including Belle Bennett and Barney Sherry, as well as Olga Grey, who was specially engaged for the subject. Mary Niles, a Triangle stenographer, makes her debut in the Cabanne picture as an actress. She was seen at the Triangle plant by Harry E. Aitken, and he being pleased with her beauty and convinced Miss Niles would make good, ordered tests made and these came out so well that she was immediately cast in a part.

Thomas N. Heffron will next film "The Price of Applause," adapted from a well-known magazine story, and Jack Livingston will take the role of the poet who was bluffed into entering the French army early in the war, and sought escape by disguising himself as a German and permitting the British to take him prisoner. When his poems were published and he was made famous by the people who thought him a dead hero, he sought ways of coming back, but was finally induced to re-enlist in the French army and serve as "John Doe."

Another magazine story in production is that being directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton. This is titled "The Golden Fleece," and the two principal parts, that of a detective and an inventor will be taken by Jack Curtis and Joe Bennett.

A number of innovations have been introduced at the Triangle Studios for the comfort and pleasure of employees, the list including gymnasium, a plunge, and tennis court, together with reading and lounging rooms for both men and women. The literature will contain the current papers, magazines and motion picture trade publications.

A new department has been created at the Triangle where tests are made of all players engaged for important parts. This has been placed in charge of Jean Hersholt who is unable to continue as an actor for the present owing to a recent appendicitis operation.

Elaine Hammerstein Is Presented by Pathe In "The Woman Eternal"

Universal Newsettes

Quite a number of changes are evident about Universal City, and production seems to be more active this week as the result of several of the companies taking up new plays, and new directors starting in on their initiail subjects at the big lot.

Mae Murray is now working in "The Great Uncaught." The Murray Company, which is directed by Robert Leonard, has just finished "The Big Little Person" which they have been on for the past seven or eight weeks. That is an adaptation from the Rebecca Hooper Eastman novel by Bess Meredyth.

Harvey Thew and John Clymer are authors of the new story and continuity for Miss Murray which is a farce comedy. They will write two more vehicles for Miss Murray which she will make prior to the expiration of her present contract with the Universal. Rudolph Valentine will be the leading man for Miss Murray in this forthcoming subject.

"Should a Woman Tell" is now in production under the direction of Douglas Gerrard. This is an adaptation from Sid Toler's "Playthings," prepared by F. McGrew Willis, and for the subject Mr. Gerrard has a very unusual cast. Fritzi Brunette will be starred, and the supporting company includes Louis J. Cody, Charles Gerrard, Mary Anderson, F. A. Turner, Phil Dunham, Myrtle Reeves and a number of others.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

Work was started on several new films at the Hollywood Famous Players-Lasky studio in which new stars for Paramount and Artcraft programs will be seen. Fred Stone arrived in Los Angeles Friday, June 7th, and is now at work on his first film which is at present known as "Under The Top," the noun of the title referring to a circus tent. Wanda Hawley, who has appeared in "We Can't Have Everything," "Old Wives For New," as well as several Paramount subjects, will play opposite Fred Stone, and Donald Crisp is the director. While in the west Mr. Stone will make three pictures, and he plans to make this a vacation instead. He was accompanied to the coast by his family and Manager Arthur Houghten and wife, and all have taken bungalows at one of the popular beaches.

William C. deMille is to direct the first Ethel Clayton picture made in the west. Miss Clayton arrived during the past week, and everything is in readiness for her first subject.

Lila Lee, another new Paramount star recently signed by Jesse Lasky, came to Los Angeles Monday, and work will be started shortly in a comedy drama of a light and airy nature. Miss Lee was formerly known as Cuddles Edwards, the juvenile star of Gus Edwards revue in vaudeville.

George Melford and a company which includes Wally Reid and Ann Little, are returning in a few days from an extensive trip to the Huntington Lake district, 200 miles north of Los Angeles, where exteriors for the timber story "The Source" were filmed.

Bryant Washburn, late Pathe star, has been signed by the Famous Players-Lasky Company for a long term following his release from Pathe, but no announcement is made at the studios what subjects he will appear in. This week there was an unconfirmed report that Washburn and Blanche Sweet would be co-starred in the next Artcraft release to be made by Cecil B. deMille.

It became known this week that the real cause for Dorothy Dalton's trip to New York was to secure a new wardrobe which will be used first in the making of a production at present titled "The Cross of Shame," which is an unusual original story written by H. H. Van Loan, which is now being put in continuity form by C. Gardner Sullivan. The story is based on conditions brought about by the world war, and requires a number of unusual effects which are now being provided by G. Harold Percival. R. William Neill, Miss Dalton's director, was granted a vacation during the star's absence from the Ince Studios, but he became so interested in the story that he is spending the time searching out the most desirable locations possible for the exterior scenes.

Julian Josephson, who until a year ago was a school teacher in a small Washington village, has contributed his third accepted story to the Ince organization for Charles Ray. It is titled "String Beans," and gives Ray the role of a jayhawker, who reports the arrivals and departures from a small town for the local paper, and then in the absence of the editor at a public meeting, puts a pair of get-rich-quick Wallingfords in right when his sole duty there was to turn public sentiment against them. How he finally rights himself and wins the daughter of the mayor makes good material for the fifth reel.

Fred Niblo has successfully passed through his first film play, and he did it without being called a lense louse. Mr. Niblo was selected to play opposite friend wife, Enid Bennett, in a subject temporarily titled "Coals of Fire," in which he took the role of a young minister who leads a dry fight in a wet community, and finally won the daughter of the saloon keeper. Melbourne McDowell is the purveyor of inspiration.

Thomas H. Ince will not do his producing at the Paralta or Robert Brunton Studios, according to statement made this week. Negotiations have been broken off for the lease of space and producing facilities.

Vitagraph News Bits

Hedda Nova claims that the Chauuauh trees on the fringe of the portion of the desert where she has been working for the past several weeks give her even more thrills than she is experiencing in her role in the Vitagraph serial "The Woman in the Web." These trees take on grotesque shapes. They are ever-changing and at night their gauntness and quantity make a weird picture. And always at night Miss Nova was afraid of them. They gave her what she calls a "lost" feeling. When the sun shone on them they looked not so strange, but at night they were awful. Miss Nova is pleased to again be in that peaceful place called Hollywood.

Bill Duncan needs a small island. In fact, he has to have a small island. He seems to need the island more than it needs him, however, for to date no such location has answered to his wide quest and query for such a piece of land. The reason he particularly wants a small one is that he wants to photograph from end to end and at the same time to detail the action of his western serial company on the island.

"I guess it will be up to me to create one," said Mr. Duncan, but his voice held a hopeless note. "I won't let a little thing like a small island get the better of me."

Therefore, if the appearance of a new island is heralded or if one is advertised in the "Lost, Strayed or Stolen" column, all information regarding same can be had by application to William Duncan; address, Vitagraph Studio, Hollywood, Cal.

Director David Smith has taken the Nell Shipman-Alfred Whitman feature company away on from a ten days to two weeks' location trip. The places at which the company will stop and make scenes are Ransburg, Kernville, Bakerville, Oakland and San Francisco. It took several trunks to convey thither the wardrobe which Miss Shipman finds it necessary to use. The picture Director Smith is making is a screen version of Wallace Irwin's novel, "A Gentleman's Agreement." Juan de la Cruz, an actor of ability, is a new member of this company. He plays Professor Andree in "A Gentleman's Agreement."

Fox Studio Doings

After making one more subject in which Tom Mix will be starred, Director Lynn Reynolds will begin filming a series of exterior subjects starring Jewel Carmen. The first of this series will have a Southern atmosphere. Mr. Reynolds for more than two years in his various affiliations with the Universal, Triangle and Fox, has specialized on stories requiring more exteriors than the ordinary to carry out the idea he originated of combining the scenic with drama or comedy drama. Reynolds is now writing his next story for Tom Mix in which the machinations of German agitators in a small western town will be the cause of much action. Mix and his cowboys straighten out the tangles and aid to bring about justice of their own peculiar liking.

At the present time Miss Carmen is working under the direction of Robert Thornby in the making of "You Can't Get Away With It," and the company has been absent for several days filming scenes at San Diego.

A mansion of eight rooms, so arranged that scenes showing glimpses in all from one angle, has been built on the Fox stages for the coming Theda Bara production being made by Director General J. Gordon Edwards. Work has been progressing on this film for more than two weeks, and the subject has now been temporarilly titled "The Message of the Lilies." Another big set was used this week for this subject, and shows the interior of a large church in which more than 500 people took part in scenes.

It is probable the propaganda picture Edward J. LeSaint is now producing with Gladys Brockwell in the featured role will be made a Fox Standard. The title at present for this is "Kultur." This photoplay is from an original scenario by J. Grubb Alexander. Miss Brockwell appears in the role of the Countess Von Arenburg, and the story deals partially with original incidents leading up to the world conflict. Scenes made this week show William Burress as the Kaiser, and Willard Louis as his chief war lord. Action was in a council chamber of the madman of Europe, and when a bunch of cowboys from the Tom Mix Company came across the stage, they proceeded to use their six-shooters on the "handsome" picture of the Kaiser, after all scenes were made in which this set was needed. The painting was riddled by bullets.

Here and There

Jack Conway, late director of the Triangle who has been engaged by the Vitagraph to direct the Earle Williams Company, has begun the filming of his first subject which is an adaptation from the George Barr McCutcheon novel "The Man From Brodneys." Continuity was written for this by Tom Geraghty. Miss Grace Darmond will continue as leading woman for Williams, but all of the cast are new people for the Vitagraph. This company has been working at the Gillespie mansion at Montecito, 100 miles north of Los Angeles, during the past week. Lieutenant Lester Stewart and Kathlyn Kirkham are principals in the cast.

The Montgomery and Rock Comedy Company are filming "Law Makers and Jail Breakers" under the direction of J. C. Howe.

The Nell Shipman Company, directed by Dave Smith, has just finished the filming of Wallace Irwin's story "A Gentleman's Agreement" in which locations in seven different atmospheres were used. The company traveled to San Francisco, Oakland, Bakersfield, and the Kern River district for scenes in this photoplay.

The Vitagraph Serial Companies are making very rapid progress. This week Director Paul Hurst will complete the Hedda Nova serial "The Woman in The Web" which consists of fifteen episodes. William Duncan and Company making "A Fight For Millions" has completed the tenth episode, and for the first time since beginning the filming of this has worked at the studio. All of the past week was spent at the Hollywood plant, and afforded the players an opportunity to get acquainted with other members of the Vitagraph personnel.

William Farnum, Director Frank Lloyd and Company will find it necessary to retrace their steps recently taken in Arizona for exteriors of "Riders of The Purple Sage," as many of the locations used in this will be needed for scenes in its sequel which will be known as "Rainbow Trail." This latter picture is by the same author, Zane Grey.

Henry Lehrman of the Sunshine Comedy studios, has caused the erection of two very unique sets of a mechanical nature for a comedy he is now making. Much of the action for this takes place in a tourist sleeper and a dining car, and so careful have been the preparations of these interiors that it will cause all who view the film to think they were actually taken on the interior of a moving train. Billie Ritchie, Hugh Fay, Sylvia Day and Betty Carpenter and others are taking part. Other films now being made by Lehrman have Lloyd Hamilton, Ethel Teare, Slim Summerville, Gertrude Selby and others appearing.

The Harold Lockwood Yorke-Metro Company has returned from Del Monte, California, where many of the scenes of "A King in Khaki" were made during the past three weeks. In this story Lockwood is seen as a private. There are many picturesque nooks about Del Monte, and islands in the Pacific near there, which served as excellent locations for scenes in this coming Metro release.

Monroe Salisbury has a new director in the person of William Wolbert, who is now at work on "That Devil Baptiese," which is an original story and continuity by Bess Meredyth. Helen Eddy, who has just played opposite Salisbury in "The Rustler of Wind River," has been retained for this coming subject.

The title for Dorothy Phillips' next film is given out as "Until We Meet Again." The plot is based upon an incident of the present war, and Alan Holubar will be in charge of the direction.

Harry Pollard is back at Universal City after several weeks' illness and he will direct alternately with Elsie Jane Wilson, both using Carmel Meyer as star of their subjects.

Jack Dillon, until recently with Triangle, where he directed Olive Thomas, has been engaged by the Universal to direct alternately with Tod Browning in pictures starring Edith Roberts and Thornton Church.

The second release of the National Film Corporation of America, "The Romance of Tarzan," is now in its final cutting stage under the direction of co-authors and directors, Wilfred Lucas and Bess Meredyth. The film ultimately will be reduced to approximately 8,500 feet. Studio runs of the film, prior to the final cutting, brought out many complimentary statements from officers of the National, who believe they have in the coming release, even greater box-office attraction than the first "Tarzan of the Apes." The cast for this latter picture is an all-star one, inasmuch as Elmo Lincoln, Cleo Madison, Enid Markey, Monte Blue, Phil Dunham, Clyde Benson, Colin Kenney, Thomas Jefferson and Nigel de Brullier take part. The film will be ready for trade showing within a few days.

The Hollywood officers training camp, composed principally of motion picture people, are to take part in a Rodeo given at Exposition Park, in Los Angeles, on June 29, at which an admission of $1 will be charged, and every one attending will receive two thrift stamps.

A new producing unit was organized at the Metro Studios this week which will at once begin the filming of a production co-starring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum. The working title for this picture is "Judgment," which is an original story and scenario by George D. Baker, Metro manager of production. Herbert Standing has been engaged to play a prominent part, and Harry S. Northrope, Metro villian, and Edward Alexander will be seen in the cast. Miss Nilsson appears as a society girl, the daughter of a political power, who has psychic powers. Will S. Davis will be the director of this subject.

George D. Baker, Albert Le Vino and Bert Lytell have prepared the working script for Lytell's next starring vehicle to be known as "Boston Blacky's Little Pal." The scenario is an adaptation from the series of Raffles-Jimmie Valentine stories that have appeared in the Red Book, written by Jack Boyle. Little Ben Alexander, who made his screen debut in Griffith's "Hearts of the World," has been engaged for the name part. E. Mason Hopper will do the directing for this production.

Edith Storey left this week for the East where she will remain until early in the Fall. Miss Storey is particularly anxious to reach New York at this time because her brother, Richard Storey, is a member of one of the patrol boats crew of the navy at New York.

In addition to the usual one line weather report, HOOKUM takes this opportunity of saying our weather has been unusual. On a Tuesday there was lightning, thunderstorms, and some water fell. Sultry weather prevailed, and Los Angeles papers told us we were comfortable, but we couldn't believe it.

The old jewel robbery story came back at us again this week, but in new clothes, revamped by Al St. John, the Triangle P. A. Al's story pertains to a dog that Charles Dorian possesses that is such a good watcher that he permitted burglars to enter the back door while he slept on the front porch, and they made their get-away with the family jewels.

The photographer brought out a new fact this week which is rebuttal to the producers' statements that continuity writing is merely mechanical. All five of the Thos. Ince staff were arrayed before the still camera, and when the print was shown it was very apparent that all four, C. Gardner Sullivan, Julian Josephson, R. Cecil Smith and Jack Hawks, who write continuity, are balded-headed, but John Lynch, who devotes his time to plots exclusivsely, has a foretop such as would be appreciated by the shaggiest army mule.

Sol Wurtzel, Lynn Reynolds and J. D. Jennings tried to take a fishing vacation, to be spent in Kern River district where the speckeled trout were said to be as plentiful as one could desire. Here's what happened: Wurtzel's car stripped the drive shaft gears sixty miles from a garage. Lynn drove on with his machine to educate the fish to bite by the time Wurtzel was to arrive the next day. No fish were found in Kern River so Reynolds went to Yosemite Valley streams. Wurtzel followed on an auto stage in which a rancher was transporting a thoroughbred pig. By twilight of the third day, all had arrived at the Yosemite Valley streams, but Wurtzel was due back at the studio of Wm. Fox. He drove Lynn's car, and while nearing home met with a Ford. The damage was conspicuous to the Cadillac and the Ford. A piece of steel broke loose and flew into Jenning's eye, and three hours were consumed getting it removed. Arriving home Wurtzel found some more sad information, but he still had three five-ounce trout. Reynolds greatly enjoyed the trip home by the inland local train which traveled slowly across the burning desert. All three are now looking for the society editor who coined the phrase, "a good time was had by all."

All the money in the world seems to be located in or about the Metro Studios. Anna Q. Nilsson went in the other day and bought a Buick roadster and now holds the world's championship for doing corners on one wheel. Clifford Butler, the studio manager, and Ralph Godfrey, technical director, have also stepped into the moneyed class by the purchase of gasoline consuming machines.

E. Mason Hopper, Edith Storey, Lou Cody, and all the rest of this Metro unit making the forty-niner tale, "As the Sun Went Down," have absorbed so many expressions from the genuine prospectors with the troupe, they may be expected, every time they see a knoll to say: "Thar's gold in them thar hills." Anyone wishing to prospect may find Hopper's location in Topanga Canyon near our City of Flowers, Fruits and Sunshine.

Tom Gibson entrusts Uncle Sam with an epistle addressed to HOOKUM, and thereby we learn that trout are numerous in the streams near the National Studio at Denver. In fact, Tom now beats the typewriter with one hand, and whips the streams to a foam with the other.

Harry Havens and Kansas City Bennie Ziedman have taken a bungalow in Hollywood, which promises to be the centre of much social activity. The bungalow has a vine covered porch, an oaken bucket at the well, a lawn with green grass growing all around, and everything except food.

Paul Herbert Conlon, familiarly known as "Scoop," has lived up to his nickname. Several weeks ago he went off and got married, the bride being Lilian Mettler of our fair town. "Scoop" chose San Diego to begin his honeymoon from, and Roscoe Arbuckle did the honors of best man, after being sworn to secrecy. The fact probably never would have been known had Charley Fuhr kept his word.

TO HELL WITH THE KAISER

Production Unique Among All Others

AMONG all motion picture productions and certainly among all war pictures, "To Hell With the Kaiser" is unique. An exhibitor will do well to realize this when he makes his bookings and lays his plans to take advantage of all the unusual angles of exploitation and presentation.

On most productions the exhibitor is told in advance what great opportunities a picture has; he is told in adjectives and in generalities. But here is a production that lays itself open to almost any form of exploitation and there is not a showman anywhere who cannot attract unusual attention to the picture if he uses a little more than ordinary effort.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" is a combination of incidents founded on fact and a more or less imaginative picture of what we would like to see happen to the Hun ruler and the rest of his Prussian tribe of pillagers. Remember this: You have not only the chance to tell the public the realism that the film actually shows, but you can go the limit in forecasting the result of the war and the punishment that will be meted out to the men responsible for it — according to one imaginary idea.

In the first place you have to know ALL ABOUT this picture in order to get the most out of it. Before we start talking about methods of exploitation, read the story. There are a thousand and one angles that will appeal to you.

40 AIRSHIPS IN ONE PICTURE

This Is a Good Point to Keep Before the Public in "To Hell with the Kaiser"

WE have had so many war pictures that the public will generally be found getting tired of mere battle scenes, especially as several of the big war successes have already been shown in your city. But here you have something novel.

Forty airships are shown at the same time. There is nothing of the fake about this, though nothing can be said about where the pictures were made. They represent a battle between two great air fleets. There is a thrill every moment that they are on the screen. This is something different and its proper exploitation ought to bring business.

The airship also figures prominently for it is through that the Hun ruler is made prisoner and taken before General Pershing.

Made with an Idea of the Theatric

"To Hell With the Kaiser" is a picture that has confessedly been made with an idea to the theatric display. It has a punch every minute and there is an appeal to loyalty, coupled with the picturization of actual events, that will cause a world of comment in your city immediately after it has been shown for the first times.

Many of the incidents just before the war are shown. Some of them follow history. Some of them are imaginary, but the whole result is to thoroughly demonstrate the real Hun spirit behind the war. Naturally, the story of the compact with the Devil, on which the theme is founded, is fiction to the extent of the personal appearance of His Eminence yet it agrees with the career the Hun has followed since the shot was fired at Sarejevo.

Here is one of the first things to play in connection with the picture. Play strong that the picture shows the compact between Hell and the Hun. This is not a picture on which to mince words. Come right out with what you have to say.

You have a chance to tell the public that this picture shows not only the causes that led up to the war, not only pictures the brutalities of the Germans, but that it forecasts the way that it is to end.

Every effort put forward in advertising and presenting the picture should be based on the idea: "Here is the film that shows what you want to see happen to the Kaiser and his brood."

What the Story Tells

Here is the story:

Wilhelm II is proclaimed Emperor of Germany at the death of his father, Frederick III. We are shown pictures of the new ruler with his withered arm and the degeneracy of the Crown Prince is also pictured. Before the dead ruler has been buried Bismarck shows the new Emperor the secrets of the country—the plans for the conquering of the world. The German objects toward each country are kept in a separate receptacle and each of these is guarded by an insidious poison, so that any one tampering with them will meet instant death.

Here is the first point that you can play.

"How Germany's plans for the world conquest were guarded by poison and how they were revealed to the Kaiser when he assumed the throne."

After the Kaiser has examined the various ones of these plans he finds that the plan for the conquering of England is missing. His mother is an English woman and he immediately orders her arrest and recovers the missing plan. Here is another point that you can bring out — how the Kaiser arrested his own mother in his greed for world domination.

While he is alone with these plans the Devil appears to him and promises conquest of the world in exchange for the Kaiser's soul. The agreement is made and signed with blood from the Hun's withered arm.

Dramatic Incidents Worked In

Now we are shown a picture of the peaceful, happy Belgium in the spring of 1914. Here Professor Monroe, an American, and his older daughter, Alice, are taking leave of the younger daughter, Ruth, who is being educated in a Belgian convent. The picture is in contrast with those that are to be shown later with the invasion of Belgium by the German hordes.

Professor Monroe is the inventor of a new wireless apparatus, by means of which messages may be transmitted without being overheard by others. This is an invention that the Kaiser seeks, but which is refused him, Monroe declaring that only his own country shall have the secret.

Now the story is transferred back to Germany. "Der tag," the day that the Huns had so long boasted of, had appeared. The Kaiser calls his counsellors before him and they all tell of what they have to offer. Here is a mighty clever scene worked out in which the various promised war operations are shown in miniature. Zeppelin shows how his new airship will wreck destruction of peaceful communities. Von Hollweg shows his plans for political poisoning of various countries. Von Tirpitz shows the secrets of the submarine and as miniature Zeppelins fly about the room we are shown in miniature the cruise of a tiny submarine. The Kaiser is delighted with all of these preparations and he prepares to strike.

Kaiser's "Double" Is Introduced

But in order to protect himself and provide a foil in case of trouble, he sends for Rupert Graubel, an actor in the Royal theatre, who has scored a success by his impersonation of the Kaiser, and orders him to act as a double for him. This inserts a dramatic point into the story and provides for numerous complications which arise. One of the first of these comes when the degenerate Crown Prince takes the daughter of Professor Monroe in his arms and kisses her. Graubel, who is himself in love with the girl, sees them from a window in the palace, goes out and knocks the Crown Prince down. The Crown Prince himself fails to recognize the impersonation and believes that his father has administered the chastisement.

Here is another point that can be emphasized — how the Crown Prince was punished for an insult to an American girl.

The actor reveals his identity to the girl, who is also loved by Winslow Dodge, an attache of the American embassy. In the meantime the Kaiser is sure that he has all the means for conquering the world except the wireless invention of Professor Monroe, and he orders the American to come to the palace and bring with him the invention. While the soldiers are in the American's room the daughter, Alice, hands the father a package containing what are apparently the plans.

The inventor is taken before the Kaiser, who demands the plans. One can imagine the effect upon him — and the effect upon the audience seeing the picture — when the Kaiser tears the package open and discovers instead of the secret an American flag.

With the Kaiser baffled the American demands his passports and with his daughter, Alice, starts through Belgium to get his second daughter, Ruth, but before their arrival she has fallen a victim to the licentiousness of the Crown Prince. We are shown vividly the manner in which the Germans treated the Belgians, how they killed and abused innocent men, women and children; how priests and nuns were shot down for some fancied insult.

American Girl a Victim

The Crown Prince and his army come to the convent where Ruth, the younger daughter of the American inventor, is one of the pupils. The girls are herded before the Crown Prince and his staff. The Kaiser's son takes his first choice of the girls, announcing that each of the others shall have one of those that are left. Ruth is the girl that the Crown Prince selects for his diabolical purpose.

When the professor and his older daughter arrive the girl is dying. The professor himself encounters the murderer of his daughter, and, when he denounces him, the American is shot dead.

Alice returns to Berlin with vengeance sworn, and tells Dodge of the tragedy. He wants her to leave with him, but she is determined to remain and put her plan in operation. To reach the Kaiser, she plans to wind Graubel around her little finger.

Wilhelm, consulting his war map, makes a partition of the countries of the world, giving one to each member of his council. The United States has not been assigned, not having been drawn into the war. A more ruthless submarine warfare is ordered. The "Lusitania" is sunk, and the Kaiser laughs at the protest of the United States. Finally, when Germany has forfeited the respect of the whole world, the United States declares war.

The Kaiser sneeringly remarks to Ambassador Gerard that Americans will not fight, and Gerard not only assures him they will fight, but consigns him to the hot place. The Kaiser summons the Crown Prince, and tells him the United States is to be his property.

A year later the Americans are in the front line trenches. Dodge is in the aviation corps. Alice's secret plan is approaching fulfillment. Graubel has introduced her to the Crown Prince, who admires her greatly. She follows him to Belgium. A wireless contrivance, an adaptation of the Professor's invention, has been concealed in the woods. Alice notifies Dodge, who flies to a secret rendezvous to meet her, to come with an aerial force when she gives him the signal. She returns to her lodgings to receive the Crown Prince.

The Crown Prince tells Alice that he is to meet his father at

Title Gives Big Advertising Advantage

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER" offers far more material for exploitation than most pictures. Each one of the seven reels is crammed with matter that can be put right before the public. And the best thing about the whole thing is that the more you tell the public about this picture the greater the interest will be.

In most cases the interest in a feature is lessened when you tell the plot in advance, but here just the opposite is the case. The more you talk about various incidents that are shown in the picture the more people you will have coming to the theatre to see just how the events are pictured. The exhibitor will do well to make the most out of each incident and to advertise definite events portrayed in the picture.

You have a great advantage to start with in the title. It will cause everyone to wonder what the picture is about. The title itself will "stop 'em in their tracks." You don't have to depend on paper that will startle with its designs or halftones in the newspapers to attract attention. The title alone will get them, so use that on every possible occasion, and certainly keep it the big thing in every form of advertising that you do.

"Teaser" campaigns are worn out so far as application to most pictures, but here is an ideal opportunity for that form of exploitation — merely by using the title alone. At least a couple of weeks before you are to show this picture, start such a campaign. Metro exchanges will furnish you with a cut bearing the title, but this had the word "Coming" on it. We would advise that this be cut off so as to not even give the hint that "To Hell With the Kaiser" is a picture. This specific cut is four columns wide and about one and a half inches deep. You can have smaller ones made, a single column in width and only a few lines deep, so that the use of a number of them in a single issue of your newspaper will not be expensive.

In case you do not want to go to this expense, simply have these words set up in eighteen point type, with a border around them:

To Hell With the Kaiser

Now by all means you should arrange to use this in several different issues of the newspapers. You are going to get direct benefits from each appearance of these five words before the public and the benefit cannot be directed any other place than to your theatre.

Now here is a point to remember. If you have the first run of this picture in your city, don't commence getting news stories about the picture into the newspaper. Rather try to keep them out and keep the mystery idea dominant. With some exhibitors the desire is strong to have a lot of free matter appear in exchange for every cent spent. In this case forget this desire. Go to the manager of your newspaper and outline your advertising campaign and tell him exactly what you want to do. Say to him that you are going to run a campaign for two weeks or so in advance of the presentation and that for the first week you do not want any news mention, but that you are going to expect him to make up for this when you are ready to start your informative campaign. You can

HOW MANY DOUBLES HAS HE?

SOME of the most dramatic episodes in "To Hell With the Kaiser" result from the fact that the Hun ruler is shown as having called in an actor to impersonate him when he so desired. This provides a double role and results in a number of complications that heightens the interest.

Keep before the public a recently printed news story which said that the kaiser had half a dozen "doubles" who were employed to pose for him in various parts of the country where there might be danger of assassination while the real kaiser himself remained safe behind this cloak. You can arouse all sorts of curiosity with news stories along this line.

Early Campaign Will Increase Business always get the greatest degree of cooperation by friendly telling the newspaper what you are going to do and what you would like for the paper to do for you.

Start Your Campaign Early

As we say we believe that the campaign should start at least two weeks, in advance, if you are running the picture for the first time in your city, and that the first week of this campaign should be devoted to "teaser" advertising. We believe that a two weeks' advance is sufficient for any picture, but this does not mean that you must make the announcement one day and then let it drop. In order to get the maximum in advance interest you ought to go after this every day.

Now as soon as you book this picture, figure out your advance advertising appropriation — and then double it. Here is a production that has every promise of being good for unusual runs, if for no other reason than the exploitation possibilities that it does offer. Naturally, for the bigger campaign we are figuring that the first run house is going to book the picture for the longest run that he believes it will stand, and that he is going to conduct his advance exploitation accordingly.

So start these teaser advertisements two weeks before the start of your picture. Run several of them through the Sunday issues two weeks before you are to open. If you can do so run one of these on each page of every issue. The space that is used need not be large, but the main point is to keep hammering away with the title. After a week of such exploitation you are going to have everyone in the city wondering what it is all about. Then come out your second Sunday with the first announcement of the picture. Metro has issued a number of striking advertisements, which are supplied in cut form. These are illustrated on another page, and they can be obtained from your local exchange.

First Announcement Striking

Make your first announcement large and striking. On the same day have the newspaper run your first news announcement about it. You can have your agent localize the story by bringing out that everyone in the city has been wondering for a week what "To Hell With the Kaiser" was about and you can pull all sorts of near fake stuff about the excitement that has been aroused.

Now follow this Sunday advertising with daily advertising, telling various things that are shown in the picture. You have a wealth of material to use here.

First know your picture. Talk to the people about definite things each day. Tell them something that they will see in the production. Before you start to advertise this turn to page 3925 and read the story of the play. As a matter of fact you are not going to be prepared to intelligently start to work until every line of this has been read. Use every incident for all that it is worth.

Metro has prepared some attractive black and white advertising. You can use one of the two or three column displays practically as prepared for you for your initial advertisement in the Sunday, or Saturday, papers. Now in addition to this there is a single column display. You can cut off part of this for use in your daily talks during the week before the picture is to be shown.

Use heavy type in this matter with such expressions as these:

"How poison guarded the German war secrets."

"Kaiser arrests his own mother to hide his infernal schemes."

"How many doubles has the Kaiser? How he used them to protect himself."

"Crown Prince killed by an American girl whom he attacks."

"American aviators capture the Kaiser."

These are only the display lines that we suggest. We would follow each one of these with some matter in smaller type, saying that these are a few of the things that are shown in the picture.

Use only one topic in each advertisement. Center your advertising that day on selling the picturization of one incident to the public. You will find it far more effective than trying to tell the public all about the picture in a single announcement and you will find that this will give you a cumulative effect that will arouse the greatest wave of curiosity that has been known in your community.

Keep up this same style of advertising during the run of the picture. Don't let anything lead you into generalities or a mass of adjectives. You have too much good, definite material to use.

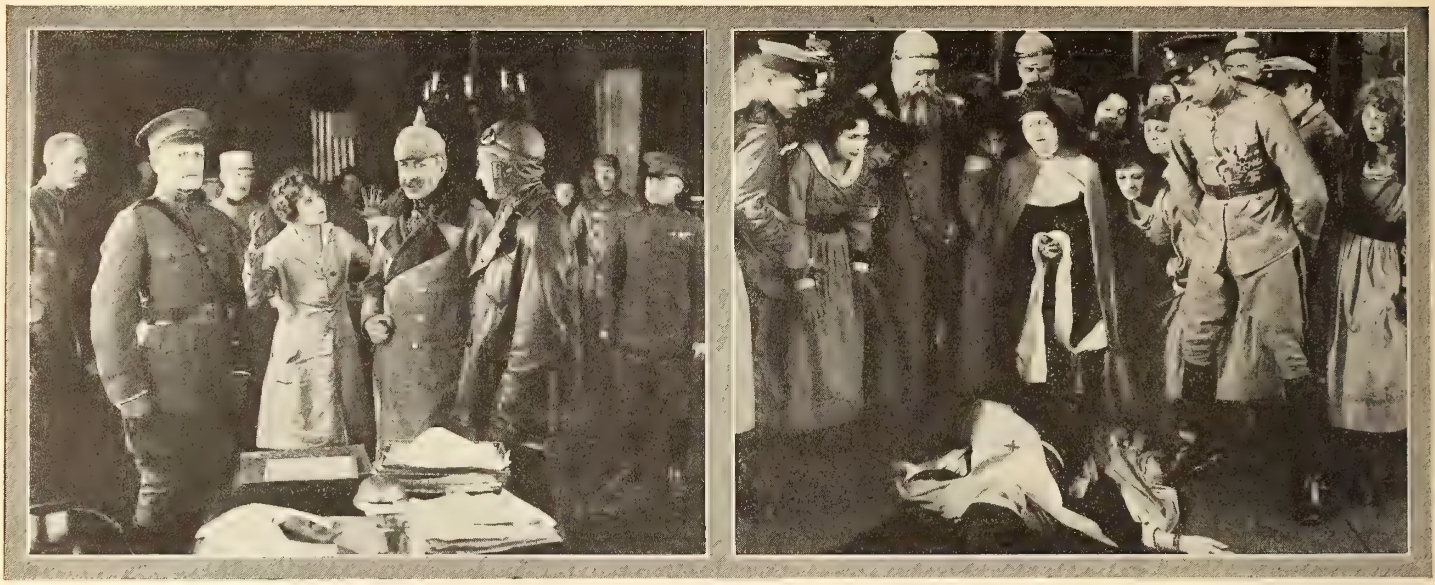
The public has been told more or less the same thing about the mass of war pictures. But you have here specific incidents to use, and the greatest of them all is that you have a picture that shows what everyone hopes will happen to the Hun ruler. Hit on this point from the start and keep on pounding it home.

During the first week of this teaser campaign we would keep the theatre clear of any announcement of the picture.

You have an opportunity to plaster your territory with cards of posters simply carrying the title of the picture. You can mail out cards with only these words on them. But after you have done this be sure to follow up at least a week before you start to show the picture with a complete poster campaign. Don't overlook the fact that your teaser advertising in the newspapers and on the billboards has been causing everyone to worry about what "To Hell With the Kaiser" means. Don't be content until you have told everyone that. Follow up your cards with a folder or a letter of explanation.

Naturally, the teaser campaign cannot be worked if you are showing the picture after the first run in your city. In that case simply omit that campaign and go straight to the exploitation of what the picture is about.

Metro exchanges are supplying a large amount of particularly attractive paper with this picture. It is in vivid colors with simple wording, the title being the dominant thing and most of the pictures showing the Hun ruler and the devil as associates. Much of



Scene when the Kaiser is brought a prisoner before General Pershing and how the Crown Prince shoots down a nun

Paper a Splendid Help For Theatre

this paper was designed by Lambert Gunther, and all of it carries a decided punch.

There are four of the one sheets. One of these shows the Kaiser captured by two American soldiers. A second one shows the daughter of the American inventor in the clutches of the Crown Prince. A third shows the Kaiser with an uplifted hand, making the declaration of "Divine right," and the devil in the background.

Probably the most striking of all the one sheets shows the foot of Uncle Sam with just the tip of his red and white striped trousers kicking the Kaiser into Hell, with devils in the form of pigs waiting for him. Still another one of the one sheets shows Uncle Sam's fist smashing the Hun in the face.

There are three of the three sheets. One of these shows the Kaiser unwrapping what he supposed to be the plans for the wireless and discovering there the American flag. Another shows him seated with the devil standing behind him. A third shows an American aeroplane lassoing the Goth.

There are two of the six sheets. One of these shows the American inventor at the bedside of his daughter after she has fallen a victim of the Crown Prince, and in the background the picture of a German soldier bayonetting a woman. The second and the most striking shows the Kaiser in the form of an octopus with his tentacles reaching out to take the whole world in his grasp.

The twenty-four sheet is a vivid picturization of the Kaiser making his compact with the devil.

This paper should be used lavishly.

There is an excellent herald prepared for exhibitors by Metro in the form of the Kaiser's face and a target.

There will be all sorts of lobby displays possible on this picture. By using the figures of the Kaiser and the devil from one of the twenty-four sheets you can provide a cut-out that will attract attention. If you wish to be unusually sensational you can drape your lobby in red, using red lights at night and making the figures of the Kaiser and the devil the dominant ones, and you can add friezes of devils around the top of the lobby.

In our opinion the simpler and the more striking that you make this display the better. We would recommend the use of only one set of the figures, ar two at the most, and then striking colors around the lobby.

In our opinion the simpler and the more striking that you make this display the better. We would recommend the use of only one set of the figures, or two at the most, and then striking colors around the lobby.

You may be told to fix up your theatre like the entrance to hell, to garb your ushers and cashier and ticket sellers as devils. We wouldn't do it. The minute you resort to this sort of a thing you make a burlesque out of the whole presentation. Simply use enough lobby display to attract attention and then stop.

If you want to do stunts, there are plenty of them. You could have the Kaiser led around the streets by a devil or by American soldiers, but we doubt very much whether these cheap and time-worn stunts are of any value. We believe that they cheapen the production and that for every person the stunt brings in a dozen are kept away.

You don't need the stunt. The simple, but theatric recital of what you have in the picture is the best form of exploitation for this one.

Here Are Some Points on Players To Use

EXHIBITORS have an opportunity to make a great deal out of several members of the cast of "To Hell With the Kaiser" and they should not overlook this phase of the exploitation.

There is an unusual punch in the presence of John Sunderland in the cast. He has the role of the American attache of the Berlin embassy who afterwards becomes an aviator and captures the kaiser. Mr. Sunderland is a Belgian and he has seen service in this war against the Huns. He is the son of titled Belgians and when the great conflict started he enlisted in the aviation corps and saw service in the battle of Liege, Namur and Ypres. He was seriously wounded and was retired.

Then he came to America and his first screen appearance here was in support of Clara Kimball Young in "Shirley Kaye."

Use Mr. Sunderland in your exploitation as a war hero. You can build story after story around him. Don't exaggerate. The facts are enough. You can say to the public that here is a man who has lived the life that he is picturing. He was there and he saw it and he knows how to interpret it.

Olive Tell, the heroine, is a drawing power because her name is known to every visitor to the legitimate stage and every picture lover. She has played in such big Broadway successes as "General Post," with William Courtenay and Tom Wise, and "The Fountain of Youth," with Henry Miller. Among her screen successes have been "The Unforeseen," "The Girl and the Judge," "Her Sisters" and "The Smugglers."

You can feature Olive Tell as a typical American girl in her role of "Alice Monroe." She has a very strong part and the way that she outwits the crown prince makes one of the big selling points of the picture. She is a girl of rare beauty in features and coloring and her picture is one that should be made prominent in your lobby displays. Here is another point: She was educated in France. She has the atmosphere of the picture and you can almost see her suffering with the people of the invaded countries in the interpretation she gives this unusual role.

Betty Howe, who plays the younger sister, can be featured as a player who is sure to become a star in her own rights before long. She is one of the most charming actresses on the screen and her work as "Ruth Monroe" is so appealing that the audiences will be stirred to indignation by the wrong done by the crown prince. There hasn't been a more sincere piece of work done than that which she contributes to this picture.

Miss Howe is now engaged in a serial in which Leah Baird and Sheldon Lewis will also be seen. Her last previous appearance was with Elsie Ferguson when she played the appealing younger sister. Before that she appeared in "The Alibi" and "The Agony Column" and won prominence in the serial, "Beatrice Fairfax."

Maud Hill, who plays the mother superior, was educated in a convent. Feature this in an incidental way, being sure to use good taste in the way that you bring out the point. This early training fits her for the role. Miss Hill is graceful and statuesque and she moved through the picture with a calm grace that is fitting for her role. While hers is a comparatively small part she makes it stand out by her interpretation.

Miss Hill has played leading parts in such pictures as "The Cowardly Way," "Her Own Way" and "Man and His Soul." For the last year she has been away from the screen on account of ill health, but now she is to be seen in two Metro productions, "To Hell With the Kaiser" and "The House of Gold," the latter, in support of Emmy Wehlen.

Feature Frank Currier as one of the best-known and most accomplished actors on the screen. He has played with the biggest stars of the spoken and silent drama and he has always made his parts stand out. In this picture he has a big and a most dramatic role and he proves that he is an actor by carrying the interpretation through naturally and convincingly.

He, too, fits in well in the exploitation, for he has given the only son to the cause of democracy and justice and has himself offered his services in any way that the government can use them.

His last previous appearance was in "Toys of Fate," with Mme. Nazimova. He played the gypsy husband and father. He has appeared in most of the Bushman and Bayne pictures.

DIRECTOR A GUARANTEE

George Irving Does Splendid Work in Production

GEORGE IRVING'S name attached to a picture is always valuable, and in connection with a big war picture like "To Hell with the Kaiser" is doubly so. It means that the direction is in the hands of a thoroughly competent person, one whose own experience on stage and screen with the biggest stars of both has fitted him for the direction of others. In addition, Mr. Irving has a background of education and travel which gives him perfect control over the exigencies of any situation or location. For this reason his pictures have a surety and finish that many others lack.

His own screen debut was as Jimsey in "Paid in Full." Later he played leads in various productions, but soon gave up acting to become General Production director of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, for which he made "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour" and others. He directed Petrova in "Daughter of Destiny," and produced "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," for Hyclass. For Metro he has directed Effie Shannon in "Her Boy" and Harold Lockwood in "The Landloper." He is now directing Mabel Normand for Goldwyn.

Talk About Many Angles of the Picture midnight in a certain spot, and after this revelation undertakes to force his attentions on the girl. She kills him.

Points to Be Brought Out

Here is another point to feature in your exploitation, How an American girl kills the Crown Prince.

The American aeroplanes come. Here is one of the other points to play strong — the greatest number of airships that have ever been shown in one picture are here presented — some forty of them.

The Kaiser is captured by the American aviators — feature this point.

Then he is sent into banishment on a barren island, where his only associates are swine. Finally he goes mad and leaps into the sea.

Then he goes to hell to keep his compact and there Satan himself abdicates, because the Kaiser has surpassed him in devising fiendish tortures.

Feature: "Compact of Hell and the Hun."

You can imagine that thousands of people were used in making this production. There are many of the scenes in Berlin and on the battlefields of Belgium and France, and behind the American lines shown.

One of the most thrilling incidents that have ever been shown in pictures is brought about with a battle between two immense air fleets. Forty aeroplanes are shown in the air at the same time, which is said to break all records in motion pictures.

This is a mighty good point to feature in one of your newspaper articles.

Americans are shown in front line trenches and there is a most dramatic scene introduced when the first American prisoners are brought before the Kaiser at his field headquarters. The men represent the various races that enter into our nationality, but who are united in their loyalty to the country. The prisoners overcome their guards and heap upon Wilhelm insults and indignities which will delight the heart of every red-blooded American who sees the picture. The descendant of "the noble red man," an Indian, who is a graduate of Carlisle University, describes to the Kaiser the fate that would be his if the American Indians could have their way. Before the eyes of the frightened monarch is a vision of himself tied to a burning stake, a mob of yelling Indians dancing around him, eager to secure his scalp. After enjoying themselves hugely at the Kaiser's expense, the prisoners set out across No Man's Land and return to the American trenches.

As a welcome contrast to the scenes of battle, "To Hell With the Kaiser" shows some beautiful pictures of a world restored to peace when the monster of Europe has been captured and brought to justice. The babes of all nations are shown in an appealing scene that will go straight to the heart of every spectator, with the wonderful child actress, Baby Ivy Ward, waving over the heads of the children the Stars and Stripes, emblematic of the protection assured to the world by America.

You should play up that this picture gives the inside secrets of the war, that it pictures the emotions that moved the Hun horde to their crimes, that it reveals the things that caused the terrible events that have taken place.

Tell the public that this is a frank indictment of the Kaiser, that though some of the actual events that are pictured may not have taken place, they have thousands of duplicates in events that have shocked the civilized world.

Above everything else make it plain to the public that this picture shows what every true American wants to see happen to the Kaiser and his gang. Tell the people that they will get satisfaction out of this film because it forecasts the awful doom that awaits the man and his aides who have plunged the world into the greatest suffering ever known.

You have a chance here for the most unique of all exploitation campaigns along dozens of unusual lines. Exhibitors have their choice of exploiting the picture in any way that they think conforms with the policy of their theatre.

Sherry Service Rounding Out

Exchange Centres Added to List—Prominent Exchange Managers Placed in Charge—Sennott Pleased with Outlook

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, of the recently organized William L. Sherry Service, reports the happenings incident to the launching of his distributing medium, the recent additions to his staff of branch managers and the exchanges opened to handle the Sherry business.

Keeney's production, "A Romance of the Underworld" will be the first release of the Sherry Service.

Among the latest to join the Sherry forces is William L. Alexander, formerly with William Fox. He has been appointed general manager of the exchanges in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle, with assistants to have charge of the individual offices. B. F. Lyon, now temporary manager of the Cleveland office, will be Mr. Sherry's Pittsburgh representative and Walter R. Liebman will have charge of Cleveland. A. L. Widner is mentioned for the Kansas City office. Exchanges have been opened in fourteen cities: New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Boston, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Detroit, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Denver. Within the next week or so Mr. Sherry announces that he will also open exchanges in St. Louis, Buffalo, Atlanta and Dallas, making eighteen cities in all.

N. J. Sennott, general manager of the Sherry Service, reports, upon his return from a trip as far as Kansas City, that exhibitors are, generally, optimistic and hungry for good productions and willing to pay for them.

"A concrete evidence that the exhibitor has faith in the future of the moving picture business is found in the fact that so many now theatres are going up, said Mr. Sennott. "The exhibitors are very anxious to get better pictures. Despite the fact that the hot weather is upon us, orders are coming in very rapidly for one of the first of my releases. 'The Street of Seven Stars,' featuring Doris Kenyon. 'A Romance of the Underworld' also possesses a distinct advantage, in that it has as a star Catherine Calvert, whose work on the screen has been of the first order.

"I am very glad to be affiliated with men like Frank A. Keeney and Theodore C. Deitrich, president of Miss Kenyon's company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., because I know that as producers they are satisfied with nothing except the best. All of their productions which I have seen are correct and artistic in every detail and also full of real human interest quality. In other words, I believe in taking the exhibitor's viewpoint. Judging from the calls I have had for my first releases, the exhibitors are quite as optimistic regarding their success as I am, and that is saying a good deal."

Foursquare Maintains Story Is First

EVERY little while there appears some bit of evidence to support the contention that in the satisfactory motion picture the story is "the thing." Another bit of evidence to this end is supplied by P. V. R. Key, of Foursquare Pictures, who has recently returned to New York after a two weeks' visit to the exchanges of that organization in the Middle West and those of Superfeatures, Ltd., of Canada, which is affiliated with Foursquare in the marketing of its production in the dominion.

"More than one hundred exhibitors in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and leading Canadian cities are agreed that no picture nowadays is accepted by motion picture patrons unless it be based upon a story that has strength and consistency.

"Without exception these men declared that it is no longer possible to retain patronage by showing pictures—no matter whether they have stars in the casts and fine photography and lighting—unless the story be a clever one and constructed skillfully.

"This opinion, which has been long held by George Backer and Jacob Wildberg, president and treasurer of Foursquare Pictures, seems to be growing wider every month. Mr. Backer's newest photoplay, 'Men,' produced by the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, is perhaps one of the best examples of what is meant by a good story."

Affiliated Plan Established in Ohio

At the second meeting of the members of the Ohio unit of the Affiliated Booking Corporation, held last week, it was decided to call the unit the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Ohio. President Lustig announced that the trust fund of $4,000 demanded by the parent body, had been accepted by a reliable banking institution of the city. Sam Bullock will take the matter up for further consideration at the meeting of the national directors of all the units, which is to be held on the 18th of June at the Astor Hotel, New York.

The Western Import Company, Controlling the Rights to "Mickey," Announces that Interest in the Mabel Normand Picture Is Increasing Steadily

Shorty Hamilton Series Ready

W. H. Productions Announces Original Titles and Re-Issue Titles—Explains Method of Re-Construction

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY is prepared to release the series of 16 two-reel Shorty Hamilton pictures, the original titles of which are as follows: "Shorty Inherits a Harem," "Shorty's Ranch," "Shorty's Trip to Mexico," "Shorty Escapes Matrimony," "Shorty and the Fortune Teller," "Shorty in Trouble," "Shorty and the Prize Fighter," "Shorty and Sherlock Holmes," "Shorty's Sacrifice," "Shorty's Strategy," "Shorty Among Cannibals," "Adventures of Shorty," "Shorty Falls into a Title," "Shorty Turns Actor," "Shorty Turns Judge" and "Shorty Shifts a Sheriff."

Each of these subjects will be entirely reconstructed and will be given a new title to conform with the new story, the old title also being given prominence, not only on the film, but on the advertising matter. Each one is of a different type, and were produced under the supervision of Thos. H. Ince. Territory has already been disposed of, it is announced, and it is expected that the remaining territory will be closed soon.

In addition to the above series of two-reel Shorty Hamilton subjects, W. H. Productions Co. will also re-issue a series of 24 one-reel Fatty Arbuckle comedies. In a great many of this series Mabel Normand is featured with Arbuckle.

The method pursued by the editors under the supervision of E. J. McGovern, is explained by him. "A sample print is first taken off from the original negative. Through the process of elimination all titles, padding and unnecessary film is taken out. Then, from the action remaining, an entirely new story is written, and the new title naturally conforms to the new story, so that in the majority of cases these W. H. Productions subjects are new. That the public will not be misled the old title is also placed on the film and on advertising matter. Reports from various sources throughout the country show that 75 per cent of the exhibitors are showing these re-issues."

All American rights for the Hart pictures, the series of Keystone comedies, and, with the exception of a single territory, the series of Chaplins, have been disposed of. There is still some open territory on the Barriscale feature.

Timely Title for Perret's First Feature

Leonce Perret announces as the title for the first of his patriotic features, produced by his own company, "Lafayette, We Come," the title and story based on the General Pershing's address at the tomb of Lafayette, on his arrival in Paris. Keeney Starts on Fourth Calvert Picture

Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation has resumed production activities according to an anouncement by Roy C. Owens, general manager, and Director James Kirkwood is now at work on the fourth Keeney feature featuring Catherine Calvert, "The Girl With the Past," written by the late Paul Armstrong who was the husband of Miss Calvert. The first three Keeney features, "The Romance of the Underworld," by Paul Armstrong; "The Girl Problem," by E. Lloyd Sheldon and "Marriage" by Guy Bolton, are completed and on the market.

The original plan was to produce three pictures and suspend production until the latter part of the summer or early in the fall. The resumption at an earlier date was due to the demand for the first of the Keeney pictures, "A Romance of the Underworld," which is now open for bookings.

All of the Keeney pictures star Catherine Calvert. Among those in the cast of the fourth picture are Dudley Ayres and Edwin Forsberg. This will be Mr. Ayres' first appearance in pictures. "A Romance of the Underworld" will be released in about a week. All of the Keeney pictures are being distributed through the William L. Sherry Service.

The remaining United States territory is still open.

Educational Shows Cigars in the Making

Cigars—where they come from and how they are made—is the subject of Educational Film Corporation's late one-reel educational, "Cigars for Kings and Millionaires." The region which grows our finest Havanas, Vuelta Abajo in the Pinar del Rio province, Cuba, has been caught by Educational's camera, and every detail in the raising of the tobacco, how the seedlings are planted, the leaf cultivated and the crop harvested, is shown in this reel.

It is shown how the tobacco is cured by a series of elaborate tests, the tobacco smeller being just as important a functionary as the tea-taster in the grading of teas. Each King, Princelet or U. S. financial magnate has his own make special brand. The help employed is skillful, highly paid and veteran. Their hours are lightened by the services of professional story-tellers or readers.

Hammons Remarks on Ruling

Vice-President of Educational Favors Action Taken at Washington Regarding Type of Film to Be Exported

IN commenting upon the recent ruling from Washington that one-fifth of exports sent from this country in the future, must be educationals, E. W. Hammonds, vice-president and general manager of Educational Film Corporation, said:

"I am sincerely glad that the United States Government has taken a stand against the exploitation of harmful stuff or of trash that cannot benefit this country in the eyes of Allies and neutrals. That is my construction of the new order from Washington. Outgoing cargo space is scarce and valuable. Everything that this nation sends abroad must have some definite use related to our winning of the war.

"Whatever puts the United States in a favorable light before the rest of the world is helpful. The Government evidently means to encourage that sort of production and to withhold transit facilities from the other kind. The beauty, strength and resources of these United States all tend to help the cause. So do all fiction pictures with a patriotic purpose or even without professed propaganda, but wholesome, sweet and representative of the best in the national life.

"On the other hand, dramas of the type of 'The Hair in the Hash, or The Cook's Revenge' are not going to help America any. Such plays are not truly representative of America. In the same category are pictures dealing with squalor and vice. Right here I wish to put in a strenuous denial of the published statement that only one-tenth of 1 per cent. of our American pictures are of an educational character.

Several years of hard work and earnest study in this field convince me that at least 20 per cent. of the American production is educational and that from 30 to 40 per cent. of our pictures are of an educational tendency. All the leading corporations have put forth many features of a refining and uplifting motive. The production of educationals is increasing rapidly. Now is the time for every film manufacturer and producer to comb his shelves and bring out all the standard product that is of permanent worth to his country.

"In making these observations, I do not put myself on record as opposed to comedy. Among other things, we have sold hundreds of thousands of feet of comedies for use in the overseas training camps, on board the transports going to and fro, and in countries like Italy and Russia. The necessity of a certain proportion of laughs to serious things is obvious in any motion picture entertainment, even in wartime."

Affiliated Plan Laid in Foreign Fields

Executives of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation made plans last week for the extension of its operations in Canada. Chandos Brenon and Merritt Butting, editor of the Canadian Motion Picture Digest, have charge of the work in Canada.

Herbert Brenon, now in England, filming an official war picture, under the auspices of the English Government, has advised the officials of the Affiliated that the keenest interest has been expressed in the Affiliated plan by English exhibitors. Other foreign units will be organized as rapidly as war conditions permit.

"Mickey,' Sennett's Masterpiece"—W. H.

"JUST what is needed, more than anything else, to make a picture the perfect masterpiece of the age?" asks an official of W. H. Productions. And where could one go for a concrete answer? "It does appear, at first glance, as if 'there ain't no sich animal.' But Mack Sennett found it and tamed it—and it talked," says the official, answering his own question.

"In making 'Mickey,' Mack Sennett, too, went in quest of that evasive quality that would prove just the thing he wanted. The simplest and most obvious answers, oddly enough, are oftentimes the most easily overlooked. Yet the infallible answer, the pattern by which to mould the perfect picture is from the public itself. In overcoming the hitch, however, was where Mack Sennett showed his genius. He secured an authentic opinion and criticism from the public itself, without jeopardizing the finished picture.

"A carefully laid out plan was sketched along these lines. There was a private showing of the picture for some of the best laboratory men in the country, at which were present such recognized authorities as George Dobbs, formerly superintendent of the Triangle laboratories and now general manager of the Palisades Laboratories; Herman Breuner of the Biograph Company, and others, whose opinions were unbiased since they had no pecuniary interest in the picture.

"There was also a screening for some of the greatest showmen in the country, A. H. Woods, Alfred E. Aarons, general manager of Klaw & Erlanger's theatres, and others.

"The office force constituted another cog in the public machine, and after screening the picture, a prize was given to the one who gave the best criticism of 'Mickey.' Everyone in the organization worked to secure representative types whose opinions were valuabue and whose ideas were incorporated to material advantage.

"In the end, the suggestions gathered from every angle of the public temperament, were analyzed, adapted where necessary, so that 'Mickey' possesses now the universal appeal—a picture which will interest everyone, everywhere."

Further announcements regarding the exact date upon which "Mickey" will be shown to the public are expected shortly. In the meantime it is understood that exhibitors are awaiting the picture with much interest.

New Interest in Melodrama —Tourneur

The war has brought about a renewed interest in melodramatic plays in the opinion of Maurice Tourneur, who is now at the head of his own producing company.

"Melodrama is a play of exciting action," said Mr. Tourneur. "Incidents that seemed impossible a year ago are now not only possible, but happening every day.

"The production which I am now filming is an instance in point. 'Sporting Life,' the Drury Lane melodrama, was brought to America on September 26, 1918, the war with Spain ending four days later. I credit a great deal of its phenomenal popularity to the vogue of melodrama following in the steps of war.

"Melodrama has come to mean an artificial form of highly colored drama because the stage has been unable to present big action adequately. Train wrecks, midair combats between biplanes and great battlefield struggles, cannot be presented within the narrow limits of a stage. The screen can do all this. I look upon the film to put melodrama into its proper place."

United Theatres Adopt Snappy Slogan

Eastern representatives of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., have taken as their slogan, "A Working Quota by August." At a meeting of the Eastern representatives at the New York offices, last week, President Berst said:

"The wide-awake exhibitor likes to feel that he can go where he likes to buy what he likes. Under present conditions he finds such freedom expensive. But going where he likes in company with two thousand other exhibitors, he goes with the conviction that he is going to get what he likes and at a price to his liking."

"Censorship Reflected Abroad"—Cromelin

PAUL H. CROMLIN, Inter-Ocean, in the following pertinent remarks concerning the censorship question and the effect that the action taken by American censors, has upon the foreign market, touches upon a question that has received little if no consideration from American exhibitors.

"American exhibitors do not realize that their combatting of unjust censorship here is reflected in the foreign picture field said Mr. Cromelin, 'Recently a very unpopular American censor was deposed and it will result in no end of good abroad. There is not a surplus of censorship in foreign countries today, and what censors there are seem to be very fair. But just as the foreign film buyer looks to America for picture styles, the foreign picture censor looks to American censorship field for points. And they have been noting the growth of the censor-autocrat.

"Conversation with foreign buyers indicated to me that the American idea of censor-autocrat was due for foreign trial. So high are we regarded in film matters thta whatever is good enough for America is good enough for a foreign country—if it had to do with pictures. If the censor-autocrat was good enough for us— ! Well, it had to come, said the foreign buyers. And now they are sending with glee to their home offices copies of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS telling of the defeat of the autocrat. You may leave it to the men on the spot to get this good news before the proper authorities. The fall of the autocrat will sharp an effect on the foreign censorship situation, therefore, as on the local one, and I congratulate the forces who have brought it about.'

Mr. Cromelin stated that with the acquisition of the "Fulco" accessories, a new Inter-Ocean division had been formed entitled "Department of carbons and supplies." Eugene H. Kaufman, who placed the Speer carbon so successfully in foreign markets, has been made manager of this department. The sale of 100,000 Speer carbons to Australia is announced by Mr. Kaufman. Gus Schlesinger, of the sales department, placed "The Victim," featuring Robert T. Haines, in Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador last week, and Black Diamond and Vim Comedies in Australia. Leon Schlesinger, of the Cinema Distributing Corporation, handling Inter-Ocean's domestic business sold "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for Western Canada, to Jules Levine of Winnepeg.

Doings in Gaumont Camp

Ten-Reel Serial Points to Success—Important Events Shown in Gaumont News and Graphic

GAUMONT'S new ten-reel serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," which will be in the hands of the independent buyers for the summer season, has blazed a trail which opens to a successful run throughout the country, according to reports coming from the Gaumont studios in Flushing.

"When the hero is in deadly peril, when there is seemingly no way in which he can escape; and then — does escape by a most surprising, but wonderfully clever trick, the spectators are apt to sit up and take notice," said an official of the company. "And this is why," he continued, "that Gaumont feels assured of the success of this serial."

"The Hand of Vengeance" will be released through the medium of the independent exchanges. It is announced that territory has already been disposed of on the serial, and that the country will be covered before the end of this month.

The current issue of the two independent news reels, the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic are up-to-the-minute. No. 11 of Gaumont Graphic shows as fully as it was possible to cover the latest activities of submarines. The type of U-boat which sank several sailing vessels and a few steamships off our coast, and the type of airplanes and dirigibles, which are patroling the coast in search of these U-boats, are shown very clearly. Also, many of the survivors, the officers and sailors who rescued them, and boats and wreckage from the lost ships.

In this same issue is a picture of a new submarine which has been added to the French Navy to combat the German U-boats, and, in No. 12 of the Gaumont News, the 1918 class of naval officers just graduated from the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis. The Red Cross advertises that it needs immediately 25,000 graduate nurses for army and navy hospitals here and abroad.

Other subjects in this issue show the French class of 1919, who have just answered their country's call to the colors, the artistic manner in which Parisians protect their windows from breaking during airplane raids and bombardment by long range guns; the opening of the 1918 bathing season at Atlantic City, the testing by the Secretary of War and other officials of a new 5-ton artillery caterpillar tractor, and a concrete launch.

No. 12 of the Gaumont News, issued four days after the Gaumont Graphic, pictures scenes on the Picardy and Italian battle fronts. A steamship recently sunk by the German U-boats near the Atlantic coast is also shown in this number.

Oversight Brings Fine to Exhibitor

Mrs. Ella Woolson, proprietor of the Gem theatre, 1844 Queen Street, West Toronto, was fined $100 and costs by a Toronto magistrate recently. The convictioi was made on the charge that four electric lights were allowed to burn in the theatre, which was not necessary for the safety of the building, while business was suspended.

Chadwick Brings Good Reports from West

I. E. CHADWICK, under whose manangement the Rialto-De Luxe Productions have been successfully launched on the market, returned last week from a trip through the Middle West, and reports that business is booming and that everything looks bright for the future of the Rialto-De Luxe product. His main purpose, in making the trip, was to close contracts with the local managers of the George Kleine System, which distributing organization is handling the marketing of Rialto-De Luxe's first production, "The Unchastened Woman," featuring Grace Valentine. The George Kleine System will handle the marketing of all future De Luxe productions, it is announced.

"It is the purpose of the Rialto-De Luxe to establish firmly a higher quality of pictures under its trade mark," said Mr. Chadwick, "and it certainly looks as though this were a reality as well as an aim, with the encouraging reports accounting for the reception given 'The Unchastened Woman,' by the exhibitors. This production has more than achieved its purpose," continued Mr. Chadwick. "It is now up to us to keep up the good record established. Only recognized plays of merit or the 'best sellers' will be found in our output."

Clifford Company Enlarging Activities

ACTIVITIES around the Clifford studios, Los Angeles, has taken the aspect of scenes around a munitions factory, according to an announcement coming from the W. H. Clifford Photoplays Company. In addition to the Shorty Hamilton series of comedies, the Clifford Company has commenced work on another series with a popular comedian featured. The name of the star is not announced.

Mr. Clifford has also started the wheels moving which will result in an independent feature, titled "The Black Boomerang," which he says is an answer to Griffith's "The Clansman." The struggles of the Black Race from the time they left Africa as captives to their emancipation in America, are to be the principal moments in this production.

The Shorty Hamilton series of five-reel features are meeting with big success, according to Mr. Clifford. The first of the series have been shown for review and the critics have given them good notices. "The Clifford Company is gradually enlarging its activities," said Mr. Clifford, "and we expect to have things humming around our studio for months to come."

"Bright and Early" Is Billy West's Latest King-Bee Comedy

Vance Working on First Ince Attraction

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE, whose engagement by the Ince-Sawyer-Lubin combine as production analyst for the Ralph Ince Film Attractions, was announced in last week's issue of the NEWS, is now at work on the first script from which Director Ince will reproduce the first production of this company. Mr. Vance's "Lone Wolf" and "False Faces" are popular works of fiction. He is one of our best contemporary writers.

In discussing his plans, Mr. Vance said: "During a career of screen direction extending over a period of twelve years, it has been always my sole ambition to become associated in a production venture such as the one constituted by the recent formation of the company which will offer a series of melodramatic features bearing the title 'Ralph Ince Film Attractions.' I feel that the opportunities for the achievement of remarkable results offered through my association with Messrs. Sawyer, Lubin and Ince will gratify the earnest desire which I possess to make 'out of the ordinary' pictures."

Mr. Vance is no stranger to the motion picture patron. He wrote the first successful motion picture serial, "The Trey of Hearts," produced by Universal, and is responsible for Vitagraph's "Secret Kingdom," and "Patria," produced by Pathe.

Masterpiece Reports Indicate Good Business

Leon Netter announces that Louis Geiger is now representing the Masterpiece Film Attractions, in the northern section of Ohio. Mr. Geiger reports that I. Lipson, prominent exhibitor in Ohio, has booked "Carmen of the Klondike" for his theatres in Cincinnati, Columbus and Louisville. George P. Jacobs, manager of the Cincinnati branch of Masterpiece, writes that "The Garden of Allah," which opened at the Lyric Theatre, there, last week, was received by crowded houses.

"The Motion Is Seconded"

By Pierre V. R. Key

There is a signpost on the motion-picture roadway that is good to read. It has taken some time to letter it, but it is finished now. The substance of this lettering, in which the entire trade is vitally concerned, is that "service-advertising for the exhibitor means bread and butter for the producer and the distributor."

THE NEWS has harped on this subject for months. Mr. Johnston has written convincingly about it, and his arguments have not been without their effect. A few far-sighted persons, venturing along suggested lines of advertising, have put over their particular propositions with a bang. Quite a number of wakeful individuals, who refuse to be myopic when they see a good thing another fellow has thought of which can be harnessed to their own carts, have acted accordingly. In a word: they have suddenly discovered that the copy that "pulls" with the exhibitor is the copy that hits him between the eyes with information the exhibitor seeks.

Simple, isn't it? Yet the simple things are oftenest the slowest in coming to the surface.

Now, then, let us take this "service-advertising" matter. Its function, primarily, is to satisfy the chap who wants to be satisfied. In place of the usual page-ad, phrased with the longest adjectives in the dictionary, the constructive distributor is beginning to utilize something different.

And this is the way he goes about it.

"I've got a picture," says this distributor to himself. "What is there in it that is my biggest selling point? If I were to go personally to an exhibitor what would I dig out of that picture, to hold up before his eyes as an element so strong that he would cry: 'That's the kind of a picture I want; I'll book it for so many days.'"

Having argued with himself in this fashion, the distributor finally discovers the element he seeks. With that he builds, using it as the foundation for his copy. He gives typographical prominence to that element (possibly pictorial prominence, too). And supplementing it with other facts of importance about the picture which the exhibitor wants to know, the distributor finally finishes his advertising copy.

If it is a good piece of product, simply phrased and clear, and well arranged in type with fitting use of white space to set it off agreeably to the eye, this is what happens:

First: The ad arrests the attention of the exhibitor.

Second: Its one big element of appeal arouses the desire of the exhibitor to book the picture.

Third: Specifying the facts which inform the exhibitor, it enables him to know precisely how apparently valuable to him that picture is likely to be—and the work of the salesman is more than half done.

This is what we may truthfully term "service-advertising." It is that because it performs for the exhibitor an actual service. Containing the milk in the cocoanut of that particular picture it enables an exhibitor to judge, at once, as to whether he can or cannot show the picture in its present state.

It might be designated as the distributor's "show-down." And inasmuch as the show-down must ultimately come, it would appear sound judgment to make it at the outset of the selling campaign. For such procedure, in the long run, will secure for the distributor the respect and confidence of the exhibitor—which is what is needed, because upon that all successful business is based.

July Brings Five Vitagraph Blue Ribbons

FIVE Blue Ribbon features, picturized from books, are scheduled for the month of July by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company. The Blue Ribbon program for the month, according to the announcement of Mr. Smith, will be as follows:

July 1—"Tangled Lives," featuring Harry Morey with Betty Blythe. Written by James Oliver Curwood, directed by Paul Scardon.

July 8—"One Thousand Dollars," featuring Edward Earle, Agnes Ayres, and Florence Deshon. Written by O. Henry, directed by Kenneth Webb.

July 15—"Love Watches," featuring Corinne Griffith. Written by R. De Flers and G. Caillavet. Directed by Frederic A. Thomson.

July 22—"To The Highest Bidder," featuring Alice Joyce. Written by Florence Morse Kingsley. Directed by Tom Terriss.

July 29—"A Gentleman's Agreement," featuring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman. Written by Wallace Irwin. Directed by David Smith.

"Tangled Lives," in which Mr. Morey will appear, is described as a high class drama by James Oliver Curwood.

"A Gentleman's Agreement," with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman in the feature roles, marks the advent of Wallace Irwin to the ranks of Vitagraph's literary geniuses, and under the handling of David Smith, who produced "Baree, The Son of Kazan," the story should make a powerful screen play, according to Vitagraph.

Seiter to Direct Jester Comedian

Reports from exchanges handling the fifth Jester Comedy release, "It's a Great Life," featuring Twede-Dan, indicate a record business on this number. William Steiner, in making this announcement, also stated that William A. Seiter had been engaged to direct Twede-Dan in his fun-making.

News Notes from Canada

Canadian Exchanges Perfect Organization

THE eastern portion of Canada is witnessing the formation of a strong Exchange Managers' association. The exchange men in the Canadian west have had a splendid interlocking organization in practically all the various Western Canada cities in which exchanges are located, but the eastern part of Canada has never had any real live associations of this nature until recently.

The exchangemen of Toronto got together a few months ago and banded together for their mutual protection, with the result that exhibitors who formerly looked upon film contracts as mere "scraps of paper" have altered their viewpoint.

The movement was so successful from the exchange angle that last week a deputation of exchangemen from Toronto Exchange Men's association were appointed to visit Montreal and show the Montreal exchangemen the good that has been accomplished in Ontario within recent weeks.

As a result a strong Exchange Managers' association was formed in Montreal last week, with J. P. O'Loghlin, general manager of the Metro Picture Service, Ltd., as the first president.

Immediately upon the formation of the Montreal association the exhibitors of the maritime provinces decided to also join in the Dominion-wide movement, and banded themselves together a few days ago into a body to be known as the Exchange Managers' Protective Association of the Maritime Provinces. The following officers were elected: President, H. H. MacArthur of the Regal Films, Ltd.; vice-president, George H. Margetts of the Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd.; secretary-treasurer, R. Romney of the Vitagraph V. L. S. E., Inc.; legal adviser, T. P. Regan.

These recent organizations now give a splendid and aggressive Dominion-wide body of exchangemen, and is the first time in the history of the Canadian film business that this movement has been successfully accomplished. It has been the dream of the exchanges in Canada to have such an association, and it now appears as if this dream was about to be realized.

Gaumont Weeklies Contain Big News Items

THE current issues of the Gaumont News and Graphic, the only independent news reels, carry the news of the world in motion pictures, semi-weekly, to every quarter of the United States and Canada. The Gaumont News is issued every Tuesday, and the Gaumont Graphic every Friday.

The important subjects in the Gaumont Graphic No. 10, released but reecntly, show the launching of the "Agawam," the first "fabricated" ship; the big Red Cross drive for the second war fund of $100,000,000, which our people nearly doubled; memorial services all over the country on Decoration Day; the way in which the American Red Cross is aiding war sufferers in Europe; and the negro who broke the world's record for ship-riveting, contests in which are expected to speed up ship construction for the Allies.

No. 11 of the Gaumont News, released Tuesday, June 4, contains more than a dozen news subjects, pertaining not only to the war but to other topics of general interest. Of primary importance is the 100-mile Harkness Handicap at Sheepshead Bay. Other interesting topics show the champion gas-masks girls of New York, who were entertained at a theatre as a reward for their speedy work in making these necessary life-savers; the visit of the King of Roumania and the French Minister of Munitions to the battle-front; the monster thrift festival at the Polo Grounds in New York City; activities of our soldiers and ship-builders on both coasts; and the war work of the women in England and the United States. One subject shows how the Mission Indians of Southern California are working for the Red Cross.

Bailie Injects Life Into Ontario League

New life is being instilled into the Motion picture Protective Association of Ontario, by the newly-elected president, W. A. Bailie, who is making a strenuous effort, in conjunction with the other officials, to revive the association, which has laid dormant for the past year, and used to fight the evils that are existing and threatening Ontario exhibitors.

Much good in the way of injecting action into the body has already been accomplished by President Bailie, who, within the past week, has visited every exhibitor in the city of Toronto personally, and written to all other out-of-town exhibitors. Every exhibitor in Toronto, with but one exception, has been enrolled with fully-paid-in membership. The out-of-town exhibitors are also falling into line, and it looks as if the association would become a very active one this year.

Seen and Heard in Canada

A special screening of the series, "The Boy Scouts to the Rescue," made under the supervision of the English authority on this juvenile movement, Sir Baden-Powell, was given at the Allen theatre in Toronto. The screening was viewed by the leaders of the Boy Scouts, the Girl Guides, and Y. W. C. A. of Toronto.

Leo Devaney, a well known Toronto newspaperman has forsaken newspaper work and succumbed to the lure of motion picture publicity. Mr. Devaney has just accepted a connection with the Fox Film Corporation, Limited, of Canada, and will in the future be connected with the Toronto office in sales and publicity work.

Vincent J. McCabe, Canadian district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, Limited, has returned from a trip to the New York offices of Fox.

C. H. Pierce, connected with the publicity department of Paramount in New York, was spending a week in Toronto in connection with advertising and publicity plans of the Famous Players exchange in Toronto.

Two former members of the Independent Film Supply Company, Montreal, have enlisted for the front. They are S. Stanfield, who has joined the tank battalion, and H. Decker, who has gone to St. John, N. B. to join the Siege Battery.

Gilmour Armstrong of St. John, N. B., associated with Mr. Spencer, was in Montreal last week. Mr. Armstrong has been run down in health, and has been staying for some months at Saranac Lake, where he rapidly regained his health.

The Imperial theatre of Montreal continues to make a hit with the children's matinees every Saturday morning, in spite of a hitch now and then. This theatre had "The Blue Bird" scheduled for last Saturday. The film, however, did not arrive in time, and at the last moment "Rich Man, Poor Man," with Marguerite Clark, was substituted. The children seemed quite satisfied.

The J. T. Malome Film Service of Montreal, released Helen Gardener's "Cleopatra," at the Tivoli theatre recently.

The Victoria theatre, Three Rivers, Que., was destroyed by fire in the big blaze that struck the town last week. Insurance covers a greater portion of the loss.

Don McRae has been appointed manager of the Empire theatre at Quebec.

O. Thuot of the Thuotoscope has opened a new theatre under the same name in St. Johns, the old one having been burned down.

Peter Labraico, an efficient employe of the Toronto office of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, will get on the inside of the King's uniform in a few days, and contribute his aid in Democracy's fight against the Upcurled Mustache.

The Maisonneuve theatre of Montreal has changed management. Mr. Lebeau has left and the management has been taken over by Mr. Rochon.

"Kaiser" Draws Well in Montreal

The Midway theatre, Montreal, had a Lenten record during the showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," although this was second run in Montreal. The Midway was forced to call the police to quiet the mob which was clamoring for admission.

Max Fleischer, of the Bray Studios, Introduces a New Figure on the Cartoon Screen

AVALANCHE FEATURE OF FIRST BURLINGHAM SCENIC

An incident more thrilling than any ever staged, because an actual occurrence and one in which a distance of two feet would have meant death to five men, is promised by Mr. Frederick Burlingham in the first of his remarkable pictures of mountain-climbing in Switzerland. Mr. Burlingham is known throughout Europe alike for his achievements in this line, and for the fine pictures he has in every instance brought back as a record of the feat. His "Descent into the Crater of Vesuvius" created an extraordinary impression when shown on the foreign screen and equally popular were his films showing the difficult ascent of the Matterhorn.

Of the thrilling adventure which took place on the Blumisalp, one of the famous ice peaks in the Bernese Oberland, Mr. Burlingham gives the following interest account:

"I left Kandersteg with five of the best guides in the Oberland, and succeeded after great difficulty in cinematographing the ascent to the summit. This is the first and only moving picture record of the Blumisalp ice climb.

"On arrival near the summit the whole top was found to be a huge cornice overhanging several metres. Behind was the steep ice slope just ascended while on the other three sides were frightful precipices. I determined, however, to cinematograph the actual arrival of the expedition at the summit, and after installing the camera and tripod I sent the guides to reconnoitre the extent of the cornice. Suddenly, as I began taking pictures of this delicate operation, the whole top of the mountain caved in, dropping Over three thousand feet into the Kanderfirn mists below. The cornice broke away within a few inches of where the guides were climbing.

"Had the guides advanced two feet more on the cornice, which looked perfectly safe, the whole caravan would have been lost."

NON - CANTEEN WORKERS, PLEASE NOTICE!

Still another industry for women! And one that can be engaged in by young girls under the pleasantest and most healthful conditions.

It is that of bee-keeping, illustrated by Mr. Ditmars in his current Educational Films release. The girls study the actions of the bees as they swarm about the hives, receive instructions from a veteran bee-keeper, and are soon seen handling the bees and removing the filled combs without the slightest fear.

There is an amusing picture of the bees attacking an invading caterpillar, but without result. The insect simply rolls up tight in his furry coat and is impervious to stings.

WHY? MR. LA CAVA

So excellent is the fooling, so bright and wholesome the humor of the Katzenjammers that we regret their fine record of clean farce-comedy should be spoiled by a picture whose fun depends largely on suggestion essentially vulgar. The intended marriage of the Captain and Katrinka is the present occasion for interference on the part of "der twins," an interference that causes the Captain extreme and mortifying bodily discomfort, and poor Katrinka prostrating humiliation. Needless to state, the marriage is not consummated.

Please, Mr. La Cava, let us enjoy our fun without the annoying sense of having to see that from which we would turn in actual life.

Paramount Plans Great Array of Shorts

During the coming season, beginning September 1, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation plans to release 156 short subjects. This arrangement will give each week in the year to two reel comedy, a Paramount-Bray Pictograph and a Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture. The comedies will come from the studios of Mack Sennett, Fatty Arbuckle and James Montgomery Flagg, these three famous producers of popular motion picture fun.

Mack Sennett will produce twenty-six comedies for the year, one being released every other week. The Roscoe Arbuckle organization will stage ten Paramount-Arbuckle comedies and Jack Eton, sixteen James Montgomery Flagg comedies, making a total of twenty-six, which will be released to alternate with the Paramount-Mack Sennett subjects.

Regarding this policy, Walter E. Greene said: "This combination of pictures, from the Mack Sennett, 'Fatty' Arbuckle and James Montgomery Flagg studios is a remarkable collection of funmakers, and marks the first time that such a bountiful supply of super-comedies have ever been available under one trademark. It solves for the Paramount exhibitor the perplexing question covering the comedy situation in a most satisfactory manner and gives him what are conceded by all to be the best subjects of this character produced in America, which means the world, for these pictures are also first in popularity in foreign countries."

VARIETY KEYNOTE OF SCREEN MAGAZINE

The current "Universal Screen Magazine" has rather a long list of subjects this week, some of which will interest and please, while one or two of the others may give offense to those whose sensibilities in certain lines are oversensitive.

The making of peanut butter is briefly treated, having reference only to that part of the industry which takes place in the factory.

Pictures showing the great scale on which shad fishing in Chesapeake Bay is carried on give opportunity for a patriotic appeal to save the meat by using a larger quantity of sea food.

A necessary warning to careless pleasure seekers is carried in the pictures illustrating how uncertain a thing is the canoe and how easily life may be lost from a failure to observe precautions against rocking the boat.

A pleasant interlude is furnished by our friend the squirrel in extreme infancy. The rat-like little creature drinks from a medicine dropper till he is strong and big enough for "regular food," when his innate friendliness appears.

The lesson of thrift in self-denial in war time is driven home by a "screen poster" written by Charlotte Wharton Ayers. But if we may offer a suggestion to Miss Ayers, would it not be better for the selfish woman to buy one cheap hat, and so enable the little milliner to earn an honest living while contributing her bit to the cause? Patriotism is too cheaply purchased by those whose purse is fat.

The picture upon which we ourselves looked with an unaffected aversion, and which consequently caused us to question the wisdom of its inclusion, shows plant insects in various stages of development. There is to us something peculiarly unpleasant in grubs and lice, and the eggs of a parasite growing on the back of another insect. It would be interesting to hear from exhibitors as to how their patrons received such pictures, valuable and interesting as they undoubtedly are.

AFTER THE FIRE, THE FLOOD

When the Germans found that the British forces were approaching dangerously near St. Quentin they flooded the district in addition to going through their usual rite of pillage and devastation. But that did not in the least interfere with the advance of the men from England and India. The latest of the British Bulwarks pictures shows the engineers damming a too-swift stream and clearing away wreckage. Cavalry and motors advance through a shallow but broad and rapid flood. Very much to the front and extremely picturesque with turbans and long lances is a regiment of Indian lancers receiving word that they are needed at a certain part of the field and setting off at a long canter.

The work of the Huns is seen in pictures of a ruined sugar refinery and of tombs uncovered and dispoiled. Per contra, there is the wreckage of a German airplane, so well smashed that it is but a heap of scrap iron.

SHORT SUBJECTS WELL PRESENTED WIN APPLAUSE

Short subjects held the place of honor at a recent performance of the New York Strand, and in each case won more applause than the feature, pleasing as that was.

The Outing-Chester scenics seem to increase in popularity with each showing. The great beauty of the scenes, the frequently exciting action, when a dangerous rapid or perpendicular mountain wall is to be negotiated, and the clever titling combine to give these pictures unique distinction.

The Paramount-Bray Pictograph contributed two subjects, one illustrating the new "Liberty Hospitals" and incorporated in the Animated Weekly; the other an exceedingly funny Bobby Bumps cartoon. Each received applause at the end.

Doubtless some of the applause accorded Mr. Bakker at the conclusion of his talk on "Capturing a Mountain Lion" was for the bold hunter himself, but his remarkable pictures, some taken from the top of a ninety-foot tree, deserved and probably would have received it without the help of his presence.

AN ARTIST'S MODEL FROM ARABIA

Pictures that loan themselves admirably to the screen are those of Professor Egdirettu and his group of horses and dogs, posed for the current Bray Pictograph. With the professor and a beautiful young woman who appears to admirable advantage as Joan of Arc, the four setters and a wonderful Arab horse assume poses that are held with remarkable steadiness. It is said that the horse has a posing record of one hour and twenty minutes.

Goodrich Dirt, whom we last saw installed as king of the cannibals, is now discovering the price he pays for the crown. The "King's Harem—Keep Out" is a sad disillusionment. Diversion is found, however, in a hunting expedition carried out in a fordcar mounted with field mortars. True, the hippo swallows the cannon balls and asks for more, but the elephant proves a gamier proposition. Between him and a real cannibal king there is a "whirlwind finish."

The business of doing fine embroidery for the trade is shown, and there are some pleasing pictures of luxurious out-of-door swimming pools where safety and privacy are elegantly combined.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

George M. Cohan Evolutes from a Bartender to an Evangelist In "Hit-the-Trail Holliday," a New Artcraft Production

Lois Meredith, who delights in comedy, is thoroughly enjoying playing the lead opposite Jack Barrymore in the screen version of Willie Collier's stage success, "On the Quiet." Miss Meredith has already been photographed in a diver's costume, supposedly some few miles under the sea.

Edith Storey is coming East to spend the summer with her mother at her beautiful country home on the Hudson, and is scheduled to appear in several Metro features to be produced on this coast. She has just finished "As the Sun Went Down."

Mabel Normand gets some tangible expression of appreciation from Japan almost every week. This week it is a fan, whose panels are decorated with scenes from "Dodging a Million" and "The Floor Below," done in quaintest Nipponese style.

It is not surprising to learn that Mae Marsh's favorite book is the "Rubaiyat," as it is preeminently the book of youth. Nor is it surprising to hear that on her recent trip to Buffalo, Elbert Hubbard, son of the famous Roycrofter, selected a beautifully bound copy of this particular book as a memento of her visit to his colony.

Instead of adopting a regiment in this country, Evelyn Greeley has concentrated on three Belgian soldiers out of a number who recently crossed this country on their way back to Belgium from Russia, where they were sent two years ago.

Frank Currier's career on the stage and screen would make a splendid story. He has played with the most famous men and women of both. The secret of his remarkable perfection in character portrayal is revealed in his admission that he has learned something from every one with whom he has played. Whether as the gypsy husband and father in "Toys of Fate," or as the American business man in "To Hell With the Kaiser," or as any one of his numerous other characterizations, he never strikes a false note.

Louis de Klade and Ben Silvey, two popular members of the Norma Talmadge studio force, were among the first dinner guests at Joseph Schenck's new summer home on Long Island.

Norma Talmadge, having completed "The Safety Curtain," is resting at her new country home at Bayside, Long Island.

Ann Little, of the dusky locks, was much perturbed at the prospect of wearing a blonde wig to impersonate a Swedish girl in "The Source," a new Wallace Reid picture. She finally persuaded the director by trying on various specimens that she would be more convincing, au naturel. In this same picture Reid, admittedly a film Adonis, appears for a scene or two as the "bummest of bums."

Sally Crute is another proof that the blonde vamp is coming in this season. As such she appeared in "When Men Betray," and will soon appear in "L'Occident."

Jack McLean, who was such a splendid juvenile in "Moral Suicide," will have a chance to do it again in Mme. Nazimova's new picture, "L'Occident."

Frederick Truesdall, now playing opposite Emily Stevens in "A Man's World," is best known on the legitimate stage for his creation of the leading role in "Daddy Long Legs."

Arthur Donaldson as a quaint old French curate in "Find the Woman," the new Alice Joyce picture, is a far cry from Arthur Donaldson as a ruthless officer of the Imperial German Army in "Over the Top." The skill with which he impersonates such radically different types is only more proof of his place among the few big character men in the film world.

Frederick Truesdell Recently Engaged as Leading Man In a New Metro Picture With Emily Stevens

It has been reported that Irene Castle has volunteered to go to France to amuse our soldiers over there, and has insisted upon paying her own expenses and those of her attendants.

George Irving, with Mabel Normand and supporting company, is spending a week in West Virginia taking exteriors for Miss Normand's next Goldwyn release.

Lawrence Grant, the newest screen Kaiser, and Baby Ivy Ward created quite a sensation walking down Broadway last week. Grant wore his "To Hell With the Kaiser" uniform, and the little girl her Red Cross costume. She announced to the interested public that she had captured the Kaiser and demanded a reward. Needless to relate she got it.

Jane and Katherine Lee recently appeared at an entertainment given at Bayside, Long Island, for 300 visiting Belgian soldiers. They sang and danced and made speeches, thoroughly proving their right to the title of their newest picture, "Doing Their Bit."

"Her Price," the new Virginia Pearson picture, is said to be based on the real experience of an opera star now before the public. Guessing games always arouse interest.

Beverly Bayne, author of "A Soldier in Her Kitchen," is having to practice what she preached in this timely cook-book of hers. As each new cook leaves to enter some Government factory, Miss Bayne takes her place for the time being, and has gained so many new ideas that she is contemplating a new edition of her little booklet.

Frances Marion, the scenario writer responsible for most of Mary Pickford's latest pictures, has signed a year's contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley" and "How Could You, Jean," are two of her successes.

Harry Lee and Albert Basset, made up as "niggers" for "Uncle Tom's Cabin," were refused admittance to a restaurant in Bath, Maine, where scenes for the Eliza crossing the Delaware part were taken. Not until Director Dawley appeared and explained in detail were they allowed to enter. And this in the North, too.

The West Coast Famous Players Studios boast a bootblack stand which is the official gossip exchange for all the players from stars to extras.

Cecil de Mille has a particular studio costume without which he feels like Samson shorn of his locks. It consists of puttees, soft collared shirt, and tweeds. In it he directs such splendid productions as "New Wives for Old," without it he feels that the charm would be broken.

Sensations in studios are very rare, but Mary Pickford is said to have created one when she appeared for the first time in her colonel's uniform, resplendent from the golden eagles on her shoulders to the spurs on her polished boots.

Harley Knowles, who left World with William Brady to become director general of all the latter's independent productions, has started on the second of these, "Little Women." The first was "Stolen Orders."

Dorothy Bernard will be welcomed back to the screen as Jo in this picture. Her last screen appearance was in "Les Miserables." Since then she has been touring the country most successfully in "The Man Who Came Back."

Henry Hull, who was the original "Man Who Came Back," plays the leading male role, Laurie, the friend of the family who finally marries one of the sisters.

Lillian Hall is cast as Beth, the youngest sister. She has just finished an ingenue role with Norma Talmadge in "The Safety Curtain."

The wax dolls used for the original stage production of "Baby Mine" are used as Meg's twins in this production. The exteriors for the picture were taken in Concord, Mass., where Louisa Alcott's home still stands.

" Midnight Madness "

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"MIDNIGHT MADNESS" is a mystery picture of real merit, written by Elliott J. Clawson and produced by Rupert Julian, a combination which has been responsible for some of the best Bluebirds as well as the sensational special "The Kaiser." The title was evidently selected only for the sensationalism it possessed in itself, and, while it will probably serve to arouse curiosity, it has little or nothing to do with the action of the photoplay. Mr. Clawson's story opens with a mysterious theft of a valuable collection of jewels. In the dim light there is a fight for possession of the collection by several men. The body of the action concerns the efforts of one Prentice Tiller to regain the jewels from a powerful band of crooks operating between New York and Paris. The mystery is well maintained until the last, and a wealth of exciting incident has been supplied to keep the action going at high speed. There might, perhaps, have been an explanation of greater detail when, at the end, all the threads are gathered together, but nevertheless the conclusion registers satisfactorily as it stands.

Rupert Julian's artistic direction is generally in evidence. The scenes are particularly well lighted. Ruth Clifford, starred, gives an appealing performance and appears to excellent advantage in the closeups, when she has received lighting of the most effective sort. Kenneth Harlan appears in the opposite role, while the supporting cast includes Harry Von Meter, Harry Holden, Louis Willoughby and Claire Du Brey.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

A collection of valuable jewels are stolen from an exhibit. The next day they are in possession of Gertrude Temple (Ruth Clifford), daughter of Simon Temple (Harry Holden), supposedly a respected business man of the city. From his room across the way, Prentice Tiller (Kenneth Harlan) watches Gertrude place the valuables behind a picture. Visiting her room he makes to steal the jewels, but the arrival of Molitor (Harry Von Meter), a notorious crook, changes his course. Later Molitor using Gertrude as an innocent tool manages to make Tiller captive in a dungeon. He escapes, however, and follows the gang to Paris, where they give the jewels to Chevat (Louis Willoughby), another notorious crook leader. Temple manages to snatch the jewels from him by a trick, later returning them to their rightful owner. It developes that he is a private detective working apart from the police, while Gertrude is revealed as the innocent catspaw of the gang.

" The Voice of Destiny "

(Diando-Pathe—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

BABY MARIE OSBORNE is set down midst a murder mystery in "The Voice of Destiny," her latest picture, which seems rather hard on her. She is ever a minor pivot in the action and the tedious passages of the mechanical murder story afford her no place to romp about and entertain with her childish pranks. Not that it is not a good idea to give the child variety in her pictures, but here she is given few opportunities, while the story itself is commonplace, obvious and ineffective as the reels pass.

The little star is supported by Jack Connolly, Morris Foster, Ellen Cassity and Howard Crampton. The little dark skinned chap only puts in an appearance in a minor series of scenes in the first reel, but then with humorous results.

William Bertram directed from a scenario prepared by Clara S. Beranger.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Little Marie Lind (Baby Marie Osborne) lives with her father (Morris Foster) and uncle, Charles (Jack Connolly). Charles has been stricken blind, and Lind mismanages their business affairs. Charles answers a few business letters at home, after Marie has read them to him by using the dictaphone. In the bottom of the instrument he keeps a collection of valuable jewels. Marie discovers them there, and tells the servants of them, including Briggs (Howard Crampton), the butler. One late afternoon the brothers quarrel, and Lind lays violent hands on Charles. They are separated, however. That night Charles is found murdered, the jewels gone. Lind is arrested, but escapes. Eventually, however, he is obliged to give himself up to the police. Detective observe Briggs coming from a pawn shop. They give chase and fire, mortally wounding him. On his deathbed Briggs refuses to talk. Eleanor (Ellen Cassity), who loves Lind, and Marie, sure that Lind is innocent of the murder, are desperate until the little girl happens to turn on the dictaphone used by Charles just before his death. On this is recorded Charles' voice making his will. He breaks off in the middle of one sentence with, "Is that you, Briggs?" and then the shot is heard. This record is played over and over again by Briggs' bedside until he confesses.

" How Could You, Jean? "

MARY PICKFORD'S "Stella Maris" showed her at her acting best. And there have been many others that earned her nothing but praise. Generally speaking, her pictures have steadily increased in merit and while her public seems certainly glad to see her in such productions as "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," which is typical of the majority she has appeared in, and does not demand more like the Locke picturization, it seems reasonably certain that it will be dissatisfied with "How Could You, Jean?" In general getup this, her latest offering, resembles an elongated Mack Sennett farce, handled by a director acquainted with the mechanics and gags of knockabout comedy and tempering his scenes by beautiful backgrounds, camera work of the rarest kind, and a certain show of artistry in the more pensive moments of the picture.

It appears that the novel, by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd, upon which the picture is based, offered Frances Marion, the scenarioist, opportunities that excluded all else but the element of farce. Certainly we never expected to see the dainty Mary attacked from the rear by a rushing ram and propelled over a cow pasture like a shot. This will register as a laugh, no doubt, but to our mind it immediately suggested Ben Turpin and Chester Conklin. Miss Pickford is a clever comedienne and needs not the undignified assistance of a battering ram. The same impression is conveyed when she gazes about a messy kitchen and sees herself cleaning it up in a jiffy by means of the slow turning of the camera man. There are kindred touches of minor importance that seem out of place in a Mary Pickford picture.

We do not mean to imply that "How Could You, Jean?" is by any means a dreary or boresome affair. When Jean, the aristocrat, enters the kitchen as cook, becomes acquainted with an awkward Swedish farm hand, is teased by the kiddies from next door and when she discovers herself falling in love with Ted, whom she believes of the same ilk as the Swede, there are chances for comedy of the tried and true Pickford type. Miss Marion's subtitles also assist the picture in no small measure. But after all something possessed with a slight trace of drama, something a little more polite is expected when we see Miss Pickford's name on the screen. And it is expected because she has given us something dramatic and politely comical in the past. It is on this type of picture that she has made her reputation.

Casson Ferguson is the juvenile in the case. Larry Peyton's Oscar, the Swede, is funny. Herbert Standing, Spottiswoode Aitken and Fanny Midgley appear in important character parts, while others are Zazu Pitts, Mabelle Harvey and Lucille Ward. The direction is to the credit of William D. Taylor, with the photography the work of Charles Rosher.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jean (Mary Pickford), reared in the lap of luxury, suddenly discovers herself penniless and forced to search for employment. As the only thing she has ever done is cooking, she applies at an agency. Decently dressed she discovers that no position awaits her, so she feigns a Swedish accent, dresses outrageously, and lands a job as cook for Rufus Bonner (Spottiswode Aitkeen), and his wife (Fanny Midgley), a pair of bug specialists. One day she is seen at work by Ted Burton (Casson Ferguson), a young man of wealth, and shortly afterward he is ensconced on the farm as hired man, having rid the place of Oscar (Larry Peyton), the Swede, by a bribe. Then romance starts and runs its course to the accompaniment of great apprehension on the part of each party as to the sort of mate the other will make. Ted's father (Herbert Standing) anxious to see what his son is up to comes to board at the house next door, and, after a look at Jean, discovers that Ted has his own rare judgment. The climax is brought on when Burton is trapped in a barn, set afire when he grappled with a character quite foreign to the story. But Burton is rescued, and so is the cow and every one is happy.

"The Soap Girl"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

MARTIN JUSTICE understands Gladys Leslie better than any other director who has yet guided her through the scenes of a five-reel picture. He brings out her strong points and keeps her from romping all over the studio stage and carrying to the point of exaggeration, the kid stuff. At all events he has turned out the best picture in which she has appeared for the Vitagraph Company, "The Soap Girl," adapted from Louis Allen Browne's story.

Louis Allen Browne penned a good comedy drama — one with a purpose. "It pays to advertise" is the dominating theme and this fact is brought out with all the force of an advertising man's most convincing argument. The title is the least attractive point about the picture. It doesn't convey to the public half the real worth of the excellent comedy-drama that it reveals when shown on the screen.

It has snap to its action — not the action that you would expect to see in a thriller, but the brand of action that you will note in a well-staged comedy-drama with every scene advancing the plot a step further and bringing to light nice bits of comedy.

Frank Norcross, as the genial soap manufacturer, comes in for his share of the screen and takes a second bow every time. Ed. Burns, a new leading man in Vitagraph stock, screens like a winner, shows ability and gives a good account of Richard Van Ruhl. Julia Swayne Gordon is back with one of her excellent characterizations of the grand dame. Harold Forshay is given a pretty good part and puts it over. Ed Favor knows the butler angle from A to Z. The photography is good; has been accentuated to the proper degree by good lighting and the interior sets look like a million dollars. There are only a few exterior shots — these few hit the mark.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sanford (Frank Norcross) is a wealthy soap manufacturer. His daughter, Marjorie (Gladys Leslie), has not reached the top rung of the society ladder, and he and his advertising man get together and plan to put her there, regardless of the expense. Mrs. Van Ruhl (Julia Swayne Gordon), leader of society, advertises a benefit for charity, and Sanford sends her a check for a few thousand for the cause. Mrs. Van Ruhl, who has heretofore ignored the Sanfords because they were too commercial and crude, acknowledges Sandford's gift, and requests that his daughter, Marjorie, assist her in receiving the night of the benefit.

Richard Van Tuhl (Ed. Burns), Mrs. Van Tuhl's nephew, is in love with Marjorie. Soon after Mrs. Van Tuhl's request that Marjorie serve on her Reception Committee, there appears in the current magazines an advertisement of Sanford Soap which shows a girl in a bathtub holding a bar of Sanford's Soap. The picture resembles Marjorie. This is only a beginner of Sanford's advertising campaign to place his daughter on the top rung. Mrs. Van Tuhl withdraws her invitation, and the families break relations. Richard breaks with his aunt, and there is trouble all around.

Marjorie gets an idea for revenge, and with her brother, Jimmie (Harold Foshay), they plan to "get back" at Mrs. Van Tuhl. Mrs. Van Tuhl's ancestors had been manufacturers of a famous booze, and this fact is brought out strongly in an advertising campaign. Mrs. Van Tuhl learns of it, and, fearing that she will be ruined socially, she goes to the Sanford home and difference are patched up, and Marjorie and Richard become man and wife.

"Station Content"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"STATION CONTENT" is a picture telling the story of a wife who deserts her husband after the death of her baby because of loneliness, and who after taking a fling at the stage and listening to the brazen offer of a millionaire, returns to her husband. The climax of the drama is exceptionally well handled, is thrilling and keeps the spectator in high suspense. The story has reached a point where the young wife is able to save an express train from plunging through a burning trestle by riding to meet it on a motor-driven one-man car. This thrill is staged in a downpour of rain, and it is to the credit of Director Arthur Hoyt that he has gained most realistic and dramatically effective results in these scenes.

The story was written by Catherine Carr and it is one of the best from the pen of this author. The interest is immediately aroused at the start when husband and wife are shown living at a vastly lonely station one one of the south-western railroads. The wife's desertion divides the sympathy equally because the causes and their reaction on the two have been so well handled. The picture gains in interest from this point on and remains fully entertaining until the climax has been passed. Logically evolved scenario was prepared by Charles J. Wilson.

Under Mr. Hoyt's direction, Gloria Swanson, erstwhile one of the animated decorations of the Keystone comedies, shows considerable dramatic ability. She is just a little studied in expression but her performance as Kitty Manning is impelling. (Less make-up next time though, Miss Swanson.) Lee Hill does sympathetic work as her husband while Arthur Millet and Nellie Allen contribute good performances. "Station Content" should be acceptable to any theatre. It possesses a strong appeal and is well done from every angle. Its working title was "The Prodigal Wife," which seems to be much better than its present one, all things considered.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The life in the desolate railway station where her husband is telegraph operator palls on Kitty Manning (Gloria Swanson) and after the death of her baby she accepts an offer from the manager of a cheap musical show to join the chorus. Jim Manning (Lee Hill) is hurt to the quick at her desertion but ambition carries him on to success in the railroad company. Kitty comes under the eye of Stephen Morton (Arthur Millet), manager of the railroad. He is married to a society woman (Nellie Allen) who loves only his money. Morton tells Kitty the truth about himself and makes her a frank offer. She bids him wait. She is travelling to the city on the railroad and misses connection at a little station, the replica of the one where Jim was once employed. The operator is seriously sick, yet sticks to his post. His wife is happy with him and her child, and here in the company of these two Kitty discovers the happiness that lies in self-sacrifice and a mutual ambition of husband and wife. Her knowledge of telegraphy leads her to offer her services while the operator rests. One night a heavy rain storm breaks. The trestle not far from the station is struck by lightning. The oncoming express is in danger of being wrecked. Kitty saves the situation by riding to meet it on a railroad tricycle. On the train are her husband and Morton who is coming for his answer. Kitty flies into Jim's arms while Morton retires, his lesson learned.

"Patriotism"

(Paralta Plays—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

PARALTA can rest assured that Director Raymond West has reproduced for screen presentation, a drama that spells Patriotism. It has been titled "Patriotism" for obvious reasons and the one who is not reached by the propaganda which this offering instills, is not in sympathy with the Allied cause.

But the whole has been fashioned with such an obvious intention to supply a patriotic picture that the few tense moments which crop up by virtue of the thought involved rather than the skill of the authors in weaving their plot, are lost in conflict with the stronger wave of opposition raised by the "convenient co-incidents" material which is developed thereafter and forming a connecting link between the strong and the weak.

"Patriotism" is a propaganda picture of the first water and was conceived by a fine sense of patriotism but with little or no conception of proper dramatic construction or material. Those who can forget the story and look only to the patriotism that is displayed and the excellent production that it has been given, will pronounce this fine entertainment, and it is, judging it solely from this standpoint.

A German spy who has been caught in the act, does not, as a rule, have his freedom. And one who is detected in an act of as serious a nature as the one in which Dr. Hyde is detected, is shot for treason. But Dr. Hyde is apparently given his liberty by the judges who presided over his trial in "Patriotism," for after it is all over, he suddenly appears at the home of the heroine to extend his apologies for his wrong doing.

Miss Barriscale is fine until she attempts the "kittenish" stuff and then her work falls below par. Charles Gunn makes a good hero. Joseph J. Dowling does well in a small character part. Herschel Mayall, Arthur Allardt, Mary Jane Irving, Ida Lewis and Clifford Alexander have minor roles. The photography is excellent, the night scenes have been staged with all realism and one shot showing the Scottish Highlanders marching, makes a lasting impression. "Patriotism" is interpreted by a strong cast of players, is excellent propaganda material, but from a dramatic standpoint falls far below anything that Miss Barriscale has done for Paralta. Julian Louis Lamothe did the scenario and Clyde De Vinna presided at the camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Robin Cameron (Bessie Barriscale) is a nurse in a hospital in Scotland for convalescent soldiers. Dr. Hyde (Arthur Allardt), of the hospital staff, is in love with Robin. Sidney Garson (Herschel Mayall), a wealthy man who had a short time prior to the war bought a large estate in Scotland, gives freely to all benefits and provides each local boy who leaves for the front with a safety razor set.

Sir Angus Cameron (Joseph J. Dowling), Robin's uncle, prominent English official, arrives with his official staff to investigate the report of a German submarine base nearby. John Hamilton (Charles Gunn), an American who had been rescued from a wreck at sea, and who is recovering from injuries received, accidentally stumbles on to evidence which indicates that Sir Angus Cameron's suspicions were well founded. While walking, one night, through the grounds surrounding the hospital, he discovers a man on the dock signalling to some one out at sea. Hamilton surprises him, but is himself surprised and beaten unconscious. Later Dr. Hyde accuses him of being the one who was doing the signalling.

Robin, by accident, learns that suspicious characters are in the habit of frequenting an old forsaken house near the hospital. She investigates and finds the den of the German spies. She informs her uncle, who raids the place and learns that Garson is the man, and that Dr. Hyde is his accomplice. Hamilton is proved innocent. Later he learns that America has entered the war, and that he has been commissioned a captain.

"Good Night, Paul"

(Select—Five Reels)

"GOOD NIGHT, PAUL," Constance Talmadge's latest Select picture, is based on the moderately amusing stage farce of the same name, in which the principal complication is the conventional one created by the young bachelor who borrows his friend's wife in order to loosen the strings of his uncle's fat purse. The farcical possibilities lying in this situation have long since been exhausted by the picture producer and the best that the authors of "Good Night, Paul" could do was to repeat on the best of them. The result is a farce with some spontaneous moments, but largely rather obvious and at times tedious. With the initial complication firmly planted, the best to be done was to derive what humor possible from its various dependent situations by quick action, relying on the ability and appreciation of the cast to realize it. From the projecting room viewpoint it appears that the action could have been keyed at a faster tempo in practically all the picture's phases.

Miss Talmadge's youth and beauty and the whole-hearted spirit with which she enters into the part of Matilda Landers registers her to good advantage in every scene. Harrison Ford catches the spirit of the play better than any of the supporting cast and puts the part of Paul over nicely. Norman Kerry, as the distressed husband, and John Steppling as the rich uncle, play with sincerity, but seem ill at ease in their attempts to get in the atmosphere of the story. Beatrice Van and Rosita Marstini perform adequately.

The production furnished the picture by Walter Edwards is tasteful and includes a fashion shop display of lingerie on pretty models that with its quite revealing lighting will surely claim attention. Julia Crawford Ivers made the adaptation from the play by Rolan Oliver and Charles Dickson. The photographic work is that of James C. Van Trees.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Richard Landers (Norman Kerry) and Paul Boudeaux (Harrison Ford), business partners, search vainly for fifty thousand dollars to keep them from going to the wall. Paul's uncle arrives in town unexpectedly and calls at the Landers' home. Paul occupies lodgings with Richard and his wife, Matilda (Constance Talmadge). Uncle Batiste (John Steppling) has long desired Paul to marry to perpetuate his name. Matilda, realizing that if Uncle is pleased they will easily be able to get the fifty thousand, announces herself as Paul's wife. There follow a series of amusing complications, resulting from the deception. A night is safely passed without a mishap, but in the morning Uncle discovers Paul draped on the parlor couch and straightway has suspicions. He soon discovers Richard sliding down the water pipe from Matilda's room and his agitation is great. The deception is finally told him. But the partners get their fifty thousand any way because Paul marries his uncle's nurse (Beatrice Van) while Uncle, not to be outdone by youth, takes unto himself a modiste (Rosita Marstini) who has whisked in and out of the plot a couple of times.

"We Should Worry"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

FOX'S Lee Kids have a bright future before them and it is not so very far off, judging from the work they have done in their late picture. The finished product is particularly noticeable in "We Should Worry," their last work before the Fox camera. They have the entire field to themselves and for youngsters who have no competition, they work like little veterans to make their every move just a bit better than their imaginary opponents.

Jane is the more accomplished of the two. Catherine seems to have arrived at the age when youngsters first begin to realize that they are noticed and are conscious of their actions. Jane, on the contrary, exemplifies the true meaning implied by the title of the late picture, "We Should Worry"—and she doesn't. The cameraman, the director, his staff and the supporting cast might be a minus quantity, so far as little Jane's actions would indicate. She sees no one, is conscious of nothing excepting the fact that she is having a real good time and enjoying the capers which she is called upon to cut, as thoroughly as the youngster playing in Central Park or the little waif from the East Side, who dodges push-carts, automobiles and trucks.

Keenan Buel handles these youngsters with nice discretion. He never lets his faith in these little kids run away with his better judgment. In other words, he does not deceive himself by attempting to put them through a scene which requires the worldly knowledge which only a grown-up could express. He keeps them in the nursery; in surroundings with which they are acquainted. When they are called upon to step into the parlor, they are not made to act with the decorum of the hostess at an afternoon tea, but are allowed to "cut-up" and commit any sort of devilment which may enter their heads, whether it be the spilling of a jardiniere of water into the musician's saxophone, as little Jane does in "We Should Worry," or hanging on to her auntie's dress in simple embarrassment.

Director Buel wrote their latest vehicle and he has played his little charges up to the limit. He gives them the centre of the stage for their big-little bit and then sends them to the background to bring up his more seasoned reserves. But never does he let an audience forget that Jane and Catherine are among those present.

When two little youngsters of the ages of Jane and Catherine Lee can hold your attention as against such striking beauties as Ruby De Remer, they have to possess something beside the qualification, "just kids." Every caper they cut in their late picture spells the title, "We Should Worry." When the camera catches them in "the dark and lonely cellar" it catches them in a happy mood, for they have the time of their lives. When it catches them dressed "in their Sunday best" it catches them still happy but a trifle disturbed, because their faces are cleaned and their dresses tidy. But always they are "just kids," having a good time and bringing sunshine to the hearts of all who watch them.

Mr. Buel hasn't written a perfect script—but why worry—the Lee Kids don't. Ruby De Remer, William Pike, Henry Clive, Edward Sturgis, Tammany Young, Charles Craig, George Humbert, Henry Hallam, Sarah McVicker and Ann Egleston render good support. With a few exceptions, the sub-titles are a happy addition to an excellent picture for the Baby Grands to display their cleverness.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jane and Catherine live with their pretty aunt, Miss Ashton (Ruby De Remer). Auntie is wealthy and has a variety of suitors from the bank president to the minister. She favors Jack Fenton (William Pike) until Percival Gilpatrick (Henry Clive) a confidence-man and all-round gentleman burglar arrives to look over the prospects of striking an acquaintance with the bank's vault. His two confederates, Mike (Edward Sturgis) and Bill (Tammany Young) trail along to do the "dirty" work. Gilpatrick does not work fast enough to suit Mike and Bill so they kidnap Jane and Catherine and hold them for ransom. They are taken to a deserted cellar but their captors are obliged to free them because they refuse to take their capture seriously and make life miserable for them.

Gilpatrick promises Miss Ashton that he will restore her little charges and he stages a rescue act which places him in high favor with Miss Ashton. Jack is forgotten for the time. Finally Gilpatrick decides to move his forces against the bank's vault and while he is working on the job is detected by Jack. The secret of his mission is determined and his capture by the authorities effected. Jack and Miss Ashton decide to unite forces. During the course of events Jane and Catherine have the time of their young lives.

"A Woman of Redemption"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"A WOMAN OF REDEMPTION" is a rather mechanical melodrama based on that version of the eternal triangle in which the villain plots and plots and plots to get the girl, while the rather weak and wishy-washy hero stands aside and just lets things take their natural course, apparently hoping that everything will come out all right in the end. It fails to act as a stimulant to one's senses largely because the principal situation is manufactured so deliberately and in this way putting a certain end to all element of suspense. Besides the plot runs over conventional ground from beginning to end, and while conventionality of itself alone never stands in the way of a picture's success, it is quite fatal when combined with poor treatment.

The most enjoyable thing in connection with "A Woman of Redemption" is its background. The exterior scenes, where taken in the mountains of North Carolina, and this section of the country, offered innumerable views of great beauty in which to set this action. Here are rugged hills, pretty brooks and forests that for the most part appear unexplored. This garden spot of the South made an ideal locale for the story, and had the scenario been as rich in dramatic quality as the scenes are in natural beauty, the five reels would have been wholly enjoyable from every standpoint.

June Elvidge appears to advantage in the title role. John Bowers is an adequate hero with little to do, while Albert Hart is a very melodramatic villain. The production, furnished by Travers Vale, seems rather artificial at times. The groupings are not natural. The players must always reach the foreground to register an expression. The camera is, after all, set on a tripod that can be moved.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jacques Romaine (Charles Martin) is overseer of the Southern forests owned by the Stanton Company. The foreman of the mill, Boss McDaniels (Albert Hart), a squaw-man, desires to marry Romaine's daughter, Gene (June Elvidge), and when he voices a mild objection, threatens to have him discharged. McDaniel's squaw (Marie Pagano) resents his desertion of her. In the city Stanton (Alec Shannon) decides to see what the forests will do to his prodigal son, Tim (John Bowers), and so takes him South. Tim, however, finds the saloon and dance hall interesting. His father in despair starts out on a trip with him to the mountains, and leaves him alone the first night. The next morning a note informs Tim to make good or never come back. It falls to Gene to rescue Tim from the forest in which he has lost himself. In the meantime Jacques and Boss quarrel at the former's cabin. Jacques is killed, and Boss buries him. On Gene's return he informs her that her father died of heart disease, and that his last wish was for her to marry him. A bill acquired by Tim at the dance hall is rendered to Stanton, Sr., who refuses to pay it, disowning his son. Boss seizes this opportunity to rifle the Stanton safe, throwing suspicion on Tim. While Boss is urging his suit on Gene, he is stabbed in the back by the squaw. This murder is also laid to Tim. The men of the camp are about to string him up, when Gene holds them off at the point of a gun and rescues him. Soon afterward the squaw is caught and her confession secured. So Gene and Tim ride away to begin a new life free from pursuit.

It's very evident she desires to enter a department store, so Jack volunteers to guard the carriage and baby until her return. "Thank you," chirps Mary, and she's gone. Shortly baby cries and cries lustily so Jack tries to find the mother. From floor to floor he goes, only to miss her by elevator each time. Tiring of his job, he proceeds to the nursery to check the youngster just as a colored woman is also checking "a puffucly good cullud chile," and a freak of a puff of wind gives Jack the wrong check, and herein lies the mischief.

"The Heart of a Girl"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE light treatment accorded this love story together with its background of social life in the capital of the nation, suffices to make it entertaining even more than the rather forced thread of melodrama which is introduced toward the end. The story was written by Mrs. Maraverne Thompson, the scenario, in turn, being prepared by George Proctor. Between them, these two have managed to supply a diverting portion of light humor which makes the early reels pass enjoyably. The meeting of Betty and Kent, the courtship and its various details have been treated in the best possible manner.

"The Heart of a Girl" brings Barbara Castleton her first real starring part in World pictures. Her characterization of Betty, the headstrong young lady of Washington society, is a real delight. Irving Cummings in the opposite role of the young Congressman, Kent, plays with skill. Good support is contributed by a large cast which includes Charles Wellesley, Kate Lester, Ricca Allen, W. T. Carleton and Joseph Smiley.

The melodramatic line of action introduced by Oakland's betrayal of his friends is rather unconvincing but serves its purpose inasmuch as it establishes the usual opportunities for both hero and heroine to show their love for one another by self-sacrifice. The production given the subject by John Adolphi is creditable in most respects. Sol Polito was at the camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Betty Lansing (Barbara Castleton), Washington society girl, meets Representative Kent (Irving Cummings), one of the younger members of the House. Romance starts. Kent leaves Washington for his State capital, where plans are being formed by his followers to nominate him for the governor's seat. He returns to Washington to see Betty, and in the evening attends one of the whist parties given by her mother (Kate Lester). The winnings of all these parties are donated to charity. That night Kent proposes and is accepted by Betty. A young bank cashier, having lost considerably, accuses Betty's mother of conducting a gambling house. Kent pleads with Betty to abolish the games. She resents his interference and bids him go. Oakland (Charles Wellesley), a wealthy suitor for Betty's hand, resents Kent's success, and proceeds to inform his rivals in the State that he is in love with the daughter of a gambling house mistress. This lie, circulated by his enemies, nearly proves Kent's undoing, and at the State convention he is getting few, if any, votes, owing to his refusal to speak up and clear the matter, when Betty appears, and tells the truth, exposing Oakland as a liar. And so all ends well.

She immediately informs Jack of the palmist's prognostications, and is reassured when Jack reiterates his professions of undying love. He then visits the same palmist—with the same result, and the beach seems to be littered with blondes, who snatch Jack away from Mary, who is a decided brunette. She therefore steals away, rigs up in a fetch wig of blondish hue and outblondes them all, only to show Jack where he has been deceived. It's a good single reeler and certainly taught Jack a lesson.

WILLIAM RUSSELL is afforded ample opportunity to display his fistic as well as his histrionic capabilities in this latest release by his own company. "Up Romance Road" is well named for it shows Russell from a youngster, always hankering after the romantic and despising the commonplace. He is ably assisted by Charlotte Burton, and between them, they pull off an abduction to fool the girl's father, which well nigh proves disastrous. They are both of the petted and pampered class, and a life of luxury palls upon him.

It is a cleverly selected cast, although it must be said that John Burton as Samuel Thorne is inclined to overact. Carl Stockdale as Count Eckstrom gives a good account of himself.

The direction of Henry King is fine; the continuity is good and the photography all that could be desired.

There's not the slightest doubt that the picture will be well received, wherever thrills and suspense and Russell's almost superhuman strength and agility are looked forward to, for the whole five reels abound in thrill after thrill.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Gregory Thorne (William Russell) and Marta Millbanke (Charlotte Burton) are engaged, but are of the opinion that a conventional engagement and marriage is too stupid to be observed, so decide upon an elopement. Gregory secures the services of four second-story men to effect an abduction, at the same time that an emissary of a foreign Government decides to abduct Marta to hold as hostage, until her father, who is a shipper, shall promise to cease his shipments to the Allies.

In the darkness Gregory's men and Eckstrom's men encounter and complications ensue. The arrival of the police adds to the excitement. Marta, mistaking Eckstrom's men for Gregory's, allows herself to be carried off, Gregory follows in his racing car. Arrived at Eckstrom's rendezvous, Gregory and Marta are made prisoners, and held as hostages. Eckstrom writes an anonymous note, threatening to blow up the Thorne and Milbanke warehouse next morning unless they stop sending supplies to Europe.

Gregory outwits Eckstrom by an ingenious ruse, saves Marta from death, and at the point of a revolver compels Eckstrom to go with him to the warehouse and reveal the hiding place of the infernal machine.

"SOME JOB" in which Fay Tincher appears in the leading role, far surpasses her first comedy released by World Film. She plays the part of a waitress in a small-town hotel who discovers a very nice captain in a nearby camp on which to shower her affections. Incidentally she succeeds in rounding up some German spies. The humor introduced is both of the polite variety which introduces funny situations and of the gag variety in which Miss Tincher exercises her fine art of being tough. The better part of the picture is clever in both respects. A particularly funny touch is scored when the captain, after fleeing mess because of more beans, gets a dish of them planted in front of him when he sits down at the hotel table. There are touches that equal this, throughout the two reels, another registering when the captain gives the order "column right" and then, forgetting his men for the girl, comes to find them marching out in the ocean. The spy stuff is done seriously and Miss Tincher also does a dramatic scene when she bids the captain goodbye.

THIS is one of the smartest burlesques that has come from the Mack Sennett fun factory, particularly if one be acquainted with that type of western melodrama in which the hero is the prize athlete as well. Ford Sterling, as the matinee idol who comes to the picture house to watch his latest thriller, burlesques the character broadly and should get many a laugh. That skill which placed him in the front rank of comedians several years ago has not deserted him. There is plenty of comedy derived from flashes of the various males in the audience who disagree with the idol's opinion of himself. Comedy is also extracted from the one-man orchestra, operated by Ben Turpin. There is some wonderful trick work, both in the picture within the picture and in the latter scenes which take place outside the theatre. Sterling leaps to the back of his horse over a space of at least ten yards, while his rescue of Jack Cooper from a rope stretched between two high buildings in Los Angeles is a wonderful trick thriller. Louise Fazenda and Marvel Rea are also in the cast. Edward Cline's direction is excellent.

"His Enemy, the Law"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

SOME original twists, good treatment and two exceedingly good performances by Jack Richardson lend no mean interest to "His Enemy, the Law." Despite the fact that the action is broken in the middle by the skip of years which allows the children to grow up, the interest remains continued throughout, owing to the fact that the two stories are closely related. Lillian Ducey has provided a very human set of characters in her story, and, being human in character and in deeds, they are always the center of attention. Mr. Richardson, first as the miner and outlaw, and second as his son, an unusually clever lawyer who baffles judge after judge and jury after jury by his successful defense of criminals, is always successful in registering his character, while he never fails to make clear a point.

The supporting cast is led by Irene Hunt, who also carries a dual role to advantage. The support comprises Jack Livingston, Graham Pette, Dorothy Hagar, Walt Whitman and May Giraci. Raymond Wells directed from a scenario prepared by George E. Jenks. He has instilled a remarkably realistic atmosphere into the production and has presented the story in a dramatic manner.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Captain Jack (Jack Richardson) prospecting in the West, learns that Sarah Catherwood (Irene Hunt) for whom he has been preparing a home has married another man in order to give her feeble father (Walt Whitman) the comforts he needs. Heart-broken, Jack turns to his neighbor (Dorothy Hagar) for consolation and in time, marries her. She proves to be anything but a helpful mate, however, and after five years he leaves her, taking with him his boy. He eventually becomes leader of a notorious band of bandits and only meets death after a long career of robbery.

Years later his son (Jack Richardson), now a brilliant young lawyer, turns all his attentions to defeating the law which caused the death of his father. He wins case after case with the blackest of criminals as his clients. One day Sally Randolph (Irene Hunt), Sarah's daughter comes to him asking him to plead the case of her fiance (Jack Livingston) who has committed murder. By a trick, he secures his acquittal. Jack's servant, seeing that his master is in love with Sally, forces the acquitted man to make a clean breast of his guilt before Sally. "A Desert Wooing"

THAT fertile field laid before the picture author when he brings the strong willed husband, popularly known as the "cave man," and the headstrong young lady together, has been delightfully plowed by J. G. Hawks, in "A Desert Wooing," Enid Bennett's fourth Paramount-Ince production. The struggle between these two is laid in the broad, open places of the West, and some most attractive settings in a ranch house which lend it an ideal atmosphere. Mr. Hawks has developed his story with a generous supply of comedy and human interest, and has injected into it a vein of melodrama sufficient to keep it entertaining from beginning to end.

The picture has that usual fine Ince production which allows nothing but the best in the way of properties and camera-work. Jerome Storm, in his capacity of director, has managed the details of the picturization with excellent taste. He has derived the full benefit from the humorous side of the story and has handled the melodramatic high lights in the most satisfactory manner.

Miss Bennett fits herself to the role of the headstrong society girl who has made up her mind never to love her husband and plays with attractive grace and charm. Jack Holt, as the rich husband from the West, handles the part to great advantage. He seems to make himself at home in any sort of role the casting director may allot him. Donald MacDonald is a melodramatic villain, while John P. Lockney, Charles Spere and Elinor Hancock make up a good supporting cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Avice (Enid Bennett), daughter of a decadent rich family, realizes that her mother (Elinor Hancock) has put her on the marriage market and resigns herself to her fate. So she marries Masters (Jack Holt), a rich westerner, still believing herself in love with Dr. Van Fleet (Donald MacDonald) one of society's lounge lizards. He is a member of the party which Masters invites to his ranch house after the wedding. One night he breaks into Avice's room but much to his surprise she repulses him. He is roundly beaten up by Masters, is driven off the ranch and takes refuge with a Mexican. After the departure of the rest of the guests, Masters sets himself to the task of crushing the proud spirit of Avice but with little success. His best friend, Keno Clark (John P. Lockney) and Avice's brother (Charles Spere), thinking to assist in the happy ending, try to arouse Avice's jealousy by hinting of another woman in the life of Masters. This, however, fails to have the desired effect, for Avice announces her intention of returning East and never setting eyes on her husband again. Van Fleet, the villain, in revenge, shoots Masters, wounding him severely and then Avice awakes to her real state of mind. At the point of a gun she forces the doctor to dress her husband's wound and when he recovers there is complete happiness.

"Hell Bent"

(Harry Carey Special-Universal—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

FROM the Moving Picture Weekly we take the following display lines regarding "Hell Bent": The Desert Mirage, The Great Thirst, The White Mantle of Death, The Jewel in the Claw of Hills, The Unfenced West, The Single-Handed Rescue, From the Kitchen to the Dance Hall, Fast Riding, Straight Shooting, etc. All of which, combined, adequately describe this western number featuring Harry Carey. And from this it may be gleaned that "Hell Bent" is a fine old-fashioned western melodrama, that is in story essentials. It is, however, remotely removed from this type of picture when its production is considered. Jack Ford, who had charge of the details of it, has done his work in first-class fashion. Consequently all the thrills, including the holdups, the chases, the fights and last but not least the terrific sandstorm take on a realism that is altogether successful in snatching the spectator from his chair and setting him down in the midst of the great wastes of the West. Jack Ford, while working under the direction of his brother, Francis, in the production of Universal serials and other melodramas, must have assimilated all the older man's tactics and then endeavored to beat him at his own game. But however the two compare it remains plain that there are few directors who put such a sustained punch in their pictures as does this Mr. Ford.

Harry Carey, again in his familiar role of Cheyenne Harry, does constantly vigorous work and receives capable support from Neva Gerber, Duke Lee, Vester Pegg and Joseph Harris. There is a plentiful supply of comedy in the first part of the picture. The photography is wonderful.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cheyenne Harry (Harry Carey), fleeing from a little shooting scrape, takes up in the town of Rawhide where he becomes fast friends with Cimmaron Bill (Duke Lee). He becomes acquainted with Bess Thurston who dances in the dance hall of the town, but who, unlike the rest in the place, is decent. Her brother Jack (Vester Pegg), in need of money, joins forces with an outlaw, Beau (Joseph Harris), and partakes in a raid on the town. Harry has the opportunity to arrest Beau but lets him go because this would implicate Jack. Bess calls him a coward for this as she is unaware of her brother's perfidy. But Beau vows to get even for Harry's interference and kidnaps Bess, taking her to his retreat in the mountains. Harry gives pursuit, but is captured by the outlaw band, and, a prisoner, is obliged to watch Beau ride off with Bess, in the direction of the Rio Grande. He escapes finally and follows. On the desert he fights with Beau. Two of the horses go down. Both men are wounded but Harry puts Bess on the only remaining horse and bids her hurry to the nearest town. He and Beau then set off on foot. In a sandstorm Beau loses his life. Harry is rescued by Bill and returns to Bess.

"A Little Sister of Everybody"

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

CAPITAL versus Labor is the theme of "A Little Sister of Everybody" in which Bessie Love is featured. The little star appears to advantage in the title role, and the picture takes on interest because of her presence and due to the fact that the supporting cast performs capably, whereas the story itself has little to commend it. Written by William Addison Lathrop it tells again of the young employer who joins the ranks of his workers incognito, of the poor girl's love for him and of the manner in which she unwittingly saves his life when she learns that a crazy anarchist plans making an attempt on the life of the factory owner. This is conventional and, while well treated, has little to lift it from the level of the ordinary.

George Fisher is seen in the role opposite Miss Love, and Joseph J. Dowling as her father, and Hector Sarno as the anarchist complete the cast. The support, including the large mob scenes, is realistic with the exception of the actor who plays the old roue. This character is useless in the story and is played so poorly that it is laughable. The picture was produced by the Anderson-Brunton company under the direction of Robert Thornby.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Celeste Janvier (Bessie Love) lives with her grandfather, Nicholas Marinoff (Joseph J. Dowling), a radical thinker who realizes that social improvements can not be established through violence. She is known as "The Little Sister of Everybody" because of her friendship with all she meets. Hugh Travers (George Fisher), succeeding his father as head of a large factory, goes incognito among the workers to learn their troubles. He discovers that the discontent fostered by Marask (Hector Sarno) an anarchist, has no real foundation. Celeste and Travers meet and grow to greatly admire one another. Unknown to her he secures her a position as secretary to a social worker, one of his friends. Marask, entertaining a fanatical hatred for Travers ,plans to kill him. Celeste learns of this and gives chase to Travers' home where, to her surprise, she discovers the rich man and the poor worker she loves are one and the same man. Marask is penitent when he discovers that Travers is not the idler he thought him and as he and old Marinoff go over plans for improving the factory Travers and Celeste retire to a secluded corner of the room.

"Say! Young Fellow"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS shows the way for an ambitious young man to succeed in the world in "Say! Young Fellow," his latest Artcraft picture, written and produced under the direction of Joseph Henaberry. He has combined a whole lot of sane reasoning with a very fine Fairbanks comedy stunt-melodrama. In fact there is more logic in the five reels than there is in a dozen International Correspondence School advertisements. The Young Fellow has a Hunch, which is nothing but a miniature Fairbanks, who, at the various crises in the story when the Young Fellow's head is being turned by flattery and deception, comes forth, perches on his shoulder and preaches advice in his ear. This is nothing more nor less than the picturization of an alert mind, fully able to cope with any situation that presents itself. In his other pictures, too, Fairbanks is the same type of Young Fellow, but this reproduction of his reasoning faculties gives a touch of originality to his present character.

Mr. Henaberry has shown himself as exceptionally well versed in turning out the typical Fairbanks picture, typical, of course, being taken to mean the best. The action is swift as it should be, when the star climbs the side of a house it is as a result of a sudden inspiration apparently and is as spontaneous as his smile. When the melodramatic climax arrives with the Young Fellow defeating a couple of dozen thugs, half of whom look tougher than Bull Montana, the action and suspense soar to heights. It is a regular old-fashioned climax too. Unless the "papers" are rushed to the meeting "before ten," the "villain will triumph" and the old folks will be turned out in "the cruel, cruel world."

All this melodramatic finale, however, is carefully camouflaged under the marvelous stunts and the fine production given it. So it comes around to the statement with which one usually concludes a review of a Fairbanks picture; that it is a delight in every way. There is a romance played spiritedly on the feminine end as well with Marjorie Daw furnishing the loveliness. Frank Campeau is the villain again, while Edythe Chapman and James Neill are the old folks.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The Young Fellow (Douglas Fairbanks), through his college days, joins the New York "Herald" as a reporter. His first assignment is to interview the Villain (Frank Campeau), who has just cleaned up a million in Wall Street. The star man has fallen down on this job, but the Young Fellow succeeds. Subsequently he is sent to the little town of Melford, where, it appears, the Villain is head of a financial circle, attempting to force a group of minority stockholders from a corporation. Unless certain papers are produced at the directors' meeting, the minority holders will lose their investments. So it remains for the Young Fellow to jump right into the middle of the fracas, discover the papers, defeat the schemes of the Villain, and save the day for the minority at the eleventh hour. Besides doing all this he manages to find time for a little romance with The Girl (Marjorie Daw), which makes his triumphs complete.

At Pearl's home Harvey is given medical attention and a nurse is sent for. The Terror kidnaps the nurse and sends one of his tools on to take her place. Pearl is called away. She accidentally discovers what the Terror has done and rushing back to her home, tries the door into Harvey's room. She finds it locked. Inside, the false nurse is about to administer a dose of poison to Harvey.

"The Venus Model"

(Goldwyn—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

MABEL NORMAND has not had a better vehicle than that provided here by Harry Durant in "The Venus Model." This comedy-drama is a veritable delight and gives the star opportunities innumerable in which to exercise her ability as a comedienne. It has long since been established that Miss Normand is familiar with light comedy to the same extent that she is with the knock-about type of farce, yet it remained for Mr. Durant to provide her with a role in which her capabilities along this line could be realized to their fullest measure. As "Happy" Kitty O'Brien, the little girl who brings the decayed dress-making business of John Braddock back to life, and who makes a man of his worthless son, Miss Normand misses none of the many chances offered her. Her expressions are to be watched with the greatest interest, so telling is each one of them.

Mr. Durant's story, connected and sustaining the interest through from beginning to end, can be recognized at its best if each episode is dealt with separately. First Kitty is seen as a sewing machine girl where her only joy is derived from mimicking the foreman who inhales snuff. This serves to get a laugh right at the start. Later, her bathing suit design accepted, she poses with it in a store window and then the orders come rushing in. Next there is an ample amount of comedy created by Kitty's scenes with the youthful Braddock, who comes to the factory looking for his father and who gets a job handed him instead. The scenes about the supper table where the salesman takes Kitty, to discover to his discomfort that her young niece and her "office boy" are uninvited guests, are full of comedy. The manner in which Kitty outwits the blonde who would blackmail her Paul, and the finale of the whole romance puts a pretty finishing touch on a delightful comedy.

Rod La Rocque gives a creditable account of himself as Miss Normand's opposite, and Alec Francis and Alfred Hickman, Edward Elkas and Edward Boulden appear to exceptional advantage in character roles. Una Trevelyn, Nadia Gary and Albert Hackett complete the cast. Clarence Badger deserves great credit for the judgment he has shown in the directing. Never is a comedy value lost.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kitty O'Brien (Mabel Normand) shows a model of a bathing suit to her employer, Braddock (Alec Francis), which she has designed. He accepts it and its success serves to put him on his feet in the business world. He leaves the office for a rest and Kitty remains in charge together with Briggs (Edward Elkas). Braddock's son, Paul (Rod La Rocque), expelled from college, arrives at the factory down and out. Kitty puts him to work. Eventually she discovers who he is. He is bothered by the appearance of Hattie (Una Trevelyn), a lady of questionable character who demands money for the letters she holds, written her by him. Kitty, by a clever trick, manages to trap the woman into a written confession of blackmail and gets the upper hand. When Braddock returns from his rest, he discovers his plant thriving, his son a success, just about in the act of presenting him with a daughter-in-law.

"The Eagle"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

WITH the exception of the climax which is unduly prolonged when the ending is quite obvious, "The Eagle," featuring Monroe Salisbury, is a moderately entertaining picture in which the central figure is one of those good-bad-men who are ready to sacrifice their all for the love of a girl. Director Elmer Clifton has secured some beautiful locations in the heart of the mountains, and these with equally fine camera work serve to give the film added attractiveness. Mr. Salisbury in the role of the bandit whose peculiar mask has earned him the title of the Eagle, gives a highly sustained characterization and has received effective support from Edna Earle as the heroine, and Ward King as the good-for-nothing.

The story was written by Ethel Hill and scenarioized under the joint efforts of Eugene B. Lewis and H. C. Warnack.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Gregory (Monroe Salisbury), because a mining company, operated by a grasping promoter (Alfred Allen) stole his mother's land and caused her death, has ever since taken revenge by robbing the stage of the company's gold, disguised with an eagle's feather as head dress. None suspected Gregory of being a bandit, least of all Lucy (Edna Earle), the girl he loves. Bob (Ward King), Lucy's worthless brother, in need of money, plans to break into the safe of the mining company one night but discovers that the Eagle has been there before. A watchman surprises Bob and the young fellow fires and kills him. He is caught and duly prosecuted, the whole town believing that he is the Eagle. While the trial is in progress, Lucy goes in search of Gregory for his assistance. At his lonely retreat in the mountains, the Eagle lies wounded. From his dress, Lucy learns that he is the bandit. Learning that her brother is in trouble he readily sacrifices himself and makes a clean breast of his activities before the court. Bob is freed. Morning dawns and they make ready to hang Gregory. In the meantime, Bob writes his confession of the murder and kills himself. Lucy discovers the confession, and riding at top speed, comes just in time to save Gregory's life.

"The Girl in His House"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

HAROLD McGRATH'S "The Girl in the House" is better entertainment as revealed between the covers of a book than on the screen. Like all of this author's works it is satiated with romantic fiction with very little fact to bear out the action of his plot. The mystery element which is contained in full measure holds the interest for a couple or three reels and then the audience begins to wonder—not about the mystery but why there isn't more action, more sustaining substance to an otherwise very mysterious romance.

Because of the mystery and the fact that Earle Williams, who has a pretty good following among the picture-going public, "The Girl in His House" will get a good reception. However, those who go to the theatre to be entertained by the story as well as the stars, will not find their ideal of good story telling on the screen.

Earle Williams presents his usual dignified self and carries to good advantage a part that calls for little action and less thought. He has a part which calls for a strong personality to put it over.

Grace Darmond who is seen opposite Mr. Williams, has to smile a little bit, do some pretty posing but very little dramatic acting. She presents a pretty picture. James Abrahams, Harry Lonsdale, Irene Rich and Margaret Allen—all have roles of minor importance. The print shown for review contained some bad spots, due to imperfect printing. The photography, especially that registering action in the open, is of the best.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

James Armitage (Earle Williams), because he has been disappointed in love, leaves his wealth and friends behind and goes into the tropics where he remains six years before again returning to his native town. He had seen an article in a paper which stated that the girl whom he had expected to marry had been widowed. He packed up and returned to his old home.

Here he meets Doris Athelstone (Grace Darmond) who is "the girl in his house." He had left all his property in the hands of his attorney, Samuel Bordman (James Abrahams) and had given him a power of attorney. It developed that Bordman had used the power of attorney given him, indiscreetly. He had given his daughter, whom he had never seen, the house and supplied her with plenty of money.

Armitage sets out to solve the mystery without letting Doris, who is Bordman's daughter, know that he is in reality the owner of the home which she claims. Her father had led her to believe that she was the daughter of an English actor and had sent her a picture of said actor, telling her that it was a picture of her father. Doris and Armitage are deeply in love. Armitage resolves to find her father and starts for Yucatan from where she had received the last letter from her father. Armitage finds him in a hospital at the point of death. He tells him the secret of his refusal to see his daughter. Doris's father dies and Armitage returns to Doris and "the girl in his house" becomes Mrs. Armitage.

"Wild Women and Tame Lions"

(Fox-Lehrman-Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

HENRY LEHRMAN'S late number on the Sunshine bill hits on all four for the course of two reels, and the director had his foot on the accelerator every foot of the way. The "wild women" are not as much in evidence as the "tame lions," but don't be disappointed—the lions will keep you busy. And speaking of lions—these "pets" can look the camera in the eye without winking an eyelash. When it comes to the rough-house stuff, they use all fours and tear around the sets like a runaway engine.

Ethel Tearle and Tom Kennedy are the lions' chief competitors for first place in the running. Miss Tearle might have been reared with a circus, so nonchalantly does she pal with the Sunshine "pets." Tom Kennedy strikes up an acquaintance with a sorrowful-looking elephant, and winds up by taking a dip in the river with said elephant.

The element of action is raised to the nth power in this offering. If you can keep account of the "wild women" and the "tame lions" you should go in for sleight-of-hand work—you're qualified. The Sunshine brand of comedies loses no prestige by offering this one. If you cannot get excitement out of these two reels of action and lions, you will have to take a turn in the trenches or lead the suicide squad over a mile or two of no-man's-land. Fox has a peppery release in "Wild Women and Tame Lions"—plenty of action and good comedy.

The Princess Amusement Company, which now operates the Rialto theatre, Lincoln, has leased the Oliver theatre for a term of fifteen years and will take possession July 1. It is proposed to spend a considerable sum in alterations, decorations and furnishings, with the view of converting it into a modern, up-to-date theatre. August 26 has been set for the reopening date.

NEW YORK

William J. Smith has leased for the Arville Realty Company, and Charles A. Schroeder, the Garden theatre, 742 Fremont avenue, Bronx, including the plot immediately joining, now used as an airdome, to George Sell, for a term of ten years.

Harry Greenman, manager of the New Victoria theatre, Buffalo, entertained more than 1,000 soldiers and sailors, after the regular shows, Saturday night, June 8, the uniform of any branch of the service being the "ticket of admission." Mayor Buck and several city officials attended and the mayor addressed the boys between the features, and at the end of the film bill the Women's Club of the twenty-second ward took charge and served ice cream and cake to the men. And the entertainment was topped off with cigars and cigarettes, donated by the employes of the Victoria. Between the pictures there were vocal selections by Florence Reid.

J. H. Michael, manager of the Academy and Regent theatres, Buffalo, is spending three weeks in Atlantic City, N. J., where he will try and forget the troubles of booking pictures.

Earl L. Crabb, manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, is now running a miniature " Rothacker " in his office. He has installed developing and printing equipment and is showing all the local events in pictures a few hours after they take place. The visit of the " Blue Devils " was the subject shown last week.

PENNSYLVANIA

The entire front of the Colonial theatre, Farrell, is being remodeled, under the direction of Manager Stahl. Ventilating system is being installed which will keep the large auditorium cool all summer. Large $3,000 Seeburg organ will be added.

Samuel Segall has sold the moving picture theatre, 172 feet 11 inches by 72 feet 3 inches, at Fifty-third street and Lansdowne avenue, Philadelphia, to Mark W. Jones, for a nominal sum and a mortgage of $15,500. It is assessed at $25,000.

OKLAHOMA

After three years in the theatrical business in Tulsa, Louis F. Powell has sold the Grand theatre and will retire, at least temporarily, from the show game in Tulsa. The purchaser is Aaron Laskin of Little Rock, Ark., who announces that next season he will conduct the house with special movie productions, musical comedy and the regular road attractions.

Mr. Laskin has had his eyes on Tulsa as an amusement city for some time and believes it is the best show town in the southwest. About a year ago he came here and attempted to buy the Grand but at that time Mr. Powell would not agree to sell. Laskin has theatrical interests in Little Rock and also in Galveston, Texas. The lease held on the Grand building, by Mr. Powell was taken over by the new owner, who states that this summer the building will be greatly improved and everything will be in spick-span condition for the opening next fall.

Mr. Powell has not announced what his plans are for the future but he will probably remain in Tulsa. He came here three years ago from Texas, a novice in the theatrical game, and took hold of the Grand after it had had an indifferent career. He put it on its feet and every season has been a success.

Incandescent Projection

FROM letters received here in our office and from information picked up in the field there is an ever-increasing interest being shown in the incandescent lamp as a light source for projection. This interest is shown by some in the form of an active desire to adopt it at once, whereas many others are skeptical and seem to doubt its merits at its present stage of development.

At the present time the companies themselves do not entirely agree as to just where they stand, though all state that they have something which is good under certain conditions, even without further development. One thing is sure, and that is that it will be detrimental to the cause of the lamp should it be oversold, that is, sold to a theatre when the conditions are such that it cannot possibly be adopted and give the satisfaction which carbons have always given.

When the lamp has once been sold to a theatre and proved to be unsatisfactory because of impossible conditions, it is going to make it just that much harder for the manufacturer to resell the same theatre man a new lamp of a different and more developed type, even though the new product is capable of filling all requirements. This "overselling" not only applies to lamps, but to any known commodity where there is a chance of further development.

One manufacturer states that the incandescent compares very favorably with all alternating current and with direct current up to 30 amperes. This is a general statement which has come to be quoted quite broadly, yet it is not sufficiently specific. The definite qualifications should be made as to A. C. under certain length throws, size of the picture and projection angle. The same should be done with D. C., showing frankly its limitations.

One of the companies has stated that more powerful lamps are being developed which will not take the place of the present lamps, but which will merely enlarge the field of possible installations for the incandescent. With this in view, overselling is dangerous.

The matter of setting down a definite statement of claims should be done by the various companies in connection with a body which has the authority to recommend. It is therefore hoped that at the next meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers the question may be taken up and gone over with great care so that the trade may then be given a full report which will be absolutely authoritative.

An informal gathering has been suggested between the lamp manufacturers, projection machine makers and certain others who are interested. This might not be a bad idea, yet what authority would a gathering of this kind have in the trade? All that could possibly be done would be to lay a groundwork and start ideas which might be good or might not. The place for the work to be done is Cleveland next October, where the next meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is to be held.

That some theatres today can adopt the incandescent lamp as a light source is a fact. It has been proven by actual installations which are making good, yet no theatre man should blindly rush in and spend his money till he knows exactly what his requirements are and what the incandescent lamp can deliver. That certain houses cannot now adopt the equipment and get proper results is likewise true, therefore our warning is for the theatres to buy with care and for the lamp manufacturers not to "oversell."

Patriotic Music

THE question of patriotic music in the theatre has come up for discussion on several occasions with results which may be interesting to the theatre manager.

Some time ago a well known soloist wished to sing the various national anthems in the Rivoli Theatre. I personally took the question up with Mr. S. L. Rothapfel. His reply was that when the show once gets under way he eliminates this class of music entirely. The patrons attend the picture house to be amused and to get their minds off the more serious things of life. At times before the show starts a national anthem of one of the Allies might not be amiss, for it may get the audience in the proper frame of mind for what is coming, but it must be done before the audience is finally settled for the show, otherwise the effect is more detrimental than good.

This was demonstrated not long ago in a small house in one of New York's suburbs where I happened to attend a showing of "My Four Years in Germany." The audience was all keyed up and interested in the action, when suddenly one by one they realized that the Marseillaise was being played. Some arose immediately; others sat still while those about them gradually shut off their view. All were finally on their feet. This did not take long from the point of time, but they were no sooner well on their feet than the action was changed and some modern selection was run in without warning.

The result was obvious—the Marseillaise was not treated with sufficient respect—the audience had been distracted—the thread of the story was lost—many patrons were irritated and the whole thing worked to the decided disadvantage of the picture, theatre and patrons, saying nothing of the national anthem of France.

It all proved that Mr. Rothapfel was right, and any picture man who will give the subject sufficient thought will also agree and act accordingly.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Influence of the Length of Throw on the Brightness of the Projected Picture

FROM elementary considerations it would seem that in projecting a motion picture of given dimensions, with a light source of given brightness, the screen image should have the same brightness whatever its distance from the projector light source, since the light is being spread over the same area in each case.

It is the result of experience, however, that when the throw is in excess of 100 feet (or sometimes less, depending upon local conditions), increased amperage at the light source is necessary to maintain a picture of given size at the same apparent brightness for increasing distances of projection.

The reasons for this necessary increase in amperage, to maintain a projected picture of given dimensions at a given brightness for increasing lengths of throw, are not so readily apparent as are some of the other factors in successful projection, but they are nevertheless capable of simple explanation, if we consider the matter from the proper viewpoint.

In the projection of motion pictures the rays of light passing from the projector, are, in most instances, projected over the heads of the audience, and each person in the audience, during the normal process of breathing, produces warm air currents which rise into the auditorium and therefore cause varying air strata through which the projected beam must pass on its way to the screen. As is also readily apparent, these air streams must carry a myriad of dust particles, through the upper air, and as a result of these air streams and dust particles, the rays of light passing to the screen are diffused to a certain extent, which must naturally result in an actual loss of illumination at the screen, that will obviously increase with the length of the throw. This effect is very materially accentuated in theatres where smoking is permitted.

This atmospheric influence upon the resultant screen illumination will not entirely account for the falling off which is noticed when the throw is increased, but further factors which influence the result are to be found in the arrangements of the projecting machine itself. As is well known, the conventional projector is equipped with condensing lenses of 4½" diameter, the average foci of the condensers in use being 6½" and 7½". Under the conditions existing with the majority of projectors, the crater of the arc lamp is so situated with respect to the rear condenser that there is an appreciable direct loss of light between the two condensers, owing to the angularity of the rays passing through the margins of the rear condenser, a portion of which are refracted at such an angle that they do not pass through the front condenser. If, then, the length of the throw is to be increased, and the picture size still maintained the same, it is necessary to use an objective of greater focal length, and if an objective of greater focal length is placed on the machine, it will be necessary to move the arc crater closer to the rear surface of the existing condenser system, or to replace the condenser system with another of correspondingly increased focal length. Now it can be seen that either of these changes will result in an additional decrease in the light transmitted by the projector optical system.

If the objective is replaced by one of greater focal length, but the condenser system remains the same; then the arc crater must be moved closer to the rear condenser surface in order that the image of the crater (formed by the condenser system) will be located at a point approximating very closely to the optical center of the projection objective, this being a necessary condition for the transmission of the maximum amount of light. When, however, the arc crater is moved too close to the surface of the rear condenser, the light loss at this point is severely increased, since the angle at which the rays fall upon the rear condenser becomes so great that even more of them are unable to pass through the front condenser than in the previous case, while a greater number are also reflected back from the condenser surface, due to their increased angle of incidence.

If, on the other hand, the installation of an objective of greater focal length is also accompanied by the installation of a condenser system of increased focal length, the crater image may be located at the optical center of the objective without necessitating too short a distance between crater and condenser, but in this case there will be a loss of light due to the opposite condition, since, with a longer focus condenser system, the crater will generally be located at such a distance behind the rear condenser surface that the solid angle within which its flux is collected by the system is considerably decreased.

From the foregoing it is easily seen that the increase in amperage required to properly illuminate a picture of given size at throws of increasing length, is due to conditions inherent in the arrangements of the projector optical system, and to other conditions which exist in all motion picture theatres.

The amount of illumination necessary to produce a satisfactorily brilliant screen picture of given size at any throw may be determined from the following empirical rule, which is found to yield serviceable calculations in practice. The rule is:

$$C = 30A + 60D,$$

where C is the horizontal candle-power received from the arc, A

is the area of the screen picture in square feet, and D is the distance (in feet) from the arc to the screen, the result giving the screen intensity required in thousands of candle-power. The required screen intensities for four sizes of screen picture are plotted for various throws in the diagram Fig. 1, where the necessary intensity for any of the various sized pictures represented may be read from the abscissa axis at a point just below the ordinate corresponding to the throw for which the information is required. It is obvious that curves for other sizes of screen pictures may be plotted in the same manner on the diagram, Fig. 1.

To facilitate the estimation of the amount of candle-power given out by the arc, Fig. 2 shows the flux, in thousands of candle-power, developed by an arc lamp at increasing amperages. As Fig. 2 clearly shows, a much greater amperage is required with the A. C. arc than with the D. C. arc, in order to develop a given candle-power. In Fig. 2 the amperage required to produce any screen candle-power (in thousands) called for by the rule represented in Fig. 1, may be read from the position on the ordinate scale corresponding to the abscissa designation of the required candle-power.

Objective Improperly Assembled

Mr. J. B. Anderson, Callender, Iowa, writes as follows:

"I have operated a Powers 6-A machine for over two years and have not had any trouble until just recently.

"We have quite a large picture for the throw and I would like to know how to reduce it, without moving the machine any closer, if this is possible?

"I asked a traveling agent for advice, and he told me to turn the middle lens around. I did the same, but it only made it worse. I tried turning the end lens around but nothing helped. I got things mixed up and it seems that whatever I do there is always a blur in the center or outside of picture.

"I would be pleased if you could advise some remedy to same in your next issue."

Reply: We are surprised to hear of any one who has been operating a motion picture projector for two years, and has learned few, if any, of the most elementary points concerning optical projection, but this appears to be the case with the present correspondent, judging from his letter. We may therefore be permitted, before dealing with his questions, to urge upon him the necessity of considerable study, if he is to become a competent operator and a safe person to put in charge of motion picture apparatus.

There is a well known saying that if a person has no ideas of his own he should be careful from whom he borrows his ideas, and it appears in the present instance that the "traveling agent" consulted by our correspondent also had very little knowledge of motion picture projection. Consequently the correspondent has gotten into a muddle which could never have occurred if he were familiar with his apparatus, and versed in the elements of cine projection.

However, we will endeavor to supply our correspondent with the remedy for his present difficulty, which is undoubtedly due to his having assembled his objective incorrectly after trying to put the suggestions of the "traveling agent" into operation.

The conventional cine objective consists of two components (the front and the rear), but as the rear component is formed of two separable elements (or lenses) there are three separate lenses in all. The front component is a comparatively thick lens, being composed of two glasses cemented together, as can be seen by examining its edge. This should be placed in the lens tube so that when the tube is in its proper position in the projector, the convex (or bulging) surface of this thick front element is directed towards the screen.

Coming now to the back component of the objective, this consists of two separate lenses, one lens being a concavo-convex (one side hollow and the other side bulging outwards), and the other lens being a double convex (both sides bulging outwards but one side having only a slight curvature). The procedure in assembling the back component is as follows: First drop the concavo-convex lens into the back end of the tube (or into the collar holding the back combination if it is removable), being sure that the convex (outward bulging) surface of this lens is towards the front of the objective, or towards the screen when the complete objective is in place in the machine. If the two lenses of the rear component are separated by a ring this is next put behind the concavo-convex element of the rear combination, and finally the double-convex lens is dropped into place so that its most convex (or bulging) surface points towards the front of the objective, or in other words towards the screen when the complete objective is in place in the machine. The components are of course secured in the lens tube by screwing home the rings which are provided to hold them in place. The rule for correctly assembling the conventional type of projection objective may be stated in one sentence as follows: All lens surfaces of greatest convexity should be directed toward the screen when the objective is in place in the projecting machine. We have gone into detail, however, as it is apparent from the correspondent's letter that at the present stage of things he has his objective combinations hopelessly mixed up, and probably could not distinguish between the rear component and the front component in the absence of detailed instructions.

With regard to altering the dimensions of the projected picture without changing the location of the projecting machine, the correspondent is advised that this may be readily accomplished by replacing the objective lens with another of different focal length. As the correspondent desires to make his screen picture smaller he will require an objective of greater focal length, and if he will advise us as to the distance from the objective of his projector to the screen, and also tell us the width of picture which he would like to secure, we will be pleased to let him know what will be the focal length of the objective required to attain the result.

Illumination Units

J. D. Miller, Thompsonville, Conn., inquires: "How do you figure the candlepower of an incandescent lamp, also what is the standard candle-power? What might be the cause of a compound-wound generator refusing to pick up its load even though running mechanically perfect?"

Reply: The candle-power of incandescent lamps is ascertained by comparing them with lamps of known candle-power on a device known as a photometer. All incandescent lamps of commerce have their approximate candle-power marked thereon, although of course the rating given decreases as the period of service of the lamp increases.

The illumination given out in any direction by one standard candle is known as one candle-power, but what is generally required to be known is the illuminating value of the one candle, and the intensity of the illumination at any point which is just one foot from a light source of one candle-power is said to be one foot-candle, while if the light from one candle illuminates a surface one foot square, every point of which is at a distance of one foot from the light source, then the amount of flux falling upon the surface one foot square is known as one lumen. Thus it is seen that if one lumen is utilized to illuminate the surface one foot square, the illumination at any point on that surface will be one foot-candle.

The foregoing statements hold good when the surface illuminated is perpendicular to the direction of propagation of the light, but it is obvious that if the surface which receives the illumination is inclined to the direction from which the light comes, then the incident illumination will be spread out over a larger area and the mean intensity of illumination on the inclined surface will be correspondingly less than if the same surface were perpendicular to the incident light. If the surface is inclined to the direction of the incident light the illumination thereon is proportional to the cosine of the angle of its inclination to the direction of incidence.

Regarding the failure of a compound-wound generator to pick up its load, this may be due to any of the following causes:

(a) Too low an operating speed.

(b) Open shunt-field circuit, caused by faulty connections or defective field-coil or field-rheostat.

(c) Open armature or commutating-field circuit.

(d) Incorrect setting of brushes.

(e) Reversed series or shunt coils.

(f) Poor brush contact, due to dirty commutator or brushes sticking to holders.

(g) Loss of residual magetism.

The remedies for these conditions will be dealt with in a forthcoming article.

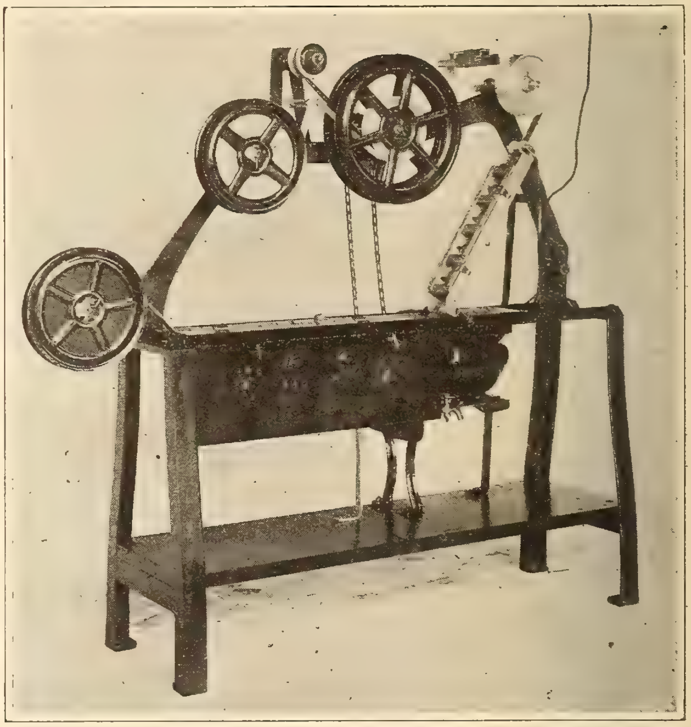
The American Film Cleaner

ALL up-to-date exchanges appreciate the necessity of regularly cleaning and renovating their films, and the American Film Cleaner, which we have just seen demonstrated, is a machine that is deserving of investigation by the executives and the inspection departments of the various exchanges.

The American Film Cleaner, shown in the illustration, is meant to take care of film cleaning on a large scale, and is very strongly constructed, being also characterized by simplicity in operation, due to the absence of unnecessary and complicated parts.

The reel of film to be cleaned is placed on a spindle at the left of the machine, and is then lead through a series of four revolving brushes which are immersed in a tank containing the cleaning fluid. Although it might be thought that these brushes would cause scratching of the film while it is passing through the cleaning solution, it has nevertheless been demonstrated that no scratching results from the scrubbing action of the brushes.



The American Film Cleaner

Upon its emergence from the tank containing the cleaning solution the film passes up an inclined chute which is provided with a series of squeegees in the form of flat rubber strips, the surplus cleaning fluid being thus removed from the film in a manner similar to that in which a window-cleaner removes the surplus water from a window pane. Proceeding upwards and over the large idler roller at the right, in the illustration, the film is once again squeegeed by coming in contact with another rubber strip, and then passes to the take up reel which is located at the center of the apparatus. A feature of the American Film Cleaner is the manner in which the surplus cleaning fluid is removed from the sprocket holes of the film, this point being overlooked in many previous film cleaning machines. As the illustration shows, the film is wound upon the receiving reel in contact with a strip of clean white paper having a slightly absorbent character, and as the film is entirely free of the cleaning solution except for the sprocket holes, when it reaches the receiving reel, this paper band with which it is rewound, removes the last traces of solution from the sprocket holes. The film is finally rewound from the receiving reel on a double rewinder, which rewinds the film upon one reel and the paper strip upon another, whereupon the film is ready for projection and the paper strip is ready for use again in connection with the cleaning machine. The paper strips used with the American Film Cleaner may be used five or six times before they are so soiled as to require renewal.

A 1/8 horse-power motor is used to operate the American Film Cleaner, which will clean a thousand foot reel of film in about six minutes. The makers of this useful device are the American Film Cleaner Company, 1104 Prospect Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

The Camera

The Testing of Optical Glass

[Data compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Standards.]

Sources of Error

GREAT care must be used to eliminate the sources of error, as the absorption is sometimes small compared with accidental errors of measurement, especially in thin plates. It is best to use a thick block of glass in transmission measurements and then reduce the results to unit thickness. The following are some of the sources of error:

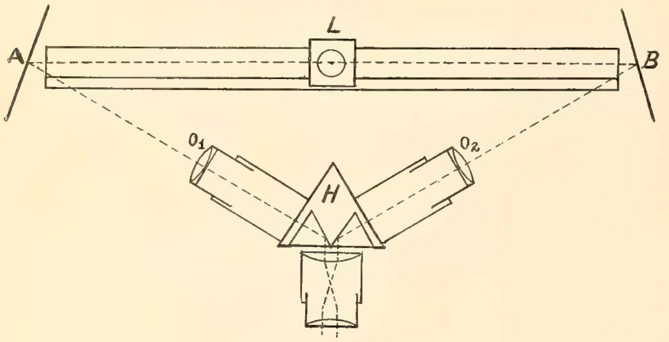

Fig. 3.

(1) The comparison lamp may change relative to the illuminated surface in the course of a reading. This may be avoided by wiring the comparison lamp on the same line as the illuminated surface, so that fluctuations will affect both in the same manner. In addition, a well seasoned lamp should be used.

(2) Stray light may come into the photometer during one measurement, and not during another. This can be avoided by working in a dark room and by the use of screens.

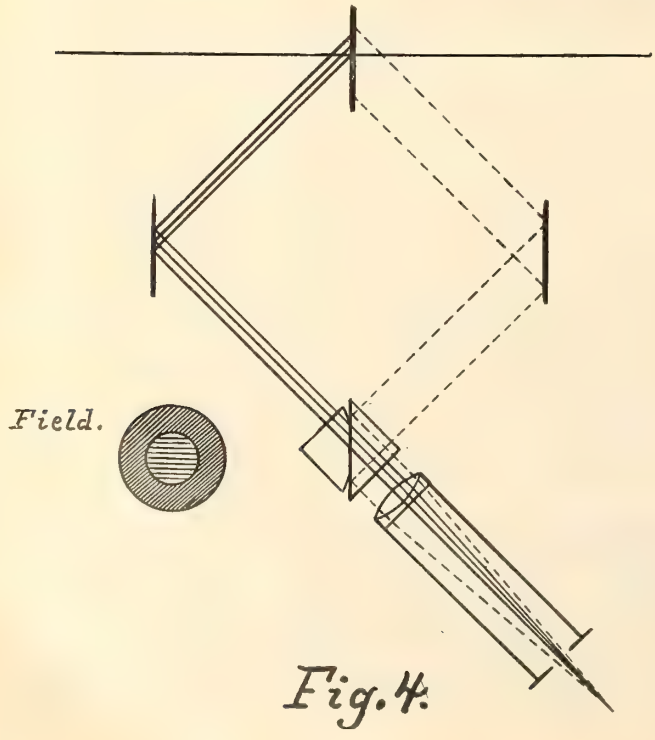

Fig. 4.

(3) If the light coming from the illuminated surface, or from the comparison lamp, is partly polarized, or if the light in passing through the block of glass or through the instrument to be measured, is partly polarized, the results will be either high or low, depending upon which portion of the beam is lost in passing through the photometer. To avoid this, the illuminated surface must be a perfect diffuser, and the light from the comparison lamp must be perfectly diffused. In addition, the readings are taken with the photometer fields placed once in one manner, then the fields are reversed, and another reading taken. The mean of the results is free from this error.

At the present time it is almost impossible to obtain the crystalline materials required to make the component parts of the Martens Photometer, so that some other form of photometer may be required. Mr. Drysdale has suggested the following instrument (Proc. Optical Convention, 1905). (See Fig. 3.)

The Lamp L slides along a graduated bench AB, illuminating the screens A and B. These screens are brought into the same field adjacent to each other by the photometer head H, which consists of the following: Two objectives, O_1 and O_2, of the same focal length focused for infinitely distant objects, directed at the screens A and B. The rays from the two objectives are turned into the same direction by two 60° prisms cemented to a slip of plain glass with their edges touching. Finally there is an eyepiece focussed on the plane of the bases of the 60° prisms, which is also the focal-plane of the objectives.

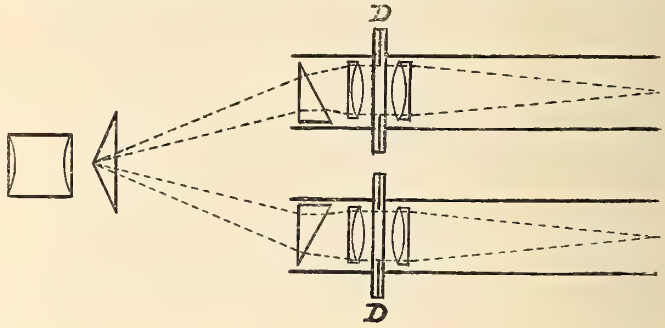

Fig. 5.

The two fields should be balanced when the Light L is in the middle of the bench, with no glass present. A glass is then put in, and the light L is moved to a position where the fields again balance. The scale on the bench can be made to read transmissions directly.

A Lummer-Brodhun head may also be used in the same way, the two fields being concentric or enclosed one within the other. (See Fig. 4.)

An instrument described by P. G. Nutting in the Journal of the Optical Society of America, March-May, 1917, page 83, has been designed to take the place of the Martens Photometer. In this instrument (See Fig. 5), the light intensity is varied either by iris diaphragms D — D placed at suitable positions in the instrument, or by neutral wedges, when the scale will be linear, if the wedge is linear in absorption. The instrument appears to be simple, and easily manufactured. According to Dr. Nutting it gives good results.

VI. Strain.

When glass is placed under strain, due either to forces impressed upon it or to internal strains and stresses, it acquires certain undesirable optical properties which must be avoided in high-grade instruments. These properties are of the same general character as those possessed by doubly refracting crystals, and may be detected by the use of polarized light. The presence of strain is also undesirable for mechanical reasons, as it renders the glass less manageable in working.

If a block of glass be placed in a uniform beam of plane polarized light and examined by an analyser which transmits only light polarized in one plane, it will appear mottled or shaded if under strain; the shadings will shift about upon rotating the glass or the analyser, and if the strain is considerable they will appear colored.

Polarized light may be obtained by reflecting a uniformly illuminated surface, such as a patch of sky or a piece of paper or ground glass illuminated by artificial light, at an oblique angle (about 57°) from a polished glass surface, or by oblique transmission through several thin pieces of glass. A Nicol prism makes the most convenient analyser, but a few thin pieces of glass, such as cover glass for microscope or lantern slides, will serve also if placed obliquely to the beam of light.

Circularly polarized light may also be employed and affords in some cases, a more sensitive test. To obtain circularly polarized light a "quarter-wave plate" (consisting of a sheet of mica of the proper thickness) is placed between the source of plane polarized light and the glass to be tested. Another quarter-wave plate should be placed between the glass and the analyser.

Refinements are not necessary in this test as strains which are likely to be harmful in any but very large instruments, can readily be detected with simple apparatus. It should not be required that glass be absolutely free from strain, as there are few blocks in which some strain could not be detected.

Unlike the other defects in raw glass, the presence of strain is remediable; it calls only for proper annealing, which is a simple process except for large blocks.

I. P. A. to Have Housewarming

ON Monday, June 24, the International Projection Association will give a housewarming party to signalize the opening of their new headquarters at 437 East 145th street, New York City. The festivities will commence at the club's usual meeting hour, 12 o'clock, midnight, and are expected to draw a record crowd, comprising many persons well known locally in the industry, in addition to the full membership of the association.

The committee in charge of arrangements is composed of: Frank Tyler, chairman; Alex Polin, Morris J. Rotker, Richard E. Weis and Harry Scherl. A strictly Hooverized meal will be served, after which motion pictures and other entertainment will follow. The committee promises that the affair will mark an epoch in the history of the association.

Simplex Projectors Prove Sturdy Sailors

THE Simplex machine has in more than one instance proved itself a good sailor on Uncle Sam's war vessels. The moment it gets aboard it feels itself perfectly at home and shows that it has sea legs as steady as the admiral's.

O. L. Hawk, electrician of the U. S. Pennsylvania, has written to the Precision Machine Co., makers of the Simplex, as follows:

"Several months ago this ship purchased a Type 'S' Simplex machine. The machine has given the very best satisfaction, and has undergone some heavy gun firing, but is still putting out an absolutely clear picture.

"Collective data would show that the Simplex machines at sea have not only proved themselves to be sailors free from sea sickness," says E. M. Porter, general manager of the Simplex Company, "but that Simplexes are steady, dependable veterans in hundreds of theatres throughout the country."

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Smiles," Fox Trot. Lee S. Roberts' novelty Fox Trot which has taken the country by storm. A great violin obligato part. (Richmond edition.)

2—"We're All Going Calling on the Kaiser," a stirring and up-to-date march and one step by Brennan. (Leo Feist edition.)

3—"Bacchanale," by T. H. Rollinson. Its style is just what it suggests and is in three movements. Although somewhat lengthy, it will fit into many scenes in photoplays. (Oliver Ditson edition.)

4—"Fest March and Postlude." The march is by Gustav Merkel, and the other by Berthold Tours. They will be useful for concert, church festivals and for certain scenes in photoplays. (Oliver Ditson edition.)

5—"Blue Devils" (Alpine Chasseurs), March by Sol. P. Levy. A real typical French march, a fine snappy melody. An unusually attractive trio, and an arrangement which leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. (Published by Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Avenue, New York City.)

6—"Indianola," fox trot or one step by the writer of the famous "By Heck." (J. W. Stern edition.)

7—"Hail! Hail! the Gang's All Here!" March by M. L. Lake. 10—"Blue Rose Waltz," composed by the writer of Missouri Waltz. A wonderful and dreamy waltz which can be considered a very valuable addition to any musician's library. (Forster Music Publishing Co., Chicago.)

Mr. Exhibitor, What Are You Doing for Music Loving Patrons?

IT proves that correct methods in doing things, and capable understanding for essential needs in connection with the musical end of the motion picture industry, need looking after, possibly more carefully than anything else. The idea that "any old thing" will go with a picture is still too prevalent, and something should really be provided for those admirers of the screen who know the difference between a pathetic and bar-room scene, and who have a right to expect suitable descriptive music. But the one who should take the lesson most seriously to heart and endeavor to profit by it is the leader; for he is the one upon whom falls the responsibility of either helping the picture or making it ridiculous. With this statement, of course, the writer has in mind that part of an audience which really listens to the music and which considers it an important adjunct of the picture. Little by little the motion picture producers are improving their output with more artistic perfection; no detail of scenery, action or ensemble is overlooked, no expense spared to create illusions of the most magnificent or unheard-of kind, and still some of these remarkable and effective productions are placed on exhibition with practically no suggestions or plans for the music, which is to form an important part of the presentation. The time seems at hand when a decided step should be taken towards improvement of such conditions. In a way it matters little whether the music for a production is provided by a lone and lonesome pianist, or by a combination of three to ten players, or by an orchestra of fifty. The real and vital things to consider are the quality and fitness of the music which is played. In the eyes of an intelligent, musical onlooker it is just as ridiculous and out of place to play a clap-trap musical number for some affecting, serious scene, as it would be to have the producer prepare for us a magnificent ball room scene in a millionaire's mansion and have the hostess appear in a skimpy, ill-fitting and cheap-looking evening dress.

Music carries a message all its own, and whether people agree or not about its illustrative qualities there is no denying the fact that it is the most potent aid to the spoken drama, and consequently a doubly powerful one to the silent drama. It furnishes a background such as no other means can provide and can be made to emphasize every possible mood, situation and character in almost as precise and fitting a manner as the spoken word. But the provision of such music demands a mind which is able to discriminate between various kinds of music, just as one must be able to differentiate between the various kinds of people which enliven a scene or a situation.

Managers of motion picture theaters ought to consider one thing in particular. In the old-time days of the dramatic stage each house had its particular clientele, which came to see the dramatic offerings and for which a certain kind of music, either good or poor, was provided. Nobody expected to see a high-class or ennobling production in a Bowery or vaudeville theatre, and no preparations were necessary for such productions. But with the motion picture industry conditions have been fundamentally altered, and one is just as likely to meet with a splendid dramatic, historic or humorous production in a dingy, cheap theatre as in a pretentious Broadway house, and how such a thing has come to pass, the cheaper theatres attract a much larger percentage of people, who, while not so well-to-do, are musical, and while fully competent to appreciate a good music program, are also capable of criticizing a poor one. It is in these theatres that the ennobling developing powers of music in connection with motion pictures counts for most, and it is here that every effort ought to be made to bring about genuine improvement.

Petrova Songs Now Published

"IN THE DAWN OF AN INDIAN SKY," the first of a series of Indian love songs by Mme. Olga Petrova, is now published by the Theo. Presser Company, of 1712 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, and, although it has been out a little less than a week, the advance demand assures this song a tremendous sale. The music is by Ward Stephens, who will also set music to three more of Mme. Petrova's poems, to be published by Presser. In addition to the song in two keys, violin and 'cello obligatos of "In the Dawn of an Indian Sky" are also published.

Several requests have been received by Mme. Petrova from well known concert singers to be allowed to include the song in their repertoires and arrangements are now being completed whereby it will be placed on a photograph record in the very near future.

When Madame Petrova's first picture, "Daughter of Destiny," had its initial New York showing, some months ago at the Rialto theatre, Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, director of the Rialto music, composed a beautiful waltz which he called the "Waltz Petrova." As a return compliment to Dr. Reisenfeld, Beulah Livingstone, Mme. Petrova's personal representative, submitted the music for publication and made arrangements with T. B. Harmsand Frances, Day and Hunter. The waltz is being rushed through in time to be used by the various orchestras in all of the theatres now being visited by Madame Petrova on her extensive Personal Appearance Patriotic Tour, in the interests of War Savings Stamps. A beautiful full length portrait of Olga Petrova makes an attractive cover for the waltz sheet. Full orchestrations will be ready in about two weeks.

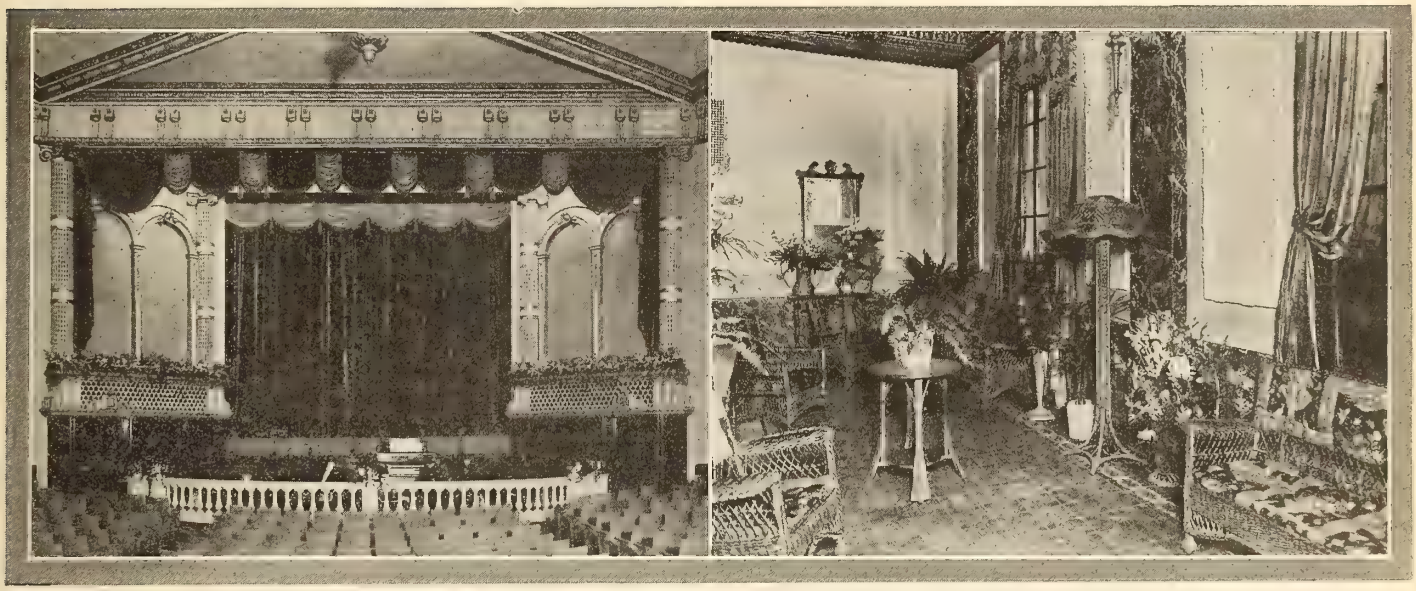
Theatres Worth While



Looking Toward the Stage and View In Rest Room of Woodlawn Theatre, Chicago

Woodlawn Splendid New Chicago House

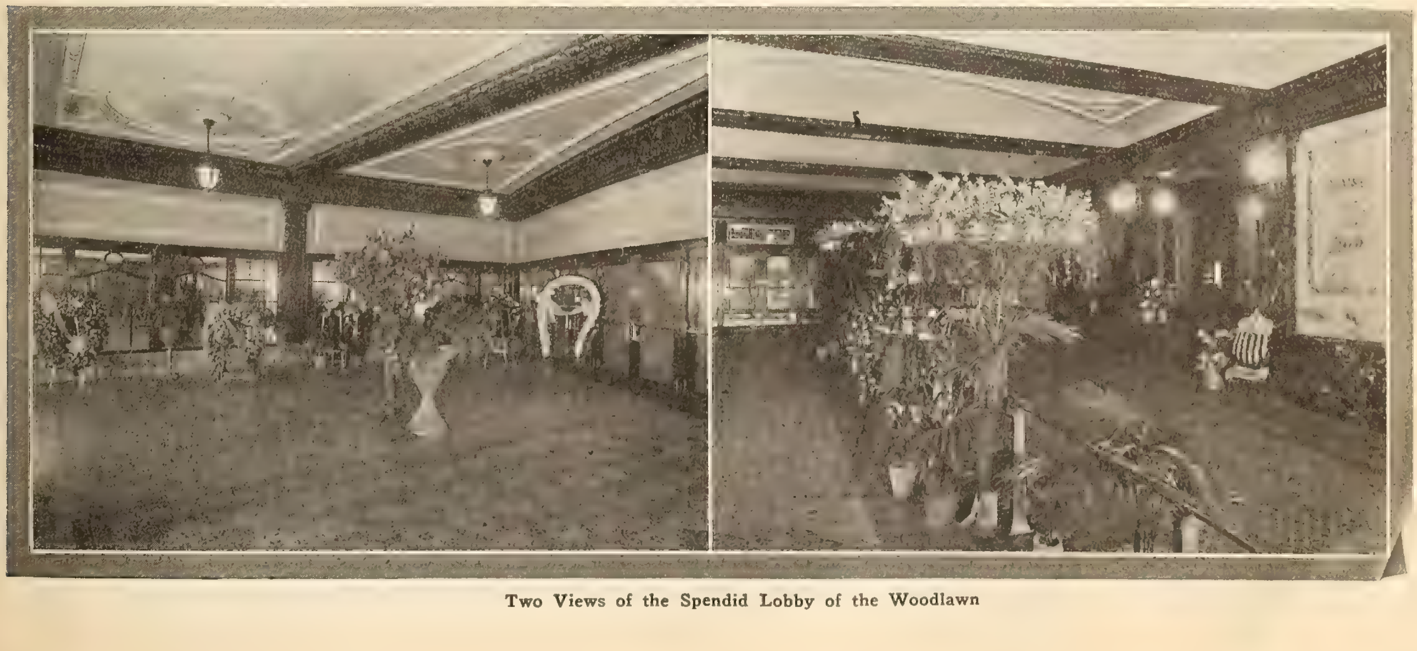
CHICAGO has one of the handsomest neighborhood houses in the country in the Woodlawn theatre, which has just been opened on Sixty-third street near Drexel avenue. It is under the direction of Andrew Karzas and represents the best thought that he has put into the operation of motion picture theatres for years. In brief, the Woodlawn fills his ideas of what a theatre should be; it has been called his "dream come true."

The building represents an investment of $250,000 and is owned by a company in which H. L. Newhouse is the principal stockholder. One of the most attractive features of the house, which seats 2,000, is the lobby arrangement. There are two of the lobbies, an outer one, where the box office is located and surrounded by a huge dome into which a stream of light is thrown from a large vase. The inner lobby is finished in marble panel effect, with tiled floor and a richly colored ceiling. These lobbies are spacious and give an air of distinction to the theatre. At the left of the inner lobby is a rest room for women.

The auditorium is square, 120 feet in both directions. In a semi-circle, opening off the foyer, there is a wide promenade which connects the aisles. Around the room, about midway between floor and ceiling, runs a lattice work in ornamental design through which washed air is forced.

All of the house is so planned that the view from every seat is clear and distinct. The proscenium opening is fifty feet wide, decorated with rich draperies and offering special opportunity for scenic effects.

One of the novelties of the house is that the orchestra is placed in the balcony. In addition, there is an unusually large organ. There is an elaborate lighting system with dimmers that make it possible to flood the entire house with any color and any



Two Views of the Spendid Lobby of the Woodlawn degree of light. Both music and lighting are big features of the Woodlawn.

Leading off the auditorium there are sixteen exits to the street level so that the house can be emptied in three minutes. A novel feature is that the doors are arranged so that they cannot be locked from the inside and thus they are made proof against accident.

Mr. Karzas gives his personal attention to every feature of the theatre. He sees every picture before it is booked and superintends the entire arrangements for the presentations.

New Neighborhood House for Indianapolis

THE latest addition to amusement houses in Indianapolis has been the completion recently of Bair's South Side theatre, devoted to the showing of high class feature photoplays to neighborhood audiences. This house is located at 1044 Virginia avenue, near the business center of Fountain Square and on the site of a former motion picture house of the same name.

Bair's South Side Theatre, Indianapolis

It has a very inviting front of pearl stucco, with mahogany-trimmed windows and main entrance. Back of this is quite an extensive tiled-floor lobby, with decorated walls and mahogany woodwork. The box office is located in the centre of the lobby, with a main front entrance at either side.

This theatre is thoroughly modern and no expense has been spared in supplying it with every convenience to further the comfort and pleasure of the patrons. The seating capacity is near 700 and the aisles are warmly carpeted. The walls are daintily decorated to harmonize with the interior woodwork of mahogany. There is an individual heating plant in the basement, and the large exhaust fans for purifying the air are the largest of any neighborhood house in Indianapolis. Music is furnished by a photoplay orchestrion.

R. R. Bair is the owner and manager of this theatre, as well as of two others on the South Side, the Lincoln at South East street, and Lincoln Lane and the Apex, at Virginia avenue and Stevens street.

CALIFORNIA

The Victoria theatre, at San Pedro, opened a few days ago, presenting for its initial number, W. S. Hart in "Wolves of the Rails." The house has a seating capacity of 900 and standing room was at a premium for the opening performance, and, in fact, a full house has been the rule at every show since. Mary Pickford in "Stella Maris" was the second number and drew a packed house.

Healdsburg is to have a modern, up-to-the-minute theatre. E. B. Deakin, a former drygoods merchant, has associated himself with Harry Tucker and Clyde Van DeVer, owners of the M. and M. theatre, and with them will erect a new theatre. They have purchased the Frank Cummings livery stable on West street and on its site plan a building to cost between $30,000 and $40,000 for motion pictures. It is to be equipped with every known modern convenience.

The Loring theatre, Riverside, is to be reemodeled and modernized in many respects. The People's Trust and Savings Bank will expend $10,000 and Howe & Merrill, lessees of the theatre, will expend $8,000 for the purpose.

CONNECTICUT

Architect F. A. Cooper has been commissioned to draw plans for a theatre on Main street, near Lumber street, Bridgeport, for Frank Jacoby of Broad street. While all the details have not been decided upon as yet, the building will be about 50 x 160 feet, of brick, with a seating capacity of 1,400

IDAHO

Parma will have a new picture show house about the middle of July. It will be strictly modern, 28 x 90 feet in size and is being built of interlocking tile, at a cost of $6,000. Reader & Lowe of Weiser have the building contract. N. E. Leigh, who is building this picture house, is also building a fine, modern picture in Nyssa and one in Wilder.

INDIANA

The contract for the remodeling of the livery barn building of H. T. Trueblood, East Main street, Washington, has been let to Lafayette C. Gilley, a local contractor. There were four bidders, including Mr. Gilley. The improvements completed, the building will be used as a motion picture theatre, the manager to be Albert Devoe, who now is running the American theatre on West Van Trees street. It will have a seating capacity of between 500 and 600. Mr. Gilley has already begun work and hopes to complete the job by the second week in July. The improvement will represent an expenditure of approximately $4,000.

NEW YORK

Negotiations are pending for the lease of a large Washington Heights plot as the site for a new theatre to be operated by J. J. and Lee Shubert. The fifteen lots at Broadway, Fort Washington avenue and 160th street, New York City, are being leased by John Whalen to these theatrical interests for a long term.

Plans for the theatre were filed with the Building Department last week by Herbert J. Krapp, which call for a two-story theatre and store building to cost $100,000. The Whalen property is of irregular size. Fort Washington avenue begins at Broadway and turns in a northerly direction. The Whalen property follows the curve in Fort Washington avenue for a distance of 292.5 feet. It also has a frontage of 189.5 feet on Broadway and 213.7 feet on 160th street.

The plot is in the newly-created apartment house section built on the land of the Loyal L. Smith estate. Permission for the erection of the proposed type of building may have to be granted by the Board of Appeals.

William M. McElfatstick, architect, has completed plans for the four-story theatre and stores which B. F. Keith's Theatre Corporation, Inc., plans to build on a plot 200 x 100, at the Concourse and Fordham road, New York City. The improvement will cost upward of $400,000.

TEXAS

The new Ellanay theatre, now under course of construction at El Paso, is to be a model in every respect. The foyer is an adaptation of Marie Antoinette's petit salon of the Palace of the Petit Trianon at Versailles. In this, as in the design borrowed from Italy, there is just the suggestion, or rather the influence of the design mentioned, but it is strong enough to create that atmosphere of genuine art so invariably lacking in the public buildings of this country.

In the interior decorations, the panels in the Hotel Meurice in Paris were copied as nearly as it is possible. They are noted for their exquisite festoons and delicacy of conception. These are to feature the walls above the balcony in the Ellanay.

A new theatre of this kind means much for the future of El Paso. The government has been combating German propaganda to a great extent through the medium of motion pictures. There are plans afoot for a great educational campaign on German methods and our war needs—the easiest and quickest way to reach the people is through motion pictures. And the builders of the Ellanay are giving the people a house of beauty in which to learn these things and which will keep in their minds one of the ever-present reasons for the war beyond the seas—the preservation of humanity and art—both of which the Germans have been equally ruthless in destroying. The owners of the Grecian are building the Ellanay and will operate both theatres when the Ellanay is finished.

A new Liberty theatre is being built at Kelley Field, San Antonio. The erection of this house will make it possible for pictures to be shown first at Camp Travis, then transported to Kelley Field.
